

Lux. rel.

Spence

398-2

THE EQUITABLE JURISDICTION

OF
The Court of Chancery.

VOLUME II.

—◆—
COMPRISING

EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS; THEIR NATURE, QUALITIES, AND INCIDENTS;

IN WHICH IS INCORPORATED, SO FAR AS RELATES TO THOSE SUBJECTS,

THE SUBSTANCE OF

“MADDOCK'S TREATISE ON THE PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE OF THE HIGH COURT OF CHANCERY.”

BY

GEORGE SPENCE, ESQ.,

ONE OF HER MAJESTY'S COUNSEL.

---

LONDON:

V. AND R. STEVENS AND G. S. NORTON,

Law Booksellers and Publishers,

(Successors to the late J. & W. T. CLARKE, of Portugal Street,)

26, BELL YARD, LINCOLN'S INN, AND 194, FLEET STREET;

AND SOLD BY HODGES AND SMITH, DUBLIN.

MDCCCXLIX.

32

LONDON:

STEVENS AND CO., PRINTERS, BELL YARD,
LINCOLN'S INN.

PREFACE.

---

IN the preceding volume the History of the Court of Chancery has been brought down to the time when its modern jurisdiction was established; and the various heads under which its jurisdiction may be classed, are there stated. The object of the present volume is to exhibit and illustrate the principles upon which the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is now exercised, in regard to what are for the purposes of this work designated EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS, the meaning of which it may be proper here to explain.

It has appeared to me, as will have been gathered from the former volume, that the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery may properly be considered under two chief and perfectly distinct heads or divisions—the one embracing the right which the Court of Chancery gives to the enjoyment of property, the legal title to which is rightfully vested in one person with a view to or as subservient to the enjoyment of the beneficial interest by another—the other division comprising those rights constituted or recognised by the Court of Chancery, under which a person is entitled to recover the property or thing itself, the legal estate or interest or possession being vested in another by wrong, as where it has been obtained by fraud or has been conferred by mistake, and also embracing all demands, of whatever kind, (other than those included in the first division,) which can only be enforced in the Court of Chancery because dependent on principles which are not recognised or so fully recognised in the Courts of Law as in the Court of Chancery, or which though recognised in the Courts of Law can only be effectually enforced in the Court of Chancery; and also embracing the protection from improper invasions of the right to property, which the Court of Chancery alone can give, and discovery of facts for the purposes of aiding in the prosecution or defence of rights. I have in this volume designated the first of these divisions, The Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in respect of EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS; the second, The Jurisdiction in respect of EQUITABLE RIGHTS (a),—it is the first great head of jurisdiction which is embraced in the volume which is now offered to the profession.

The course which I have adopted, in treating of Equitable Estates and Interests, is as follows:—After first considering how the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is made to operate in respect of Property situate out of its jurisdiction, I have proceeded to take a general view of Equitable Estates and Interests in property real and personal created by EXPRESS TRUST; stating the general rules as to the Creation of Trusts; the NATURE OF THE OFFICE OF TRUSTEE, and the CHARACTER OF THE CESTUIS QUE TRUST; distinguishing a CONSTITUTED or complete trust from an incomplete trust or a TRUST IN FIERI; and devoting a distinct Section to those trusts which are created by PRECATORY OR RECOMMENDATORY WORDS.

POWERS IN THE NATURE OF TRUSTS are then noticed; and the general subject of RESTRAINTS ON ALIENATION, as applicable to interests given by way of trust, is introduced. Considering how often the doctrine as to REMOTENESS OR PERPETUITY comes under discussion in regard to trusts, I have devoted a distinct Chapter to that subject. I have then proceeded to consider the subject of EXECUTORY OR DIRECTORY TRUSTS, as distinguished from TRUSTS EXECUTED; and to state the general rules in regard to LIMITATIONS OF PERSONAL ESTATE in reference to where an absolute interest is taken under the limitations; introducing the subject of limitations of Personal Estate to go according to the limitations of Real Estate, and some incidental topics. I have then devoted a Chapter to TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION.

I have next proceeded to take a general view of TRUSTS ARISING BY OPERATION OF LAW, not belonging to the second head of jurisdiction,

(a) I have found it expedient, in this volume, to vary, in some respects, the arrangement under which the different subjects of which are known by the several designations of Implied, Presumptive, and Constructive Trusts, including the doctrine as to Resulting Trusts, and Trusts arising from the maxim that "What ought to be done is considered as done;" the CONVERSION of real estate into personal, and personal into real, and some incidental topics.

Equitable Jurisdiction are treated of in the first Volume.

Having thus noticed the several kinds of trusts, and having taken a view of the general doctrines applicable in some degree to all or most of the trusts which are created by the parties, I have proceeded to discuss in some detail the several descriptions of trusts and charges in the nature of trusts created by the parties which are commonly found in Wills and Marriage settlements and in Trust deeds, in the following order:—

First, CHARGES OF DEBTS BY WILL, more especially in reference to the statutes 1 Will. IV. c. 47, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, and here what amounts to a charge of debts is considered: CHARGES OF LEGACIES on real estate, and the general doctrines applicable to charges of debts and legacies by will, particularly the EXEMPTION and EXONERATION of personal estate from the payment of debts and legacies, are next considered: and then, TRUST DEEDS FOR THE PAYMENTS OF DEBTS are introduced. I have next proceeded to a consideration of SALES of property real and personal under trusts or charges for payment of debts and legacies, adverting to the obligation of the purchaser to see to the APPLICATION OF THE PURCHASE-MONEY. The subject of PORTIONS, including the doctrines as to Double Portions and SATISFACTION, is discussed in a separate section. Gifts to parents for the MAINTENANCE of their children are next considered; and then, the trusts in favour of MARRIED WOMEN, which are usually introduced into wills and marriage settlements, including the SEPARATE-USE CLAUSE and provisions against ANTICIPATION; and here THE WIFE'S EQUITY TO HAVE A SETTLEMENT is introduced. Some other doctrines in regard to the trusts usually found in wills and deeds are then considered; for instance, the respective RIGHTS OF THE TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN, and more especially in regard to a RESIDUE GIVEN BY WILL TO BE ENJOYED BY SEVERAL PERSONS IN SUCCESSION, and the APPORTIONMENT OF

RENTS AND DIVIDENDS; then follow the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to ELECTION, SATISFACTION, and PERFORMANCE.

Following the scheme proposed, I have next proceeded to consider that kind of equitable estate or interest which is enjoyed by a mortgagor whose estate is forfeited at law, and which is called the EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. In this chapter I have endeavoured to give a general view of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to MORTGAGES, both as respects the mortgagor and the mortgagee; including the mode of proceeding to enforce REDEMPTION, and to FORECLOSE the equity of redemption, or for a SALE—the necessary PARTIES to suits for redemption and foreclosure—LENGTH OF TIME as a bar to redemption or foreclosure—PRIORITIES and TACKING—and NOTICE, Fraud, and Negligence, as affecting priorities. I have then devoted a section to the subject of MORTGAGES OF STOCK and PLEDGES of personal chattels; and another section to the subject of EQUITABLE MORTGAGES by written agreement and by the DEPOSIT OF DEEDS: and here the subject of LIENS generally is introduced, and particularly THE LIEN OF A SOLICITOR on the deeds and papers of his client, and on the funds in a suit. I have next proceeded to describe the mode in which THE ACCOUNT is taken between the mortgagor and mortgagee, particularly where the mortgagee is in possession, introducing the subject of ANNUAL RESTS and of COSTS. The next subject discussed is, OUT OF WHAT FUNDS mortgage debts and charges are to be paid; and here the subject of EXONERATION is again adverted to, and the doctrine of MARSHALLING of assets and of securities is introduced, as is also the subject of CONTRIBUTION.

I have next proceeded to consider that kind of equitable interest which a person takes under an ASSIGNMENT OF A CHOSE IN ACTION or other subject not transferable at the common law.

Having thus described the various kinds of equitable estates and interests in property real and personal to which a person may become entitled, I have proceeded to take a general view of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to the TRANSFER OF EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS for valuable or meritorious consideration, and by way of gift: and the volume closes with a summary of the general doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to the DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES, with some general remarks in regard to the Office of Trustee and Executor.

This volume will, therefore, as I hope, be found to be a complete work in itself (a), and to contain the doctrines of the Court on every subject connected with equitable estates and interests, with such exceptions as are pointed out in the body of the work (b).

It is proper that I should here acknowledge the obligations which I am under to the Authors whose works I have principally consulted in the composition of this volume. First, I must mention Mr. Lewin's work on Trustees (c), which I consider to be a model for a treatise; next, Mr. Hill's work on Trusts, in which most of the authorities on that subject are to be found very judiciously arranged. On the subject of Mortgages I have derived the greatest assistance from the ample stores contained in Mr. Jarman's Treatise in the fifth volume of his Edition of Bythewood's Conveyancing, with the valuable additions of Mr. Sweet; and from Mr. Coote's well-known work on the same subject. I need scarcely say that on all occasions where anything relating to the subject under consideration was to be found in the works of Sir Edward Sugden, I have resorted to them, and always with the greatest advantage. My obligations to Mr. Samuel Miller and to Mr. Hargrave and other writers, whose works I have consulted, are acknowledged in their proper places. It is only where the apparently unsettled state of the law or the difficulty of the subject appeared to require it that I have entered into any lengthened details, and yet the bulk of the work has been, by this means, increased far beyond my expectations.

Some objections may strike the reader in regard to the arrangement in particular parts of the work. It was next to impossible in so bulky a manuscript, always to put the additions which I found it necessary to make either to the text or to the notes, in exactly the proper place (a); however, I hope that the Index will be found to be sufficiently ample to remedy any inconvenience that might have resulted from errors such as this. Every erroneous reference will, I hope, be found to be corrected in the Errata; some errors in the punctuation have, I find, escaped me, but the reader will be able, I hope, readily to correct them from the text (b).

(a) There are some references in the notes to "mistake," "injunctions," and other subjects comprised under the second head of jurisdiction, but they relate to collateral points which have no direct relation to any of the subjects comprised in this volume.

(b) See p. 951.

(c) Mr. Lewin, with a liberality in which a person of established reputation can afford to indulge, placed in my hands his own copy, with his MS. additions; but as they were made with a view to a new edition, I forbore to look into them.

I am indebted for a considerable portion of the Index, in which a reference will be found to some omitted and subsequent cases, to my intelligent young friend Mr. Frith; it comprises an enlarged index to all or most of the practical parts of the first volume, as well as a full index to the second.

My warmest acknowledgments are due to the Principals and Clerks in that highly efficient establishment, the Registrar's Office, particularly to my fellow labourer Mr. Cecil Monro; also to the Principal and Clerks of the Report Office, for the ready and efficient assistance they have afforded to me in searching the Registrar's books.

The delay in the publication of this volume has arisen from circumstances beyond my control. But the delay has, in fact, been productive of advantage; for in the mean time some important points of law have been settled, and, above all, Sir Edward Sugden's important work on "The Law of Property as administered by the House of Lords," has been published, so that I have had an opportunity of referring to this valuable addition to our legal stores.

I have to express my acknowledgment to several of my friends of the Chancery Bar, for some important communications with which I have been favoured in regard to the First volume. My able friend the late Mr. Spurrier, was kind enough to go through the whole of that part of the volume which relates to the Court of Chancery, and to send me his observations and suggestions : those in which I could concur, I have taken advantage of in this volume. I have also received some friendly communications from my brethren in the provinces, particularly from Mr. Inman of Bath ; one of the points to which he has called my attention is noticed in the Errata.

(a) Instances may be found in pp. 630-1, and 774, as to the text; and in pp. 475-6, as to the notes.

(b) As in p. 30.

Professor Mittermaier has done me the honour of presenting to his countrymen an analysis of the first volume, a translation of which has been annexed ; for this act of kindness my warmest thanks are due. I hope that I shall not be considered as indulging in an unpardonable vanity, or as showing a want of due respect for the eminent writers who have preceded me, or as in any way meaning to disparage my own countrymen, who for sound judgment and philosophical views are not to be surpassed, in referring to the remarks which that distinguished person has made on the course which I have pursued in tracing the Feudal system and the Laws of England to their sources, which are the more valuable because he has not forbore to notice my errors on some points of minor importance. The course of investigation to which I allude, though sanctioned by the high authority of Sir Francis Palgrave, is rather out of the beaten track ; and although already satisfied that the views I had taken were correct, I should have been wanting in the ordinary feelings of man had I been insensible to the approving sanction of so celebrated a person and competent a judge as Professor Mittermaier, or had I passed it over without public acknowledgment.

GEORGE SPENCE.

LINCOLN'S INN,
July, 1849.

CONTENTS.

PART THE THIRD.

BOOK THE FIRST.

EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS IN PROPERTY, REAL AND PERSONAL, WHICH ARE RECOGNISED BY THE COURT OF CHANCERY; THEIR NATURE AND INCIDENTS.

N.B.—This Table has been in some respects varied from the Headings of the Chapters, to make it correspond more nearly with the Text.

CHAPTER I.

GENERAL VIEW OF EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS CREATED BY WAY OF EXPRESS DECLARATION.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | PAGE |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| SECTION I.— Introduction—Equitable Interests and Equitable Rights distinguished—Foreign Jurisdiction as regards Equitable Interests and Rights.                                                                                           |      |
| Distribution of the subject of Equitable Jurisdiction as regards Specific Property                                                                                                                                                               | 2    |
| Jurisdiction of the Court ranges itself under Two great Divisions                                                                                                                                                                                | 2 3  |
| In the first Equitable Estates and Interests are the subject                                                                                                                                                                                     | 2 3  |
| In the second the Legal Estate or Title is the subject, in virtue of an Equitable Right                                                                                                                                                          | 2 3  |
| In the first the Court recognises and preserves the Legal Estate                                                                                                                                                                                 | 2 3  |
| In most cases Person having Equitable Estate is not entitled to call for Legal Estate—in some simple cases he may—these seldom subject of litigation                                                                                             | 2 3  |
| In some cases it is essential the Legal Estate should remain permanently in the Trustee—Permanent Trusts—in Special Trusts it must remain in him for the purposes of the Trust                                                                   | 3    |
| In those cases which belong to the Second Division the Legal Title has been acquired or is retained wrongfully—the object of the Jurisdiction is to give the Legal Title to the Party entitled to it in conscience—to enforce an Equitable Right | 3    |
| Some Cases of Trusts by operation of Law come within the First Division                                                                                                                                                                          | 3 4  |
| Other Equitable Interests embraced in the First Division                                                                                                                                                                                         | 3 4  |
| First subject to be considered—Express Trusts—two classes of Express Trusts                                                                                                                                                                      | 4    |
| Power of creating a Trust co-extensive with power to dispose—but Trust may be created where no power of actual Transfer                                                                                                                          | 4    |
| Every kind of Alienable Property may be subject of a Trust                                                                                                                                                                                       | 5    |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | PAGE     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------|
| Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in respect of Property situate beyond the bounds of its Jurisdiction, in reference both to Equitable Estates and Equitable Rights, considered . . . . .                             | 6—16     |
| Exercised by Coercion of the Person when the Party found within the Jurisdiction . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 7        |
| Court will not interfere in regard to Property within the Jurisdiction of a Foreign Tribunal, unless it be necessary for the ends of Justice . . . . .                                                                    | 7        |
| In what cases, generally speaking, the Court will, and when it will not hold the Sentence of a Foreign Tribunal of competent Jurisdiction binding . . . . .                                                               | 9        |
| Course of the Court as regards Contracts entered into in Scotland or in the Colonies . . . . .                                                                                                                            | 9—14     |
| Suit as to Contract entered into between the Parties in a Foreign Country—Contracts construed according to the Law of the Place—Remedy given according to English Course of Proceeding . . . . .                          | 9—14     |
| Right of Alien to sue . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                           | 14       |
| Sovereign Prince may sue, Liabilities where he submits to the Jurisdiction . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 14       |
| In the absence of Evidence showing that a different Principle should be applied, the Court will apply its own Principles to a Transaction in the Colonies . . . . .                                                       | 14       |
| Treaties between East India Company and Sovereign Princes in India not the subject of Municipal Jurisdiction . . . . .                                                                                                    | 15       |
| Infant may be ordered to convey Lands out of the Jurisdiction, but not out of the Queen's Dominions . . . . .                                                                                                             | 16       |
| SECTION II.— General Doctrines relating to Express Trusts.                                                                                                                                                         |          |
| Trusts created by Will most frequent . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 17       |
| In determining the Effect of the Testamentary Act, Equity follows the Law . . . . .                                                                                                                                       | 18       |
| New Stat. of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, as to Revocation . . . . .                                                                                                                                                             | 18 27 29 |
| Construction of Devises . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                         | 18       |
| Wills of Personal Estate, as to what matters the Ecclesiastical Court has exclusive Jurisdiction . . . . .                                                                                                                | 19       |
| Creation of Trusts which are to have Effect during the Life of the Party . . . . .                                                                                                                                        | 19       |
| Where Trusts may be created by Parol, and where not . . . . .                                                                                                                                                             | 20       |
| No Form necessary even where Writing required . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                   | 20       |
| Evidence sufficient to show that a Trust was created . . . . .                                                                                                                                                            | 21       |
| At what time a Trust may be declared . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 21       |
| Trust must be certain in its Nature, and in its Subject and Object . . . . .                                                                                                                                              | 22       |
| Where plain Intent to create a Trust, and the Trust fails, the Property goes to Donor, or his Representatives . . . . .                                                                                                   | 22       |
| Where there is a Charge which is not an Exception from the Gift, and it fails, the Devisee takes . . . . .                                                                                                                | 22       |
| Limitations by way of Trust analogous to Legal Limitations . . . . .                                                                                                                                                      | 23       |
| Trusts extended to Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                              | 24       |
| Other Equitable Interests in Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                    | 24       |
| Doctrine of Perpetuities, and Rules as to Trusts for Accumulation apply to Trusts; and see Chap. ii. and Chap. v. infra . . . . .                                                                                  | 25       |
| Cognizance of Trusts belongs exclusively to Court of Chancery . . . . .                                                                                                                                                   | 25       |
| Directing Principle which governs the Court of Chancery in the exercise of its Jurisdiction as to Trusts is the Intention . . . . .                                                                                | 26—28    |
| SECTION III.— General View of the Doctrines of the Court of Chancery, as to the Office of Trustee—his Estate in the Trust Property—his Rights and Duties—with some incidental Subjects; and see Chap. XII., infra. |          |
| Who may and may not be Trustees . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 | 32       |
| The King may be a Trustee . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                       | 32       |

|                                                                                                                                                             | PAGE  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|
| Stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88, § 12, as to Forfeiture; 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, § 2, as to Trustee or Mortgagee dying without Heir                            | 32    |
| Equities between the Crown and a Subject may be adjusted by the Court of Chancery                                                                           | 32    |
| Corporations may be Trustees of Personal Estate, and of Real Estate for Charitable Trusts                                                                   | 33    |
| Court supplies Trustee where Real Estate devised to Corporation in Trust                                                                                    | 33    |
| General Jurisdiction over Funds vested in Corporations for Public Purposes                                                                                  | 34    |
| Breach of Trust visited                                                                                                                                     | 35    |
| Alterations effected by Municipal Corporations Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76                                                                                   | 35    |
| Effect of 92nd Section                                                                                                                                      | 35    |
| Members of Governing Body considered as Agents of the Corporation                                                                                           | 35    |
| Inherent Control of the Court over all Persons in the position of Trustees                                                                                  | 36    |
| Enactments of the modern Statute of Wills as to the Estate of Trustees                                                                                      | 36 37 |
| Trustee may call for Legal Estate, when                                                                                                                     | 37    |
| Devise of Trust Estate; et v. infra in this Section                                                                                                  | 37 39 |
| Appointment of New Trustees                                                                                                                                 | 37 39 |
| Trustee derives his Authority solely from the Instrument by which he is appointed                                                                           | 38    |
| Trust can only be transmitted to Representatives or Assigns by the Directions of the Creator of the Trust                                                   | 38    |
| Devise of Trust Estate; et v. supra                                                                                                                  | 39    |
| Distinction between Power and Trust where Exigence is not complied with                                                                                     | 39    |
| The Trust Property protected from Claims of Creditors of Trustee                                                                                            | 39    |
| The Trust Property made liable to Claims of Creditors of Cestui que Trust                                                                            | 40    |
| Extended Rights given to Creditors by Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110                                                                                              | 41    |
| Court will exercise its Powers to prevent the Conduct of the Trustee, whether actively or passively, from prejudicing his Cestuis que Trust          | 41    |
| General Rules established as to the Period at which outstanding Property shall be considered as converted                                                   | 41 42 |
| Tenant for Life and Remainderman of Property so circumstanced; et v. infra , Chap. vii. Sect. x.                                                     | 42—44 |
| Main Intent will be performed, where if particular Directions were followed the Trust might become abortive                                                 | 45    |
| Trustee allowed the full Exercise of such Powers and Authorities as are essential to the Execution of his Trust                                             | 45    |
| Possession of the Estate                                                                                                                                    | 46    |
| Custody of Title Deeds                                                                                                                                      | 46    |
| Trustee bound to render Accounts and entitled to have his Accounts wound up                                                                                 | 46    |
| Mere Agent of Trustees not liable to account to Cestuis que Trust                                                                                    | 47    |
| When Trusts at an end, Trustee must convey the Legal Estate at the peril of Costs in case of capricious or obstinate Refusal                                | 47    |
| But may require Indemnity in doubtful case                                                                                                                  | 47    |
| Stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, for the Indemnity of Trustees; et v. inf. , Chap. xi.                                                                     | 49 50 |
| SECTION IV.—General View of the Rights and Interests of the Cestui que Trust —What Acts will constitute another Cestui que Trust of Property. |       |
| Every Cestui que Trust entitled to Aid of the Court to avail himself of the Trust                                                                    | 51    |
| The Court will execute the Trust, if by any possibility it can                                                                                              | 52    |
| But to induce the Court to interfere, there must be a constituted Trust                                                                                     | 52    |

|                                                                                                                                                  | PAGE  |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|
| Or if it rest in fieri , a valuable, or at least meritorious Consideration . . . . .                                                      | 52    |
| What is a constituted Trust . . . . .                                                                                                            | 52    |
| General Rule . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 52    |
| Irrevocable Trust of Personal Chattels . . . . .                                                                                                 | 53    |
| Owner may constitute himself or the Possessor Trustee, without any Transfer . . . . .                                                            | 53    |
| The Documents on which Ex parte Pye , 18 Ves., was decided, note                                                                          |       |
| Thorpe v. Owen , 5 Beav., note . . . . .                                                                                                  | 53 54 |
| Irrevocable Trust of Chose in Action . . . . .                                                                                                   | 55    |
| Petre v. Espinasse                                                                                                                        |       |
| Collinson v. Patrick                                                                                                                      |       |
| Beatson v. Beatson                                                                                                                        |       |
| Meek v. Kettlewell ; et v. infra , Chap. x.                                                                                        |       |
| A clearly expressed Intention not always sufficient to create a Trust . . . . .                                                                  | 56    |
| Rule that a defective Conveyance, without valuable Consideration, will not be aided— Locus Pœnitentiæ . . . . .                           | 57    |
| Apparent Exception to the Rule that a constituted Trust is binding, in the instance of voluntary Assignments for Creditors . . . . .             | 58    |
| Dependent to some extent on Doctrine as to Mandate . . . . .                                                                                     | 58    |
| Lord Cottenham's Exposition of the Doctrine . . . . .                                                                                            | 59    |
| Whether Notice being formally sent to the Creditor makes a Difference . . . . .                                                                  | 59 60 |
| Lapse of Time as affecting Remedies for alleged Breaches of Trust . . . . .                                                                      | 61 62 |
| SECTION V.—Of Trusts created by Precatory and Recommendatory Words.                                                                              |       |
| General Rule . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 65    |
| Latterly, Judges not inclined to extend the Doctrine . . . . .                                                                                   | 66    |
| Precedents followed . . . . .                                                                                                                    | 67    |
| Cases proceed upon Intention . . . . .                                                                                                           | 67    |
| Each Case to be considered on the whole Context—the Circumstances—the Consequences . . . . .                                                     | 67    |
| It is to be looked to to see whether the Act is to be matter of Discretion only . . . . .                                                        | 68    |
| Rule laid down by Lord Alvanley; approved by Lord Cottenham . . . . .                                                                            | 68    |
| Words of mere Wish or of Expectation do not create a Trust . . . . .                                                                             | 68 69 |
| Where the Gift embraces an uncertain Amount of Property to be otherwise obtained . . . . .                                                       | 70    |
| Other Instances where no Trust created . . . . .                                                                                                 | 70 71 |
| Effect of Words of Recommendation in regard to Appointment of Receivers, Managers, and the like . . . . .                                        | 71    |
| Certainty requisite to create a Trust . . . . .                                                                                                  | 72    |
| General Rules adopted to reduce to Certainty Indefinite Expressions                                                                              |       |
| Such as "Family" . . . . .                                                                                                                       | 73    |
| "Relations" . . . . .                                                                                                                            | 74    |
| How far the Statute of Distributions is to be taken as a guide . . . . .                                                                         | 75 76 |
| "Descendants" . . . . .                                                                                                                          | 77    |
| Discretion vested in the Donee, how far it may be interfered with . . . . .                                                                      | 77    |
| Estate or Interest which the Object of the Trust is to take . . . . .                                                                            | 78    |
| Certainty required as to this point . . . . .                                                                                                    | 78    |
| Difference in regard to Certainty where the Gift is for Charitable Purposes . . . . .                                                            | 79    |
| Difference as to the Person to whom the Property devolves in the case of a Direct and of a Recommendatory Trust, where the Trust fails . . . . . | 80    |
| Words of Direct Gift may import a Trust . . . . .                                                                                                | 80    |
| SECTION VI.—Powers in the Nature of Trusts.                                                                                                      |       |
| Distinction between Trusts and Powers . . . . .                                                                                                  | 81    |
| Power may partake of the Nature of a Trust . . . . .                                                                                             | 81    |

|                                                                                                                                               | PAGE  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------|
| What Circumstances will give to a Power the Character of a Trust . . .                                                                        | 81    |
| General Intention in favour of a Class, with Power to select theIndividuals . . . . .                                                     | 82    |
| Instances where Powers have been held to be coupled with a Trust, andthe contrary . . . . .                                               | 82 83 |
| Discretionary Power given to secure an Act being done under the pru-dent Superintendence of another . . . . .                             | 85    |
| Hewett v. Hewett.                                                                                                                      |       |
| In what Cases the Court may exercise Discretion given to Trustee . .                                                                          | 86    |
| Gower v. Mainwaring                                                                                                                    |       |
| Warburton v. Warburton                                                                                                                 |       |
| Where the Court acts, the Maxim that "Equality is Equity" is followed                                                                         | 87    |
| Discretion controlled when fraudulently exercised . . . . .                                                                                   | 87    |
| Doctrine as to Illusory Appointments abolished . . . . .                                                                                      | 88    |
| SECTION VII.—Of Restraints on Alienation, and Gifts over, and Clausesof Forfeiture, particularly as regards Bankruptcy and Insolvency . . | 89—91 |

CHAPTER II.

THE DOCTRINE IN REGARD TO REMOTENESS.

|                                                                                                                                                |         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| This Doctrine is intimately connected with Trust Estates, particularlyTrusts for Accumulation, though a Rule of Law equally as of Equity . | 93      |
| The Rule stated . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 93      |
| Important to distinguish between Words which defer Possession and thosewhich defer Vesting . . . . .                                       | 94      |
| Vesting a Question of Intention . . . . .                                                                                                      | 94      |
| Rule as to Vesting in a Devise of Real Estate and Bequest of PersonalEstate different . . . . .                                            | 94 95   |
| Lord Mansfield's Statement of the Effect of Matthew Manning's Case ,and of Boraston's Case . . . . .                         | 96      |
| Effect of Postponement in order to secure antecedent Benefits . .                                                                              | 96—99   |
| Devise of Real Estate "when" or "at" a particular Age . . . . .                                                                                | 96      |
| Effect of the word "if" . . . . .                                                                                                              | 96      |
| Bromfield v. Crowder                                                                                                                    |         |
| Newman v. Newman , before Vice-Chancellor of England                                                                                    |         |
| Mr. Jarman's Opinion as to Effect of the word "if" . . . . .                                                                                   | 97, n.  |
| Even in Gift of a Legacy "if" may be controlled . . . . .                                                                                      | 97      |
| Terms of Gift over, if any, always of more or less Importance . .                                                                              | 97 98   |
| Estate given to Trustees to pay Debts, and then to Person designated .                                                                         | 98      |
| Where Attainment of particular Age is part of the Character the Doneemust sustain . . . . .                                                | 98      |
| How far Gift of Intermediate Interest for Maintenance affects the Questionof Vesting in these Cases . . . . .                              | 100—103 |
| Bull v. Pritchard , 1 Russell, 5 Hare . . . . .                                                                                         | 101     |
| Frequent Occasion for the Application of the Doctrine to Cases of Powers                                                                       | 104     |
| Where the Power authorizes Appointment to Objects within theLimits—Appointment to some Objects without the Limits . .                      | 104     |
| Question whether General Powers can be modelled . . . . .                                                                                      | 104     |
| Lord Eldon's Observations in Ware v. Polhill . . . . .                                                                                  | 105     |
| Term for Years may be limited so as to be Expectant on Estate Tail                                                                             | 105     |
| Estate for Life may be limited to unborn Child, but not to his Children .                                                                      | 105 106 |
| Life Estate to a Person not in existence may be made to cease before itsnatural Termination . . . . .                                      | 106     |
| Gift to a Class, some capable, others incapable, void in toto . . . . .                                                                 | 107     |
| Leake v. Robinson , Sir W. Grant . . . . .                                                                                              | 107     |
| Subsequent Events not regarded . . . . .                                                                                                       | 107     |

|                                                                                                                                                 | PAGE |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Application of Rule to Bequests of Personalty to be enjoyed in Succession by several Persons who shall sustain a particular Character . . . . . | 108  |
| Lord Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Albans , Sir J. Leach . . . . .                                                                            |      |
| Tollemache v. Earl of Coventry , in Dom Proc. . . . .                                                                                    |      |
| Mackworth v. Hinxman , Lord Langdale . . . . .                                                                                           | 110  |
| Ibbetson v. Ibbetson (1840), before Vice-Chancellor of England and Lord Cottenham . . . . .                                              | 111  |
| Ferrand v. Wilson (1845), Vice-Chancellor Wigram . . . . .                                                                               | 113  |
| Ker v. Lord Dungannon , in Dom. Proc. . . . .                                                                                            | 116  |
| Argument of Mr. Baron Rolfe . . . . .                                                                                                           | 118  |
| Mr. Justice Patteson . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 120  |
| Mr. Baron Parke . . . . .                                                                                                                       | 121  |
| Judgment—Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst—Lord Brougham—Lord Campbell . . . . .                                                                        | 123  |
| Observations on this Case . . . . .                                                                                                             | 124  |
| How far in a Series of Limitations those only may be avoided which are not conformable to Law . . . . .                                         | 124  |
| Mr. Baron Alderson's Opinion . . . . .                                                                                                          | 124  |
| General Rule as to Gift to take effect after or on Failure of prior Limitation which is too remote . . . . .                                    | 125  |
| When Contingency on which void Limitation is to take effect never happens . . . . .                                                             | 125  |
| Doctrine of Cy pres . . . . .                                                                                                                   | 126  |
| Absolute Gift and attempt to restrict it by Limitations that are void . . . . .                                                                 | 127  |

CHAPTER III.

OF EXECUTORY TRUSTS.

SECTION I.—Introduction.

|                                                                                                                                                                   |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Executory Trusts those which are not complete in themselves . . . . .                                                                                             | 128 |
| Marriage Articles afford an instance—Usually contemplate a formal Deed—Often to be found in Wills . . . . .                                                       | 128 |
| May arise not only where Testator expressly directs the Execution of a formal Instrument, but where he leaves such a Direction to necessary Implication . . . . . | 129 |
| When Trust imposed by Will, whether executed or executory, no Necessity for inquiring into Consideration . . . . .                                                | 129 |
| Rule that Court will not execute a Trust in fieri , for Volunteers, does not apply . . . . .                                                               | 129 |

SECTION II.—Construction of Executory or Directory Trusts of Real Estate, particularly as regards Issue, in reference to the Rule in Shelley's Case.

|                                                                                                                                                      |         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Rule attaches on an Executed Trust, without reference to Intention . . . . .                                                                         | 131     |
| In Executory Trust Intention may be referred to . . . . .                                                                                            | 131     |
| Not all Executory Trusts to which this Observation applicable; "Directory," therefore, will be used to designate this Description of Trust . . . . . | 131     |
| Whether a Trust is Executed or Directory a Question of Intention . . . . .                                                                           | 132     |
| Forms of Expression which have been considered as not making the Trust Directory . . . . .                                                           | 132     |
| Instances where the Trust will be considered as Directory, and where not Distinction established by— . . . . .                                       | 132     |
| Leonard v. Earl of Sussex . . . . .                                                                                                           |         |
| Earl of Stamford v. Hobarts . . . . .                                                                                                         |         |
| Papillon v. Voice . . . . .                                                                                                                   |         |
| Glenorchy v. Bosville . . . . .                                                                                                               | 133 134 |

|                                                                                                                                                             | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Where there is a Direction that a Conveyance be executed, and the Estates to be given are pointed out, that must be followed . . .                          | 134 135 |
| True Guide according to Lord Northington . . .                                                                                                              | 133     |
| So in case of a Voluntary Deed containing a Directory Trust . . .                                                                                           | 135     |
| Stoner v. Curwen , before Vice-Chancellor of England . . .                                                                                           | 136, n. |
| Distinction between Articles and Will—In the former the plain Object of Consideration in them is the Issue . . .                                            | 136     |
| What Expressions in a Will will confine Estate to Tenancy for Life . . .                                                                                    | 136     |
| When Intention ascertained no Distinction between Articles and Wills . . .                                                                                  | 137     |
| Rockfort v. Fitzmaurice . . .                                                                                                                        | 137, n. |
| General Rule where Issue take Real Estate by Purchase . . .                                                                                                 | 137     |
| Trevor v. Trevor , before Vice-Chancellor of England . . .                                                                                           | 138     |
| Estate of Wife controlled . . .                                                                                                                             | 138 139 |
| Court takes care of Interests of Daughters as well as Sons . . .                                                                                            | 139     |
| Where the Parties have shown that they know the Distinction, the Court will not vary the Limitation . . .                                                   | 140     |
| Where Articles and Settlement both executed before Marriage . . .                                                                                           | 140     |
| Rule in Boraston's Case, as applicable to Estate devised to Trustees in Trust to Settle . . .                                                        | 141     |
| Where Trust as to Real Estate in a Will to a line of Issue would create a Perpetuity, the Estate may be tied up as far as the Rules of Law will allow . . . | 141     |
| Humberstone v. Humberstone . . .                                                                                                                     |         |
| SECTION III.— Some other Matters relating to Executory Trusts—Usual Powers.                                                                          |         |
| General Rule as to "Usual Powers" laid down by Vice-Chancellor of England, in Hill v. Hill , 6 Sim. . .                                              | 142     |
| Power for Tenant for Life to appoint new Trustees . . .                                                                                                     | 142     |
| Power to grant Leases . . .                                                                                                                                 | 143     |
| Precedents for carrying out a Directory Trust, for settling Estates to go along with a Title . . .                                                          | 143     |
| Lord Dorchester v. Lord Effingham . . .                                                                                                              |         |
| Banks v. Lord Le Despenser . . .                                                                                                                     |         |
| Tenancy in Common more favoured in the Court of Chancery than Joint Tenancy . . .                                                                           | 143     |

CHAPTER IV.

LIMITATIONS OF PERSONAL ESTATE IN RESPECT OF THE CLAIMS OF CHILDREN AND OTHER DESCENDANTS, AND THE INCIDENTAL DOCTRINES RELATING TO SUCH LIMITATIONS.

SECTION I.—Limitations of Personal Estate to Parents and their Issue, which confer an Absolute Interest on the Parent, and those on which Issue takes as Purchasers; and of Limitations over for default of Issue, and the like.

|                                                                                                                         |     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| General Rule—Words which would give Estate Tail in Real Estate give absolute Interest in Personal Estate . . .          | 145 |
| Gift to a Person and his Issue, or with Remainder to his Issue, and other Instances . . .                               | 146 |
| Knight v. Ellis , Lord Thurlow . . .                                                                             | 147 |
| Attorney-General v. Bright , Lord Langdale . . .                                                                 | 148 |
| Any Gift over on Failure of Issue not limited to some Period within due Limits void . . .                               | 148 |
| Gift to Issue living at the Death of Tenant for Life . . .                                                              | 148 |
| Whether a Devise of a Term to a Man for Life, and afterwards to his Issue, forms an Exception to the General Rule . . . | 148 |

|                                                                                                                                                             | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| General Rule may be controlled by Intention clearly and properly expressed in the Instrument . . . . .                                                      | 150     |
| Legal Acceptation of the word "Issue," in note . . . . .                                                                                                    | 150     |
| Conflicting Cases on the Subject of Limitations of Personal Estate in Remainder (in note) . . . . .                                                         | 150     |
| Peacock v. Spooner , before Lord Chancellor Jefferies . . . . .                                                                                      | 151, n. |
| Webb v. Webb , before Lord Hardwicke . . . . .                                                                                                       | 151     |
| Bartlett v. Green , before Vice-Chancellor of England . . . . .                                                                                      | 152     |
| Stat. 1 Victoria, c. 26, sect. 28 and 29, set out . . . . .                                                                                                 | 153     |
| The Effect of these Clauses on Gifts over in default of Issue as regards Real Estate and Personal Estate . . . . .                                          | 154     |
| Observations of Mr. Jarman on this subject . . . . .                                                                                                        | 154     |
| And of Mr. Hayes . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 154     |
| Who will take under a Gift of Personal Estate to Issue as Purchasers . . . . .                                                                              | 154     |
| When Issue is a Word of Purchase it is synonymous with Descendants . . . . .                                                                                | 154     |
| General Rule that Children, Grandchildren, &c., when Purchasers, take per capita as Joint Tenants . . . . .                                          | 155     |
| Where Issue will take as Tenants in Common . . . . .                                                                                                        | 155     |
| SECTION II.— As to the common Direction in Wills and Marriage Articles, that Personal Chattels shall go according to the Limitations of Real Estate. |         |
| Strict Construction of such a Direction in general Terms will generally defeat the Intention . . . . .                                                      | 156     |
| Gower v. Grosvenor , before Lord Hardwicke . . . . .                                                                                                 | 157     |
| Vaughan v. Burslem , before Lord Thurlow . . . . .                                                                                                   | 157     |
| Lord Eldon's Observations on Gower v. Grosvenor , in Duke of Newcastle v. Countess of Lincoln . . . . .                                       | 158     |
| Carr v. Lord Errol , before Sir W. Grant . . . . .                                                                                                   | 158     |
| Present State of the Law upon the Authorities; (and see Rowland v. Morgan , 6 Hare, 463; xxiii. Jur. 33; 2 Phillips, 767—771) . . . . .              | 159 160 |

CHAPTER V.

OF TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION—THE THELLUSSON ACT, ITS CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION—OF MAINTENANCE OUT OF RENTS OR INTEREST DIRECTED TO BE ACCUMULATED, AND INCIDENTALLY OF MAINTENANCE OUT OF DEFERRED AND CONTINGENT LEGACIES—LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES UNDER TRUST TO ACCUMULATE.

|                                                                                                                                                            |         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| First Appearance of Trusts for Accumulation commensurate with Executory Devise . . . . .                                                                   | 164     |
| Thellusson v. Woodford —Extent and Limits of Accumulation, as established by that Case—Limited by Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98 . . . . . | 165     |
| Mr. Hargrave's Observations on 3rd and 4th Clauses of 1st Section . . . . .                                                                                | 166     |
| Testator only entitled to take one of the several Periods of Accumulation . . . . .                                                                        | 167     |
| Some Uncertainty as to the 4th Description of Accumulation . . . . .                                                                                       | 167     |
| Haley v. Bannister , before Sir J. Leach . . . . .                                                                                                  | 167     |
| Ellis v. Maxwell —Lord Langdale . . . . .                                                                                                           | 168—170 |
| Observations on 4th Period of Accumulation . . . . .                                                                                                       | 170     |
| Question whether the Operation of the Act is confined to Cases of express direction to Accumulate . . . . .                                                | 170     |
| General Rules of Court of Chancery in regard to the Devolution of Interest and Rents accruing on Deferred and Contingent Gifts . . . . .                   | 170     |
| As to Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                            | 170     |

CONTENTS.

xix

|                                                                                                                                                              | PAGE        |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| Reasoning of Lord Talbot and Lord Hardwicke, in Strudholme v. Hodgson , in note . . . . .                                                             | 172         |
| As to Real Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 173         |
| "When" Devisee shall attain 21, or the like, does not prevent Vesting . . . . .                                                                              | 173         |
| Real and Personal Estate mixed up in same Clause . . . . .                                                                                                   | 173         |
| Question whether Accumulation of Interest and Rents directed by the Court rather than the Settlor, are within the Scope of the Act . . . . .                 | 174         |
| Shaw v. Rhodes —Case of Charge . . . . .                                                                                                              |             |
| M'Donald v. Bryce , before Lord Langdale . . . . .                                                                                                    |             |
| Authority of this Case disputed in Elborne v. Goode , before Vice-Chancellor of England . . . . .                                                     | 175 178     |
| Eyre v. Marsden , before Lord Langdale . . . . .                                                                                                      | 178 184, n. |
| Corporation of Bridgnorth v. Collins , before Vice-Chancellor of England . . . . .                                                                    | 179         |
| Observations on these Cases . . . . .                                                                                                                        | 179 180     |
| Of the Operation of the Statute to accelerate Possession . . . . .                                                                                           | 181         |
| Provision which transgresses or may transgress Boundary of Remoteness void altogether . . . . .                                                              | 181         |
| Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford —Example where Minorities are taken . . . . .                                                                 | 181         |
| Trust for Accumulation only void for Excess . . . . .                                                                                                        | 182         |
| Trusts void in Creation . . . . .                                                                                                                            | 182         |
| The Operation of the Act has been confined to its Purpose . . . . .                                                                                          | 182         |
| Difference in the Provisions of Mortmain and Thellusson Act . . . . .                                                                                        | 183         |
| Thellusson Act gives Statutable Title to Heir at Law or Residuary Devisees, &c. . . . .                                                                      | 183         |
| Direction for Maintenance and Advancement good . . . . .                                                                                                     | 184         |
| Direction to accumulate a vested Legacy after Legatee has attained 21 . . . . .                                                                              | 184         |
| General Rule as between Tenant for Life and Remainderman where there is a Direction to invest in Land, the intermediate Interest to be accumulated . . . . . | 185         |
| Doctrine of the Court of Chancery as to giving Maintenance out of the fund directed to be accumulated, and out of Contingent Legacies generally . . . . .    | 185         |
| Rule as to giving Maintenance out of a Legacy, though Contingent, given by a Parent or Person in loco parentis . . . . .                              | 185         |
| Presumption on which the Rule is founded . . . . .                                                                                                           | 186         |
| Maintenance allowed when Legacy vested . . . . .                                                                                                             | 186         |
| Leading Cases as to Maintenance out of Contingent Legacies, stated . . . . .                                                                                 | 186 190     |
| Fairman v. Green , before Sir W. Grant . . . . .                                                                                                      |             |
| Errat v. Barlow , before Lord Eldon . . . . .                                                                                                         |             |
| Greenwell v. Greenwell . . . . .                                                                                                                      |             |
| Where each of several Legatees has an equal Chance of taking by Survivorship, &c., et contra . . . . .                                                | 188         |
| Ex parte Kebble , before Lord Eldon . . . . .                                                                                                         |             |
| Marshall v. Holloway . . . . .                                                                                                                        |             |
| Haley v. Bannister , Sir J. Leach . . . . .                                                                                                           |             |
| Kime v. Welfitt , Vice-Chancellor of England . . . . .                                                                                                |             |
| Turner v. Turner , ibid. . . . .                                                                                                               |             |
| Canning v. Flower , ibid. . . . .                                                                                                              |             |
| Liabilities of Trustee where there is an Express Trust to accumulate . . . . .                                                                               | 190 191 .   |

CHAPTER VI.

TRUSTS BY IMPLICATION, PRESUMPTION, AND CONSTRUCTION OF LAW, WHERE FRAUD OR PUBLIC POLICY DO NOT FORM THE MAIN INGREDIENT IN THE DECISION.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | PAGE            |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------|
| SECTION I.— Introduction—General Doctrines.                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |                 |
| The Trusts here to be considered are those where Fraud and Improper Conduct do not form the main Ingredient . . . . .                                                                                                                                                    | 194             |
| Implied or Presumptive Trusts, Resulting Trusts, and Constructive Trusts not depending on Fraud, will be treated of together . . . . .                                                                                                                                   | 194             |
| Trusts by Operation of Law within the Words of the exception in the Statute of Frauds, Lord Hardwicke's Definition in Lloyd v. Spillett . . . . .                                                                                                                 | 194             |
| Trust fixed upon Trust Property in the hands of the Possessor . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 195             |
| Rule applied as regards Persons taking from Executors and Administrators . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                       | 195             |
| How far Purchaser is affected by Notice of a Constructive Trust . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                | 195             |
| As to the Operation of the 25th Section of the Statute of Limitations in such cases . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 197             |
| Exception as regards Disseisors, &c., and those who come in in the Post Effect of Fine levied, prior to their Abolition, in reference to this Subject . . . . .                                                                                                          | 196             |
| Whether on a Conveyance without Consideration a Trust may result . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                               | 198             |
| Duke of Norfolk v. Brown . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |                 |
| Lord Hardwicke's Opinion, that no Trust will result . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 199             |
| No Presumption of Trust as against a Complete Transfer or Conveyance according to Modern Cases . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                 | 199             |
| Evidence may in some Cases be given to prove a Trust . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                           | 199             |
| No Resulting Trust as regards a Transfer of an Equitable or Trust Estate by Analogy to the Doctrine as to Uses . . . . .                                                                                                                                                 | 200             |
| SECTION II.— Resulting Trusts arising on Purchases made with the Money of another Person, and Trusts of a similar Character.                                                                                                                                      |                 |
| Resulting Trusts arising from Payment of Price of Property conveyed to a Third Person, and the like . . . . .                                                                                                                                                            | 202 219         |
| Applies to Cases where the Purchase-money is advanced by more than one Person, contrary to the dictum of Lord Hardwicke, in Crop v. Norton . . . . .                                                                                                              | 202             |
| Whether parol Evidence sufficient after the Death of the supposed nominal Purchaser . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 203             |
| Act done by Party bound to do an Act construed to be a Performance when following Money into Land . . . . .                                                                                                                                                              | 204 205         |
| Presumption may be rebutted by Evidence . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 206             |
| As to following Trust Money laid out by Trustee in Land or Securities Assets of Wife's Testator may be followed . . . . .                                                                                                                                                | 206             |
| Where two purchase Lands in equal Proportions . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 206             |
| Where the Proportions are unequal . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 206             |
| Where one of Joint Purchasers lays out Money in Improvements . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 206             |
| Doctrine as to Real Estate engaged in a Partnership Concern as between the Partners, and as between the Real and Personal Representatives of each Partner; Constructive Trusts as to Profits arising from the Employment of the Property of others in Trade, &c. . . . . | 207—214         |
| Resulting Trust may be rebutted by Evidence . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 214             |
| Purchase in Name of Child . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 215 218 220 225 |
| Money paid by Father and Stranger . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 217             |
| of Wife . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 218 219         |
| Exception to General Rule in the case of the Purchase of a Ship, arising upon the Ship Registry Acts . . . . .                                                                                                                                                           | 220 221         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | PAGE    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| SECTION III.—Resulting Trusts in favour of the Heir and Next of Kin, in respect of Property given upon Trust, where the Trusts wholly or partially fail or do not exhaust the Beneficial Interest.                                                    |         |
| General Rule . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | 223 224 |
| The Person to whom Property would devolve by General Law cannot be deprived of his Right excepting by a Gift to some one else . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 224     |
| On Questions as to Resulting Trusts, the First Question to be determined usually is whether the Donee or Devisee, by the original Gift on the face of the Instrument, takes in Trust merely . . . . .                                                        | 224     |
| Instances where donee has and has not been considered as Trustee merely . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 224—232 |
| If Donee an Infant or Married Woman, that is only a Circumstance . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                   | 225     |
| Recognition of Relationship and Expressions of Regard may be taken into Consideration in construing a Will in regard to the Interest conferred . . . . .                                                                                                     | 227 228 |
| Quære, if any Difference between a Will and a Deed in this respect . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 | 227 228 |
| Distinction between Devise of an Estate charged with Debts, and upon Trust to pay Debts; Effect of the intended Purpose as affecting the Right to the Beneficial Interest . . . . .                                                                          | 226     |
| King v. Denison , before Lord Eldon . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 226     |
| Not universally true that the Purpose limits the Devise . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                            | 227     |
| Walton v. Walton , 14 Ves., Sir W. Grant . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 227     |
| General Rule, that where one of several donees is a trustee, all are . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                               | 229     |
| Absolute Gift of Property, with Illegal Condition annexed—Doctrine of Sir J. Leach . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                 | 229 230 |
| Bland v. Wilkin (1 Bro.), stated from the Registrar's Book . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                  | 229, n. |
| Cases considered where the Title of the Donee under the original Gift is out of the question . . . . .                                                                                                                                                       | 232     |
| Legacy to Heir or Next of Kin will not preclude their Claim . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                        | 232     |
| Nor will bare Intention to exclude, or negative Words . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                              | 232     |
| Charity Legacies given out of Mixed Fund composed of Realty and Pure Personalty will not be marshalled in favour of the Charity . . . . .                                                                                                                    | 233     |
| The Rule as stated by Mr. Cox, as to Descent on Heir-at-Law of Surplus Proceeds of Real Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                     | 233     |
| Conversion out and out—for the Purposes of the Will only . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                           | 234     |
| General Law as settled by Cruse v. Barley and Ackroyd v. Smithson , where there is a Mixed Fund of Real and Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                          | 234 235 |
| Resulting Trust for Next of Kin where Money is directed to be laid out in Land, and a limited Interest is given in the Land so to be purchased, or the Limitations of the Land or any of them fail . . . . .                                                 | 235     |
| Cogan v. Stevens , before Lord Cottenham . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 236     |
| Where a Mixed Fund of Real and Personal Estate is devised in Trust and the Trusts wholly or partially fail, and there is no Heir-at-Law or Next of Kin, the Donees in Trust keep the Real Estate, but are Trustees for the Crown of the Personalty . . . . . | 237     |
| Taylor v. Haygarth , before Vice-Chancellor of England . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                      | 237     |
| Question frequently arises whether the Resulting Trust for the Heir is not intercepted by Conversion out and out in favour of Residuary Legatee or Next of Kin . . . . .                                                                                     | 237     |
| Conversion may be in such Terms as to give the Next of Kin a Claim . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 | 237     |
| But they must claim as Devisees by Express or Implied Gift . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                         | 238     |
| Robinson v. Taylor , 2 Bro., Lord Thurlow . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 238     |
| Direction that Proceeds of Real Estate shall be deemed Part of Personal Estate and the like, not sufficient . . . . .                                                                                                                                        | 238     |
| Fitch v. Webber , 6 Hare . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |         |
| Question has most frequently arisen between the Residuary Legatees and the Heir . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                    | 239     |
| Doctrine stated by Lord Eldon (1803) . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 239     |
| Sheddon v. Goodrick , 8 Ves. . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | PAGE        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| Mallabar v. Mallabar and Durour v. Motteux , until lately were considered as the leading Authorities on Conversion as between Heir and Residuary Legatee . . . . .                                                    | 240         |
| Amphlet v. Parke ; Green v. Jackson                                                                                                                                                                                   |             |
| Principle of Durour v. Motteux still governing Principle—the Surplus may be so converted as to pass to Residuary Legatees . . . . .                                                                                          | 240         |
| But it must be given . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 241         |
| Residuary Clause, though generally it includes all, may be restricted . . . . .                                                                                                                                                     | 241         |
| Effect of Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, § 25 . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                       | 241, n.     |
| The Heir takes the Portion of a Converted Fund which results to him as Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 242         |
| The Doctrine as expounded by Sir J. Leach . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 | 242 243     |
| When Parol Evidence may be admitted to repel the Resulting Trust . . . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 243         |
| When the entire Property is, on the Construction of the Instrument, fixed with a Trust, Parol Evidence cannot be given . . . . .                                                                                                    | 243         |
| Where the Resulting Trust arises from Presumption of Law on the facts, Evidence may be gone into . . . . .                                                                                                                          | 244 245     |
| On a Devise of Land, apparently for an illicit Purpose . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                    | 245         |
| Evidence of Declarations of the Testator . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                  | 246         |
| If Evidence be received on one side, it may be given on the other . . . . .                                                                                                                                                         | 246         |
| Exception to the Rule as to Resulting Trusts in regard to Gifts for Charity . . . . .                                                                                                                                               | 246         |
| Result of the Decisions as to when the Donee in Charity Cases may retain the Surplus or Increased Rents and Profits . . . . .                                                                                                       | 246—248     |
| SECTION IV.— Trust Estates and Interests arising from the Maxim that "What ought to be done is considered as done"—Conversion of Real Estate into Personal, and of Personal Estate into Real, and some Incidental Doctrines. |             |
| GENERAL RULE—What ought to be done considered as done . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                     | 254         |
| Kettleby v. Atwood                                                                                                                                                                                                           |             |
| Consequence of this Maxim—the Person in whom the Property is vested, is Trustee for the Purposes to which it is devoted . . . . .                                                                                                   | 255         |
| Land turned into Money, Money into Land . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                   | 256         |
| The Conversion must be definitely fixed . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                   | 256         |
| Option given . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 257 260     |
| Direction to convert with all convenient Speed on request, &c. . . . .                                                                                                                                                              | 257 259—261 |
| Event may determine whether the Rule is to be applied . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                     | 258         |
| Where the Purposes are at an end—Distinctions on this Subject—Right of the Heir . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 261—263     |
| Where Intent was to rely on Personal Covenant . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                             | 263         |
| Principle carried out in all its Consequences unless controlled . . . . .                                                                                                                                                           | 264         |
| Not in favour of mere Stranger, as the Crown, or Lord, by way of Escheat . . . . .                                                                                                                                                  | 265 266     |
| Burgess v. Wheate                                                                                                                                                                                                            |             |
| Some Doctrines connected with this Subject stated . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                         | 267 268     |
| WHO ARE ENTITLED TO CARRY OUT THE PRINCIPLE.                                                                                                                                                                                        |             |
| I.—Where the Question arises upon a Devise by Will . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                        | 268         |
| Rights of Heir, and of Next of Kin and Personal Representatives . . . . .                                                                                                                                                           | 268 269     |
| II.—Where the Question arises upon Contract . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                               | 269         |
| 1st. Where the Contract affects some existing Property, Real or Personal, which belongs to one of the Parties . . . . .                                                                                                             | 269         |
| Heir entitled where Real Qualities are impressed on the Fund . . . . .                                                                                                                                                              | 269 270     |
| Personal Representative or Next of Kin . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                    | 270         |
| Chichester v. Bickerstaff                                                                                                                                                                                                    |             |
| Lingen v. Sowray                                                                                                                                                                                                             |             |
| Chaplin v. Horner                                                                                                                                                                                                            |             |
| Stead v. Newdigate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 271         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                            | PAGE    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Qualification of the Rule as to Conversion . . .                                                                                                                                                           | 271     |
| Where the same Person is Obligor and Obligee . . .                                                                                                                                                         | 270     |
| 1. Where the Money is at Home . . .                                                                                                                                                                        | 270     |
| 2. Where the Property is outstanding . . .                                                                                                                                                                 | 271     |
| Election . . .                                                                                                                                                                                             | 271     |
| 2nd. Where the Contract does not affect any specific Property . . .                                                                                                                                        | 272     |
| Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle . . .                                                                                                                                                                     | 273 274 |
| 3rd. As to Stipulations in favour of Strangers to the Contract,as Brothers or other Relatives—When and as againstwhom such Stipulations can be enforced . . .                                      | 274     |
| If Two Persons enter into an Agreement for the Benefit ofa Third Person each may enforce it . . .                                                                                                      | 275     |
| Davenport v. Bishop . . .                                                                                                                                                                           |         |
| The Stranger stands in a Different Situation . . .                                                                                                                                                         | 275     |
| Doctrine of Common Law as to Deeds . . .                                                                                                                                                                   | 275     |
| Deed made between Parties . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 275 276 |
| Stranger cannot enforce it . . .                                                                                                                                                                           | 276     |
| Either may release the other . . .                                                                                                                                                                         | 276     |
| Doctrine of Common Law as regards Agreements on whichEquitable Action of Assumpsit may be brought . . .                                                                                                | 276     |
| Strangers have in some Cases been permitted to enforcesuch Agreements, when it was part of the Considerationthat the Stranger being a Relation, Child for instance,should have a Benefit . . . | 276     |
| Indeed a Child appears not to have been considered in suchCase as a Stranger . . .                                                                                                                     | 276     |
| Dutton v. Poole . . .                                                                                                                                                                               |         |
| Physician's Case . . .                                                                                                                                                                                     |         |
| Where Stranger has performed the meritorious Act . . .                                                                                                                                                     | 277     |
| Sprat v. Agar . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 |         |
| Where Favour to the Third Person does not appear tohave been the Motive, he is considered as a mere Stranger . . .                                                                                     | 277     |
| Crow v. Rogers . . .                                                                                                                                                                                |         |
| Bourne v. Mann . . .                                                                                                                                                                                |         |
| Buller, Justice's, Opinion } . . .                                                                                                                                                                         | 278     |
| Marchington v. Vernon } . . .                                                                                                                                                                       |         |
| Lord Mansfield's . . .                                                                                                                                                                                     | 278     |
| Lord Eldon's . . .                                                                                                                                                                                         | 278     |
| Ex parte Williams . . .                                                                                                                                                                             | 278     |
| Ex parte Williams , distinguishable from the Casescited . . .                                                                                                                                   | 279     |
| Also Phillips v. Bateman , 16 East . . .                                                                                                                                                            | 279, n. |
| Where Promise made to the Stranger, he may sue . . .                                                                                                                                                       | 279     |
| Old Rule of the Court of Chancery followed the Law . . .                                                                                                                                                   | 280     |
| And the General Law is the same at this Day . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 280     |
| Colyear v. Lord Mulgrave . . .                                                                                                                                                                      | 280, n. |
| Gibbs v. Glammis . . .                                                                                                                                                                              |         |
| So that each may abandon the Contract . . .                                                                                                                                                                | 281     |
| But if the Condition of Life of the Stranger has been alteredby reason of the Promise, he may enforce it . . .                                                                                         | 281     |
| Hill v. Gomme . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 |         |
| A Distinction has been taken where a Person who has con-tributed any Valuable Consideration has stipulated forsome Benefit for a near Relation, and the Arrangementwas a reasonable one . . .  | 281     |
| Edwards v. Countess of Warwick . . .                                                                                                                                                                | 282, n. |
| Osgood v. Strobe . . .                                                                                                                                                                              | 282     |
| Vernon v. Vernon . . .                                                                                                                                                                              |         |
| Stephens v. Trueman . . .                                                                                                                                                                           |         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | PAGE    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| But Lord Hardwicke would not carry such a Contract into Execution, if the Heir would be Disinherited . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 283     |
| Goring v. Nash                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |         |
| It is assumed in all these Cases that the Parties have not released one another, and that the Person claiming seeks to stand in the Place of the Covenantee or Party who exacted the Stipulation; but Lord Northington was of Opinion that the Covenant might be enforced against the Heir of the Covenantor—on the ground of Intention . . . | 284     |
| Hale v. Lambe . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 285     |
| Modern Doctrine that a Volunteer cannot compel the Performance of a Covenant in his favour . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 285     |
| Jefferys v. Jefferys , 1 Cr. & Phillips, overruling Ellis v. Nimmo , et v. infra , chap. x. . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 285     |
| Does not controvert the Decisions establishing that a Third Person may enforce a Stipulation exacted in his favour . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 286     |
| Sutton v. Chetwynd , a Case of a mere Stranger for whom no one could have been interested to exact the Covenant . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 286     |
| Where the Money has been deposited, or the Estate conveyed to Trustees, it is a stronger Case for the Collateral Instances where a Third Person has been permitted to treat the Party exacting a Stipulation as his Trustee . . .                                                                                                             | 286 287 |
| Gregory v. Williams . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 287     |
| Hook v. Kinnear . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 287     |
| Where there are a Series of Limitations, some of which are in favour of Strangers, if any Party seeks to have the Agreement carried into effect it must be performed in toto . . .                                                                                                                                                     | 287     |
| Davenport v. Bishopp                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Of the Rights of Purchasers, for Valuable Consideration, without Notice, as against Voluntary Conveyances and Limitations, under the operation of the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, and of the Rights of Creditors under the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, in connection with this subject; et v. infra , Chap. x.                                       |         |
| SECTION V.— Miscellaneous Instances of Implied, Presumptive, Constructive, and Transferred or Continuing Trusts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |         |
| Court of Chancery more liberal than Courts of Law in putting a Construction on Devises in Trust, so as to carry out the Intent of the Testator . . .                                                                                                                                                                                          | 295     |
| The Courts of Law also governed by the Intent in determining what Estate the Devisee in Trust takes . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 295     |
| Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 30, 31, as to the Estate of Trustees . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 295     |
| But the Cases here to be considered are those where the Legal Interest is clearly in some Third Person . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 296     |
| Heir a Trustee where there is a Direction to Sell . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | 296     |
| Trustee for Sale to pay Debts may be constructively Trustee for Creditors                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 296     |
| Implied or Constructive Trusts may be raised by the Acts of the Parties                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |         |
| —Consignee who is directed to pay an Annuity to a Third Person a Trustee for such Third Person . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 296     |
| Heir of Mortgagee in Fee Trustee for the Personal Representatives . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | 296     |
| Executor, Trustee of a Debt due from himself to his Testator . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 296     |
| Legatees who have been paid before Debts satisfied, Trustees for the Creditors—One Legatee also may in some cases compel another who has been paid to refund . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 297     |
| When the Legatee must refund with Interest, and when not . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 298     |
| Person taking Property from Executor in Breach of Trust, as for Payment of a Private Debt, is himself a Trustee . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 298     |

|                                                                                                                                                                                  | PAGE    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Assignees of Broker, Trustees of Price of Goods sold, if in Specie, for the Principal . . . . .                                                                                  | 298     |
| Trustee, Executor, or Agent, or Person having a Limited Interest in an Estate, obtaining a Renewal of a Lease, is a Trustee of such Renewed Interest . . . . .                   | 299—302 |
| Any person holding a fiduciary character, obtaining a benefit in that character, is Trustee of it for the Cestuis que Trust , ( et v. infra , Chap. xi.) . . . . . | 299—301 |
| Executor of Mortgagee purchasing Equity of Redemption, a Trustee for the Mortgagor's Estate . . . . .                                                                            | 301     |
| Annuitant whose Annuity is charged on a Leasehold Interest, or whose Annuity is charged by Will on a Leasehold Interest, entitled to the Benefit of a Renewal . . . . .          | 302     |
| Moody v. Matthew , 7 Ves., before Sir W. Grant . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 302     |
| Annuitant under a Will must contribute to the Fines . . . . .                                                                                                                    | 303     |
| Whether where a Person having a Limited Interest purchases the Reversion he shall be held as a Trustee . . . . .                                                                 | 303     |
| Randall v. Russell , 3 Meriv., before Sir W. Grant . . . . .                                                                                                              |         |
| The Person so converted into a Trustee entitled to an Allowance for Repairs and lasting Improvements . . . . .                                                                   | 304     |
| The Right to convert such Person into a Trustee may be lost by Laches or Acquiescence . . . . .                                                                                  | 305     |
| Tenant for Life committing Equitable Waste Trustee of the Produce . . . . .                                                                                                      | 305     |
| But see Kingham v. Lee , 15 Sim. 399.                                                                                                                                     |         |
| Trust in favour of Wife on a Mortgage of her Property for Payment of her Husband's Debts . . . . .                                                                               | 306 307 |
| Trust in favour of Person having a Limited Estate paying off Incumbrances . . . . .                                                                                              | 307 308 |
| Generally the Person who has the Legal Right in Personal Property may of himself sue for the Property though liable to a Trust for others . . . . .                              | 308     |
| Jones v. Goodchild , 3 P. W., before Lord C. King . . . . .                                                                                                               |         |
| Exceptions . . . . .                                                                                                                                                             | 308     |
| Loy v. Duckett , 1 Cr. & Phill., before Lord Cottenham . . . . .                                                                                                          | 309     |
| The Bank of England not affected by Notice of a Trust—Ordinary Banker not a Trustee . . . . .                                                                                    | 309     |
| Vendor Trustee for Purchaser . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 310     |

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE TRUSTS WHICH ARE USUALLY INTRODUCED INTO WILLS AND SETTLEMENTS.

|                                                                                                                                                                |         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| SECTION I.— Charges of Debts by Will, in Reference to the Statutes 1 Will. IV. c. 47, and 3 &amp; 4 Will. IV. c. 104—What amounts to a Charge of Debts. |         |
| Liability of Heir for Payment of Debts . . . . .                                                                                                               | 312 313 |
| Trust for Payment of Debts and Legacies, Consequences to be now considered . . . . .                                                                           | 312     |
| Doctrine of Equitable Assets based on Power which Testators had before Statute of Fraudulent Devises to disappoint their Creditors . . . . .                   | 313     |
| 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14 . . . . .                                                                                                                               | 313 314 |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 47 . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 314     |
| If no Devise of Real Estates for Payment of Debts, Specialty Creditors may enforce their Claim according to Legal Priority . . . . .                           | 314     |
| If a Devise within the meaning of the Statute, Devise ceases to be Fraudulent, and no Creditor can claim except under such Disposition . . . . .               | 314     |
| At Common Law Specialty Creditors had no Lien on Land before Judgment, and Simple-contract Creditors had no Rights against Real Estates . . . . .              | 314, n. |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | PAGE    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Rule while 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, was in operation . . . . .                                                                                                                                                      | 314     |
| As 5th Section of 1 Will. IV. c. 47, is the same, same Rule must still prevail . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 314     |
| And as the Estate can only be reached through the Court of Chancery all Creditors will be entitled to share in Proportion to the Amount of their Debts . . . . .                                                   | 314     |
| If a Creditor institutes a Suit to obtain the Benefit of the Trust, Decree must be such that all other Creditors may come in . . . . .                                                                             | 314     |
| Devise for Payment of Simple-contract Creditors before Specialty it seems satisfies the Words of 5th Section of Statute, and is therefore good . . . . .                                                           | 315     |
| But Devise must be for Payment of all Debts . . . . .                                                                                                                                                              | 315     |
| Deg v. Deg, 2 P. &amp; W.                                                                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Lands devised to an Executor to sell are Equitable Assets . . . . .                                                                                                                                                | 513     |
| Power given to Executors to sell, Proceeds are Equitable Assets . . . . .                                                                                                                                          | 316     |
| Lands charged with Debts which descend to the Heir are Equitable Assets . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 316     |
| If Mode prescribed for Payment of Debts be inconvenient, it will not take the case out of Statute . . . . .                                                                                                        | 316     |
| Where Trust is created for the Purpose of raising Money out of Rents and Profits, if the Trusts of the Will require a Gross Sum to be raised, generally the Trustees are to raise it by Sale or Mortgage . . . . . | 316     |
| If a Person selects Part only of his Estate, which is insufficient for Payment of Debts, Devise is Fraudulent against Specialty Creditors . . . . .                                                                | 317     |
| Rule, that the Estate when realized shall be Equitable Assets, is liable to be controverted by the apparent Intention . . . . .                                                                                    | 317     |
| Soames v. Robinson, 1 M. &amp; K.                                                                                                                                                                           |         |
| Devise to Executors as Trustees makes the Assets Equitable . . . . .                                                                                                                                               | 317     |
| Creditors who have been paid Part out of Personalty, not entitled to have remainder paid out of Realty, until Creditors who have received nothing have been paid an equal Proportion out of Realty . . . . .       | 318     |
| Lord Harcourt's Doctrine; case of Boazman v. Johnson , 3 Sim. . . . .                                                                                                                                       | 318 319 |
| Creditors having Security not affected by the Rule of Distribution . . . . .                                                                                                                                       | 319     |
| Provisions of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104 . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                     | 319     |
| Statute does not apply where there is a Disposition of Real Estate for Payment of Debts . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 319     |
| Great Importance to ascertain whether a Charge of Debts has been created or not . . . . .                                                                                                                          | 320     |
| Leigh v. Earl of Warrington                                                                                                                                                                                 |         |
| What words are sufficient to create a Charge . . . . .                                                                                                                                                             | 320     |
| General Charge of Debts includes all Debts Testator may contract during Life . . . . .                                                                                                                             | 320     |
| A Direction to pay Debts and a Gift of Property to same Person, the Property (unless contrary Intention appear) will be considered to be charged with Payment of Debts . . . . .                                   | 321     |
| But a Direction to Executors to pay and a Devise of Real Estate to another will not operate as a Charge . . . . .                                                                                                  | 321     |
| Nor a Devise to a Person (after a Direction to Executors to pay Debts) who happens to be afterwards named an Executor . . . . .                                                                                    | 322     |
| If there be a general Charge by Implication under the Preliminary Direction, it becomes a Question on the Effect of subsequent Devises whether that Intention has been altered . . . . .                           | 322     |
| But where there is an Express Charge of Debts on Testator's Real Estate, it is not liable to be defeated by subsequent Devises and Directions . . . . .                                                            | 322     |
| Case of Annuitant . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                 |         |
| Trust or Charge for Payment of Debts may also materially affect Real Representatives of Testator by Devise and Intestacy . . . . .                                                                                 | 323     |
| Charge of Debts by a Married Woman, by Will upon her Separate Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                     | 324 325 |

SECTION II.—Charges of Legacies.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                |     |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Legatees being Volunteers and taking from the Bounty of their Testator, cannot claim in Competition with Creditors, though the Testator himself may not have made any Distinction between them | 326 |
| Creditors have Rights by Operation of Law. Legatee can only claim his Legacy in Manner and Form given by the Will                                                                              | 326 |
| If one part of the Estates is charged, that circumstance is generally considered as a Discharge of the Rest                                                                                    | 327 |
| If the Legacy be given generally, the Legatee must resort to the Personal Estate only                                                                                                          | 327 |
| Lord Alvanley's Opinion as to a General Charge of Debts and of Legacies                                                                                                                        | 327 |
| Kightley v. Kightley , 2 Ves. J.                                                                                                                                                        |     |
| Lord Rosslyn's Opinion— Williams v. Chitty , 3 Ves. J.                                                                                                                                  |     |
| Spong v. Spong , 3 Bli.                                                                                                                                                                 |     |
| Whether Legacies are charged on Real Estates or not is a Question of Intention, to be ascertained upon the whole Context                                                                       | 328 |
| Instances                                                                                                                                                                                      | 328 |
| Annuity charged on Rents and Profits                                                                                                                                                           | 329 |
| Clear Intention necessary to give one Legatee a Preference over the others                                                                                                                     | 329 |
| Abatement of Annuities                                                                                                                                                                         | 330 |
| Effect of the Statutes against Fraudulent Devises, and of the Statute making Real Estate liable to Simple-contract Debts, on the Condition of Legatees                                         | 330 |

SECTION III.—General Doctrines as to Charges of Debts and Legacies by Will—Exemption and Exoneration of Personal Estate.

|                                                                                                                                                                              |         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| General Rule that Personal Estate first Fund for Payment of Debts                                                                                                            | 334     |
| And also of Legacies, if no other Fund specified                                                                                                                             | 334     |
| Debts secured by Mortgage within the Rule, so that on a Devise or Descent of a Mortgaged Estate, the Personal Estate must be applied to exonerate the Land from the Mortgage | 334     |
| But where the Real Estate was the original Debtor, and came to its Possessor as such, it must bear the burthen                                                               | 335     |
| And though the Owner may have given Collateral Security, still the Mortgaged Estate must be first resorted to                                                                | 335     |
| Otherwise if he has made the Debt his own by a new Contract, &c.                                                                                                             | 326     |
| Where Mortgaged Debt was created by another, the Estate must bear the burthen, although the Owner has charged other Property with Payment of all his Debts                   | 336     |
| Where there is a Simple Charge the Real Estate can be applied only in case of Necessity                                                                                      | 336     |
| But every one is at liberty to throw the Payment of his Debts and Legacies on his Real Estate exclusively, in Exoneration of his Personal Estate                             | 336     |
| What amounts to Exoneration is to be determined on the Wording of each particular Will                                                                                       | 337—339 |
| No Extrinsic Evidence admitted                                                                                                                                               | 337     |
| Originally Express Words were necessary to exempt the Personal Estate, but the Rule was afterwards relaxed                                                                   | 337     |
| Now a Question of Intention                                                                                                                                                  | 337     |
| Difficulty in defining what Expressions are sufficient                                                                                                                       | 337     |
| Lord Thurlow's Definition                                                                                                                                                    | 338     |
| Lord Alvanley's—"Irresistible Inference"                                                                                                                                     | 338     |
| Lord Eldon's—"Evident Demonstration," "Plain Intention," "Necessary Implication"                                                                                             | 338     |
| Bootle v. Blundell , 1 Meriv.                                                                                                                                         | 338 339 |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                 | PAGE |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| It must appear that Testator intended so to charge the Real Estate as to discharge the Personal                                                                                                 | 339  |
| If Testator merely directs his Debts and Legacies to be a Charge on the Real Estate that only makes it applicable in aid of the Personalty                                                      | 340  |
| Other Instances                                                                                                                                                                                 | 340  |
| Where the Persons appointed Executors are the same to whom Real Estate had been given as Trustees                                                                                               | 340  |
| Where Testator has made the Real Estate liable to the Costs both of Trustees and Executors in regard to Matters which would ordinarily fall on Personal Estate—Mr. Jarman's Opinion             | 341  |
| If the whole of the Personalty is specifically bequeathed and another Fund supplied for Payment of Debts—that exonerates                                                                        | 341  |
| Or if Testator has used Words shewing his Desire to preserve the Personal Estate entire for any given Purpose                                                                                   | 341  |
| But generally, if the Executor is the Individual to whom the Personal Estate is given, it will not be exonerated                                                                                | 341  |
| Intention to exonerate may also be found in the Mode in which Real Estate is given                                                                                                              | 342  |
| Where nothing is given to the Legatee but a Sum to be raised out of Real Estate                                                                                                                 | 342  |
| Or if a Portion of Real Estate is severed and directed to be the Fund for Payment of Legacies, the Personal Estate is exonerated                                                                | 342  |
| And Real Estate may be so appropriated to the Payment of a Particular Debt as to shew an Intention that it shall not be a Burthen on any other Fund                                             | 342  |
| Even though the Personal Estate should be given subject to Debts                                                                                                                                | 342  |
| Decisions on one Will, not easily applicable to another                                                                                                                                         | 343  |
| If a particular Portion of Personal Estate is bequeathed, subject to Debts and Legacies, such Property must be first applied                                                                    | 343  |
| Not where there is no Gift of Residue                                                                                                                                                           | 343  |
| Exoneration of Specific Legacies, as between General and Specific Legatees                                                                                                                      | 343  |
| Exemption of Personalty in favour of Legatee does not necessarily extend to Next of Kin                                                                                                         | 343  |
| Exoneration of Real Estate by Payments on the part of Persons having a Partial Interest in the Estate                                                                                           | 344  |
| Tenant for Life paying off Charge and merging the Security primâ facie puts an end to it                                                                                                 | 344  |
| But a simple Payment of the Charge would entitle the Tenant for Life to have it raised out of the Estate for his own Benefit                                                                    | 345  |
| Burthen of Proof as to Intention to exonerate the Estate lies on those claiming Exoneration                                                                                                     | 345  |
| If Tenant in Tail or in Fee pays off Charge, it is presumed to be in favour of the Estate                                                                                                       | 345  |
| It is the same whether he take an Assignment or not                                                                                                                                             | 345  |
| But the Presumption may be rebutted by Evidence                                                                                                                                                 | 345  |
| Where a Person pays off a Charge under an erroneous impression as to his Liability, it is not Evidence of intended Exoneration                                                                  | 345  |
| Person becoming entitled to an Estate subject to a Charge may keep it up for his own Benefit                                                                                                    | 345  |
| Courts of Equity not always governed by Rules of Law on this Subject                                                                                                                            | 346  |
| SECTION IV.—Trust Deeds for Payment of Debts.                                                                                                                                                   |      |
| I.—Preliminary Observations                                                                                                                                                                     | 349  |
| Putting the Bankrupt Laws out of the question, a Person is at liberty to assign his Property for the Benefit of all his Creditors, though for the purpose of Defeating some particular Creditor | 350  |
| But if there be Fraud it will vitiate the Transaction                                                                                                                                           | 350  |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                       | PAGE |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| If Grantor retains the Deed and gives no Notice of it to the Creditors, it will be considered Fraudulent and Void as against subsequent Judgment Creditors                                            | 350  |
| But it is not Fraud for a Man, not a Trader, to assign all his Property for the Benefit of some particular Creditors, though one of the Trusts is to pay Part to himself                              | 350  |
| If one of two Trustees dissents, the Property passes to the assenting Trustee                                                                                                                         | 351  |
| Conveyance for Payment of Debts to which no Creditor is a Party, and in which no particular Debts are expressed, is Fraudulent within 27 Eliz. c. 4                                                   | 351  |
| Conveyance of all a Trader's Property was formerly an Act of Bankruptcy                                                                                                                               | 351  |
| Provisions of 6 Geo. IV. c. 16                                                                                                                                                                        | 351  |
| Commission must issue within Six Months                                                                                                                                                               | 351  |
| A Trader may give Preference if he do not exhaust his whole Estate                                                                                                                                    | 352  |
| Stat. 7 Geo. IV. c. 57, § 32. Conveyance void against Assignees of Insolvent if made within Three Months before Imprisonment                                                                          | 352  |
| Trusts for Payment of Debts exempted from Thellusson Act                                                                                                                                              | 352  |
| II.—Doctrines relating to Trusts of this Description, particularly in Equity                                                                                                                          | 352  |
| Lands stand charged only with Debts owing at the date of the Deed, unless otherwise expressed                                                                                                         | 352  |
| On Trust created by Will, all Debts will be included                                                                                                                                                  | 352  |
| On Trust to pay all Debts affecting the Donor's Estate, Bond Debts let in, there being no Debts that directly affected the Estate                                                                     | 353  |
| The Court will give all Creditors for whom the Trust is intended the Benefit of it, without reference to their Compliance with merely formal Directions                                               | 353  |
| The Court will assist in the Enforcement of Agreements for Composition, where they are obtained without Fraud                                                                                         | 353  |
| But the Terms of the Agreement must be complied with in Substance                                                                                                                                     | 353  |
| Where Deed is made between Debtor and such Creditors as shall subscribe the Deed within a limited Time, Creditors not complying will have no Interest in the Trust                                    | 354  |
| Where a Composition Deed is to be void if not executed by a certain Day, and yet the Parties act under the Deed, though void at Law, it may be valid in Equity                                        | 354  |
| But where a Creditor seeks the Benefit of the Deed, he must comply with substantial Conditions                                                                                                        | 354  |
| A Creditor is not bound to take Less than his Debt, unless the Agreement is substantially fulfilled by the Debtor                                                                                     | 354  |
| But if the Debtor fail in making Payment by limited Time, the Court may, in respect of the Interest of the other Creditors, prevent a Creditor taking advantage of the Breach giving him Compensation | 354  |
| Those claiming the Benefit of a Trust must take it as given                                                                                                                                           | 355  |
| If Debentures are authorized to be given at the Discretion of the Trustees, and the Trustees act, the Court will not interfere with their Discretion                                                  | 355  |
| If the Trustees decline to act the Court will not let the Trust fail for want of a Trustee                                                                                                            | 355  |
| Persons not Objects of the Trust cannot enforce it, though they might derive a Benefit from its Execution                                                                                             | 355  |
| As a general rule Creditors are paid Interest on their Debts according as they are entitled to it or not, independently of the Trust                                                                  | 355  |

|                                                                                                                                           | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Under particular Circumstances Creditors not entitled to Interest will be allowed it in Equity                                            | 355     |
| The mere Direction by Deed to pay Debts, infers neither Contract nor Trust for Payment of Interest                                        | 356     |
| Interest may be Payable as between Grantor and Creditors, but not as between certain Creditors and others whose Debts carry Interest      | 356     |
| Bond Creditor not entitled to receive for Principal and Interest more than the Penalty                                                    | 356     |
| Debts barred by Statute will not be revived by the Creation of a Trust                                                                    | 357     |
| But Statute ceases to run from the Time of the Creation of the Trust                                                                      | 357     |
| Difference as regards Personal Estate in Wills—Express Direction is inoperative                                                           | 357     |
| III.—Collateral Questions arising out of Arrangements between Debtor and Creditor                                                         | 357     |
| Transactions of this kind ought to be founded on Good Faith, which, if not observed, will render Transactions arising out of them invalid | 357     |
| The Deed is considered to speak the Language of all the Creditors, both towards the Debtor and each other                                 | 358     |
| Creditors becoming Parties to the Deed agree to the Justice of its Stipulations                                                           | 358     |
| This takes it out of the Principle of Accord without Satisfaction                                                                         | 358     |
| No Creditor can obtain an Advantage not given to the other Creditors under the Deed                                                       | 358     |
| If he do it is a Fraud on the Policy of the Law, and any Security given becomes invalid                                                   | 359     |
| Creditor not entitled to obtain for himself a Collateral Security of another Person, even for Instalments                                 | 359     |
| The Case is different if the Transaction be communicated to the Creditors, and they do not object                                         | 360     |
| Creditor having a lien                                                                                                                    | 360     |
| Some Rules of Pleading and Practice, in regard to Suits in which Creditors are concerned, adverted to                                     | 360—364 |
| SECTION V.— Of Sales of Property, Real and Personal, under Trusts and Charges for the Payment of Debts and Legacies.               |         |
| General Doctrines as to who is the Person to sell under a Devise or Charge by Will                                                        | 365     |
| Who is to sell under Direction in a Will                                                                                                  | 366     |
| Devise in Trust—Powers—Term of Years created                                                                                              | 366     |
| Difference between Devise to Executors in trust to sell, and Power given to Executors to sell                                             | 366     |
| Distinctions to be observed in regard to Powers given to a number of Persons or a Class                                                   | 366     |
| Specific Authority not necessary                                                                                                          | 367     |
| Where there is a Direction for Sale without naming any Person to sell                                                                     | 367     |
| Where there is a Charge                                                                                                                   | 367     |
| Charge of Debts a Trust                                                                                                                   | 367     |
| Power extinct at Law                                                                                                                      | 368     |
| Estate charged with Annuities                                                                                                             | 368     |
| Trustees for Sale not to wait for Decree of the Court of Chancery                                                                         | 369     |
| Generally Power to Sell implies Power to Mortgage                                                                                         | 369     |
| Direction to raise Money out of Rents and Profits                                                                                         | 369 370 |
| Annuity to be paid out of Rents and Profits                                                                                               | 370     |
| Court cannot direct a Sale not authorized by the Trust, on the ground of its being Beneficial                                             | 370     |

SECTION VI.—Of the Obligation of the Purchaser to see to the Application of his Purchase Money.

PAGE

I.—Purchases of Chattels, Part of the Estate of a Testator or Intestate, from Executors or Administrators.

|                                                                                                               |         |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| As regards CREDITORS . . . . .                                                                                | 372 373 |
| General Power of Executors and Administrators over the Personal Estate of Testator or Intestate . . . . .     | 372 373 |
| Generally speaking, Purchaser and Mortgagee acquires an Absolute Title . . . . .                              | 373     |
| But not if it appear that the Sale is not for the Purposes of the Estate . . . . .                            | 374     |
| Pledge for Antecedent Debt due from the Executor . . . . .                                                    | 374     |
| Fraud and Covin as affecting such Transactions . . . . .                                                      | 374     |
| Transactions set aside under Circumstances, though no Moral Fraud or Impropriety . . . . .                    | 375     |
| As regards LEGATEES. . . . .                                                                                  | 375     |
| Where it is evident the Sale is not for the Purposes of the Administration . . . . .                          | 375     |
| Mortgage by Executor for his Personal Debt . . . . .                                                          | 376     |
| Hill v. Simpson . . . . .                                                                              |         |
| Sale of Chattels specifically Bequeathed . . . . .                                                            | 377     |
| Distinction between the Cases of Creditors and of Legatees, especially as regards Specific Legacies . . . . . | 377     |
| Scott v. Tyler , and Sir W. Grant's Observations upon it . . . . .                                     | 377, n. |
| Where the Property professedly is not sold as Assets . . . . .                                                | 378     |
| Sale, Mortgage, or Settlement by Executor of Specific Chattel given to him . . . . .                          | 378     |
| Condition and Rights of Residuary Legatee . . . . .                                                           | 379     |
| Alienation without Valuable Consideration . . . . .                                                           | 379     |
| Effect of Length of Time merely as a Bar to any Claim . . . . .                                               | 380     |

II.—Purchases of Lands, &c., from Trustees, for Sale.

|                                                                                                                                                           |         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Condition of Purchaser of Real Estate from Trustee for Sale at Law . . . . .                                                                              | 380     |
| General Rule in Equity, that the Purchaser must see to the application of his Purchase-money . . . . .                                                    | 380 381 |
| Usual to insert a Clause that the Receipt of the Trustees shall be a sufficient Discharge . . . . .                                                       | 381     |
| Where the Charges are Indefinite general rule relaxed . . . . .                                                                                           | 381     |
| Sir William Grant's Observations on the General Doctrine . . . . .                                                                                        | 381     |
| Trust for Payment of Debts generally . . . . .                                                                                                            | 382     |
| Annuity charged on Land—where there is a Paramount Charge of Debts . . . . .                                                                              | 382     |
| Land discharged when the Amount has been properly raised . . . . .                                                                                        | 382     |
| Alienation pending a Suit void . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 382     |
| Liability of Purchaser to be determined on the State of Things at the Time . . . . .                                                                      | 383     |
| Bond of Indemnity taken by Purchaser . . . . .                                                                                                            | 384     |
| Fraud—its Effects . . . . .                                                                                                                               | 384     |
| Trustee cannot aliene to satisfy his Private Debt—or so as to give a Preference to one of several Creditors . . . . .                                     | 384     |
| Mortgage subject to Legacies only where there is a Charge of Debts . . . . .                                                                              | 384     |
| Eland v. Eland . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 385     |
| Braithwaite v. Brittain . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 385, n. |
| Where the Trust is for Payment of definite specified Charges . . . . .                                                                                    | 386     |
| Purchaser not bound to see that no more is sold than is necessary . . . . .                                                                               | 386     |
| Purchaser may obtain good Discharge on Receipt of Trustee only, on apparent Intention of the Deed or Will, though no express Authority be given . . . . . | 386 387 |

|                                                                                                                                                                                | PAGE |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Purchasers under Decree . . . . .                                                                                                                                              | 388  |
| Effect of Stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 47, 47 Geo. III. c. 7, and 3 & 4 Will. IV., as regards Alienation for Valuable Consideration and Settlements on Marriage . . . . .         | 388  |
| Analogy to a Purchase from an Executor does not hold in such case . . . . .                                                                                                    | 388  |
| When the Heir may be restrained from receiving the Purchase Money . . . . .                                                                                                    | 388  |
| Where Estate charged with Legacies the general Charge of Debts under the Statute will not protect the Purchaser from seeing to the Application of the Purchase Money . . . . . | 389  |
| Horn v. Horn                                                                                                                                                            |      |

SECTION VII.—Of Portions.

§ 1.—General Doctrines.

|                                                                                                          |         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Introduction . . . . .                                                                                   | 392     |
| Portions secured by a Term . . . . .                                                                     | 393     |
| Real Estate Primary Fund . . . . .                                                                       | 393     |
| When only Fund . . . . .                                                                                 | 394     |
| Portions given by Will . . . . .                                                                         | 394     |
| Case of Parent . . . . .                                                                                 | 394     |
| Person loco parentis . . . . .                                                                    | 394     |
| Portions, how far governed by Rules of Civil Law . . . . .                                               | 395     |
| Rules of Construction which have been adopted by Court of Chancery . . . . .                             | 395     |
| Old Rule as to Legacies charged on Real Estate payable in futuro . . . . .                        | 396     |
| Where Postponement is for Convenience of the Estate . . . . .                                            | 396     |
| Where particular Time fixed for Payment of Portions, Court has enlarged the Powers of Trustees . . . . . | 396     |
| Where no certain Time for Payment is fixed—vest immediately . . . . .                                    | 397     |
| Unless different Intention to be collected from Context . . . . .                                        | 397     |
| Rule must be construed in a Reasonable Sense—if the Portion be wanted . . . . .                          | 398     |
| Hubert v. Parsons                                                                                 |         |
| Hinchinbrooke v. Seymour                                                                          |         |
| Where no Gift but in the Direction to Pay . . . . .                                                      | 399     |
| Conditions must be fulfilled . . . . .                                                                   | 399     |
| Where Postponement not annexed to Substance of Gift . . . . .                                            | 399     |
| Condition Precedent . . . . .                                                                            | 399     |
| After Debts paid, or the like . . . . .                                                                  | 399     |
| Leaning of Court of Chancery in favour of Vesting of Portions when wanted . . . . .                      | 400     |
| “Payable” construed “vested” . . . . .                                                                   | 400     |
| Observations on this Rule of Construction . . . . .                                                      | 400, n. |
| Some Children living held in some cases to satisfy the Contingency . . . . .                             | 401     |
| Lord Eldon, Hope v. Clifdon . . . . .                                                             | 401     |
| Sir W. Grant’s Rule . . . . .                                                                            | 402     |
| Lord Cottenham’s Observations as to this Doctrine . . . . .                                              | 401     |
| Whatford v. Moore . . . . .                                                                       | 401     |
| Of raising Portions by Sale of Reversionary Terms . . . . .                                              | 402     |
| Early Cases . . . . .                                                                                    | 402 403 |
| Distinctions taken in subsequent Cases . . . . .                                                         | 403     |
| Rule as stated by Lord Hardwicke . . . . .                                                               | 403 404 |
| Lord Talbot . . . . .                                                                                    | 404     |
| Lord Eldon . . . . .                                                                                     | 404     |
| Intention must prevail if expressed . . . . .                                                            | 405     |
| Winter v. Bold                                                                                    |         |
| Gough v. Andrews                                                                                  |         |
| Circumstance that Child of Tender Years . . . . .                                                        | 405     |
| Survivorship of Portions . . . . .                                                                       | 406     |

|                                                                                                                                                                                             | PAGE        |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| Mode of raising by Sale or Mortgage—or by Perception of Rents . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 407         |
| No Time for Payment fixed . . . . .                                                                                                                                                         | 407         |
| Rents and Profits clearly pointed out, &c. . . . .                                                                                                                                          | 407         |
| Exempt from Thellusson Act . . . . .                                                                                                                                                        | 407, n.     |
| The Rule stated by Sir W. Grant and Sir T. Plumer . . . . .                                                                                                                                 | 407 408, n. |
| Extended to Arrears, if any . . . . .                                                                                                                                                       | 408         |
| Charge of Debts . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                   | 408         |
| Sale implies Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                             | 408, n.     |
| Sale or Mortgage for raising the whole together, or each Portion suc-cessively . . . . .                                                                                                | 408         |
| Interest on Portions . . . . .                                                                                                                                                              | 409         |
| Lyddon v. Lyddon . . . . .                                                                                                                                                           | 410         |
| Clayton v. Lord Glengall . . . . .                                                                                                                                                   | 410, n.     |
| Person having Power to appoint may appoint unequally . . . . .                                                                                                                              | 410         |
| Marshalling as between Portionist and Mortgagee—Expense of Raisingpaid out of Trust Estate . . . . .                                                                                    | 410         |
| Rules of Construction established in the Court of Chancery, for de-termining who are “Younger Children” . . . . .                                                                       | 410 413—415 |
| Great Latitude of Construction in this respect . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 411         |
| Reason of this explained . . . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 411         |
| Younger construed all except the one who succeeds to the Estate 411, et v.                                                                                                           | 413         |
| Younger who so succeeds to the Estate excluded . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 411         |
| Settlement of Real Estate rectified to give it to Eldest Daughter . . . . .                                                                                                                 | 411, n.     |
| Heneage v. Hunloke . . . . .                                                                                                                                                         |             |
| Duke v. Doidge , in Note . . . . .                                                                                                                                                   |             |
| Third Son to whom Estate appointed considered as Eldest . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 411         |
| Only Daughter considered Eldest Son . . . . .                                                                                                                                               | 412         |
| Earl of Northumberland v. Egremont . . . . .                                                                                                                                         | 412, n.     |
| This latitude only applies to Parents and those in loco parentis —In Giftsby Strangers “Younger Children” receive their ordinary Construction . . . . .                          | 412         |
| Reason of this Distinction . . . . .                                                                                                                                                        | 412         |
| Not every Act done by a Parent to be construed on Principles differentto those done by a Stranger . . . . .                                                                             | 412         |
| Shifting Clause . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                   | 412, n.     |
| Scaresbrick v. Skelmersdale . . . . .                                                                                                                                                |             |
| On Evident Intention Only Child construed Youngest in Gift byStranger . . . . .                                                                                                         | 412         |
| But the Rule that Elder unprovided for shall be deemed Younger, onlyapplies to Elder unprovided for by the Settlement or Will itself . . . . .                                          | 413         |
| Peacock v. Pares . . . . .                                                                                                                                                           | 413         |
| Where the Portion has become vested in Younger Child, who has becomeEldest, application of the Rule more difficult . . . . .                                                            | 414         |
| General Rule . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                      | 414         |
| Whether Time of Vesting or Time of Distribution is to be taken as thePeriod for determining who is Elder and who are Younger, dependson Terms of Will . . . . .                     | 414         |
| Matthews v. Paull . . . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 415         |
| Rule in ordinary cases that the Time of Distribution is to be taken . . . . .                                                                                                               | 415         |
| Tacit Condition for divesting vested Portion of Child becoming an EldestSon . . . . .                                                                                                   | 415         |
| But if it is to be collected from the Instrument that the Portion was tobe vested and remain so, it will not go over . . . . .                                                          | 416         |
| Loder v. Loder . . . . .                                                                                                                                                             | 417         |
| Court will not always interfere with an Appointment made by the Fatheramongst Children, though he may derive a personal Benefit from it . . . . .                                       | 417         |
| The Question as to the Time within which Children must be born so asshare, and the Mode of Distribution, whether per capita or per stirpes ,here introduced . . . . . | 417         |

|                                                                                                                                                           | PAGE    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| As to first Question                                                                                                                                      | 417     |
| Natural Meaning of "Younger Children" all who may be born after the First                                                                                 | 417     |
| Where Gift executory, i. e. where Future Time of Distribution fixed, all who shall be born within that period shall take                           | 418     |
| Whether the Gift is present or executory depends on the Terms of the Will                                                                                 | 418     |
| Ellison v. Airey                                                                                                                                   |         |
| As to second Question, namely, whether Children of two or more Persons are to take per capita or per stirpes                                | 419     |
| Where the words "Equally to be Divided" are used, Children take per capita                                                                         | 420     |
| Rule applied to case of Gift to a Brother and Children of a deceased Brother                                                                              | 420     |
| § 2.—Double Portions.—Satisfaction.                                                                                                                       |         |
| The Court leans against Double Portions                                                                                                                   | 427     |
| Portion given by Will First                                                                                                                               | 427     |
| Lord Thurlow's Exposition                                                                                                                                 | 428     |
| Rule as to Ordinary Debt due from Father, in note                                                                                                         | 428     |
| By Settlement First, then by will                                                                                                                         | 428     |
| Doctrine of Satisfaction not to be extended in such Cases                                                                                                 | 428     |
| Graves v. Boyle                                                                                                                                    |         |
| Obvious Difference where Settlement first and Will afterwards                                                                                             | 429     |
| No marked Consequence of the Distinction                                                                                                                  | 429     |
| Exposition by Lord Cottenham                                                                                                                              | 429     |
| Doctrine in case of Stranger                                                                                                                              | 430     |
| Regard to be had to the Circumstances—Case of one only Younger Child                                                                                      | 430     |
| Not every Advancement within the Rule                                                                                                                     | 431     |
| Consideration towards Heir and Devisee                                                                                                                    | 431     |
| The Presumption is a Presumption of Law, not to go to a Jury                                                                                              | 431     |
| The Satisfaction may go in Part only                                                                                                                      | 432     |
| Doctrine of Satisfaction depends on Intention                                                                                                             | 432     |
| If Intention can be collected from the Instrument that the first Provision is not final, Child may take both                                              | 433     |
| Where the Provisions are not ejusdem generis , intention to give both presumed                                                                     | 433     |
| Bellasis v. Uthwatt                                                                                                                                |         |
| Mr. Sanders's Note, and Mr. Swanston's Note, as to the Difference between Performance and Satisfaction, referred to, in Note, ( et v. infra , 436) | 433     |
| Holmes v. Holmes                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Davys v. Boucher                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Effect of afterwards putting out a Son Apprentice, in Note                                                                                                | 434, n. |
| Bengough v. Walker                                                                                                                                 |         |
| Second Gift not so Beneficial in Enjoyment as the First                                                                                                   | 434     |
| Legacy of a Residue                                                                                                                                       | 435     |
| Lord Glengall v. Barnard                                                                                                                           |         |
| Distinction between Satisfaction and Performance, et v. supra                                                                                      | 435     |
| Goldsmid v. Goldsmid , before Sir T. Plumer, in Note                                                                                               |         |
| Trimmer v. Bayne , before Lord Eldon                                                                                                               |         |
| Gift of so much of Residue as shall amount to a Certain Sum                                                                                               | 437     |
| Assumption of Debt of Son                                                                                                                                 | 437     |
| Effect of Material Differences                                                                                                                            | 438     |
| Effect of Slight Differences                                                                                                                              | 438 439 |
| In the First, Provision absolute; in the Second, settled on Child and Issue                                                                               | 440     |

|                                                                                                                                                           |         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Weall v. Rice                                                                                                                                      |         |
| Booker v. Allen                                                                                                                                    |         |
| Wharton v. Lord Durham , in the House of Lords                                                                                                     |         |
| Portion adeemed not set up by mere Republication of Will . . .                                                                                            | 441     |
| Presumption may be rebutted by Extrinsic Evidence . . .                                                                                                   | 441     |
| Debeze v. Mann                                                                                                                                     |         |
| When Evidence is admitted on one Side it must be admitted on the other                                                                                    | 442     |
| Evidence of Declarations . . .                                                                                                                            | 442     |
| Those before and subsequent admitted, et v. supra , p. 246 . . .                                                                                   | 443     |
| The Law settled as to Admission of Parol Evidence in some cases . . .                                                                                     | 443     |
| Admitted, where . . .                                                                                                                                     | 443     |
| Legacy first, and then Advancement of Money without anything more . . .                                                                                   | 443     |
| Legacy given to Daughter who was Indebted to the Testator, in Note . . .                                                                                  | 443     |
| Admitted even where there is a Writing in which no Express or Implied Intention is to be found . . .                                                      | 444     |
| Evidence admitted in case of Provision by Husband for Wife, to explain Advancement . . .                                                                  | 444     |
| Refused to shew Gift by Will to Wife was Satisfaction of Debt . . .                                                                                       | 445     |
| Fowler v. Fowler , in Note                                                                                                                         |         |
| Not admitted                                                                                                                                              |         |
| Where Evidence would contradict Express Intent . . .                                                                                                      | 445     |
| General Rule as to Admission of Parol Evidence in Legatory Matters . . .                                                                                  | 445     |
| Not admitted where Rule of Construction supports Apparent Intent . . .                                                                                    | 445     |
| But admitted in all cases where Rule of Construction raises a Presumption against Apparent Intent . . .                                                   | 445     |
| Even it seems where same Legacy given in one Instrument . . .                                                                                             | 445     |
| Rule that Will shall not be construed by matter dehors . . .                                                                                       | 446     |
| In Coot v. Boyd Evidence admitted by Lord Thurlow in case of two Legacies by separate Instruments . . .                                            | 447     |
| Lord Alvanley's and Sir E. Sugden's Strictures on this Case . . .                                                                                         | 447     |
| Shudal v. Jekyl , before Lord Hardwicke, also objectionable, in Note . . .                                                                         | 448     |
| Difference between the Cases last observed upon, and those in which Presumption arises against Double Portions on Distinct Acts—Will and Settlement . . . | 448     |
| Rather a Presumption of Evidence than of Law . . .                                                                                                        | 448     |
| Primary Presumption may be met by Evidence of Intention . . .                                                                                             | 448     |
| Further Presumption arises where there is a Substantial Difference in the two Provisions which repels or extinguishes the Primary One . . .               | 448 449 |
| Question whether Extrinsic Evidence can be admitted in such cases . . .                                                                                   | 449     |
| Cases bearing by Analogy . . .                                                                                                                            | 449     |
| Bigglestone v. Grubb                                                                                                                               |         |
| Evidence received to explain the Nature of the Subsequent Advance . . .                                                                                   | 449     |
| Chapman v. Vernon                                                                                                                                  |         |
| Hartopp v. Hartopp                                                                                                                                 |         |
| Not strictly Competent in the First Instance . . .                                                                                                        | 449     |
| But Competent to show from whom Consideration moved . . .                                                                                                 | 449     |
| Effect of this Case . . .                                                                                                                                 | 450     |
| Cases applying directly . . .                                                                                                                             | 450     |
| Weall v. Rice —Settlement first—Sir J. Leach . . .                                                                                                 | 450     |
| The Differences in that Case held not to be substantial . . .                                                                                             | 450     |
| General Rule of Sir J. Leach . . .                                                                                                                        | 450     |
| Effect of his Dictum in that Case . . .                                                                                                                   | 451 452 |
| Booker v. Allen —Will first                                                                                                                        |         |
| Lloyd v. Harvey —Will first                                                                                                                        |         |
| Dictum in Lloyd v. Harvey , and Sir E. Sugden's Strictures on it . . .                                                                             | 452     |
| Hall v. Hill . . .                                                                                                                                 |         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | PAGE    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Evidence rejected, by Sir E. Sugden, where Differences held to be Material                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 452     |
| Wallace v. Pomfret , before Lord Eldon                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |         |
| Evidence received against Construction and Presumption of Law—Contrary to Fowler v. Fowler , 3 P. W.                                                                                                                                                                                | 452     |
| Effect of this Case                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 453     |
| The Question stated, and Reasons in support of Sir J. Leach's Rule                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 454     |
| Effect of the Presumption may be to destroy Contingent Gift over                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | 455     |
| Twining v. Powell                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Election                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 455     |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |         |
| No. I. Judgment of Lord Cottenham in Lady E. Thynne v. Earl of Glengall , August, 1848, in the House of Lords                                                                                                                                                                       | 456     |
| No. II. Statute for Extinction of Satisfied Terms—Remarks upon                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 457     |
| No. III. Satisfaction of Father's Obligation by Subsequent Settlement                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 458     |
| SECTION VIII.— Gifts to Parents and others for the Maintenance of Children—Where the Father, though of ability to maintain his Children, may apply the Income of their Property for that Purpose—Undefined Interests given to Parents and Children—General Rules as to Maintenance. |         |
| General Rules                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 459     |
| Maintenance and Education and Bringing-up generally have reference to Minority                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 460     |
| But Maintenance and Education may extend for Life                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 460     |
| Soames v. Martin , 10 Sim.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |         |
| Maintenance directed to be paid to the Father for his Life to maintain his Children                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 460     |
| Child forisfamiliated                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 460     |
| Interest of Legacy or Portion given for Maintenance, from what Time it runs                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 460     |
| Trustees not authorized to break in upon Capital, sometimes done by the Court                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 461     |
| State of the Family will be considered                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 461     |
| Maintenance given though not apparently authorized by Will                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 462     |
| Bequest in Trust for Infant, to Apprentice him, absolute                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 462     |
| Annual Sum given for Maintenance apportionable                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 462     |
| Discretion given to Trustees in some cases exercised by the Court                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 463     |
| Generally Fund may be paid to the Trustee                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 463     |
| Gifts to Parents for the Maintenance of Children, and to Parents and Children for undefined Interests                                                                                                                                                                                      | 463     |
| Gift to Wife for the Support of herself and her Family                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 464     |
| Other Instances                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 465     |
| Where Property is given to one, at his Disposal for the Maintenance of Children, he may sell                                                                                                                                                                                               | 466     |
| Surplus                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 466     |
| Where Children are the Occasions of Bounty only, not the Objects                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | 466     |
| Rule that the Father is bound to maintain his Children                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 466     |
| Cases in which he may insist on having the Interest, &c., of Child's Property applied for that Purpose                                                                                                                                                                                     | 466     |
| Stocken v. Stocken                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |         |
| Thompson v. Griffin                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |         |
| Implied Absolute Gift to Donee in particular Cases                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 467     |
| Where Children will be entitled in Remainder                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 468     |
| In Joint Tenancy—Difference between Gift and Contract                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 468     |
| As Tenants in Common                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | 468     |
| Where Children take by Substitution                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 470     |
| Question as to whether the Parents and Children are to take per capita or per stirpes , et v. sup. 419, 420                                                                                                                                                           | 471 472 |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | PAGE        |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| SECTION IX.— Of some of the most usual Trusts of Real and Personal Property in Settlements and Wills in favour of Married Women,—of Settlements, Devises, and Bequests of Property to Married Women for their Separate Use,—Provisions against Anticipation,—The Wife's Equity to a Settlement,—and some other Incidental Topics. |             |
| Rights of Husband, which he acquires by Marriage over the Real and Personal Property of his Wife . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 474         |
| Choses in Action . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 475         |
| Reversionary Interests . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 475         |
| Reduction into Possession . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 476—478     |
| Release . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 479 480     |
| Where the Husband becomes a Purchaser of his Wife's Fortune . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 481         |
| Rights which pertain to the Wife independently of Contract . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 482         |
| Equity to a Settlement . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 482 484     |
| How such Equity may be waived, or extinguished . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 486 487     |
| Rights of Children . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 488—490     |
| Rights which may be secured to the Wife by Contract or by Gift . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 488         |
| Settlement . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 490         |
| Power of Appointment by Deed, or Will, or both . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 492 494 495 |
| Limitation to Executors and to Next of Kin in default of Appointment . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | 492 497     |
| Agreement between Husband and Wife before Marriage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 498         |
| Pin Money . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 500         |
| Gifts from Husband to Wife . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 502         |
| Doctrines of the Court of Chancery as to Separate Estate of Married Women in Real and Personal Property . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 504         |
| As to Real Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |             |
| Contract of Wife to sell or charge her Real Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 504         |
| As to Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 505         |
| Agreement before Marriage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 506         |
| Separate Interest acquired by Gift or Bequest . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 507         |
| Technical Words not necessary to confer Separate Interest . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 507         |
| What Expression will and what will not confer a Separate Interest . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 508         |
| Tyler v. Lake , before Lord Brougham . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 508         |
| Blacklow v. Laws , before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    | 509 510     |
| Wife's Power of Disposition over her Separate Property . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 513         |
| Generally the Wife considered as a Feme Sole . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 513         |
| Liability of Separate Estate to Charges and Debts during her Lifetime . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 515         |
| Liability after her Death . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 519         |
| Restraints on Alienation by way of Anticipation . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 520         |
| Where Proviso against Anticipation is annexed to the Power of Appointment only . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 523         |
| Brown v. Bamford , before the Vice-Chancellor of England and Lord Lyndhurst . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |             |
| Whilst the Original Trust exists, it comes into Operation on every successive Marriage, if not confined to a particular Marriage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                               | 524 525     |
| Deeds of Separation . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 524 532     |
| Observations on Suits for the Recovery of Wife's Separate Property, and on Suits by Creditors to enforce Demands against the Separate Estate of the Wife . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                       | 533         |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |             |
| No. I.—Power of Husband to sue on Wife's Bills of Exchange or Notes . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 534         |
| No. II.—Course of Practice when the Husband applies to the Court to obtain Principal or Interest to which he is entitled Jure Mariti . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                    | 535         |
| No. III.—Case of Doswell v. Earl .—Power of Wife to pass Reversionary Interest by Consent . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 535         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                               | PAGE    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| No. IV.—Limitation to Wife's "Next of Kin," "Personal Representatives," &c., and of the Construction of those Words generally                                                                                 | 536     |
| No. V.—What will amount to a Charge on a Married Woman's Separate Estate                                                                                                                                      | 536—539 |
| No. VI.—Bond given to remain in Force in the Event of Reconciliation                                                                                                                                          | 540     |
| No. VII.—What Children will take under Provisions in Deeds of Separation                                                                                                                                      | 541     |
| SECTION X.— Miscellaneous Doctrines in respect of Trusts usually found in Wills and Deeds, particularly as affecting Persons who are to take Property for Limited Interests, with Remainders over. |         |
| Leaseholds and Copyholds for Lives frequently limited to various Persons in succession                                                                                                                        | 544     |
| Trusts for Renewal                                                                                                                                                                                            | 544     |
| May be Express or Implied                                                                                                                                                                                     | 544     |
| Instances of Implied Trusts to renew                                                                                                                                                                          | 544     |
| Words apparently importing Discretion                                                                                                                                                                         | 544     |
| Where there is a Trust for Renewal, but Fund for Payment of Fines, &c., not pointed out                                                                                                                       | 545     |
| Modern Rule in the absence of Directions—Expenses apportioned between Tenant for Life, and those in Remainder in proportion to their actual Enjoyment                                                  | 545     |
| Rule where Tenant for Life renews without any Obligation                                                                                                                                                      | 545 546 |
| Tenant for Life entitled to Compound Interest on Sums paid for Renewals                                                                                                                                       | 546     |
| No Distinction between Leases for Years and for Lives                                                                                                                                                         | 546     |
| Where there are Directions                                                                                                                                                                                    | 546     |
| Out of Rents and Profits                                                                                                                                                                                      | 546     |
| When a Sale or Mortgage may be made                                                                                                                                                                           | 547     |
| Playters v. Abbott , before Sir J. Leach                                                                                                                                                               | 548     |
| Where different Modes are pointed out                                                                                                                                                                         | 548     |
| Discretion in Trustees                                                                                                                                                                                        | 548     |
| Mode of arranging, as between the different Parties, where a Mortgage is resorted to                                                                                                                          | 549     |
| Greenwood v. Evans , before Lord Langdale                                                                                                                                                              | 549     |
| Direction to raise by Sale                                                                                                                                                                                    | 549     |
| Jones v. Jones , before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram (1846)                                                                                                                                              | 549 550 |
| Gift of Residue to several Persons in Succession                                                                                                                                                              | 552     |
| General Rule as between Tenant for Life and those in Remainder                                                                                                                                                | 552     |
| Conversion—liable to be controlled by the Intention to be gathered from the Will                                                                                                                              | 552     |
| Authorities reviewed by the Vice-Chancellor of England in the case of Chambers v. Chambers , 15 Sim. R.                                                                                                | 554     |
| Cases where it has been held upon the Intention that the Tenant for Life was entitled to the Enjoyment of the Actual Income of the Residue in Specie                                                          | 552     |
| Vaughan v. Buck , 1 Phillips                                                                                                                                                                           | 552     |
| Sutherland v. Cook , 1 Coll. and other cases                                                                                                                                                           | 556 557 |
| Question from what time the Tenant for Life is entitled to Interest, and at what Rate                                                                                                                         | 558     |
| Cases reviewed by Sir J. Wigram, particularly in regard to the Question whether the Tenant for Life is entitled to the Actual Income of the Property which is in a proper state of Investment from the Death  | 558 559 |
| Taylor v. Clarke , 1 Hare                                                                                                                                                                              | 559     |
| Caldicott v. Caldicott , 1 Y. & Coll. C. C.                                                                                                                                                            | 561     |
| Four different modes of determining what is the Right of the Tenant for                                                                                                                                       |         |

CONTENTS.

xxxix

PAGE

|                                                                                                                                                                                                |             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| Life as regards Income or Interest for the First Year, to be collected from the Authorities                                                                                                    | 559         |
| Wrey v. Smith , 14 Sim.                                                                                                                                                                 | 561         |
| Interest at 4 per cent. given, in some Cases, on such part of the Estate as was not in a proper state of Investment                                                                            | 561, n. 563 |
| What Interest and from what Time the Tenant for Life ought to receive, considered                                                                                                              | 564—568     |
| Extraordinary Profits—Bonuses                                                                                                                                                                  | 569         |
| Questions between the Tenant for Life and Remainderman as to Right to Timber, and Profits of Mines, &c.                                                                                        | 570 574     |
| Whether Estate settled or unsettled, no one allowed to take Advantage of his Wrongful Act                                                                                                      | 572         |
| When Tenant for Life entitled to Interest of the Produce                                                                                                                                       | 572         |
| Miscellaneous Doctrines in regard to Rights of Tenant for Life                                                                                                                                 | 573         |
| Tenant for Life, as a General Rule, not entitled to charge the Inheritance with Improvements                                                                                                   | 574         |
| Powers of Exchange and Leasing                                                                                                                                                                 | 574         |
| Remainderman cannot call upon the Court of Chancery to interfere with Tenant for Life exercising Legal Power of Exchange                                                                       | 574         |
| Remainderman may lose his Right to avoid Lease made by Tenant for Life by Acquiescence                                                                                                         | 576         |
| Power to Jointure clear of Charges—What are such Charges                                                                                                                                       | 576         |
| Miscellaneous Cases                                                                                                                                                                            | 576 577     |
| As to the due Execution of Power given to Tenants for Life to charge the Estate in Settlement                                                                                                  | 576 577     |
| Apportionment of Dividends, &c.                                                                                                                                                                | 577 578     |
| Tenant for Life of Residuary Fund where there are Contingent Liabilities                                                                                                                       | 578         |
| Gift of Life Annuity, as distinguished from Gift of Capital which would produce such an Annuity                                                                                                | 579         |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                                                                                               |             |
| No. I.—Extract from Mr. Dalzell's Work on Conversion                                                                                                                                           | 580         |
| No. II.—What Rate of Interest or other Benefit, and from what Time the Tenant for Life of a Residue is entitled to—Lord Langdale's Judgment, Robinson v. Robinson , (1848)              | 580         |
| No. III.—Apportionment of Rents, Interest, and Dividends between Tenant for Life and Remainderman                                                                                              | 582         |
| No. IV.—Lord Cottenham's Judgment in Blewit v. Roberts —Gift of Annuity                                                                                                                 | 583         |
| SECTION XI.—Of the Doctrines as to Election, Satisfaction, and Performance.                                                                                                                    |             |
| Doctrine of Election, in the View of the Court of Chancery, to be considered, in Cases where the Property of a Person is disposed of, and a Gift is made to that Person in the same Instrument | 585         |
| Doctrine as stated by Sir T. Clarke, M.R., Lord Eldon, and Sir T. Plumer                                                                                                                       | 586         |
| Rule applies whether done Purposely or by Mistake                                                                                                                                              | 587         |
| Application of the Doctrine as regards Persons and Subjects                                                                                                                                    | 588         |
| Applies to cases of Partial Disappointment                                                                                                                                                     | 588         |
| Foundation of the Doctrine—Intention—Illustrations                                                                                                                                             | 589         |
| Applies to the Execution of Powers                                                                                                                                                             | 590         |
| Where Legatee may renounce a Gift charged with a Burthen, and still take a Beneficial Interest                                                                                                 | 590 591     |
| Effect of Acquiescence and Laches                                                                                                                                                              | 591         |
| Derivative Interest acquired from a Person who has elected against the Will                                                                                                                    | 591         |
| Cases of Express Condition to be distinguished                                                                                                                                                 | 592         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                 | PAGE    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Questions of Construction which have frequently arisen upon Wills, where it has been doubtful whether the Property of another was intended to be devised, adverted to . . . . . | 592—595 |
| Extrinsic Evidence not to be admitted in these cases, excepting on General Principles . . . . .                                                                                 | 595     |
| Questions connected with this subject which have arisen as to Wife's title to Dower . . . . .                                                                                   | 595 598 |
| Where the Testator is a Scotchman domiciled in England . . . . .                                                                                                                | 598     |
| The Nature and Amount of the Property must be ascertained before a Person can be put to his Election . . . . .                                                                  | 598     |
| What Acts will amount to an Election . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 599     |
| Where Interests are given to a Person and his Children in Succession . . . . .                                                                                                  | 600     |
| The Consequences which result from Election to take against the Instrument considered . . . . .                                                                                 | 601—604 |
| Whether Forfeiture or a Liability to make Compensation only . . . . .                                                                                                           | 601—604 |
| The Doctrine of Satisfaction . . . . .                                                                                                                                          | 605     |
| Satisfaction of a Debt by a Legacy . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 605 606 |
| Whether Parol Evidence can be admitted . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 607     |
| The Doctrines of the Court of Chancery as to Performance—distinction between Satisfaction and Performance . . . . .                                                             | 607 609 |
| Mixed Cases of Satisfaction and Performance . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 610     |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                                                                                |         |
| No. I.—Judgment of Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in Savill v. Savill —Election—( supra , p. 586) . . . . .                                                            | 611     |
| No. II.—Compensation—Extract from Mr. Swanston's Note to Gretton v. Howard , ( supra , p. 604) . . . . .                                                          | 612     |

CHAPTER VIII.

ON MORTGAGES AND LIENS.

SECTION I.—Of the Creation of Mortgages—Sale with Condition to secure Repurchase—Conditional Sale—Loan on Grant of Annuity—How Attempts on the Part of the Mortgagor to introduce Special Terms are viewed—Mortgage for Costs—Mortgage with Power of Sale—Defective Conveyances by way of Mortgage, and other incidental Topics.

|                                                                                           |             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------|
| Property capable of being Mortgaged . . . . .                                             | 614         |
| Mortgage at Common Law . . . . .                                                          | 615         |
| Mortgage by Creation of Terms . . . . .                                                   | 615         |
| Welsh Mortgages . . . . .                                                                 | 616 618     |
| What constitutes a Mortgage . . . . .                                                     | 618         |
| Conditional Sale . . . . .                                                                | 621         |
| Sale with Right of Repurchase . . . . .                                                   | 623         |
| Loans upon Annuity . . . . .                                                              | 624         |
| Sales of Rent-Charges with Right of Repurchase . . . . .                                  | 625 627 628 |
| General Rules in regard to the Contract of Mortgage . . . . .                             | 628         |
| Mortgagee not entitled to any Benefit beyond his Principal, Interest, and Costs . . . . . | 628         |
| Right to Redeem cannot be clogged with any By-Agreement . . . . .                         | 628         |
| Mortgage of Advowson . . . . .                                                            | 629         |
| Mortgage of West India Estate . . . . .                                                   | 630         |
| Stipulation for Consignments—Commission . . . . .                                         | 631         |
| Mortgage to Solicitor for Costs . . . . .                                                 | 631         |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | PAGE    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Leases from Mortgagor to Mortgagee . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 632 633 |
| Mortgage with Power of Sale . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 634—636 |
| Mortgage of Stock ( et v. infra , sect. ix.) . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                        | 637     |
| Mortgage of Leaseholds—Fixtures, &c. . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 637     |
| Mortgages under Power to raise Money by Sale or Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                   | 637 638 |
| Grant of an Annuity under such a Power . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 638     |
| Mortgage prevails over Voluntary Settlement . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 638     |
| Mortgagee taking with Notice of Fraud . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 638     |
| Defective Securities—Equitable Relief . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 639     |
| Additional Note—Statutes relating to Usury . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 640     |
| SECTION II.—Of the Mortgagor and Mortgagee, General View of theirRespective Rights—Nature of Equity of Redemption—Of Mortgagorin Possession and Mortgagee in Possession—Of Tender of the Mort-gage Money—Of an Assignment of the Mortgage. |         |
| Nature of Equity of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 642     |
| Distinctions between Trust Estate and Equity of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 642     |
| Equity of Redemption of Wife's Lands mortgaged by Husband and Wife . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                         | 643 644 |
| How far Mortgagee is a Trustee of the Mortgaged Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                     | 644     |
| Right of Redemption may be devised, granted, &c., in the same manneras might the Estate if not under Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                          | 645     |
| Mortgagor left in Possession holds only at the Will of the Mortgagee . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                       | 645     |
| Emblements . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 646     |
| Mortgagor, in general, may put all his Securities in force concurrently . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                    | 646     |
| Receiver appointed, what course the Mortgagee should adopt . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 647     |
| Mortgagee in Possession—Liability to subsequent Mortgagees . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 648 649 |
| Mortgagor in Possession—Waste . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                              | 648     |
| Mortgagee in Possession—Leases—Waste . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | 649     |
| Right to add Expenses properly incurred to the Mortgage Debt . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                               | 649—653 |
| To whom the Redemption Money is to be paid . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 650     |
| Mortgagee only bound to accept Payment from those who are entitled tothe Equity of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 651     |
| Where the Mortgagee holds two Mortgages from the same Mortgagor . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                            | 651     |
| As to the Notice which the Mortgagee may require prior to his beingpaid off . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                            | 652     |
| Effect of Tender . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | 652     |
| Mortgagor or those who represent him must pay or tender all Expenseswhich the Mortgagee has properly incurred in maintaining the Titleand the like . . . . .                                                                                                 | 653     |
| Who is to pay Commission on Remittances where the Debt is contractedout of this Country . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                | 653 654 |
| Mortgagee cannot dispute his Mortgagor's Title . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                             | 654     |
| Mortgagor may extinguish his Equity of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 654     |
| Mortgagee may purchase the Equity of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                            | 654     |
| Mortgagee not bound to produce the Deeds till paid off—but must pro-duce them for the purposes of Sale, if such Sale has been made withhis Consent . . . . .                                                                                                 | 654 655 |
| Mortgage by Tenant in Common . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 654 655 |
| Effect of Assignment of Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | 655     |
| Devise of Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         | 655     |
| Assignment of Mortgage—Conversion of Interest into Principal . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                               | 656     |
| Purchaser of Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      | 656 657 |
| Donatio Mortis Causâ of a Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 657     |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |         |
| No. I.—Emblements—( supra , p. 646) . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 657     |
| No. II.—Notice as affecting Priority ( et v. infra , sect. viii.) . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                                   | 658     |

|                                                                                                                                                                                | PAGE    |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| SECTION III.— Doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to Proceeding for Redemption—Who may redeem.                                                                 |         |
| Mode of Proceeding to effect Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                              | 659     |
| What Persons are entitled to redeem . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 660—664 |
| In case of Escheat . . . . .                                                                                                                                                   | 663     |
| Trustee and Cestui que Trust . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 663     |
| Troughton v. Binkes , 6 Ves. . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 663     |
| Construction of Clause reserving Right of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                                                 | 664     |
| Mortgage of Estate of Wife . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 665     |
| Redemption of Estate of Insolvent . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 665     |
| Mortgage in Exercise of a Power . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 665     |
| The Mortgagee may redeem the Prior Incumbrancers . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 665     |
| All Arrears of Interest due must be paid . . . . .                                                                                                                             | 666     |
| Owner of Part of the Estate mortgaged must redeem the Whole . . . . .                                                                                                          | 666     |
| Person who has no Interest must not be joined with one who has . . . . .                                                                                                       | 667     |
| Title must be established before a Person will be permitted to redeem . . . . .                                                                                                | 668     |
| Bill to redeem not to be brought till Time for Payment has expired . . . . .                                                                                                   | 668     |
| Terms to which the Mortgagor must submit, the same whether he sues or is sued . . . . .                                                                                        | 669     |
| Mortgagee cannot dispute his Mortgagor's Title . . . . .                                                                                                                       | 669     |
| Primâ facie , the Mortgagor must pay the Costs of obtaining a Re-conveyance . . . . .                                                                                   | 669     |
| Mortgagee will not be compelled to produce Deeds or disclose his Title . . . . .                                                                                               | 670     |
| Mortgagor cannot require an Assignment of the Debt . . . . .                                                                                                                   | 671     |
| Dismissal of Bill to redeem operates as a Foreclosure . . . . .                                                                                                                | 671     |
| Bill by second Mortgagee of Estate in Jamaica . . . . .                                                                                                                        | 671     |
| Additional Note                                                                                                                                                                |         |
| What Conduct on the part of the Trustee or Executor will entitle the Cestui que Trust or Legatee, &c., to take upon himself to sue, ( supra , p. 664.) . . . . . | 672     |
| SECTION IV.— Of the Remedies of the Mortgagee by Foreclosure and Sale.                                                                                                  |         |
| Mode of Proceeding to Foreclose . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 674     |
| General Rules . . . . .                                                                                                                                                        |         |
| By whom and under what Circumstances a Bill may be filed to Foreclose . . . . .                                                                                                | 674     |
| Cases in which the Mortgagee may obtain a Sale . . . . .                                                                                                                       | 674 676 |
| Mortgagor dead, Payment out of Assets as Specialty Creditor . . . . .                                                                                                          | 676     |
| When Bill is taken pro confesso , and the Estate is deficient . . . . .                                                                                                 | 676     |
| Mortgagor Bankrupt . . . . .                                                                                                                                                   | 677     |
| Mortgage of Reversion . . . . .                                                                                                                                                | 677     |
| of Advowson . . . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 677     |
| Mortgaged Estate situate in Ireland . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 678     |
| One of the Executors being Mortgagor . . . . .                                                                                                                                 | 678     |
| Effect of Decree for Sale as respects the Costs of Sale . . . . .                                                                                                              | 678     |
| Foreclosure of Copyholds . . . . .                                                                                                                                             | 679     |
| Mortgage by Tenant in Tail . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 679     |
| Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74 . . . . .                                                                                                                                          | 680     |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 36, § 15, Rule 13 . . . . .                                                                                                                                     | 680     |
| Decree against Tenant in Tail claiming under the Mortgagor . . . . .                                                                                                           | 680     |
| Foreclosure or Sale against an Infant . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 681     |
| Day to show Cause . . . . .                                                                                                                                                    | 681     |
| Foreclosure against a Feme Covert . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 681     |
| against a Company . . . . .                                                                                                                                                    | 681     |
| Proceedings by Mortgagor on Covenant or Bond, after Foreclosure . . . . .                                                                                                      | 682     |
| Opening the Foreclosure . . . . .                                                                                                                                              | 682 683 |
| Lockart v. Hardy , 9 Beav. . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 682 683 |
| Proceedings where the Mortgagor dies without an Heir, &c. . . . .                                                                                                              | 684     |

|                                                                                                                                                         | PAGE    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60 . . . . .                                                                                                                       | 684     |
| 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23 . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 684     |
| 1 & 2 Vict. c. 69 . . . . .                                                                                                                             | 684     |
| Relative Rights of Mortgagor and Mortgagee the same in a Suit to Fore-close as in a Suit to Redeem as regards the Price of Redemption . . . . .     | 684 685 |
| De Vigier v. Lee , 2 Hare . . . . .                                                                                                              |         |
| Interest . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 685     |
| 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27 . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 685     |
| 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42 . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 685     |
| Stat. 7 Geo. II. c. 10, giving a summary mode of Relief where Proceed-ings are taken by the Mortgagee at Law and on Bills for Foreclosure . . . . . | 685 687 |
| Of enlarging the Time fixed for Payment in Bill for Foreclosure . . . . .                                                                               | 687     |
| Recovery of Title Deeds in the hands of Second Mortgagee withoutNotice . . . . .                                                                    | 688     |
| When a Receiver may be obtained by the Mortgagee . . . . .                                                                                              | 689     |
| Recognition of Title by Mortgagor or Mortgagee . . . . .                                                                                                | 690     |
| Receipts . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 690     |
| Mode of Relief where the Deeds are lost or destroyed . . . . .                                                                                          | 691     |
| Disclaimer by Provisional Assignee, &c., Effect of—Costs . . . . .                                                                                      | 691     |
| Requisites for completing the Foreclosure . . . . .                                                                                                     | 691     |
| Assignment of Mortgage pending the Suit—Supplemental Bill—Costs . . . . .                                                                               | 692     |
| Additional Note— Sober v. Kemp , before Vice-Chancellor Wigram—Spe-cific Performance and Foreclosure . . . . .                               | 692     |
| SECTION V.—Of the Parties to Bills for Redemption and for Foreclosure.                                                                       |         |
| General Rules applicable to this Subject . . . . .                                                                                                      | 695     |
| Mortgagor and his Representatives . . . . .                                                                                                             | 697     |
| Subsequent Mortgagee of a part of the Mortgaged Estate . . . . .                                                                                        | 698     |
| Where the Mortgaged Estate is assigned to Trustees in trust for Cre-ditors or others . . . . .                                                      | 699     |
| Costs of Parties to whom the Mortgagee has transferred his Interest . . . . .                                                                           | 699     |
| Trustees for Sale . . . . .                                                                                                                             | 700     |
| Foreclosure by Cestuis que Trust . . . . .                                                                                                       | 700     |
| Persons having a Partial Interest in the Equity of Redemption . . . . .                                                                                 | 701     |
| Representatives of a deceased Tenant for Life . . . . .                                                                                                 | 701     |
| Foreclosure—Personal Representatives of Mortgagor . . . . .                                                                                             | 701     |
| Personal Representatives of Mortgagee—Heir . . . . .                                                                                                    | 702     |
| Where the Mortgagee has absolutely assigned his Interest . . . . .                                                                                      | 703     |
| Interest, however small, is regarded . . . . .                                                                                                          | 703     |
| Judgment Creditors . . . . .                                                                                                                            | 704     |
| Subsequent Incumbrancers . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 705     |
| Incumbrancers becoming such pendente lite . . . . .                                                                                              | 705     |
| Estate limited in strict Settlement—Owner of first Estate of Inheritance . . . . .                                                                      | 707     |
| Persons necessary for effectuating the ultimate Decree . . . . .                                                                                        | 707     |
| Persons having Paramount Charges . . . . .                                                                                                              | 708     |
| Bill by Second Mortgagee to foreclose the Third . . . . .                                                                                               | 708     |
| Bill to be paid out of Surplus of a Fund to be paid to a Bankrupt . . . . .                                                                             | 708     |
| SECTION VI.—Time as a Bar—Statute of Limitations.                                                                                            |         |
| Long Adverse Enjoyment and the Omission for a great Length of Timeto assert apparently Just Claims, have an important effect in Equity . . . . .    | 709     |
| Doctrine of the Court of Chancery in respect of Adverse Possession beforethe Statute 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 27 . . . . .                                | 710     |
| Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 28, § 40, and § 42 . . . . .                                                                                           | 711     |
| Retrospective Operation of the Act . . . . .                                                                                                            | 713     |
| Where the Mortgagee in Possession acquires a Life Interest in the Pro-perty mortgaged . . . . .                                                     | 714     |
| Time of filing the Bill to be looked to, not the Service of the Subpoena . . . . .                                                                      | 714     |

|                                                                                                                                                                                           | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Effect of making a Person a Party by Amendment . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 714     |
| What Section of the Act applies to a Bill for Foreclosure . . . . .                                                                                                                       | 714     |
| Dearman v. Wyche , before Vice-Chancellor of England                                                                                                                               |         |
| Wrixon v. Vize , before Lord Chancellor Sugden                                                                                                                                     |         |
| Construction of Acts 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 1 Vict. c. 28, as to Right to demand Interest . . . . .                                                                                   | 716     |
| Where there is a Trust subsisting . . . . .                                                                                                                                               | 717     |
| Length of Time as a Bar must be relied on by Pleading . . . . .                                                                                                                           | 717     |
| Where Time may be taken Advantage of by Demurrer . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 717, n. |
| Additional Notes . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                |         |
| No. I.—As to Provisions in the Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, for Persons under Disabilities . . . . .                                                           | 718     |
| No. II.—Effect of the Stat. 1 Vict. c. 28 . . . . .                                                                                                                                       | 719     |
| No. III.—Effect of the Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, where the Representation is dormant . . . . .                                                                                         | 719     |
| SECTION VII.— Doctrine of Tacking one Security or Debt to another—and of the Priorities of Incumbrances, and what Circumstances will affect the natural Order of their Priorities. |         |
| When further Sums advanced by the Mortgagor to the Mortgagee . . . . .                                                                                                                    | 721     |
| Principle on which the right to Tack is founded in such case . . . . .                                                                                                                    | 721     |
| Under old Law Prior Judgment Creditor could not tack . . . . .                                                                                                                            | 722     |
| Provisions of 2 Vict. c. 11, as to Judgments, &c., in note . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 722     |
| Principle does not apply to case where the Security does not and cannot affect the Land . . . . .                                                                                         | 723     |
| But Bond Debt may be tacked against Heir or Devisee—Principle of the Distinction . . . . .                                                                                                | 724     |
| Effect of Stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, as to Copyholds . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 725     |
| Where Heir or Devisee takes subject to Payment of Debts . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 725     |
| Bond may be tacked against Executor . . . . .                                                                                                                                             | 725     |
| Tacking not permitted as against Creditors . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 725     |
| Tacking where the Mortgagee holds two Mortgages from the same Person . . . . .                                                                                                            | 726     |
| Priorities as between several Incumbrancers, Effect on by means of Tacking and otherwise . . . . .                                                                                        | 727     |
| The Advantages of having a Better Equity . . . . .                                                                                                                                        | 728     |
| What is a Better Equity . . . . .                                                                                                                                                         | 728     |
| Acts of Omission as affecting this Question . . . . .                                                                                                                                     | 729     |
| Case of Bugden v. Bignold , before Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce . . . . .                                                                                                              | 731     |
| Right of Tacking by acquiring the Legal Estate . . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 733     |
| Maxims on which such Right to Tack is founded . . . . .                                                                                                                                   | 733     |
| Process by which Right to Tack is effected . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 734     |
| General Requisites to enable a Person to tack . . . . .                                                                                                                                   | 735     |
| Illustrations . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                   | 735 736 |
| Where first Mortgagee has made further Advances . . . . .                                                                                                                                 | 735     |
| Requisite that the Advance should have been made on the Credit of the Land . . . . .                                                                                                      | 737     |
| Subsequent Mortgagee buying in first Incumbrance . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 738     |
| Pendente Lite . . . . .                                                                                                                                                            | 738     |
| After Decree . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                    | 738     |
| Exemplification of the Rule that the Money must have been advanced on the Credit of the Land in these cases . . . . .                                                                     | 739     |
| Lacey v. Ingle , before Lord Cottenham . . . . .                                                                                                                                   | 743—745 |
| Doctrine as to tacking a satisfied Judgment and Observation . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 740—742 |
| When Purchaser of Equity of Redemption bound to pay off a Judgment . . . . .                                                                                                              | 745     |
| Extinction and Merger of Incumbrances . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 746     |
| Mortgagor or Purchaser of Equity of Redemption paying off first Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                        | 746     |

|                                                                                                                                                                                   | PAGE    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Principles by which the Court of Chancery is governed as to cases of                                                                                                              |         |
| Merger . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                  | 746     |
| Mortgage paid off by Tenant for Life . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 748     |
| By Tenant in Tail . . . . .                                                                                                                                                       | 748     |
| Cancellation and Release of Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 749     |
| Additional Notes . . . . .                                                                                                                                                        |         |
| No. I.— Frere v. Moore , 8 Price.—Effect of Covenant by Trustee to stand possessed of Legal Estate as regards Priorities . . . . .                                         | 749     |
| No. II.— Ingram v. Pelham , before Lord Hardwicke . . . . .                                                                                                                | 751     |
| No. III.—Judgment of Lord Hardwicke in Wortley v. Birkhead . . . . .                                                                                                       | 751     |
| No. IV.— March v. Lee .—Of purchasing in Securities by a subsequent Mortgagee . . . . .                                                                                    | 752     |
| SECTION VIII.—Of Notice, Express and Constructive—and of Fraud and Negligence, as affecting Priorities.                                                                           |         |
| Express Notice . . . . .                                                                                                                                                          | 753     |
| Constructive Notice . . . . .                                                                                                                                                     | 754—760 |
| Effect, as regards the Principal, of the Notice which a Solicitor or Agent may have . . . . .                                                                                     | 760     |
| Fuller v. Benett , 2 Hare . . . . .                                                                                                                                        |         |
| Notice by Operation of the Registry Acts . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 761     |
| Distinction as to giving Notice in the case of taking an Equitable Incumbrance on Real Estate, and obtaining an Assignment of a Chose in Action as affecting Priorities . . . . . | 764     |
| Suppression of Facts, and Omission to do Acts, as affecting Priorities . . . . .                                                                                                  | 765     |
| Mortgagee not taking or keeping the Title Deeds . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 766 767 |
| SECTION IX.—Of the Relief in Equity in case of Mortgages of Stock and other Personal Chattels—Pledges of Personal Chattels.                                                       |         |
| Mortgages of Stock in the Public Funds, East India Stock, &c. . . . .                                                                                                             | 769     |
| Pledges of Personal Chattels . . . . .                                                                                                                                            | 771     |
| Nicholson v. Hooper , 4 My. & Cr. . . . .                                                                                                                                  | 772     |
| Tacking as applied to Pledges . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 773     |
| Pledges by Factors . . . . .                                                                                                                                                      | 773     |
| 4 Geo. IV. c. 83; 6 Geo. IV. c. 94 . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 774     |
| Pledges, &c., not avoidable by the Crown . . . . .                                                                                                                                | 774     |
| Mortgages of Ships . . . . .                                                                                                                                                      | 775     |
| of Freight . . . . .                                                                                                                                                              | 775     |
| of Cargo . . . . .                                                                                                                                                                | 775     |
| Mortgagee of Property to be afterwards acquired . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 775     |
| Additional Notes . . . . .                                                                                                                                                        |         |
| No. I.—Effects of Sects. 19 & 21 of Stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, on an Assignment and Delivery of Personal Chattels, on the Insolvency of the Assignor . . . . .                      | 776     |
| No. II.—Pawnbrokers Act—Usury Laws . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 776     |
| SECTION X.—Of Equitable Mortgages and Liens, and of Liens generally.                                                                                                              |         |
| § 1.—Of Securities under written Instruments.                                                                                                                                     |         |
| Security by written Agreement or Directions, on Land or other Property . . . . .                                                                                                  | 777     |
| Charge by Agreement on Property to be subsequently acquired . . . . .                                                                                                             | 778     |
| Direction by a Party that his Creditor be paid out of a particular Fund . . . . .                                                                                                 | 778     |
| § 2.—Of Securities by the Deposit of Deeds, with or without Writing.                                                                                                              |         |
| Lien by Deposit of Deeds . . . . .                                                                                                                                                | 780     |
| General Doctrines on this Subject . . . . .                                                                                                                                       | 781 786 |

|                                                                                                                                                                       | PAGE    |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Subsequent Advances . . . . .                                                                                                                                         | 784     |
| Debt to new Firm . . . . .                                                                                                                                            | 784     |
| Deposit of a Portion of the Deeds only . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 782     |
| Deeds delivered to Solicitor for the purpose of preparing a Mortgage . . . . .                                                                                        | 783     |
| Lien as against Third Persons . . . . .                                                                                                                               | 783     |
| Object of Deposit may be explained by Evidence . . . . .                                                                                                              | 784 785 |
| Deposit in the hands of a Third Person . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 785     |
| Register not Notice as against Deposit of Deeds . . . . .                                                                                                             | 785     |
| Deposit of Agreement—Of Court Rolls . . . . .                                                                                                                         | 785     |
| Deposit by Accountant to the Crown . . . . .                                                                                                                          | 786     |
| Deposit, and subsequent Conveyance in contemplation of Bankruptcy . . . . .                                                                                           | 786     |
| Depository of Lease not liable to the Landlord on the Covenants it contains . . . . .                                                                                 | 786 787 |
| Deposit of Lease, with Covenant not to assign . . . . .                                                                                                               | 787     |
| Deposit of Deeds by Mortgagor, Prior Mortgagee having omitted to obtain them . . . . .                                                                                | 787     |
| Plum v. Fluitt , 2 Anst. . . . .                                                                                                                               |         |
| Worthington v. Morgan , xiii. Jur., before Vice-Chancellor of England . . . . .                                                                                | 789     |
| Observations in that Case . . . . .                                                                                                                                   | 789 790 |
| Depositee takes such Interest only as the Depositor had . . . . .                                                                                                     | 790     |
| Remedies of the Depositee in the Court of Chancery . . . . .                                                                                                          | 791     |
| Dicta of Lord Cottenham on this subject . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 792     |
| Lord Rosslyn's General Order in Bankruptcy . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 793     |
| Costs of procuring a Sale in Bankruptcy . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 794     |
| From what Time the Depositee is entitled to the Rents . . . . .                                                                                                       | 794     |
| Equitable Charge has Preference to a Judgment . . . . .                                                                                                               | 794     |
| Whitworth v. Gaugain , 1 Phillips . . . . .                                                                                                                    |         |
| Additional Notes . . . . .                                                                                                                                            |         |
| No. I.— Parker v. Housefield , 2 My. & K. 420; (v. supra , p. 791). . . . .                                                                             | 795     |
| No. II.—Mr. Jarman's deductions from Plum v. Fluitt . . . . .                                                                                                  | 795     |
| § 3.—Of Liens. . . . .                                                                                                                                                |         |
| Common-law Right of Lien . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 796     |
| Lien on Ship . . . . .                                                                                                                                                | 796     |
| Claims on Earnings by Part-owner and by Mortgagees, &c., in respect of Repairs and Disbursements . . . . .                                                            | 797     |
| Certificate of Registry—Master—Ship-brokers . . . . .                                                                                                                 | 798     |
| Lien of Creditor by Judgment—his Remedies . . . . .                                                                                                                   | 799     |
| Lien of Solicitor . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 800—802 |
| On Deeds . . . . .                                                                                                                                                    | 800—802 |
| On Fund recovered . . . . .                                                                                                                                           | 802     |
| Rights in Equity equivalent to Liens . . . . .                                                                                                                        | 803 804 |
| SECTION XI.—Of the Mode in which the Account is to be taken between the Mortgagor and Mortgagee, and particularly where the Mortgagor is in Possession—Costs. . . . . |         |
| Account against Mortgagee in Possession . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 806     |
| Not allowed to make any Charge for Trouble . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 807     |
| But may charge what he has properly paid to a Receiver . . . . .                                                                                                      | 807     |
| Expenses of Repairs, &c. . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 807     |
| Liability for Waste . . . . .                                                                                                                                         | 808     |
| Expenses of Improvements . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 808     |
| In what cases Annual Rests are directed . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 809 810 |
| Interest to be paid on Rents received after the Debt has been Discharged . . . . .                                                                                    | 811     |
| Wilson v. Metcalfe . . . . .                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Semble , Account between Mortgagor and First Mortgagee, settled before the Master, binds the Second Mortgagee . . . . .                                        | 812     |

|                                                                                                       | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Appropriation of Payments . . . . .                                                                   | 812 813 |
| Costs of Mortgagee, and Costs in Suits for Redemption and Foreclosure generally . . . . .             | 813—815 |
| Additional Note                                                                                       |         |
| Hicks v. Morland , 21st July, 1835—Rolls—Costs of Solicitor claiming to be Solicitor . . . . . | 815     |

SECTION XII.—Out of what Funds Mortgage Debts and Charges generally are to be paid—Of the Exoneration of the Primary Fund—Of the Marshalling of Assets and Securities, including the General Doctrine as to Marshalling of Assets in favour of Creditors and of Legatees—and of Contribution.

|                                                                                                                       |         |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| General Doctrine as to what Fund is primarily liable for Payment of Debts . . . . .                                   | 817     |
| Order of the Application of Funds for Payment of Debts . . . . .                                                      | 817     |
| Exoneration of Personal Estate . . . . .                                                                              | 818     |
| Administration of the Estate of a deceased Mortgagor—Exoneration of Mortgaged Estate . . . . .                        | 818     |
| Estate not to be exonerated, to the disappointment of Creditors or Legatees . . . . .                                 | 819 820 |
| Where the other Real Estates must exonerate the Mortgaged Estate . . . . .                                            | 822     |
| Order of the Application of the Assets may be varied by Express Declaration, or from the Implied Intention . . . . .  | 822     |
| In order that there may be a case for Exoneration, the Debt must have been the proper Debt of the Mortgagor . . . . . | 824     |
| Earl of Ilchester v. Earl of Carnarvon , 1 Beav. . . . .                                                       | 824—826 |
| Of the Marshalling of Assets—As regards Creditors and Legatees . . . . .                                              | 827     |
| Tombs v. Roch , 2 Coll. . . . .                                                                                | 831     |
| Marshalling in favour of Legatees—Where the Creditor has a specific lien on the Land . . . . .                        | 831 832 |
| Doctrine of Marshalling as regards the Lien of a Vendor . . . . .                                                     | 833     |
| Marshalling of Securities . . . . .                                                                                   | 833—837 |
| Averall v. Ward , before Lord C. Sugden . . . . .                                                              | 835     |
| Barnes v. Rackster , before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce . . . . .                                         | 836     |
| Gregg v. Arrott , before Lord C. Sugden . . . . .                                                              | 835     |
| Contribution, its Nature . . . . .                                                                                    | 837     |
| As between Persons to whom different Estates comprised in one Mortgage devolve . . . . .                              | 837     |
| Contribution between Devisees and Legatees . . . . .                                                                  | 838 839 |
| Johnson v. Child , 4 Hare . . . . .                                                                            | 840     |
| Contribution between Tenant for Life and Remainderman . . . . .                                                       | 841     |
| Contribution amongst Sureties . . . . .                                                                               | 843     |
| Exoneration of Wife's Estate . . . . .                                                                                | 843     |
| When the Court will decree Possession and Account of Rents and Profits, and when not . . . . .                        | 845     |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                      |         |
| No. I.—Judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Tombs v. Roch . . . . .                                | 846     |
| No. II.—Judgment of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in Johnson v. Child . . . . .                                  | 847     |

CHAPTER IX.

EQUITABLE INTERESTS ARISING FROM ASSIGNMENTS OF CHOSSES IN ACTION, POSSIBILITIES, AND CONTINGENT INTERESTS—ASSIGNMENTS OF SUCH INTERESTS AND OF RIGHTS OF ACTION—MAINTENANCE.

|                                                                                                                                                                               | PAGE    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| General Rule of Common Law that no Possibility, Right, nor Thing in Action shall be assigned . . . . .                                                                        | 850     |
| The true Ground of the Rule . . . . .                                                                                                                                         | 851     |
| Exception in favour of the Crown . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 851     |
| Bills of Exchange, &c. . . . .                                                                                                                                                | 852     |
| Court of Chancery would not adopt this Doctrine . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 852     |
| Allowed Assignments of Choses in Action, and Possibilities for Valuable Consideration . . . . .                                                                               | 852     |
| Assignment operates as Agreement . . . . .                                                                                                                                    | 852     |
| Wright v. Wright . . . . .                                                                                                                                             | 853, n. |
| Lord Hardwicke's Observations in this case . . . . .                                                                                                                          |         |
| Buckley v. Newland . . . . .                                                                                                                                           |         |
| Remedy at Law on Assignment of Chose in Action . . . . .                                                                                                                      | 854     |
| Possibilities coupled with an Interest in Real Estate, now Assignable at Law . . . . .                                                                                        | 855     |
| Doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to the Assignment of Choses in Action and Possibilities, &c., have given rise to a class of Equitable Interests . . . . . | 855     |
| Sometimes the subject of Settlement . . . . .                                                                                                                                 | 855     |
| Not competent to an Executor or a Trustee of himself to leave Chose in Action outstanding . . . . .                                                                           | 857     |
| No particular Words or Form necessary in an Assignment of a Chose in Action . . . . .                                                                                         | 855     |
| May be by Parol . . . . .                                                                                                                                                     | 856     |
| Covenant to Assign . . . . .                                                                                                                                                  | 856     |
| Debts are Goods within the Stat. 21 Jas. I. . . . .                                                                                                                           | 856     |
| To complete a Transfer of a Debt, so as to avoid the Operation of the Statute, all must be done towards Delivery of Possession that can be done . . . . .                     | 857     |
| Notice to the Debtor or Holder of the Property Essential . . . . .                                                                                                            | 858     |
| Particularly incumbent on Trustees of a Settlement to give Notice . . . . .                                                                                                   | 858     |
| Consequences generally of not giving Notice. Advantages of giving Notice . . . . .                                                                                            | 858     |
| Notice to one of several Obligors or Trustees sufficient . . . . .                                                                                                            | 858     |
| Any actual Notice, though only in Conversation, sufficient . . . . .                                                                                                          | 859     |
| In the case of an Assignment of a Mortgage, or of the Equity of Redemption, Notice not necessary . . . . .                                                                    | 859     |
| Any Order given by Debtor to his Creditor, having a Fund in his hands, when shown to the Party, amounts to an Equitable Assignment . . . . .                                  | 860     |
| Bill of Exchange . . . . .                                                                                                                                                    | 860     |
| Any Order appropriating an Existing Fund to a particular Purpose, amounts to an Equitable Assignment . . . . .                                                                | 860     |
| But the Appropriation must be complete . . . . .                                                                                                                              | 861     |
| Adams v. Claxton . . . . .                                                                                                                                             |         |
| In cases where Third Persons have been held to be entitled, there has usually been a Consideration for the Actual Assignment or Appropriation . . . . .                       | 861     |
| Mere Voluntary Remittances, with Orders to pay to a Third Person, not sufficient if revoked . . . . .                                                                         | 862     |
| If not revoked Mandatory bound . . . . .                                                                                                                                      | 862     |

|                                                                                                                                                  | PAGE |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Though there may be an Assignment in Equity, which is not such at Law, it seems that what is not a Lien at Law is not a Lien in Equity           | 863  |
| Assignment of a Contract for Sale of an Estate may be made notwithstanding Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9                                              | 863  |
| Assignee of Chose in Action, as he is entitled to all the Remedies of Assignor, so he takes it subject to all Equities                           | 863  |
| Length of Time, &c., may place the Assignee in a better Situation                                                                                | 864  |
| Assignment of Mortgage                                                                                                                           | 864  |
| Assignment of a Legacy                                                                                                                           | 865  |
| A Legacy may be assigned                                                                                                                         | 865  |
| Expression of Intention communicated to the Executor not sufficient                                                                              | 865  |
| Where an Assignment is made of a Legacy charged on Land, though in a Register County, it is only considered as an Assignment of the Money        | 865  |
| Where a Legacy is assigned the Executor cannot set off a Debt due to himself from the Legatee.—Assignment by Executor of Legacy given to Himself | 865  |
| Assignment of Possibilities, &c.                                                                                                                 | 865  |
| Mere Possibilities may be the subject of Contract to be enforced in the Court of Chancery                                                        | 866  |
| So may an Interest to be acquired                                                                                                                | 866  |
| Freight to be acquired may be assigned in Equity                                                                                                 | 866  |
| So as to be good against Assignees in Bankruptcy                                                                                                 | 866  |
| The Court of Chancery binds the Property                                                                                                         | 867  |
| Interests not Assignable on the ground of Public Policy                                                                                          | 867  |
| Half-Pay, &c.                                                                                                                                    | 867  |
| Alimony                                                                                                                                          | 868  |
| It is only in respect of Assignments of Property that the Court of Chancery will exercise its Jurisdiction                                | 868  |
| Right to avoid the Effect of a Legal Instrument on Equitable Grounds, not Assignable                                                             | 868  |
| Doctrines as to Maintenance and Champerty                                                                                                        | 869  |
| Maintenance and Champerty still discouraged at Law and in Equity                                                                                 | 870  |
| Not Maintenance to purchase an Interest which is the subject of a Suit                                                                           | 871  |
| Number of Persons having a common Interest joining in a Suit                                                                                     | 872  |
| Assignment of Right to file a Bill in Equity                                                                                                     | 872  |
| Prosser v. Edmonds                                                                                                                        | 873  |

CHAPTER X.

OF THE TRANSFER OF EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS AND CONTINGENT INTERESTS AND POSSIBILITIES, BY CONVEYANCE AND ASSIGNMENT AND DECLARATION OF TRUST, AND OF CONTRACTS AND PROMISES AS REGARDS SUCH INTERESTS, AND OF THE EFFECT OF WANT OF CONSIDERATION OR OF VALUABLE CONSIDERATION.

SECTION I.—Of Conveyances and Assignments of Equitable Estates for Valuable Consideration.

|                                                                                                                                                                        |         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Of the Alienation of Trust Estates and Equitable Estates and Interests As regards Equitable Estates in Fee, Fee Tail, for Life and for Years, and Estates in Remainder | 875     |
| A Trust Estate is not now considered as a Chose in Action, but an Estate                                                                                               | 875     |
| Devises of Trust Estates are considered by the Court of Chancery as distinct substantive Devises                                                                       | 875 876 |

|                                                                                                                                                               | PAGE    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Legal Estate follows Equitable as its Shadow, unless it come into the hands of Purchaser for Valuable Consideration, without Notice                           | 875     |
| Negligence, &c., of Trustee not permitted to disappoint Interests of Cestuis que Trust                                                                 | 876     |
| Lapse of Legal Estate has no Influence upon the Trust—If no Trustee appointed Court of Chancery assumes the Office                                            | 876     |
| The Principle that the Equitable Estate is a distinct Substantive Estate has been acted upon in various ways.—Instances                                       | 876 877 |
| Court will act upon it exactly as if it were a Legal Estate                                                                                                   | 876     |
| The Husband of a Woman seised in Fee of an Equitable Estate of inheritance is entitled to an Estate by Curtesy                                         | 877     |
| Prior to the Fines and Recoveries Act an Equitable Estate Tail in a Trust might be barred by a Recovery with an Equitable Tenant to the Præcipe | 877     |
| A Feoffment or Bargain and Sale, or even a Will, was sufficient to bar the Issue in the time of Lord Clarendon                                                | 877     |
| Always held that a Fine was sufficient                                                                                                                        | 877     |
| The Requisites for making the quasi Tenant to the Præcipe for suffering a Recovery of the Equitable Estate                                      | 877     |
| Conveyance by Person having Equitable Interest without Possession sufficient                                                                                  | 877     |
| Equitable Disseisin                                                                                                                                           | 877     |
| If Equitable Tenant in Tail had aliened for an Estate of Freehold by way of Mortgage he might suffer a Recovery of his Secondary Equitable Title              | 877     |
| Any Conveyance shall have the same Effect on an Equitable Estate as Legal Conveyance on a Legal Estate—Lord Nottingham                                        | 878     |
| Act for barring Entails, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74                                                                                                                | 878     |
| Equitable Estate Tail                                                                                                                                         | 878     |
| Tenant in Tail must convey by one of the Modes of Assurance pointed out by the Act                                                                            | 878     |
| Policy of the Legislature in requiring a Deed analogous to a Legal Conveyance                                                                                 | 878     |
| Equity of Redemption; also an Estate in the Land                                                                                                              | 879     |
| No Difference in Equity between Legal Interests in and the Trust of a Term belonging to a Wife, as regards Husband's Power of Alienation                      | 879     |
| Of the Merger of the Equitable in the Legal Estate                                                                                                            | 880     |

SECTION II.—Of Voluntary Conveyances, Assignments, and Transfers of Equitable Estates and Interests in Property, capable of being Conveyed or Transferred at Law.

|                                                                                                                 |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Of Voluntary Conveyances                                                                                        | 882 |
| State of Law as regards Transfer of Property without Consideration                                              | 882 |
| Voluntary Assignments of Legal Interests                                                                        | 882 |
| Where a Person executes a perfect Conveyance passing the Estate he cannot revoke it                             | 882 |
| Such a Deed not revocable by Will                                                                               | 882 |
| Particularly if in favour of Children                                                                           | 882 |
| Sear v. Ashwell                                                                                          |     |
| Where Sum of Stock transferred to Trustees and a Trust of it declared, it is binding—no Locus Pœnitentiæ | 883 |
| Questions sometimes arise whether the Deed is to be considered as a definitive Act                              | 883 |
| Parol Evidence may be given to show that a Deed was not intended as an Irrevocable Act                          | 883 |
| Subsequent Instructions, &c., not admissible                                                                    | 883 |

|                                                                                                                                                                            | PAGE    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Where a Counterpart executed that is prima facie Evidence that it was not to be revocable, also where One Part executed and delivered to Third Person . . . . .     | 884     |
| Where the Deed is kept in Donor's Possession it is important, as a basis for Evidence, to show that it is not final . . . . .                                              | 884     |
| Sir Thomas Plumer's Statement of the Result of the Authorities . . . . .                                                                                                   | 884     |
| Cecil v. Butcher                                                                                                                                                    |         |
| But where Locus Pœnitentiæ is reserved and no Evidence of Repentance, the Deed, as it is presumed, will operate . . . . .                                           | 884     |
| Though Instructions, however explicit, are revoked by Death . . . . .                                                                                                      | 885     |
| Keeping a Deed which passes the Estate not of itself sufficient to enable the Donor to revoke . . . . .                                                                    | 885     |
| Law, as stated by Justice Bayley, as to Effect of keeping Deed, formally delivered, in the Possession of the Donor . . . . .                                               | 885, n. |
| Doe v. Garnons                                                                                                                                                      |         |
| Where there are Two Voluntary Deeds he who has the Advantage of the Law may keep it . . . . .                                                                              | 885     |
| Irrevocable Transfer by means of Declaration of Trust . . . . .                                                                                                            | 886     |
| Additional Note                                                                                                                                                            |         |
| As to Voluntary Deeds void against Creditors under stat. 13 Elizabeth . . . . .                                                                                            | 887     |
| SECTION III.— Voluntary Contracts as affecting Equitable Estates and Interests.                                                                                     |         |
| Voluntary Bond not to be relieved against in Equity, if no Fraud . . . . .                                                                                                 | 888     |
| But it is not to take place of Real Debts, though by Simple Contract, though it shall take place of Legacies . . . . .                                                     | 888     |
| More especially if entered into in favour of a Child . . . . .                                                                                                             | 888     |
| Voluntary Covenant in favour of Natural Children enforced . . . . .                                                                                                        | 889     |
| Williamson v. Codrington                                                                                                                                            |         |
| General Rule that the Court will execute a Voluntary Contract . . . . .                                                                                                    | 889     |
| Court of Chancery will so far assist Volunteer as to enable him to put it in Suit at Law . . . . .                                                                         | 890     |
| Fletcher v. Fletcher                                                                                                                                                |         |
| Now settled that the Court will not as against the Father enforce a Voluntary Contract entered into by him in Favour of a Child overruling Ellis v. Nimmo . . . . . | 892 893 |
| SECTION IV.— Voluntary Assignments of Choses in Action, and of Contingent Interests and Possibilities in Personal Chattels.                                         |         |
| Choses in Action, and Contingent Interests in Personalty considered as Property . . . . .                                                                                  | 895     |
| How far capable of Gift—What amounts to a Gift . . . . .                                                                                                                   | 896     |
| Transfer of Chose in Action by Declaration of Trust . . . . .                                                                                                              | 897     |
| Trust Created by Directions given to the Debtor . . . . .                                                                                                                  | 898     |
| Voluntary Transfer by Assignment . . . . .                                                                                                                                 | 898 899 |
| Followed by such Acts as would give a Title against Assignees . . . . .                                                                                                    | 898 899 |
| Whether Notice may be dispensed with . . . . .                                                                                                                             | 899     |
| Fortescue v. Barnett                                                                                                                                                |         |
| Assignment of Equitable Interest in Stock . . . . .                                                                                                                        | 900     |
| Sloane v. Cadogan                                                                                                                                                   |         |
| Assignment of Bond by Writing not under Seal . . . . .                                                                                                                     | 901     |
| Edwards v. Jones , before Lord Cottenham                                                                                                                            |         |
| Assignment by Deed . . . . .                                                                                                                                               | 903     |
| Blakely v. Brady , before Lord Plunket                                                                                                                              |         |
| Ward v. Audland , before Lord Langdale . . . . .                                                                                                                    | 904 905 |
| Remarks on the preceding Cases . . . . .                                                                                                                                   | 906—909 |

|                                                                                                                                                                                                    | PAGE    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Declaration of Trust the only sure way of effecting a Transfer in Equity                                                                                                                           | 909     |
| Voluntary Assignment of Contingent Interest and Possibilities in Personal Estate                                                                                                                   | 909 911 |
| Meek v. Kettlewell , before Sir J. Wigram and Lord Lyndhurst                                                                                                                                |         |
| Gift inter vivos cannot be set up as a Donatio Mortis Causa                                                                                                                          | 912     |
| What will and what will not amount to a Release in Equity, there being no Consideration                                                                                                            | 912     |
| Additional Notes                                                                                                                                                                                   |         |
| No. I.—Difference between the Effect of a Declaration of Trust, and Attempt to Assign—Vice-Chancellor Wigram's Judgment in M'Fadden v. Jenkyns , 1 Hare, 462, ( supra , p. 987, 988) | 913     |
| No. II.—Voluntary Assignment— Holloway v. Headington , ( v. supra , p. 900)                                                                                                          | 914     |
| No. III.—Assignment of Policies of Insurance—Voluntary Covenant for further Assurance                                                                                                              | 915     |

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES, AND SOME OTHER MATTERS CONNECTED WITH THEIR OFFICE.

|                                                                                                      |         |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Ostensible Principle that Trustees and Executors not to be discouraged from acting                   | 917     |
| General Rules to which they must conform                                                             | 917     |
| Person who has accepted a Trust can only be discharged by administering it                           | 918     |
| He must execute it with Fidelity and reasonable Diligence                                            | 918     |
| Executor who has proved, liable for Breaches of Trust by his Co-executor, in which he has acquiesced | 918     |
| Trustee not protected by acting under Adviser                                                        | 919     |
| Trustee cannot of himself denude himself of the Trust                                                | 920     |
| Trustee must be always ready with his Accounts                                                       | 921     |
| Liability of Trustees and Executors to pay Interest on Balances in their hands—Rests                 | 922     |
| Trustees and Executors liable for Omissions as well as Acts neglecting to get in Debts               | 923     |
| Investment of Trust Moneys                                                                           | 924—927 |
| Liability of Trustees who have power to invest in Real or Government security, and they do neither   | 925     |
| What is a proper Investment on Mortgage                                                              | 925     |
| General Rule that Trustees and Executors are only liable for their own Acts and Receipts             | 927     |
| Summary as to Liability of Trustees and Executors in regard to Joint Receipts                        | 927—932 |
| When Executors and Trustees have merely committed an Error in Judgment, they will not be liable      | 933     |
| So where they have acted from Moral Necessity                                                        | 933     |
| Money placed with Banker                                                                             | 933 934 |
| Handed to Co-executor for Express Purpose                                                            | 933     |
| Money remitted for Purposes of Convenience                                                           | 933     |
| Result of the Authorities stated by Lord Cottenham                                                   | 933 934 |
| Clough v. Bond                                                                                |         |
| Liability in respect of Acts of Agent abroad                                                         | 935     |
| Trustees doing Acts under a Void Trust                                                               | 935     |
| Relief to Trustee who acts under the Sanction of adult Cestui que Trust                       | 936     |
| Concurrence                                                                                          | 937     |
| Acquiescence                                                                                         | 937     |

|                                                                                                                | PAGE    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Trustee robbed of Trust Property . . . . .                                                                     | 937     |
| Distinction between Character of Trustee and Executor as regards the Statute of Limitations . . . . .          | 937     |
| Condition imposed by Will of Stranger not to insist on Breach of Trust . . . . .                               | 936     |
| Allowance to Trustees for Expenses . . . . .                                                                   | 938     |
| Costs of Trustees and Executors . . . . .                                                                      | 939 940 |
| Costs of Trustees appearing separately . . . . .                                                               | 939 940 |
| Where several Trustees have been jointly guilty of Breach of Trust—                                            |         |
| Parties . . . . .                                                                                              | 941     |
| Of opening Accounts as between Trustee and Cestui que Trust . . . . .                                   | 942     |
| Appointment of New Trustees, under the Stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60, § 22 . . . . .                                 | 943     |
| Disability of Trustee to purchase the Trust Property . . . . .                                                 | 943 944 |
| Any Profit made by the Trustee accrues for the Benefit of the Cestui que Trust . . . . .                | 945     |
| Not allowed to make a Profit of which he alone could take the Benefit . . . . .                                | 945     |
| Solicitor appointed Trustee . . . . .                                                                          | 945     |
| Powers annexed to the Office of Trustee . . . . .                                                              | 947     |
| Trustees for Preserving Contingent Remainders . . . . .                                                        | 948—951 |
| Additional Notes                                                                                               |         |
| No. I. Sir A. Hart's Exposition of the Rule as to Interest on Balances . . . . .                               | 951     |
| No. II. The Rule as to Executors and Trustees joining in Receipts, as laid down by Mr. Justice Story . . . . . | 852     |
| No. III. Some Practical Points connected with Suits to which Trustees and Executors are Parties . . . . .      | 952—954 |

TABLE OF CASES

CITED OR REFERRED TO IN VOL. II.

N. B.—The folios of pages inclosed thus (101) indicate that in the page there referred to the Case is stated more or less at large, or particularly noticed.

|                                                                                   | PAGE                                   |                                                                                    | PAGE                                        |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------|
| Abbey v. Howe (11 Jur. ) . . . . .                                         | 473                                    | Alexander v. Wellington, Duke of (2 Russ. & M. ) . . . . .           | 778, 779, 867                               |
| Abblett v. Edwards (10 Sim. ) . . . . .                                    | 691                                    | — v. Young (6 Hare ) . . . . .                                              | 495                                         |
| Abbott v. Lee (2 Vern. ) . . . . .                                         | 262                                    | Allan v. Backhouse (2 V. &amp; B. ; Jac. ; 5 Hare ) . . . . . | 369, 406, 407, 408, 545, 547                |
| Abdy, ex parte (1 Mad. Pr. &amp; P. ) . . . . .                     | 786, 787, 791                          | Allanson v. Clitherow (1 Ves. ) . . . . .                                   | 133                                         |
| Aberdeen v. Chitty (3 Y. &amp; C. ) . . . . .                              | 687                                    | Allen v. Anderson (5 Hare ) . . . . .                                       | 594, 598                                    |
| Abraham v. Alman (1 Russ. ) . . . . .                                      | 466                                    | — v. Anthony (1 Meriv. ) . . . . .                                          | 756, 759                                    |
| — v. Bubb (2 Freem. ) . . . . .                                            | 571                                    | — v. Blessington, Lord (2 Moll. ) . . . . .                                 | 650                                         |
| Acherly v. Wheeler (1 P. W. ) . . . . .                                    | 171, 185                               | — v. Knight (10 & 11 Jur. ; 5 Hare ) . . . . .                       | 657, 727, 735, 739, 746, 747, 767, 789, 791 |
| Acheson v. Fair (3 Dr. &amp; War. ) . . . . .                              | 303                                    | — v. Macpherson (11 Jur. ) . . . . .                                        | 19                                          |
| Ackers v. Phipps (3 Cl. &amp; Finn. ; 5 Bli. N. S. ) . . . . .      | 173, 241                               | — v. Orme (1 Vern. ) . . . . .                                              | 882                                         |
| Ackland v. Pring (3 Scott ) . . . . .                                      | 295                                    | — v. Papworth (1 Ves. ) . . . . .                                           | 513, 515                                    |
| Ackroyd v. Smithson (1 Bro. ) . . . . .                                    | 23, 234, 235                           | Allfrey v. Allfrey (10 Beav. ) . . . . .                                    | 942                                         |
| Acton v. Peirce (2 Vern. ; Pr. Ch. ) . . . . .                      | 661                                    | Alsager v. Rowley (6 Ves. ) . . . . .                                       | 360, 672                                    |
| — v. White (1 Sim. &amp; St. ) . . . . .                                   | 513, 522, 523                          | Ambrose v. Ambrose (1 P. W. ) . . . . .                                     | 21, 22                                      |
| — v. Woodgate (2 My. &amp; K. ) . . . . .                                  | 60, 860, 862                           | Ames v. Parkinson (7 Beav. ) . . . . .                                      | 581                                         |
| Adair v. Shaw (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. ) . . . . .                               | 195, 206, 876                          | Amesbury v. Brown (1 Ves. ) . . . . .                                       | 841                                         |
| Adams v. Adams (1 Hare ) . . . . .                                         | 595                                    | Amhurst v. Dawling (2 Vern. ) . . . . .                                     | 629                                         |
| — v. Claxton (6 Ves. ) . . . . .                                           | 57, 285, 726, 772, 773, 860, 861, 898  | Amis v. Lloyd (3 Ves. &amp; B. ) . . . . .                                  | 687                                         |
| — v. Cole ( Forrest. ) . . . . .                                           | 479, 481                               | Amphlett v. Parke (1 Sim. ; 4 Russ. ) . . . . .                      | (240), 242                                  |
| — v. Lavender ( M'Clcl. &amp; Y. ) . . . . .                               | 439, 478                               | Ancaster, Duke of, v. Mayer (1 Bro. ) . . . . .                             | 336, 337, 338, 340, 341, 818, 822           |
| — v. Merrick ( Eq. Ca. Abr. ) . . . . .                                    | 341, 820                               | Anderson, ex parte (5 Ves. ) . . . . .                               | 18                                          |
| — v. Paynter (1 Coll. ) . . . . .                                          | 700, 703, 707                          | — v. Anderson (2 My. &amp; K. ) . . . . .                                   | 524                                         |
| Adamson v. Armitage (19 Ves. ; G. Coop. Rep. ) . . . . .            | 507                                    | — v. Dawson (15 Ves. ) . . . . .                                            | 53, 261, 495, 496, 512, 537                 |
| Adderley v. Clavering (2 Bro. ; 2 Cox ) . . . . .                   | 546                                    | — v. Stather (2 Coll. ) . . . . .                                           | 689, 699, 700                               |
| Addis v. Campbell (1 Beav. ) . . . . .                                     | 671                                    | Andrew v. Andrew (1 Coll. ) . . . . .                                       | 145, 231                                    |
| Addison v. Walker (4 Y. &amp; C. ) . . . . .                               | 670                                    | — v. Clark (2 Ves. ) . . . . .                                              | 232                                         |
| Adlington v. Came (3 Atk. ) . . . . .                                      | 53                                     | — v. Trinity Hall (9 Ves. ) . . . . .                                       | 591                                         |
| Adye v. Feuillateau (2 Dick. ; 1 Cox ; 3 Swanst. ) . . . . . | 934                                    | — v. Wrigley (4 Bro. ) . . . . .                                            | 197, 376, 377, 380                          |
| Agabeg v. Hartwell (5 Cl. &amp; Finn. ) . . . . .                          | 485                                    | Andrews v. Bousfield (9 Law T. ) . . . . .                                  | 927                                         |
| Alcock v. Sloper (2 My. &amp; K. ) . . . . .                               | 42, 554, 555, 556                      | — v. Brown ( Pr. Ch. ) . . . . .                                            | 357                                         |
| Aldborough v. Trye (7 Cl. &amp; Finn. ) . . . . .                          | 635                                    | Angel v. Smith (9 Ves. ) . . . . .                                          | 689                                         |
| Alderson, ex parte (1 Mad. ; 3 Swanst. ) . . . . .           | 860                                    | Angerstein v. Martin ( T. &amp; R. ) . . . . .                              | 44, 185, 560, 926                           |
| Aldin v. Gregory (2 Eden ) . . . . .                                       | 62                                     | Angier v. Angier ( Pr. Ch. ) . . . . .                                      | 491, 528, 532                               |
| Aldrich v. Cooper (8 Ves. ) . . . . .                                      | 803, 827, 829, 830, 831, 834, 838, 839 | — v. Stannard (3 My. &amp; K. ) . . . . .                                   | 47                                          |
| Aldridge v. Wallscourt (1 Ball &amp; B. ) . . . . .                        | 337, 340                               | Angus v. Angus ( West's Rep. ) . . . . .                                    | 7                                           |
| — v. Westbrooke (5 Beav. ) . . . . .                                       | 676, 678                               | Annandale v. Harris (2 P. W. ) . . . . .                                    | 255                                         |
| Alexander v. Alexander (2 Ves. ) . . . . .                                 | 86                                     | Annaud v. Hongwood (2 Ch. Rep. ) . . . . .                                  | 267                                         |
| — v. M'Culloch (1 Cox ; 2 Ves. jun. ) . . . . .                     | 460, 486                               | Annesley v. Simeon (4 Mad. ) . . . . .                                      | 854                                         |

|                                                                                            | PAGE                                                        |                                                                  | PAGE          |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------|
| Anon (1 Atk. 491)                                                                   | 19                                                          | Ascough v. Johnson (2 Vern. )                             | 702           |
| — (2 Atk. 333)                                                                      | 710, 711                                                    | Ashburner v. M'Guire (2 Bro. )                            | 774           |
| — (3 Atk. 314)                                                                      | 661, 711                                                    | Ashburnham v. Thompson (13 Ves. )                         | 92, 933, 940  |
| — ( Bunb. 53)                                                                       | 765                                                         | Ashby v. Ashby (1 Coll. )                                 | 476           |
| — (2 Ch. Ca. 4, 54, 208)                                                            | 300, 319, 828                                               | Ashcomb's case (1 Ch. Ca. )                               | 14            |
| — (1 Coll. 273)                                                                     | 692                                                         | Ashenhurst v. James (3 Atk. )                             | 656, 864      |
| — ( Com. R. 49; 2 Eq. Abr. 85)                                               | 864                                                         | Ashhurst v. Mill (12 Jur. )                               | 499           |
| — ( Dalison , 60)                                                                   | 470                                                         | Ashley v. Ashley (3 Sim. )                                | 770           |
| — (2 Freem. 12)                                                                     | 650                                                         | — v. — (6 Sim. )                                          | 155           |
| — (2 Freem. 52)                                                                     | 702                                                         | — v. Palmer (1 Meriv. )                                   | 242           |
| — (2 Freem. 137)                                                                    | 756, 759                                                    | Ashton v. Dalton (10 Jur. ; 2 Coll. )              | 781           |
| — (2 Freem. 145)                                                                    | 852                                                         | — v. M'Dougall (5 Beav. )                                 | 482, 499, 505 |
| — (2 Freem. 278)                                                                    | 571                                                         | — v. Milne (6 Sim. )                                      | 709, 711      |
| — ( Gilbert , 18)                                                                   | 603                                                         | Astley v. Milles (1 Sim. )                                | 345, 748      |
| — (4 Mad. 273)                                                                      | 940                                                         | — v. Reynolds (2 Strange )                                | 623           |
| — (6 Mad. 10)                                                                       | 636                                                         | — v. Weldon, (2 Bos. &amp; P. )                           | 632           |
| — (1 Mad. Pr. &amp; P. 668)                                                         | 679                                                         | Astly v. Tankerville, Earl (3 Bro. )                      | 515           |
| — (1 Mad. Pr. &amp; P. 675)                                                         | 784                                                         | Aston v. Aston (1 Ves. )                                  | 570, 666      |
| — ( Mosely , 246)                                                                   | 655                                                         | — v. Pye (cited 5 Ves. )                                  | 608           |
| — ( Mosely , 328)                                                                   | 319, 515, 525                                               | — v. Smallman (2 Vern. )                                  | 469           |
| — (1 P. W. 326)                                                                     | 75                                                          | Atcherley v. Vernon (10 Mod. )                            | 408, 510      |
| — (1 P. W. 495)                                                                     | 298                                                         | Atherton v. Nowell (1 Cox )                               | 490           |
| — (1 Salk. 153)                                                                     | 344, 382                                                    | — v. Worth (1 Vern. )                                     | 353           |
| — (1 Salk. 154)                                                                     | 356                                                         | Atkinson v. Hutchinson (3 P. W. )                         | 18, 150, 153  |
| — (1 Salk. 155)                                                                     | 657, 945                                                    | — v. Turner ( Barnard. )                                  | 171, 172      |
| — (2 Salk. 523)                                                                     | 772                                                         | — v. Webb (2 Vern. )                                      | 438           |
| — ( Skin. 182)                                                                      | 471                                                         | Att.-Gen. v. Aspinall (2 My. &amp; Cr. ; 1 Keen )  | 16, 35, 38    |
| — (2 Swanst. )                                                                      | 10                                                          | — v. Bacchus (9 & 11 Pri. )                               | 473           |
| — (1 Vern. 45)                                                                      | 806                                                         | — v. Backhouse (17 Ves. )                                 | 756, 759      |
| — (1 Vern. 104)                                                                     | 407                                                         | — v. Bagg ( Hard. )                                       | 217           |
| — (1 Vern. 162)                                                                     | 297                                                         | — v. Baliol College (9 Mod. )                             | 304           |
| — (2 Vern. 177)                                                                     | 662, 725                                                    | — v. Bowyer (3 Ves. )                                     | 247           |
| — (2 Vern. 707)                                                                     | 479                                                         | — v. Bright (2 Keen ; 2 Jar. )                     | 148, 149, 152 |
| — (18 Ves. 258)                                                                     | 515, 525                                                    | — v. Bristol, Mayor of (2 J. &amp; W. )                   | 247, 248      |
| — (2 Ves. 671)                                                                      | 489, 492                                                    | — v. Brown (1 Swanst. )                                   | 34, 941       |
| — (2 Ves. 662)                                                                      | 723, 725, 735, 740                                          | — v. Carlisle, Mayor of (2 Sim. )                         | 34            |
| — (1 Y. &amp; C. 75)                                                                | 680                                                         | — v. Carmarthen, Corp. of ( Geo. Coop. )                  | 33            |
| Ansley v. Bainbridge (1 R. &amp; M. )                                               | 437                                                         | — v. Chapman (3 Beav. )                                   | 953           |
| Anson v. Lee (4 Sim. )                                                              | 306, 665                                                    | — v. Christ's Hospital (3 My. &amp; K. ; 4 Beav. ) | 197, 248      |
| Anstruther v. Addie (2 My. &amp; K. )                                               | 13, 14                                                      | — v. Coopers' Comp. (3 Beav. )                            | 248, 249      |
| Antrobus v. Davidson (3 Mer. )                                                      | 845                                                         | — v. Cordwainers' Comp. (3 My. &amp; K. )                 | 247, 249      |
| — v. Smith (12 Ves. )                                                               | 56, 57, 58, 285, 885, (891), 899, 902, (903), 906, 912, 915 | — v. Crofts (4 Bro. P. C. )                               | 663           |
| Aplyn v. Brewer ( Pr. Ch. )                                                         | 931                                                         | — v. Day (1 Ves. )                                        | 680           |
| Appleby v. Duke (1 Phill. )                                                         | 691                                                         | — v. Downing ( Wilson, R. )                               | 876           |
| Aquilar v. Aquilar (5 Mad. )                                                        | 483, 516, 517, 518, 519                                     | — v. Drapers' Comp. (4 Beav. )                            | 248           |
| Archdeacon v. Bowes (13 Pri. ; M'Clel. )                                     | 648, 805, 811, 812, 813                                     | — v. Dublin, Corp. of (1 Bli. N. S. )                     | 34            |
| Archer's case (1 Co. Rep. )                                                         | 948                                                         | — v. Exeter, Mayor of (2 & 3 Russ. )                      | 34            |
| Archer v. Preston (1 Eq. Abr. )                                                     | 7                                                           | — v. Foundling Hospital, Governors of (2 Ves. jun. )      | 34            |
| Arcot, Nabob of, v. East India Comp. (4 Bro. ; 1 Ves. jun. ; 3 Bro. ) | 16                                                          | — v. Gibbs (11 Jur. )                                     | 940           |
| Ardesoife v. Bennet (2 Dick. )                                                      | 588                                                         | — v. Glegg ( Amb. )                                       | 86            |
| Arglasse v. Muschamp (1 Vern. 77)                                                   | 7                                                           | — v. Hall (2 Cox )                                        | 69, 70        |
| Arkwright, ex parte (3 M. D. &amp; D. )                                      | 782                                                         | — v. Harrow School (2 Ves. )                              | 86            |
| — v. Colt (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                                    | 266                                                         | — v. Heelis (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                           | 34            |
| Armstrong v. Elveridge (1 Fonb. )                                                   | 490                                                         | — v. Hesketh (2 Vern. )                                   | 629           |
| — v. Stockham (7 Jur. )                                                             | 420                                                         | — v. Higham (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                        | 48, 926, 953  |
| Arnold v. Bedford                                                                          | 76                                                          |                                                                  |               |
| — v. Chapman (1 Ves. )                                                              | 229, 230                                                    |                                                                  |               |
| — v. Congreve (1 R. &amp; M. )                                                      | 106, 249                                                    |                                                                  |               |
| Arnot v. Biscoe (1 Ves. )                                                           | 765                                                         |                                                                  |               |
| Arrow v. Mellish (1 De G. &amp; S. )                                                | 420                                                         |                                                                  |               |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lvii

|                                               | PAGE                                   |                                                 | PAGE                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|
| Att.-Gen. v. Holford (1 Pri.)                 | 267                                    | Bailey v. Ekins (7 Ves.)                        | 314, 316, 367                         |
| — v. Hurst (2 Cox)                            | 235                                    | — v. Wright (18 Ves.; 1 Swanst.)                | 496, 536                              |
| — v. Johnston (Amb.)                          | 256                                    | Baily v. Ploughman (Mos.)                       | 318, 829                              |
| — v. Lepine (2 Swanst.)                       | 10                                     | Bainbridge v. Ashburton, Lord (2 Y. & C.)       | 364                                   |
| — v. Liverpool, Mayor of (1 My. & Cr.)        | 34, 35                                 | Bain v. Lescher (11 Sim.)                       | 508                                   |
| — v. Lucas (12 Jur.)                          | 493                                    | Bainbrigge v. Baddeley (9 Beav.)                | 952                                   |
| — v. Malkin (2 Phill.)                        | 497                                    | Baines v. Dixon (1 Ves.)                        | 29, 407                               |
| — v. Marlborough (3 Mad.)                     | 571                                    | — v. Otley (1 M. & K.)                          | 539                                   |
| — v. Norwich, Mayor of (2 M. & C.)            | 938                                    | Baker's case (3 Co.)                            | 885                                   |
| — v. Mosley (12 Jur.)                         | 355                                    | Baker, ex parte (Shel. on Lun.)          | 670                                   |
| — v. Pargeter (6 Beav.)                       | 760                                    | — v. Hall (12 Ves.)                             | 229, 478                              |
| — v. Pearson (2 Coll.)                        | 938                                    | — v. Harris (16 Ves.)                           | 722, 735                              |
| — v. Plymouth, Mayor of (15 Law Journal)      | 300                                    | — v. Sutton (1 Keen)                            | 79                                    |
| — v. Potter (5 Beav.)                         | 376, 556                               | — v. Walters (8 Beav.)                          | 696                                   |
| — v. Robins (2 P. W.)                         | 841                                    | — v. Wetton (9 Jur.; 14 Sim.)                   | 697, 717                              |
| — v. Skinners' Comp. (2 Russ.)                | 248                                    | — v. Wind (1 Ves.)                              | 619, 620, 621, 622                    |
| — v. Smythies (2 Russ. & M.)                  | 247                                    | Balch v. Symes (T. & R.)                        | 800, 801                              |
| — v. Solly (2 Sim.)                           | 191                                    | Balchen v. Scott (2 Ves., jun.)                 | 918, 932                              |
| — v. Southgate (12 Sim.)                      | 323                                    | Baldwin v. Belcher (1 J. & La.)                 | 310                                   |
| — v. Stephens (3 My. & K.)                    | 52                                     | Baldwyn v. Banister (3 P. W.)                   | 657, 945                              |
| — v. Stewart (2 Mer.)                         | 12, 15                                 | Bale v. Coleman (1 P. W.)                       | 136, 137                              |
| — v. Syderfin (7 Ves.)                        | 247                                    | Balfe v. Lord (2 Dr. & War.)                    | 671, 676                              |
| — v. Tyndall (Amb.)                           | 834                                    | Balfour v. Welland (16 Ves.)                    | 354, 381, 383, 386, 387               |
| — v. Merch. Vint. Comp. (5 Beav.)             | 249                                    | Ball v. Ball (1 P. W.)                          | 821                                   |
| — v. Winchelsea (Seton on Decrees; 3 Bro.)    | 235, 250                               | — v. Coutts (1 V. & B.)                         | 486, 501                              |
| — v. Whorwood (1 Ves.)                        | 610                                    | — v. Harris (8 Sim.; 4 M. & C.)                 | 85, 321, 367, 368, 369, 382, 791, 792 |
| — v. Wilson (9 Sim.; 1 Cr. & Ph.)             | 35, 941, 942                           | — v. Montgomery (2 Ves. jun.; 4 Bro.)           | 484, 486                              |
| Attwood v. — (1 Russ.)                        | 362                                    | — v. Newton (1 Vern.)                           | 882                                   |
| Aubrey v. Middleton (4 Vin. Abr.; 2 Eq. Abr.) | 321, 328                               | Balmain v. Shore (9 Ves.)                       | 210                                   |
| Austen v. Taylor (1 Eden; Amb.)               | 23, 51, 129, 132, 133, 134             | Balme v. Hutton (2 Y. & J.)                     | 351                                   |
| Austin v. England, Bank of (8 Ves.)           | 309                                    | Balsh v. Higham (2 P. W.)                       | 819                                   |
| — v. Dodwell, Executors of                    | 652                                    | Bamfield v. Popham (1 P. W.)                    | 152                                   |
| Aveling v. Knipe (9 Ves.)                     | 206                                    | — v. Wyndham (Pr. Ch.)                          | 818                                   |
| Averall v. Wade (L. & Go.)                    | 640, 739, 794, 803, 834, 835, 836, 837 | Bankes v. Le Despencer, Lady (10 & 11 Sim.)     | 26, 135, 143                          |
| Aylett v. Ashton (1 M. & C.)                  | 505, 516, 533                          | Boraston's case (3 Co. Rep.; 1 Jarman)          | 95, 97, 141                           |
| Ayliffe v. Murray (2 Atk.)                    | 918, 945                               | Barber, ex parte , re Tyas (5 Sim.)      | 655                                   |
| Aynsley v. Wordsworth (2 Ves. & B.)           | 582                                    | — v. Barber (3 My. & Cr.)                       | 171                                   |
| Ayton v. Ayton (1 Cox)                        | 419                                    | Barclay v. Russell (3 Ves.)                     | 10                                    |
| Babington v. Greenwood (1 P. W.)              | 267                                    | — v. Wainwright (3 & 14 Ves.)                   | 569, 607                              |
| Baddeley v. Curwen (2 Coll.)                  | 664                                    | Bardswell v. Bardswell (9 Sim.)                 | 68                                    |
| Badham v. Mee (1 R. & M.)                     | 460, 470                               | Barham v. Thanet, Lord (3 My. & K.)             | 335, 336                              |
| Back v. Andrews (2 Vern.; Pr. Ch.)            | 217, 218, 471                          | Barker v. Birch (1 De G. & S.)                  | 664, 672, 700                         |
| Backhouse v. Middleton (1 C. C.)              | 408                                    | — v. Chapman (1 Mad.)                           | 220                                   |
| — v. Wells (1 Eq. Ab.)                        | 152                                    | — v. Devonshire, Duke of (3 Mer.)               | 321, 367                              |
| Backhursts', Sir W., case (2 P. W.)           | 162                                    | — v. Gills (2 P. W.)                            | 469                                   |
| Bacon v. Bacon (5 Ves.)                       | 932, 933                               | — v. Lea (6 Mad.)                               | 490                                   |
| — v. Clerk (1 P. W.)                          | 134                                    | — v. May (9 Barn. & Cr.)                        | 314, 317                              |
| — v. Proctor (T. & R.)                        | 98, 167                                | Barlow v. Gains (8 Beav.)                       | 669                                   |
| Baggett v. Meux (1 Coll.; 1 Phill.)           | 90, 521, 522                           | — v. Grant (1 Vern.)                            | 461, 462, 466                         |
| Bagot v. Oughton (1 P. W.)                    | 308                                    | — v. Heneage (Pr. Ch.)                          | 882, 884, 885                         |
| Bagshaw v. Spencer (2 Atk.; 1 Ves.)           | 133, 136, 295                          | — v. Salter (17 Ves.)                           | 152                                   |
| Bailey v. Culverwell (8 B. & C.)              | 779                                    | Barnard v. Large (1 Bro.)                       | 949                                   |
|                                               |                                        | Barnardiston v. Carter (3 Bro. P. C.)           | 822                                   |
|                                               |                                        | Barnes v. Patch (8 Ves.)                        | 74, 75                                |
|                                               |                                        | Barnes v. Rackster (1 Y. & C. C. C.)            | 651, 678, 679, 803, (836)             |
|                                               |                                        | Barnesly v. Powell (1 Ves.)                     | 19                                    |
|                                               |                                        | Barnett, ex parte , in re Allen (8 Jur.) | 676                                   |

|                                              | PAGE                         |                                                 | PAGE                    |
|----------------------------------------------|------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Barnet v. Weston (12 Ves.)                   | 734, 745, 767                | Baynon v. Batley (8 Bing.)                      | 500                     |
| —— v. Wilson (2 Y. & C. C. C.)               | 306, 665                     | Beale v. Beale (1 P. W.)                        | 411                     |
| Barnewell v. Barnewell (3 Ridgw. P. C.)      | 643, 799                     | Beales v. Cresford (13 Sim.)                    | 470                     |
| —— v. Cawdor, Lord (3 Mad.)                  | 824                          | —— v. Spencer (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                 | 507, 508                |
| Barrell v. Sabine (1 Vern.)                  | 619, 623, 627                | Beard v. Beard (3 Atk.)                         | 502                     |
| Barret v. Beckford (1 Ves.)                  | 427, 433, 456, 605, 606, 607 | —— v. Nutthall (1 Vern.)                        | 889                     |
| Barrett v. Blake (2 Ball. & B.)              | 643, 662                     | —— v. Westcott (5 Taunt.)                       | 106, 125                |
| Barrington v. Att.-Gen. (Hard. R.)           | 307                          | Beare v. Prior (6 Beav.)                        | 806                     |
| Barron v. Martin (G. Coop.; 19 Ves.)         | 711                          | Beatson v. Beatson (12 Sim.) (56), (901), (915) | 907                     |
| Barrs v. Jackson (9 Jur.; 1 Phil.)           | 10, 19                       | Beaucherc v. Ashburnham (11 Jur.)               | 925                     |
| Barry v. Marriott (12 Jur.)                  | 570                          | Beaucherk v. Mead (2 Atk.)                      | 238                     |
| —— v. Wrey (3 Russ.)                         | 699                          | Beck v. Burn (7 Beav.)                          | 99                      |
| Barrymore v. Ellis (8 Sim.)                  | 523                          | Beckett v. Condley, (1 Bro.)                    | 747, 766, 788           |
| Barstow v. Kelvington (5 Ves.)               | 141                          | Beckford v. Beckford (Loft.)                    | 215                     |
| Bartholomew's Will, re (13 Jur.)             | 954                          | —— v. Hood (7 T. R.)                            | 16                      |
| —— v. May (1 Atk.)                           | 334, 819, 822                | —— v. Kemble (1 Sim. & St.)                     | 8, 12, 678              |
| Barthrop v. West (2 Rep. Ch.)                | 661                          | —— v. Tobin (1 Ves.)                            | 185                     |
| Bartle v. Wilkins (8 Sim.)                   | 699, 815                     | —— v. Wade (17 Ves.)                            | 48, 61, 63              |
| Bartlett v. Gillard (9 Russ.)                | 514, 609                     | Beckley v. Dorrington                           | 360                     |
| —— v. Green (13 Sim.)                        | 146, 149, 152                | —— v. Newland (2 P. W.)                         | 614 (853), 865, 866     |
| —— v. Pickersgill (4 East; 1 Cox; 1 Eden)    | 203                          | Becquet v. MacCarthy (2 Barn. & Ad.)            | 9, 15                   |
| Barton v. Briscoe (Jac.)                     | 524                          | Beevor v. Partridge (11 Sim.)                   | 77                      |
| —— v. Cooke (5 Ves.)                         | 466                          | Belch v. Harvey (1 Mad. P. & P.)                | 711                     |
| —— v. Knowlton (3 Ves.)                      | 341                          | Belcher v. Vardon (2 Coll.)                     | 617, 625, 626, 632, 804 |
| —— v. Mount (12 Jur.)                        | 555, 557                     | Belchier v. Butler (1 Eden)                     | 737, 738                |
| Barwell v. Parker (2 Ves.)                   | 318, 325                     | —— v. Parsons (Amb.)                            | 930, 933                |
| Basevi v. Serra (14 Ves.)                    | 481                          | —— v. Renforth (5 Bro. P. C.; 1 Eden)           | 737                     |
| Baskerville v. Baskerville (2 Atk.)          | 137                          | Bell v. Bell (Rep. temp. Plunkett)              | 196                     |
| Basset v. Clapham (1 P. W.)                  | 950                          | —— v. Free (1 Swanst.)                          | 844                     |
| —— v. Percival (1 Cox)                       | 335                          | —— v. Hyde (Pr. Ch.)                            | 533                     |
| Bassett v. Nosworthy (Finch)                 | 733                          | —— v. Phyn (7 Ves.)                             | 210, 211                |
| Bassford v. Blakesley (6 Beav.)              | 670                          | —— v. Taylor (8 Sim.)                           | 801                     |
| Bastard v. Clarke (7 Ves.)                   | 687                          | Bellamy v. Burrow (Forrest.)                    | 21                      |
| —— v. Proby (2 Cox)                          | 132, 136, 137                | Bellasis v. Compton (2 Vern.)                   | 20                      |
| Batchelor v. Middleton (6 Hare)              | 713                          | —— v. Uthwatt (1 Atk.)                          | 431, 433                |
| Bate v. Scales (12 Ves.)                     | 929                          | Bellingham v. Lowther (1 Ch. Ca.)               | 890, 891                |
| Bateman v. Bateman (1 Atk.)                  | 367, 368                     | Benbow v. Townsend (1 My. & K.)                 | 20, 214, 886, 897       |
| —— v. Bateman (Pr. Ch.)                      | 661                          | Bench v. Biles (4 Mad.)                         | 328                     |
| —— v. Davis (3 Mad.)                         | 927                          | Benger v. Drew (1 P. W.)                        | 202                     |
| —— v. Foster (1 Coll.)                       | 460, 466                     | Bengough v. Walker (15 Ves.)                    | 433, 434, 438           |
| —— v. Hotchkin (11 Jur.; 10 Beav.)           | 166, 839                     | Benn v. Dixon (10 Sim.)                         | 555                     |
| —— v. Rose, Countess of (1 Dow.)             | 527, 532, 541                | Bennet v. Batchelor (3 Bro.)                    | 243                     |
| Bates v. Dandy (3 Russ.; 2 Atk.)             | 307, 475, 477, 479, 480      | —— v. Davis (2 P. W.)                           | 507                     |
| Bath and Montague's case (3 Ch. Ca.)         | 886                          | Bennett, ex parte (10 Ves.; 2 Atk.)             | 301, 304, 354, 943, 944 |
| Bath, Earl of, v. Bradford, Earl of (2 Ves.) | 369                          | —— v. Biddles (10 Jur.)                         | 488                     |
| Batteley v. Windle (2 Bro.)                  | 225                          | —— v. Colley (2 My. & K.; 5 Sim.)               | 548, 551, 576, 709      |
| Battersley v. Smyth (3 Mad.)                 | 220                          | —— v. Cooper (10 Jur.; 9 Beav.)                 | 25, 357, 717, 776, 896  |
| Batsford v. Kebble (3 Ves.)                  | 98, 100                      | —— v. Honeywood (Amb.)                          | 76, 77                  |
| Batson v. Lindegren (2 Bro.)                 | 316                          | Benson v. Benson (6 Sim.)                       | 524                     |
| Baxter v. Manning (1 Vern.)                  | 723                          | —— v. Whittam (5 Sim.)                          | 463, 466                |
| Baugh v. Read (1 Ves. jun.; 3 Bro.)          | 433, 439, 442                | Bent v. Young (9 Sim.)                          | 7, 11, 12               |
| Bayley v. Boulcott (4 Russ.)                 | 57, 886, 897                 | Bentham v. Haincourt (Pr. Ch.)                  | 648, 806                |
| —— v. Edwards (3 Swanst.)                    | 8, 12                        | —— v. Wiltshire (4 Mad.)                        | 296, 367                |
| Baylis v. Newton (2 Vern.)                   | 225                          | Bentinck v. Wellink (2 Hare)                    | 15, 670, 690            |
| Bayly v. Robson (Pr. Ch.; 2 Eq. Ab.)         | 724, 725                     | Beresford v. Armagh, Archbishop of (13 Sim.)    | 514                     |
| —— v. Tyrrell (2 Ball. & B.)                 | 870, 872                     |                                                 |                         |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lix

|                                                          | PAGE                                 |                                                                          | PAGE                                                                 |
|----------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Beresford v. Hobson (1 Mad. )                     | 147, 162, 482, 485                   | Blackwood v. Borrowes (2 Con. &amp; Law. )                        | 942                                                                  |
| Berkeley v. Hardy (5 B. &amp; C. )                | 901                                  | ——— v. Morris ( Forrest. )                                        | 487                                                                  |
| ——— v. King's College, Cambridge (10 Beav. )      | 867                                  | Blagden, ex parte (2 Rose )                                | 483                                                                  |
| Berkely v. Swinburne (6 Sim. )                    | 466                                  | Blake v. Bunbury (1 Ves. jun. ; 4 Bro. )                   | 46, 593, 595, 602                                                    |
| Bernales v. Fuller (14 East )                     | 862                                  | ——— v. Marnell (2 Ball. &amp; B. ; 4 Dow. )                | 576                                                                  |
| Bernard v. Montague (1 Meriv. ; 11 Ves. )  | 27, 41, 399                          | Blakeley v. Brady (2 Dru. &amp; Wal. ) (903), 904, 906, 908       |                                                                      |
| Berney v. Sewell (1 J. &amp; W. )                 | 648, 689, 806                        | Bland v. Bland (2 Cox )                                           | 69, 70                                                               |
| Berrington v. Evans (1 & 3 Y. &amp; C. )          | 716, 777                             | ——— v. Williams (3 My. &amp; K. )                                 | 97, 101, 102                                                         |
| Berrow v. Morris (10 Beav. )                      | 952, 953                             | Blandy v. Widmore (1 P. W. ; 2 Vern. )                     | 438, 456, 605, 608, 610                                              |
| Berry v. Usher (11 Ves. )                         | 256, 297                             | Blankard v. Galdy ( Salk. 411)                                    | 15                                                                   |
| Berrysford v. Milward ( Barnard ; 2 Atk. ) | 732, 765                             | Blatch v. Wilder (1 Atk. ; West's R. )                     | 315, 316, 681                                                        |
| Bertie v. Lord Chesterfield (9 Mod. )             | 519                                  | Blease v. Burgh (2 Beav. )                                        | 98, 127, 181                                                         |
| Bedwell v. Frome (2 Cox )                         | 217                                  | Blennerhasset v. Day (2 Ball. &amp; B. )                          | 576                                                                  |
| Best v. Stamford (1 Salk. )                       | 256                                  | Blewett v. Willett (7 Bro. P. C. )                                | 300                                                                  |
| Bethune v. Kennedy (1 My. &amp; Cr. )             | 42, 43, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557 | Blewit v. Roberts (10 Sim. ; Cr. &amp; Ph. )               | 578, (579), (583), (584)                                             |
| Betts v. Kimpton (2 Barn. &amp; Ad. )             | 479                                  | Bligh v. Brent (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                   | 207                                                                  |
| Bevan, ex parte (9 Ves. )                  | 629                                  | ——— v. Darnley, Earl of (2 P. W. )                                | 833                                                                  |
| ——— v. Munn (9 Bingh. )                           | 352                                  | Blois v. Hereford (2 Vern. )                                      | 481                                                                  |
| Bewick v. Whitfield (3 P. W. )                    | 570                                  | Blomfield v. Eyre (8 Beav. )                                      | 846                                                                  |
| Bick v. Motley (2 My. &amp; K. )                  | 932                                  | Blount v. Hipkins (7 Sim. )                                       | 344                                                                  |
| Bickham v. Cruttwell (3 M. &amp; C. )             | 339, 346, 819                        | ——— v. Winter (3 P. W. )                                          | 500                                                                  |
| Biddle v. Perkins (4 Sim. )                       | 105                                  | Blunden v. Desart (2 Con. &amp; L. )                              | 786, 800, 801, 802                                                   |
| Biddulph v. Biddulph (12 Ves. )                   | 257, 264, 269, 272                   | Boardman v. Mosman (1 Bro. )                                      | 929                                                                  |
| Biederman v. Seymour (3 Beav. )                   | 824                                  | Boazman v. Johnston (3 Sim. )                                     | 315, 318, (319), 836                                                 |
| Bigge v. Bensley (1 Bro. )                        | 145, 152                             | Boddy v. Dawes (1 Keen )                                          | 171, 185, 190, 461                                                   |
| Bigglestone v. Grub (2 Atk. )                     | 443, 449, 464                        | Bodens v. Galway, Lord (2 Eden )                                  | 154                                                                  |
| Biggs v. Andrews (5 Sim. )                        | 263, 268                             | Bolger v. Mackell (5 Ves. )                                       | 25, 171, 395                                                         |
| Bignold, ex parte (2 Deac. )               | 651, 727                             | Bolton v. Bolton (4 Swanst. )                                     | 882, 889, 890, 892                                                   |
| Bill v. Cureton (2 My. &amp; K. )                 | 52, 56, 59, 350, 882, 883, 987       | ———, Duke of, v. Williams (2 Ves. jun. )                          | 517                                                                  |
| Billing v. Billing (5 Sim. )                      | 249                                  | Bond v. Graham (1 Hare )                                          | 48                                                                   |
| Billinghurst v. Walker (2 Bro. )                  | 335, 336                             | ——— v. Hopkins (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                               | 29, 60, 751                                                          |
| Binnington v. Harwood (1 T. &amp; Russ. )         | 809, 812, 814, 922                   | ——— v. Kent (2 Vern. )                                            | 804                                                                  |
| Birch v. Blagrove ( Amb. )                        | 884                                  | ——— v. Simmons (3 Atk. )                                          | 478, 483, 490, 491                                                   |
| ——— v. Wade (3 Ves. &amp; B. )                    | 79, 82, 83                           | Bonner v. Bonner (13 Ves. )                                       | 833                                                                  |
| Bird, ex parte (9 Sim. )                   | 684                                  | Bonham v. Newcomb (1 Vern. ; 2 Vent. )                     | 618, 621, 632, 710, 886                                              |
| ——— v. Hunsdon (2 Swanst. )                       | 171                                  | Bonithon v. Hockmore (1 Vern. )                                   | 807                                                                  |
| Birkett v. Hibbert (3 My. &amp; K. )              | 486, 493                             | Bonney v. Ridgard (1 Cox )                                        | 61, 368, 374, 378, 379, 380                                          |
| Birmingham v. Kirwan (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. )        | 587, 596                             | Booker v. Allen (2 R. &amp; M. )                                  | 394, 439, 450                                                        |
| Bisco v. Banbury, Earl of (1 Ch. Ca. )            | 756, 757                             | Booth v. Booth (2 Atk. )                                          | 646                                                                  |
| Biscoe v. Perkins (1 Ves. &amp; B. )              | 940, 950                             | ——— v. ——— (4 Ves. )                                              | 171                                                                  |
| Bisdel, ex parte (1 Mont. D. &amp; D. )    | 787, 794                             | ——— v. ——— (1 Beav. )                                             | 919, 923, 936                                                        |
| Bishop v. Church (2 Ves. )                        | 653                                  | ——— v. Creswicke (6 Jur. ; Cr. &amp; Ph. ; 8 Sim. ) | 668, 688, 692, 871                                                   |
| Bishopp v. Colebrook (12 Jur. )                   | 487                                  | ——— v. Lightfoot (1844)                                                  | 858                                                                  |
| Bize v. Dickason (1 T. R. )                       | 285                                  | ——— v. Rich (1 Vern. )                                            | 680, 681                                                             |
| Black v. Leicester (3 Swanst. )                   | 89                                   | ——— v. Vicars (1 Coll. )                                          | 538                                                                  |
| Blackburn v. Stables (2 Ves. &amp; B. )           | 134, 136, 137, 150,                  | Bootle v. Blundell (1 Mer. )                                      | 316, 327, 328, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 369, 406, 407, 408 |
| ——— v. Warwick (2 Y. &amp; C. )                   | 629                                  | ——— v. Scarisbrick (1 Cl. &amp; Fin. Ho. of L. Ca. )              | 417                                                                  |
| Blackler v. Webb (2 P. W. )                       | 76, 419, 420                         | Bor v. Bor (3 Bro. P. C. )                                        | 587, 595, 602, 603                                                   |
| Blacklock v. Barnes ( Sel. Ca. Ch. )              | 807, 924                             | Bosanquet v. Dashwood ( Forrest. )                                | 628                                                                  |
| Blacklow v. Laws (2 Hare )                        | 338, 508, 509, 510, 523              | Boss v. Godsall (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                            | 926                                                                  |
| Blackston v. Moreland (2 Ch. Ca. )                | 735                                  |                                                                          |                                                                      |
| Blackwell v. Bull (1 Keen )                       | 73                                   |                                                                          |                                                                      |

|                                                     | PAGE                                                       |                                                               | PAGE                         |
|-----------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Bostock v. Blakeney (2 Bro.)                        | 573, 932                                                   | Braybroke, Lord, v. Inskipp (8 Ves.)                          | 37, 364, 655                 |
| Bosvil v. Brander (1 P. W.)                         | 476, 484, 485                                              | Braybrooke v. Meredith (13 Sim.)                              | 859                          |
| Botcherby v. Lancaster (1 Ad. & Ell.)               | 351                                                        | Breadalbane, Marquis of, v. Chandos, Marquis of (2 My. & Cr.) | 13, 140, 412                 |
| Boteler v. Allington (3 Atk.)                       | 629                                                        | Breedon v. Breedon (1 R. & M.)                                | 387                          |
| Bothomly v. Fairfaix (1 P. W.)                      | 640                                                        | Brest v. Offley (1 Rep. Ch.)                                  | 78                           |
| Bottomley v. Brooke (1 T. R.)                       | 854                                                        | Brett v. Forcer (3 Atk.)                                      | 482                          |
| Boucher v. Taylor (4 Bro. P. C.)                    | 19                                                         | — v. Greenwell (3 Y. & C.)                                    | 485                          |
| Boughton v. Boughton (1 Atk.)                       | 882, 885, 888                                              | — v. Horton (4 Beav.)                                         | 420                          |
| — v. — (Sugd. L. P.)                                | 818                                                        | Brettell, ex parte (6 Ves.)                                   | 37, 655                      |
| — v. — (2 Ves.)                                     | 592                                                        | Bretton v. Bretton (2 Freem.)                                 | 411                          |
| — v. James (1 Coll.)                                | 97, 98, 106, (181), 818                                    | Brewin v. Austin (2 Keen)                                     | 688                          |
| (Affirmed in Dom. Proc. Sugden's Law of Prop.)      |                                                            | — v. Brewin (Pr. Ch.)                                         | 398                          |
| Bourdillon v. Adair (3 Bro.)                        | 487                                                        | Brewster v. Angell (1 J. & W.)                                | 142, 143                     |
| Bourne, ex parte (16 Ves.)                          | 351                                                        | — v. Clarke (2 Mer.)                                          | 220                          |
| — v. Bourne (2 Hare)                                | 261, 268, 636                                              | Brice v. Stokes (11 Ves.)                                     | 929, 930, 933, 937           |
| — v. Mason (1 Vent.)                                | 278                                                        | Bricker v. Whatley (1 Vern.)                                  | 471, 472, 473                |
| Bouverie v. Bouverie (11 Jur.; 2 Phill.)            | 399, 406                                                   | Bridge v. Abbot (3 Bro.)                                      | 537, 538                     |
| Bovey v. Smith (1 Vern.; 2 Ch. Ca.)                 | 196, 197, 755, 757                                         | Bridgeman v. Dove (3 Atk.)                                    | 321, 337                     |
| Bovil, ex parte (2 Mont. & A.; 2 Hare)              | 806                                                        | Bridges v. Stephens (2 Swanst.)                               | 570                          |
| Bowaman v. Reeve (Pr. Ch.)                          | 820, 830                                                   | Bridgenorth, Corporation of, v. Collins (11 Jur.)             | (179)                        |
| Bowden, ex parte (1 Keen.)                          | 461                                                        | Bridgewater, Duke of, v. Egerton (2 Ves.)                     | 157                          |
| — v. Laing (14 Sim.)                                | 461                                                        | Brierton v. Jones (1 Eq. Abr.)                                | 735, 743                     |
| Bowen v. Edwards (1 Ch. Rep.)                       | 620, 928                                                   | Bright v. North (2 Phill.)                                    | 938                          |
| Bowes v. E. L. W. W. Comp. (3 Mad.; Jacob.)         | 39, 576                                                    | — v. Rowe (3 M. & K.)                                         | 399                          |
| Bowles's case (11 Rep.)                             | 570                                                        | Brightens, ex parte (1 Swanst.)                               | 794                          |
| — v. Stewart (1 Sch. & Lef.)                        | 304                                                        | Briscoe v. Kennedy (Rolls, Mad. MS.)                          | 515                          |
| — v. Weeks (14 Sim.)                                | 37                                                         | Bristed v. Wilkins (3 Hare)                                   | 309                          |
| Bowman v. Bell (1 C. P. Coop.)                      | 658                                                        | Bristol v. Hungerford (2 Vern.; 3 P. W.)                      | 232, 727, 738, 752           |
| Bowsher v. Walking (1 R. & M.)                      | 360                                                        | Bristow v. Boothby (2 Sim. & St.)                             | 105, 107                     |
| Box v. Box (1 Drury; 2 Con. & L.)                   | 476, 534, 536                                              | — v. Warde (2 Ves.)                                           | 590                          |
| — v. Jackson (1 Drury)                              | 476, 488                                                   | — v. Warner (10 Ir. Eq. R.)                                   | 806                          |
| Boyce v. Hanning (2 Cromp. & Jer.)                  | 105                                                        | Britten v. Britten (9 Beav.)                                  | 658                          |
| Boydell v. Golightly (14 Sim.)                      | 143                                                        | — v. Hughes (5 Bing.)                                         | 350                          |
| Bozon v. Bolland (4 M. & C.)                        | 773, 800, 802                                              | Britton v. Twining (3 Meriv.)                                 | 134, 145, 152                |
| — v. Williams (3 Y. & J.)                           | 783                                                        | Brizick v. Manners (9 Mad.)                                   | 783                          |
| Brace v. Marlborough, Duchess of (Mose-ly; 2 P. W.) | 313, 679, 722, 733, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 742, 745 | Broad v. Bevan (1 Russ.)                                      | 68, 464                      |
| Brackenbury v. Brackenbury (2 J. & W.)              | 885                                                        | — v. Broad (1 Vern.; 1 Eq. Abr.)                              | 306                          |
| Bradburne v. Armand (2 Ch. Ca.)                     | 219                                                        | Broadhurst v. Balguy (1 Y. & C. C. C.)                        | 61, 933, 934, 937            |
| Bradford v. Belfield (2 Sim.)                       | 38, 634, 636                                               | Broadmead v. Wood (1 Bro.)                                    | 415                          |
| Bradley v. Bradley (2 Vern.)                        | 285                                                        | Broadway v. Morecraft (Mos.)                                  | 628                          |
| — v. Hughes (8 Sim.)                                | 524                                                        | Brocklehurst v. Jessop (7 Sim.)                               | 677, 714, 716, 719, 791, 795 |
| — v. Peixoto (3 Ves.)                               | 89, 521                                                    | Brocksope v. Barnes (5 Mad.)                                  | 299, 945                     |
| — v. Westcott (13 Ves.)                             | 70, 496                                                    | Brodie v. Barry (2 Ves. & B.)                                 | 598                          |
| Bradshaw v. Outram (13 Ves.)                        | 701                                                        | — v. St. Paul (1 Ves. jun.)                                   | 814                          |
| Bradwell v. Catchpole (3 Swanst.)                   | 656                                                        | Brome v. Berkley (2 P. W.)                                    | 403, 404                     |
| Braithwaite v. Britain (1 Keen)                     | 214, 322, (385), 386                                       | Bromfield v. Crowder (1 N. Rep.)                              | 90, 95                       |
| Brander v. Boles                                    | 792                                                        | Bromley v. Goodere (3 Atk.)                                   | 741                          |
| Brandlyn v. Ord (1 Atk.)                            | 728, 767                                                   | — v. Holland (7 Ves.; G. Coop.)                               | 657, 814, 901                |
| Brandon v. Aston (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                  | 89, 91                                                     | Brond v. Brond (2 Ch. Ca.; 1 Vern.; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr.)           | 306                          |
| — v. Brandon (3 Swanst.; 2 Wil-son)                 | 75, 76                                                     | Brookbank v. Brookbank (1 Eq. Abr.)                           | 882                          |
| — v. Robinson (18 Ves.; 1 Rose)                     | 89, 90, 512, 520, 521                                      | Brooke v. Lewis (6 Mad.)                                      | 42, 565                      |
| — v. Woodthorpe (10 Beav.)                          | 536                                                        | —, Lord, v. Warwick, Earl of (1 Hall & T.)                    | 818, 820, (826)              |
| Brathwaite v. Brathwaite (1 Vern.)                  | 300                                                        | Brookfield v. Bradley (Jac. R.)                               | 680                          |
| Bray v. Bree (8 Bli. N. S.)                         | 511                                                        | Brooks v. Brooks (Pr. Ch.)                                    | 534                          |
|                                                     |                                                            | — v. Greathed (1 J. & W.)                                     | 689                          |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxi

|                                                                                 | PAGE                        |                                                                            | PAGE                                                     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------|
| Broom v. Broom (3 My. &amp; K. )                                         | 209                         | Buckinghamshire, Earl of, v. Hobart (3 Swanst. )                    | 345                                                      |
| Brotherton v. Hall (2 Vern. )                                            | 761                         | Buckell v. Blenkhorn (5 Hare )                                      | 493                                                      |
| Broughton v. Davis (1 Pri. )                                             | 780                         | Buckeridge v. Ingram (2 Ves. jun. )                                 | 545, 589                                                 |
| Browell v. Reed (1 Hare )                                                | 351                         | Buckle v. Fawcett (4 Hare )                                         | 473                                                      |
| Brown v. Anderson (2 Moore ; Pr. C. R. )                          | 630                         | —— v. Mitchell (18 Ves. )                                           | 283, 289, 728, 778                                       |
| —— v. Bamford (11 Sim. ) i. (549); ii. (523), (524)                      |                             | Buckmaster v. Yarrop (13 Ves. )                                     | 254                                                      |
| —— v. Barkham (1 P. W. )                                                 | 628, 629                    | Buffar v. Beadford (2 Atk. )                                        | 145, 149                                                 |
| —— v. Bigg (7 Ves. )                                                     | 240, 636                    | Bugden v. Bignold (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                            | 651, 726, 727, (731), 836                                |
| —— v. Brown (1 Keen )                                                    | 330                         | Bulkley v. Wilford (2 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                              | 301, 945                                                 |
| —— v. Carter (5 Ves. )                                                   | 770, 889                    | Bull v. Birkbeck (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                             | 545                                                      |
| —— v. Casamajor (4 Ves. )                                                | 468                         | —— v. Falkner (13 Jur. )                                            | 802                                                      |
| —— v. Clark (3 Ves. )                                                    | 484, 509                    | —— v. Pritchard (5 Hare ; 1 Russ. )                          | 99, (101), 102, 103                                      |
| —— v. Cole (14 Sim. )                                                    | 668                         | —— v. Vardy (1 Ves. jun. )                                          | 79, 84                                                   |
| —— v. Dawson ( Pr. Ch. ; 2 Vern. )                                | 452, 606                    | Bullock v. Menzies (4 Ves. )                                        | 485                                                      |
| —— v. De Laet (4 Bro. )                                                  | 26, 136, 137, 565           | —— v. Stones (2 Ves. )                                              | 172                                                      |
| —— v. Gibbs ( Pr. Ch. )                                                  | 616                         | —— v. Thomas (9 Sim. )                                              | 28                                                       |
| —— v. Heathcote (1 Atk. )                                                | 777                         | —— v. Wheatley (1 Coll. )                                           | 919, 926                                                 |
| —— v. Higgs (4, 5 & 8 Ves. )                                             | 51, 52, 78, 81, 82, 83, 876 | Bullpin v. Clarke (17 Ves. )                                        | 324, 515, 516, 540                                       |
| —— v. Jones (1 Atk. )                                                    | 231                         | Bulmer v. Jay (3 My. &amp; K. ; 4 Sim. )                     | 497, 536, 537, 539                                       |
| —— v. Litton (10 Mod. )                                                  | 922                         | Bulstrode v. Bradley (3 Atk. )                                      | 806                                                      |
| —— v. Meredith (2 Keen )                                                 | 596                         | Bulsteel, ex parte (2 Cox )                                  | 783                                                      |
| —— v. Newall (2 M. &amp; C. )                                            | 485                         | Bulwer v. Astley (1 Phill. )                                        | 323, 621, 624, 625, 626, 627                             |
| —— v. Pocock (2 R. &amp; M. ; 2 M. &amp; K. ; 5 & 6 Sim. ) | 83, 84, 521, 525            | Bunbury v. Bunbury (1 Beav. )                                       | 12                                                       |
| —— v. Sansom ( M'Clcl. &amp; Yo. )                                       | 191, 927                    | —— v. Winter (1 Ja. &amp; W. )                                      | 630                                                      |
| —— v. Selwyn ( Forrest. ; 3 Bro. )                                | 244, 297, 445               | Bunnett v. Foster (7 Beav. )                                        | 234                                                      |
| —— v. Stead (5 Sim. )                                                    | 657, 747                    | Burden v. Burden (cited 1 Jac. &amp; W. )                           | 208                                                      |
| —— v. Temperley (3 Russ. )                                               | 185, 461                    | —— v. Oldaker (1 Coll. )                                            | 670, 699                                                 |
| Browncker v. Bagot (9 Ves. ; 1 Mer. )                             | 158, 161                    | Burdett v. Willett (2 Vern. )                                       | 298                                                      |
| Browne v. Amyot (3 Hare )                                                | 578, 582                    | Burdon v. Dean (2 Ves. jun. )                                       | 484, 485, 504                                            |
| —— v. Blake (1 Moll. )                                                   | 879                         | —— v. Kennedy (3 Atk. )                                             | 661                                                      |
| —— v. Blount (2 R. &amp; M. )                                            | 40, 689, 700                | Burford v. Street (16 Ves. )                                        | 495                                                      |
| —— v. Lake (14 Ves. )                                                    | 512, 513, 522               | Burge v. Brutton (2 Hare )                                          | 946                                                      |
| —— v. Lockhart (10 Sim. )                                                | 651, 652, 655               | Burges v. Lamb (16 Ves. )                                           | 570, 571                                                 |
| —— v. M'Guire (1 Beat. )                                                 | 225, 226                    | Burgess's case, (cited 2 P. W. )                                    | 162                                                      |
| —— v. Southouse (3 Bro. )                                                | 922                         | Burgess v. Mowbey ( T. &amp; R. )                                   | 714                                                      |
| —— v. Stoughton (10 Jur. ; 14 Sim. )                              | 200                         | —— v. Wheate (1 Eden ; 1 Blk. Rep. )                         | 32, 41, 237, 254, 266, 268, 269, 642, 643, 662, 663, 875 |
| Brownsword v. Edwards (2 Ves. )                                          | 18                          | Burgh v. Burgh ( Finch )                                            | 733                                                      |
| Bruce, ex parte (1 Rose )                                         | 783                         | —— v. Francis (1 Eq. Abr. ; 3 Swanst. ; 5 Bac. Abr. ) | 640                                                      |
| Brudenell v. Boughton (2 Atk. )                                          | 321                         | —— v. Langton (15 Vin. Abr. ; 2 Eq. Abr. )                   | 683                                                      |
| —— v. Elwes (1 East )                                                    | 125                         | Burgoigne v. Fox (1 Atk. )                                          | 394                                                      |
| Bruere v. Wharton (7 Sim. )                                              | 688                         | Burke v. Crosbie (1 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                 | 681                                                      |
| Brummel v. Prothero (3 Ves. jun. )                                       | 338                         | —— v. Greene (2 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                     | 870                                                      |
| Brunswick, Duke of, v. Hanover, King of (6 Beav. )                       | 15                          | —— v. Jones (2 Ves. &amp; B. )                                      | 357                                                      |
| Bryan v. Cormick (1 Cox )                                                | 689                         | —— v. Lynch (2 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                      | 711                                                      |
| Brydges v. Brydges (3 Ves. )                                             | 876, 877, 879               | Burn, ex parte (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                            | 221                                                      |
| —— v. Chandos, Duchess of (2 Ves. jun. )                                 | 351                         | —— v. Carvalho (4 M. &amp; C. )                                     | 778, 860, 862                                            |
| —— v. Kilburne (5 Ves. )                                                 | 572                         | Burnaby v. Griffin (3 Ves. )                                        | 875, 877                                                 |
| —— v. Landen (3 Ves. jun. )                                              | 321                         | Burnet v. Burnet (1 Bro. )                                          | 462                                                      |
| —— v. Phillips (6 Ves. )                                                 | 327, 338, 340               | Burnett v. Kinaston ( Pr. Ch. )                                     | 476                                                      |
| —— v. Stephens (6 Mad. )                                                 | 571                         | Burney v. Macdonald (15 Sim. )                                      | 14                                                       |
| Buchanan v. Buchanan (1 Ball. &amp; B. )                                 | 257                         | —— v. Morgan (1 Sim. &amp; Stu. )                                   | 676                                                      |
| —— v. Rucker (9 East )                                                   | 15                          | —— v. Scott                                                                | 842                                                      |
| Back v. Shippain (14 Sim. ; 1 Phill. )                            | 319, 355, 360               | Burnham v. Bennett (2 Coll. )                                       | 478, 493                                                 |
| Buckingham, Duke of, v. Gayer (1 Vern. )                                 | 649, 806                    | Burrell v. Burrell ( Amb. )                                         | 83, 464                                                  |
| ——, Earl of, v. Drury (2 Eden ; 3 Bro. P. C. )                    | 254                         | —— v. Crutchley (15 Ves. )                                          | 159, 132                                                 |

|                                                              | PAGE                                |                                                                                | PAGE                              |
|--------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Burrell v. Egremont, Lord (7 Beav. )                  | 62, 198, 308, 345, 714              | Capper v. Terrington (1 Coll. )                                         | 670, 699                          |
| Burridge v. Row (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                | 482                                 | Car v. Burlington, Countess of (1 P. W. )                               | 318, 325                          |
| Burroughs v. Elton (11 Ves. )                         | 664                                 | Card v. Jaffray (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. )                                   | 777, 778, 791                     |
| —— v. Philcox (5 M. &amp; C. )                        | 78, 82, 84, 420                     | Care v. Drosier (2 Keen ; 5 M. &amp; C. )                        | 105                               |
| Burrowes v. Molloy (2 J. &amp; L. )                   | 675, 676, 689                       | Carew v. Johnstone (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. )                                | 650, 711, 807, 864                |
| Burting v. Stonard (2 P. W. )                         | 380                                 | Carey v. Askew (1 Cox )                                                 | 29, 590                           |
| Burton v. Hastings ( Gilb. Eq. Rep. )                 | 141                                 | —— v. Goodinge (3 Bro. )                                                | 297                               |
| —— v. Pierpoint (2 P. W. )                            | 502                                 | —— v. Stafford (3 Swanst. )                                             | 893                               |
| Bushby v. Munday (5 Mad. )                            | 7, 8, 11, 12                        | Carleton v. Leighton (3 Mer. )                                          | 614, 865, 910                     |
| Butcher v. Jackson (14 Sim. )                         | 417                                 | Carlton v. Farlar (8 Beav. )                                            | 795                               |
| —— v. Kemp (5 Mad. )                                  | 596                                 | Carmichael v. Carmichael (2 Phill. )                                    | 942, 953                          |
| —— v. Leach (7 Jur. ; 5 Beav. )                | 97, 100                             | —— v. Wilson (3 Moll. )                                                 | 461, 922                          |
| Bute, The Earl of, v. Stuart (1 Bro. P. C. )          | 65, 82                              | Carnatic, Nabob of, v. E. I. Comp. (1 Ves. jun. ; 4 Bro. C. C. ) | 11                                |
| —— Marquis of, v. Cunynghame (2 Russ. )               | 838                                 | Carne v. Brice (7 Mees. &amp; W. )                                      | 479, 503                          |
| —— v. Harman (9 Beav. )                               | 97, 100, (103)                      | Carpenter v. Carpenter                                                         | 878                               |
| Butler v. Bernard or Vincent (2 Freem. )              | 642, 660                            | Carpmael v. Powis (10 Beav. )                                           | 620                               |
| —— v. Butler (3 Atk. )                                | 172                                 | Carr v. Bedford (2 Ch. Rep. )                                           | 75                                |
| —— v. Butler (5 Ves. )                                | 336                                 | —— v. Eastabrooke (3 Ves. )                                             | 608                               |
| —— v. Duncombe (1 P. W. )                             | 397, 403, 404, 405, 411             | —— v. Taylor (10 Ves. )                                                 | 481                               |
| —— v. Rhodes ( Peake, N. P. C. )                      | 358                                 | Carter, ex parte , ( Amb. )                                      | 666, 726                          |
| —— v. Strutton (3 Bro. )                              | 77, 155, 419                        | —— v. Barnadiston (1. P. W. )                                           | 344, 382, 822, 838                |
| Butricke v. Broadhurst (1 Ves. jun. ; 3 Bro. ) | 598                                 | —— v. Bentall (2 Beav. )                                                | 154                               |
| Butter v. Ommaney (4 Russ. )                          | 146, 471                            | —— v. Carter ( Mosely )                                                 | 431                               |
| Butterfield v. Butterfield (1 Ves. )                  | 151, 161                            | —— v. Palmer (11 Bl. )                                                  | 300                               |
| Butterworth v. Harvey (9 Beav. )                      | 99                                  | —— v. Ratty (2 Mad. P. &amp; P. )                                       | 203, 214                          |
| Buxton v. Buxton (1 M. &amp; C. )                     | 581, 923, 933                       | Carteret v. Paschal (3 P. W. )                                          | 852, 879                          |
| —— v. Snee (1 Ves. )                                  | 797                                 | Cartwright v. Pettus (2 Ch. Ca. )                                       | 7                                 |
| Byas v. Byas (2 Ves. )                                | 285, 892                            | Carver v. Bowles (2 R. &amp; M. )                                       | 106, 127, 183, 249, 394, 440, 590 |
| Byrchall v. Bradford (6 Mad. )                        | 299                                 | Cary v. Ash (2 Mad. Pr. &amp; P. )                                      | 701                               |
| Byde v. Byde (1 Cox )                                 | 605, 606                            | —— v. Cary (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. )                                        | 65, 66                            |
| Cadogan v. Ewart (7 Ad. &amp; E. )                    | 69, 173                             | Casamajor v. Pearson (8 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                | 569                               |
| Cadwalader v. Price (11 Jur. )                        | 457                                 | —— v. Strobe (19 Ves. )                                                 | 565                               |
| Cafe v. Bent (3 & 5 Hare )                            | 42, 43, 88, 947                     | Casberd v. Att.-Gen. (6 Pri. )                                          | 33, 784, 785, 786                 |
| Caffrey v. Darby (6 Ves. )                            | 923, 940                            | Casborne v. Scarfe (1 Atk. )                                            | 642, 877                          |
| Caldecott v. Caldecott (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )         | 42, 43, 44, 552, 561, 562, 563, 564 | Casburne v. Inglis (2 Jac. &amp; W. )                                   | 644, 645                          |
| Caldicot v. Brown (2 Hare )                           | 573                                 | Cash v. Belcher (1 Hare )                                               | 691                               |
| Callow v. Howle (11 Jur. )                            | 324, 516                            | —— v. Kennion (11 Ves. )                                                | 654                               |
| Calverly v. Phelp (6 Mad. )                           | 700, 703                            | Casterton v. Sutherland (9 Ves. )                                       | 82                                |
| Calvert v. Godfrey (6 Beav. )                         | 547                                 | Caton v. Cooley (1 Cox )                                                | 763                               |
| Cambridge v. Rous (8 Ves. )                           | 241                                 | Cator v. Charlton (cited 2 Ves. jun. )                                  | 666                               |
| Campbell v. Brownrigg (1 Phill. )                     | 127, 249                            | Caulfield v. Macquire (2 Jo. &amp; La. )                                | 845                               |
| —— v. Campbell (7 Beav. )                             | 463                                 | Cavan, Lady, v. Pulteney (2 & 3 Ves. jun. )                             | 591, 602, 603                     |
| —— v. Campbell (4 Bro. )                              | 469                                 | —— v. Stewart (1 Starkie )                                              | 15                                |
| —— v. French (3 Ves. )                                | 12                                  | Cavendish v. Mercer (5 Ves. )                                           | 188                               |
| —— v. Graham (1 My. &amp; K. )                        | 60                                  | Caverly v. Dudley (3 Atk. )                                             | 514                               |
| —— v. Hull ( Cowp. )                                  | 15                                  | Cawdor v. Lavis (1 Y. &amp; C. )                                        | 803                               |
| —— v. Leach ( Amb. )                                  | 576                                 | Cecil v. Butcher (2 Jac. &amp; W. )                                     | 884                               |
| —— v. Mullett (2 Swanst. )                            | 212                                 | —— v. Juxon (1 Atk. )                                                   | 503                               |
| —— v. Walker (5 Ves. )                                | 300, 301, 305                       | —— v. Plaistow (1 Anst. )                                               | 358                               |
| Campion v. Cottens (17 Ves. )                         | 52                                  | Chace v. Westmore (5 M. &amp; Sel. )                                    | 801                               |
| Cann v. Cann (1 P. W. )                               | 350                                 | Chadwick v. Doleman (2 Vern. )                                          | 414, 416                          |
| Cannel v. Buckle (2 P. W. )                           | 506                                 | —— v. Heatley (2 Coll. )                                                | 47                                |
| Canning v. Hickes (1 Vern. ; 2 Ch. Ca. )       | 650                                 | Chalie v. Gwynne (6 Law J. N. S. )                                      | 702                               |
| Cannings v. Flower (7 Sim. )                          | 190                                 | Challis v. Casborn (1 Eq. Abr. )                                        | 723, 724                          |
| Capel v. Butler (2 Sim. &amp; Stu. )                  | 775                                 | Chalmer v. Bradley (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                                   | 61, 62, 920                       |
| —— v. Gudler (9 Ves. )                                | 230                                 | Chalmers v. Storil (2 Ves. &amp; B. )                                   | 594, 596                          |
| Capps v. Capps (3 N. C. ; 5 Dowl. P. C. )      | 686                                 | Chamberlain v. Chamberlain (1 Ch. Ca. )                                 | 376, 377, 806                     |

|                                                                | PAGE                                                              |                                                               | PAGE                         |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Chamberlain v. Hewson (1 Salk. )                 | 479, 480                                                          | Churchill v. Dibben ( Ram on Assets )           | 497                          |
| Chambers v. Atkins (1 Sim. &amp; Stu. )          | 468                                                               | — v. Bank of England, Governor                         |                              |
| — v. Brailsford (18 Ves. )                       | 141                                                               | and Company of (11 Mees. &amp; W. )                    | 309                          |
| — v. Caulfield (6 East )                         | 528, 529                                                          | — v. Grove (1 Ch. Ca. )                         | 741, 746                     |
| — v. Chambers (10 Jur. ; 15                      |                                                                   | — v. Hobson, Lady (1 P. W. )                    | 918, 929, 930                |
| Sim. )                                                  | 42, 554, 555                                                      | — v. Marks (1 Coll. ; 11 Jur. )          | 89, 521                      |
| — v. Goldwin (9 Ves. ; 11 Ves. )          | 186, 619, 628, 649, 656, 703, 807, 864                            | Churchman v. Harvey ( Amb. )                    | 403                          |
| — v. Minchin (7 Ves. )                           | 929, 930, 932                                                     | — v. Ireland (1 Russ. &amp; M. )                | 598                          |
| — v. Portsea Water Works (1                             |                                                                   | Civil v. Rich (1 Ch. Ca. )                      | 84, 87                       |
| Mad. Pr. &amp; P. )                                     | 681                                                               | Clancarty, Lord, v. Latouche (1 Ba. &amp; Be. ) | 629                          |
| — v. Price (2 Eq. Ca. Abr. )                     | 140                                                               | Clare v. Bedford, Earl of                              | 765                          |
| Champernown v. Scott (6 Mad. )                   | 800                                                               | — v. Clare ( Forrest. )                         | 147, 148, 149, 162           |
| Champion, ex parte (3 Bro. )                     | 628                                                               | — v. Wood (4 Hare )                             | 678                          |
| — v. Rigby (1 Russ. &amp; My. )                  | 161, 305                                                          | Clarendon, Lord, v. Barham (1 Y. &amp; C.       |                              |
| Chancey's case (1 P. W. )                        | 605, 606, 607                                                     | C. C. )                                                | 336, 647, 747, 748, 824, 833 |
| Chandless v. Price (3 Ves. )                     | 145, 147, 161                                                     | Clark v. Bates (12 Jur. )                       | 953                          |
| Chandos, Duke of, v. Talbot (2 P. W. )           | 30, 345, 397                                                      | — v. Burgh (2 Coll. )                           | 306, 307, 879                |
| Chaplin v. Chaplin (3 P. W. )                    | 324, 433, 877                                                     | — v. Clark (8 Paige )                           | 952                          |
| — v. Horner (1 P. W. )                           | 262, 270, 271                                                     | — v. Cort ( Cr. &amp; Ph. )                     | 854                          |
| Chapman v. Blisset ( Forrest. )                  | 38                                                                | — v. Danvers (1 Ch. Ca. )                       | 202                          |
| — v. Salt (2 Vern. )                             | 449                                                               | — v. Guise (2 Ves. )                            | 586                          |
| Charitable Corporation v. Sutton (2 Atk. )       | 34, 35, 918, 941                                                  | — v. Hooper (10 Bing. )                         | 373                          |
| Charity Commissioners v. Cotter (1 Dru.          |                                                                   | — v. Jaques (1 Beav. )                          | 525                          |
| &amp; W. )                                              | 406                                                               | — v. Ormonde, Lord ( Jac. R. )                  | 592                          |
| Chatham, Lord, v. Tothill (7 B. P. C. )          | 125                                                               | — v. Parker (19 Ves. )                          | 88                           |
| Chatteway v. Smith (5 M. &amp; Sel. )            | 73, 75                                                            | — v. Sewell (3 Atk. )                           | 428, 429, 606                |
| Chauncy v. Graydon (2 Atk. )                     | 866                                                               | Clarke v. Abbot ( Barn. ; 2 Eq. Abr. )   | 745                          |
| Chave v. Farrant (18 Ves. )                      | 458, 608                                                          | — v. Burgh (2 Coll. )                           | 665                          |
| Chedworth v. Edwards (4 Ves. )                   | 204                                                               | — v. Periam (2 Atk. )                           | 888                          |
| Cheere v. Smith (1 Marsh. )                      | 787                                                               | — v. Richards (1 Y. &amp; C. )                  | 208, 868                     |
| Chesslyn v. Smith (8 Ves. )                      | 513                                                               | — v. Shee ( Cowp. )                             | 358                          |
| Chester v. Platt ( Sugd. V. &amp; P. , 11th ed.) | 518                                                               | Clavell v. Littleton ( Pre. Ch. )               | 882, 883, 889                |
| — v. Willes ( Amb. )                             | 345                                                               | Clavering v. Clavering (2 P. W. )               | 573                          |
| Chesterfield v. Janssen (1 Atk. )                | 358                                                               | — v. ——— ( Pre. Ch. ; 2 Vern. )          | 882, 885                     |
| Chevaux v. Aislabie (13 Sim. )                   | 99, 399                                                           | Clay, re ( Shel. on Lunacy )                    | 670                          |
| Chichester v. Bickerstaff (2 Vern. )             | 265, 270                                                          | — v. Pennington (8 Sim. )                       | 461                          |
| Child v. Danbridge (2 Vern. )                    | 357                                                               | — v. Sharpe (18 Ves. ; Sugd. on Pow. )   | 634, 635                     |
| — v. Stephens (1 Vern. )                         | 319                                                               | Clayton's case (1 Mer. )                        | 813                          |
| Chipehase v. Simpson (13 Jur. )                  | 572                                                               | Clayton v. Glengall, Earl of (1 Dru. &amp;      |                              |
| Chissum v. Dewes (5 Russ. )                      | 637                                                               | War. )                                                 | 400, 410                     |
| Chitton v. Burt ( Pr. Ch. )                      | 327                                                               | — v. Gresham (10 Ves. )                         | 569                          |
| Chitty v. Parker (2 Ves. , jun. )         | 234, 238                                                          | Cleland v. Cleland ( Pre. Ch. )                 | 481                          |
| — v. Selwyn (2 Atk. )                            | 407                                                               | Clementson v. Gandy (1 Keen )                   | 450, 595                     |
| Choat v. Yeates (1 Jac. &amp; W. )               | 343                                                               | Clench v. Witherly ( Ca. temp. Finch )          | 618                          |
| Cholmley v. Oxford, Lady (2 Atk. )               | 671                                                               | Clennell v. Lewthwaite (2 Ves. jun. )           | 233, 244, 245, 246           |
| Cholmondeley v. Ashburton (6 Beav. )             | 496                                                               | Clerk v. Miller (2 Atk. )                       | 515, 516                     |
| — v. Clinton (2 Jac. &amp; W. ; 2                |                                                                   | Clerkson v. Bowyer (2 Vern. )                   | 682, 702                     |
| Mer. ; 4 Bli., N. S. ) (i. 551 to 553),          | 48, 60, 63, 131, 136, 644, 645, 646, 666, 667, 709, 710, 872, 877 | Cliff v. Wadsworth (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. ; 7     |                              |
| — v. Cholmondeley (14 Sim. )                     | 65                                                                | Jur. )                                                 | 646, 652, 814                |
| — v. Merick (1 Eden )                            | 396, 400                                                          | Clifford v. Lewis (6 Mad. )                     | 320, 321, 322                |
| Chounery v. Blackburne (1 H. Bl. ; 3             |                                                                   | Clifton v. Burt (1 P. W. )                      | 327, 343, 820, 827, 829      |
| Doug. )                                                 | 775                                                               | — v. Cockburn (3 M. &amp; K. )                  | 293                          |
| Christian v. Field (2 Hare )                     | 662, 801, 806                                                     | Clinan v. Cooke (1 Scho. &amp; Lef. )           | 573                          |
| — v. Foster (2 Phill. ; 7 Beav. )         | 234, 235                                                          | Clinton v. Bernard (1 Dru. )                    | 680                          |
| Christophers v. Sparke (2 Jac. &amp; W. )        | 674, 702, 711                                                     | — v. Hooper (1 Ves. jun. ; 3 Bro. )      | 515                          |
| Christ's Hospital v. Budgin (2 Vern. )           | 219                                                               | — Lady, v. Seymour (4 Ves. )                    | 403, 404                     |
| Chudleigh's case (1 Co. )                        | 948                                                               | — v. Willes ( Sugd. on Pow. )                   | 325, 515                     |
| Church v. Kemble (5 Sim. )                       | 106, 590                                                          | Clough v. Bond (3 M. &amp; C. )                 | 932, (934)                   |
|                                                                |                                                                   | — v. Dixon (8 Sim. ; 3 M. &amp; C. )     | 517                          |
|                                                                |                                                                   | — v. Lambert (10 Sim. )                         | 527, 530, 890                |

|                                                                                    | PAGE                            |                                                                               | PAGE                    |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Clough v. Wynne (2 Mad. )                                                   | 583                             | Colyear v. Mulgrave, Countess of (2 Keen )                             | 276, 280                |
| Cloyne, Bishop of, v. Younge (2 Ves. )                                      | 244, 246                        | Coming, ex parte (9 Ves. )                                      | 785                     |
| Coats v. Stevens (1 Y. &amp; C. )                                           | 219                             | Compert v. Austen (12 Sim. )                                           | (100), (101)            |
| Cock v. Goodfellow (10 Mod. )                                               | 926                             | Compton v. Bloxam (2 Coll. )                                           | 946                     |
| Cockburn v. Thompson (16 Ves. )                                             | 695                             | —— v. Collinson (2 Bro. )                                              | 506                     |
| Cocker v. Egmont, Lord (6 Sim. )                                            | 708                             | —— v. Oxendon (2 Ves. , jun. ; 4 Bro. )                  | 263, 269, 270           |
| —— v. Quayle (1 R. &amp; M. )                                               | 927                             | Coney v. Bond (6 Beav. )                                               | 923                     |
| Cockerell v. Barber (16 Ves. )                                              | 654                             | Coningham v. Mellish (1 Eq. Abr. & Pre. Ch. )                   | 228                     |
| —— v. Cholmeley (1 R. &amp; M. ; 1 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                  | 575                             | —— v. Plunkett (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                  | 885                     |
| Cockes v. Sherman (2 Freem. )                                               | 705                             | Connell v. Hardie (3 Y. &amp; C. )                                     | 794                     |
| Cockrane v. Wiltshire (1 L. J. Ch. )                                        | 99, 103                         | Conolly v. Farrell (10 Beav. )                                         | 298                     |
| Cocks, ex parte (2 Deac. )                                           | 787                             | —— v. —— (8 Beav. )                                                    | 460                     |
| Cocksedge v. Cocksedge (14 Sim. ; 5 Hare )                           | 529                             | —— v. M'Dermot (3 J. &amp; L. )                                        | 833                     |
| Cockshott v. Bennett (2 T. R. )                                             | 358, 359                        | Conry v. Caulfield (2 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                  | 870                     |
| Codrington v. Foley, Lord (6 Ves. )                                         | 402, 403, 404                   | Consitt v. Bell (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                 | 285                     |
| —— v. Johnstone (1 Beav. )                                                  | 647                             | Constantein v. Blache (1 Cox )                                         | 358                     |
| Coffin v. Coffin ( Jac. R. )                                                | 571                             | Conway v. Conway (3 Bro. )                                             | 403, 422                |
| Cogan v. Stevens (1 Beav. )                                                 | 23, 235, 236, 238, 257          | Cook v. Collingridge ( Jac. )                                          | 208                     |
| Colchester, Mayor and Corporation of, v. Lowton (1 Ves. &amp; B. )          | 33                              | —— v. Duckenfield (2 Atk. )                                            | 228, 233                |
| Colclough v. Sterum (3 Bli. )                                               | 388                             | —— v. Fountain (1 & 3 Swanst. )                                        | 4, 194, 199, 214, 225   |
| Cole v. Ashborne ( Mad. P. &amp; P. )                                       | 607                             | —— v. Hutchinson (1 Keen )                                             | 223, 227, 228, 239, 244 |
| —— v. Sewell (4 Dru. &amp; War. ; 2 Con. &amp; L. ; 12 Jur. ) | 473                             | —— v. Sadler (2 Vern. )                                                | 683                     |
| —— v. Turner (4 Russ. )                                                     | 329                             | Cooke v. Bowler (2 Keen )                                              | 106                     |
| —— v. Wade (16 & 19 Ves. )                                                  | 75, 76, 87                      | —— v. Briscoe (1 Dru. &amp; War. )                                     | 595                     |
| Colegrave v. Manby (6 Mad. ; 2 Russ. )                               | 544, 551                        | —— v. Brown (4 Y. &amp; C. )                                           | 679                     |
| Coleman v. Sarrel (1 Ves. jun. ; 3 Bro. )                            | (57, n.)                        | —— v. Cooke (2 Vern. )                                                 | 146, 155, 856           |
| —— v. Winch (1 P. W. ; Pre. Ch. )                                    | 662, 724, 725, 726              | —— v. Crawford (13 Sim. )                                              | 38, 39                  |
| Coles v. Forrest (10 Beav. )                                                | 692, 699                        | —— v. Stationers' Comp. (3 My. &amp; K. )                              | 23, 226, 229            |
| —— v. Jones (2 Vern. )                                                      | 863                             | —— v. Farner, (17 Law J. Ex. ; 15 Sim. )                        | 593                     |
| —— v. Trecothick (9 Ves. )                                                  | 22, 625, 637, 944               | —— v. Whaley (1 Eq. Abr. )                                             | 571                     |
| Collard v. Hare (2 Russ. )                                                  | 709                             | Cookson v. Cookson (8 Sim. ; 12 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                | 211, 271                |
| Collet v. De Gols ( Forrest. )                                              | 728, 734                        | —— v. Reay (5 Beav. )                                                  | 257, 258                |
| Collett v. Munden (cited 2 Ves. , jun. )                             | 666                             | Coombe, ex parte (4 Mad. )                                      | 722, 778                |
| Collier v. Collier (3 Ves. )                                                | 465                             | —— (17 Ves. ; 1 Rose )                                          | 781, 784                |
| Collingwood v. Wallis (1 Eq. Abr. )                                         | 41                              | Coope v. Twynam ( T. &amp; R. )                                        | 844                     |
| Collins v. Carey (2 Beav. )                                                 | 945                             | Cooper v. Reilly (2 Sim. ; 1 R. &amp; M. )                      | 868                     |
| —— v. Collins (2 My. &amp; K. )                                             | 43, 552, 554, 555               | —— v. Thornton (3 Bro. )                                               | 463                     |
| —— v. Plumer (1 P. W. )                                                     | 263                             | —— v. Wyatt (5 Mad. )                                                  | 89, 91                  |
| —— v. Shirley (1 R. &amp; M. )                                              | 691, 697                        | Coote v. Boyd (2 Bro. )                                                | 246, 442, 445, 446, 447 |
| —— v. Wakeman (2 Ves. , jun. )                                       | 234, 238                        | Cooth v. Jackson (6 Ves. )                                             | 21                      |
| Collinson v. Patrick (2 Keen )                                              | 51, 56, 882, 886, 898, 907, 909 | Cope v. Cope (1 & 2 Salk. ; Gilb. Lex. Præ. )                   | 336, 394, 819           |
| Collis v. Robins (11 Jur. ; 1 De G. &amp; S. )                       | 334, 336, 339                   | —— v. Parry (2 Jac. &amp; W. )                                         | 856                     |
| Colly v. Blackburn (9 Ves. )                                                | 188                             | —— v. Wilmot ( Amb. )                                                  | 462                     |
| Collyer v. Fallon ( Turn. &amp; R. )                                        | 860, 867                        | Copeland, ex parte (3 Deac. &amp; Ch. )                         | 796                     |
| Colman v. Sarrel (1 Ves. , jun. ; 3 Bro. )                    | 52, 57, 58, 285, 289, 892, 898  | Copis v. Middleton ( T. &amp; R. )                                     | 844                     |
| —— v. St. Albans, Duke of (3 Ves. )                                         | 647                             | Copley v. Copley (1 P. W. )                                            | 440, 455                |
| Colmer v. Colmer ( Mosely )                                                 | 488, 491                        | Coppin v. Fernyhough (2 Bro. )                                         | 756, 757                |
| Colpoys v. Colpoys ( Jac. R. )                                              | i. (573, 474)                   | —— v. Gray ( Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                       | 540, 714                |
| Colson v. Colson (2 Atk. )                                                  | 136                             | Copplestone v. Boxwell (2 Freem. ; 3 Salk. ; 1 Ch. Ca. ) | 618, 619, 621, 623      |
| Colt v. Netherville (2 P. W. )                                              | 255                             | Coppring v. Cooke (1 Vern. )                                           | 648, 806                |
| Coltington v. Fletcher (2 Atk. )                                            | 199, 203                        | Corbet v. Tottenham (1 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                 | 48                      |
| Colvin v. Hartwell (5 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                      | 485                             | Corbett v. Barker (1 & 3 Anst. )                                       | 306, 664, 709, 711, 714 |
|                                                                                    |                                 | —— v. Maydwell (1 Salk. )                                              | 402, 403, 405           |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxv

|                                                                      | PAGE               |                                                                                     | PAGE                       |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------|
| Corder v. Morgan (18 Ves. )                            | 634                | Creed v. Creed (1 Dru. &amp; War. ; 11 Cl. &amp; Fin. )        | 830                        |
| Cordwell v. Mackrell ( Amb. ; 2 Eden )          | 136, 195, 760      | — v. Perry (14 Sim. )                                                 | 487                        |
| Cormick v. Trapaud (6 Dow. )                           | 638, 894           | Creuze v. Hunter (2 Ves. jun. ; 4 Bro. )                       | 325                        |
| Cornewall v. Cornewall (12 Sim. )                      | (839)              | Crewe v. Dicken (4 Ves. )                                             | 78                         |
| Cornwall, in re (2 Con. &amp; L. )                     | 837                | Crickett v. Dolby (3 Ves. )                                           | 171, 185, 285, 461         |
| — v. Montague (1 Eq. Abr. )                            | 501                | Crips v. Gee (4 Bro. )                                                | 21, 199                    |
| Corpis v. Middleton (1 T. &amp; R. )                   | 748                | Crisp v. Platel (8 Beav. )                                            | 670                        |
| Corsbie v. Free ( Cr. &amp; Ph. )                      | 481, 482           | Crockett v. Crockett (1 Hare ; 2 Phill. ; 6 & 11 Jur. ) | 29, 420, 464, 469, 470     |
| Cortilyon v. Lausing (2 Caine's Ca. U. S. )            | 771                | Croft v. Adam (12 Sim. )                                              | 84                         |
| Cory v. Cory (1 Ves. )                                 | 284, 290           | — v. Powell ( Com. Rep. )                                             | 628                        |
| — v. Gertcken (2 Mad. )                                | 766                | — v. Slee (4 Ves. )                                                   | 234, 495, 512              |
| Cossens, ex parte (1 Buck. )                           | 867                | Croker v. Martin (1 Bli. N. S. )                                      | 638                        |
| Cosser v. Collinge (3 M. &amp; K. )                    | 758                | Crompton v. Sale (2 P. W. )                                           | 433, 606                   |
| Coster v. Coster (9 Sim. )                             | 485, 491, 511      | Crone v. Odell (1 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                     | 419                        |
| Costobadie v. Costobadie (11 Jur. ; 6 Hare )    | (88)               | Crooke v. De Vandes (9 Ves. ; 11 Ves. )                        | 143, 145, 146, 153, 208    |
| Cotesworth v. Stephens (4 Hare )                       | 779, 803           | Crop v. Norton (2 Atk. ; 9 Mod. ; Barnard. )            | 202, 215                   |
| Cotgreave v. Cotgreave (1 De G. &amp; S. )             | 410                | Crosbie v. M'Doual (4 Ves. )                                          | 441                        |
| Cothay v. Sydenham (2 Bro. )                           | 756, 758, 787      | Crosby v. Church (3 Beav. )                                           | 515, 540                   |
| Cotteen v. Missing (1 Mad. )                           | 285, 862, 865      | Crosfield v. Stanley (4 B. &amp; Ad. cited )                          | 722                        |
| Cotter v. Layer (2 P. W. )                             | 493, 494           | Cross v. Remington (15 Law J. )                                       | 329, 341                   |
| Cotterel v. Hampson (2 Vern. )                         | 386                | Crossling v. Crossling (2 Cox )                                       | 84                         |
| — v. Homer (13 Sim. )                                  | 285, 292, 492      | Crossly v. Clare ( Amb. )                                             | 74, 75, 77                 |
| Cotterell v. Purchase ( Forrest. )                     | 62, 621, 622, 643  | Crouch v. Martin (2 Vern. )                                           | 852                        |
| Cottingham v. Fletcher (2 Atk. )                       | 21                 | Crow v. Rogers (1 Strange )                                           | 277                        |
| Cotton v. Cotton (2 Beav. )                            | 539                | Cruse v. Barley (3 P. W. )                                            | 223, 233, 234, 396         |
| — v. ——— (2 Ch. Rep. )                                 | 306, 403, 415      | Cruwys v. Colman (9 Ves. ; 3 Swanst. )                         | 65, 73, 74, 75, 76, 82, 84 |
| — v. King (2 P. W. )                                   | 884, 886           | Cubbridge v. Boatwright (1 Russ. )                                    | 378                        |
| Couch v. Stratton (4 Ves. )                            | 609                | Cull v. Showell ( Amb. )                                              | 587                        |
| Coulson v. Williams (9 Ir. Eq. R. )                    | 691                | Cullingworth v. Loyd (2 Beav. )                                       | 355, 359                   |
| Court v. Jeffery (1 Sim. &amp; Stu. )                  | 518                | Culpepper v. Aston (2 Ch. Ca. )                                       | 382, 386, 830              |
| Courtney v. Ferrers (1 Sim. )                          | 855                | Cummins v. Cummins , (3 J. &amp; L. )                                 | 919, 926, 936              |
| Coventry, Countess of, v. Coventry, Earl of (2 P. W. ) | 394                | Cunliffe v. Cunliffe ( Amb. )                                         | 70                         |
| —, Mayor of, v. Att.-Gen. (7 Bro. P. C. )              | 34                 | Cunningham v. Antrobus (13 Jur. )                                     | 479                        |
| Cowel v. Chambers ( Dr. on Inj. )                      | 570                | — v. Moody (1 Ves. )                                                  | 269                        |
| Cowell, ex parte (12 Jur. )                            | 637                | — v. Murray (12 Jur. ; 1 De G. &amp; S. )                      | 241, 420                   |
| Cowley v. Hartstonge (1 Dow. )                         | 257, 258, 259, 271 | Cure v. Bowyer (5 Beav. )                                             | 267                        |
| Cowne v. Douglas (1 M'Cle. &amp; Y. )                  | 710                | Curling v. Knight (6 Hare )                                           | 207                        |
| Cowper v. Scott (3 P. W. )                             | 397, 602           | — v. May (3 Atk. )                                                    | 257                        |
| Cox v. Chamberlain (4 Ves. )                           | 523, 576           | Currant v. Jago (1 Coll. )                                            | 199, 215, 220              |
| — v. Champneys ( Jac. R. )                             | 630                | Currie v. Nind (1 M. &amp; C. )                                       | 288                        |
| — v. Goodfellow (8 Ves. )                              | 648                | — v. Pye (17 Ves. )                                                   | 329                        |
| — v. King (9 Beav. )                                   | 717, 844           | Curteis v. Candler (6 Mad. )                                          | 47, 940                    |
| Coxe v. Basset (3 Ves. jun. )                          | 322                | Curtis v. Auber (1 J. &amp; W. )                                      | 778, 866                   |
| Crabb v. Crabb (1 My. &amp; K. )                       | 216, 217, 597      | — v. Hutton (14 Ves. )                                                | 259                        |
| Crabtree v. Bramble (3 Atk. )                          | 262, 264, 271      | — v. Lukin (5 Beav. )                                                 | 104, 184                   |
| Crackelt v. Bethune (1 J. &amp; W. )                   | 922, 940           | — v. Perry (6 Ves. )                                                  | 220                        |
| Craddock v. Piper (15 Sim. )                           | 828                | — v. Rippon (9 Sim. )                                                 | 68                         |
| Crallan v. Oulton (3 Beav. )                           | 322, 357           | Cusack v. Cusack (5 Bro. P. C. )                                      | 141                        |
| Cranbourne v. Delahay (2 Freem. )                      | 877, 878           | Cuthbert v. Peacock (1 Salk. ; 2 Vern. )                       | 299, 428                   |
| Crane v. Drake (2 Vern. )                              | 384                | — v. Parrier (6 Jur. ; Jac. R. )                               | 180, 225                   |
| Cranmer's case (2 Salk. )                              | 607                | Cutten v. Sanger (2 G. &amp; J. )                                     | 290                        |
| Cranstown, Lord, v. Johnston (3 Ves. )                 | 7                  | Dafforne v. Dafforne (2 Vern. )                                       | 151                        |
| Crawford v. Trotter (4 Mad. )                          | 146, 149           | — v. Goodman (2 Vern. )                                               | 162                        |
| Crawley v. Crawley (7 Sim. )                           | 183, 552, 569      | Dalbiac v. Dalbiac (16 Ves. )                                         | 358, 475, 481, 501, 525    |
| Crawshay v. Collins (15 Ves. )                         | 208                |                                                                                     |                            |
| — v. Maule (1 Swanst. )                                | 207, 208, 209      |                                                                                     |                            |
| Cray v. Rooke ( Forrest. )                             | 888                |                                                                                     |                            |
| — v. Willis (2 P. W. )                                 | 143                |                                                                                     |                            |
| Craythorne v. Swinburne (14 Ves. )                     | 843, 844           |                                                                                     |                            |

|                                                                | PAGE                   |                                                                             | PAGE                    |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Dale, ex parte ( Buck. ) . . . . .               | 40                     | 244, 245, 264, (has been overruled by Mapp                                  |                         |
| — v. Hamilton (11 Jur. ; 5 Hare )         | 21, 207                | v. Elcock, 13 Jur. 290.)                                      |                         |
| Daley v. Desbouverie (2 Atk. )                   |                        | Day v. Daverson (12 Sim. ) . . . . .                          | 235                     |
| Dalmer v. Dashwood (2 Cox ) . . . . .            | 689                    | — v. Merry, (16 Ves. ) . . . . .                              | 571                     |
| Dalton v. Hayter (7 Beav. ) . . . . .            | 671, 708               | Deacon v. Smith (3 Atk. ) 204, 206, 254, 610,                 |                         |
| Daly v. Kelly (4 Dow. ) . . . . .                | 630 (631)              |                                                                             | 777                     |
| Dalzell v. Welch (2 Sim. ) . . . . .             | 155                    | Dean v. Brown (8 Dow. & R. ; 5 B. & C. ) | 503                     |
| Daniel v. Dudley (1 Phil. ; 11 Sim. )     | 497, 536, 538          | — v. Dalton (2 Bro. ) . . . . .                               | 244                     |
| — v. Skipwith (2 Bro. ) . . . . .                | 676, 677, 702          | — v. M'Ghie (12 J. B. Moo. ; 4 Bing. )                 | 775                     |
| — v. Ubley . . . . .                                    | 470                    | Dearle v. Hall (3 Russ. ) 729, 730, 857, 858,                 |                         |
| — v. Warren (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )               | 43, 554, 555           |                                                                             | 866                     |
| Daniell v. Golby (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. ) . . . . . | 711                    | Dearman v. Wyche (9 Sim. ) . . . . .                          | 714, 715                |
| Daniels v. Davison (16 & 17 Ves. )               | 310, 756, 759          | Debeze v. Mann (2 Bro. ) . . . . .                            | 430, 441, 453           |
| Darbon v. Rickards (14 Sim. ) . . . . .          | 579                    | De Biel v. Thompson (3 Beav. ) . . . . .                      | 889                     |
| Darcy v. Hall (1 Vern. ) . . . . .               | 657                    | De Bouchout v. Goldsmid (5 Ves. ) . . . . .                   | 376                     |
| Darley v. Darley (3 Atk. ) . . . . .             | 502, 507, 508          | Deerhurst v. St. Albans, Duke of (5 Mad. )                    | 105,                    |
| — v. Singleton ( Wight. Rep. ) . . . . .         | 625                    | (107), (109), 132, 134, 135                                                 |                         |
| Darlington, Earl of, v. Pulteney (3 Ves. )       | 592                    | Deering v. Winchelsea, Lord (2 B. &amp; P. ;                  |                         |
| Dashwood v. Bithazey ( Mosely ) . . . . .        | 677                    | 1 Cox ) . . . . .                                                    | 843, 844                |
| — v. Blythway (1 Eq. Abr. ) . . . . .            | 682                    | Deeze, ex parte (1 Atk. ) . . . . .                           | 774                     |
| — v. Peyton (18 Ves. ) . . . . .                 | 66, 589, 595, 603      | Deg v. Deg (2 P. W. ) . . . . .                               | 21, 315, 317            |
| Daubeny v. Cockburn (1 Mer. ) . . . . .          | 358                    | Delabere v. Norwood (3 Swanst. ) . . . . .                    | 708                     |
| Daubigny v. Duval (5 T. R. ) . . . . .           | 376                    | De la Garde v. Lampriere (7 Jur. ; 6 Beav. )           | 488,                    |
| Davenport v. Bishopp (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. ;      |                        |                                                                             | 489                     |
| 1 Phill. ) 275, 276, 280, 284, 286, 287, 293            |                        | Delondre v. Shaw (2 Sim. ) . . . . .                          | 667                     |
| — v. Hanbury (3 Ves. ) . . . . .                 | 77, 155                | Demandray v. Metcalf ( Pre. Ch. ; 1 Eq.                |                         |
| — v. James (12 Jur. ) . . . . .                  | 675                    | Abr. ; 2 Vern. ) . . . . .                                    | 662, 721, 725, 772, 773 |
| — v. Stafford (8 Beav. ) . . . . .               | 688                    | Denison, ex parte (3 Ves. ) . . . . .                         | 637                     |
| — v. Whitmore (2 My. &amp; Cr. )                 | 221, 914               | Denton v. Denton (8 Jur. ) . . . . .                          | 46                      |
| Davers v. Folkes (2 Eq. Abr. ) . . . . .         | 41                     | Derby v. Atholl (1 Ves. ) . . . . .                           | 7, 11                   |
| Davidson v. Foley (2 Bro. ) . . . . .            | 799                    | Descrambes v. Tomkins (1 Cox ) . . . . .                      | 462                     |
| — v. Gardner ( Sug. V. &amp; P. ; 2              |                        | Detillin v. Gale (7 Ves. ) . . . . .                          | 631, 813, 814           |
| Rop. H. &amp; W. ) . . . . .                            | 520                    | Devaynes v. Noble (2 R. &amp; M. ; 1 Mer. )            | 214,                    |
| Davies v. Ashford (9 Jur. ) . . . . .            | 293                    |                                                                             | 813                     |
| — v. Austin (1 Ves. jun. ) . . . . .             | 863, 940               | Devenish v. Baines ( Pre. Ch. ) . . . . .                     | 20                      |
| — v. Fisher (5 Beav. ; 6 Jur. )           | 100, 102, 103          | Devese v. Pontet (1 Cox ; Pre. Ch. )                   | 436, 452                |
| — v. Goodhew (6 Sim. ) . . . . .                 | 259                    | Dew v. Clarke (1 Hagg. ) . . . . .                            | 19                      |
| — v. Thomas (2 Y. &amp; C. ) . . . . .           | 756, 757               | De Weever v. Rochport (6 Beav. ) . . . . .                    | 466                     |
| — v. Thornycroft (6 Sim. ) . . . . .             | 524                    | Dewey v. Bayntun (6 East ) . . . . .                          | 290                     |
| — v. Topp (1 & 2 Bro. ) . . . . .                | 324, 817, 823          | De Witte v. De Witte (11 Sim. ) . . . . .                     | 470                     |
| — v. Westcomb (2 Sim. ) . . . . .                | 370                    | Dick v. Butler (1 Mol. ) . . . . .                            | 705                     |
| Davis v. Barrett (13 Law J. ) . . . . .          | 689                    | — v. Lacy (8 Beav. ) . . . . .                                | 146, 152, 155, 471      |
| — v. Battine (2 R. &amp; M. ) . . . . .          | 674                    | Dickenson v. Dickenson (3 Bro. ) . . . . .                    | 387, 408                |
| — v. Dendy (3 Mad. ) . . . . .                   | 807                    | — v. Shaw (cited 2 Cox ) . . . . .                            | 220                     |
| — v. Dowding (2 Keen ) . . . . .                 | 680                    | — v. Smith (4 Mad. ) . . . . .                                | 689                     |
| — v. Gardiner (2 P. W. ) . . . . .               | 820, 832               | Dickin v. Edwards (4 Hare ) . . . . .                         | 327                     |
| — v. Marlborough, Duke of (1 Swanst. )           | 614, 867               | Dickson v. Robinson ( Jac. ) . . . . .                        | 596                     |
| — v. May (19 Ves. ; Coop. ) . . . . .     | 810                    | Digley, ex parte ( Jac. ) . . . . .                           | 393                     |
| — v. Spurling (1 R. &amp; M. )                   | 47, 920, 932, 933, 942 | Digby v. Craggs ( Amb. ; 2 Eden )                      | 656, 764                |
| Davy v. Baker (2 Atk. ) . . . . .                | 642, 649               | — v. Legard (1 Bro. ; 3 P. W. ) . . . . .              | 234                     |
| — v. Hooper (2 Vern. ) . . . . .                 | 83                     | — v. Morgan (1 Ch. Rep. ) . . . . .                           | 728                     |
| Davys v. Boucher (3 Y. &amp; C. ) . . . . .      | 434                    | Dillon v. Coppin (4 M. &amp; C. )                             | 282, 285, (891),        |
| — v. Pritchard (1848) . . . . .                         | 953                    |                                                                             | 893, 905                |
| Daw or Tothill v. Pitt (1 Mad. ) . . . . .       | 161                    | — v. Grace (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. ) . . . . .                    | 493, 504                |
| Dawes v. Scott (5 Russ. ) . . . . .              | 337                    | — v. Parker (1 Swanst. ; 1 Jac. ; 7 Bli. ;      |                         |
| Dawson v. Clark (15 Ves. ; 18 Ves. )      | 225, 226,              | 1 Cl. &amp; Fin. ) 586, 588, 590, 591, 592, 593,                     |                         |
|                                                                |                        | 596, 599, 600                                                               |                         |
|                                                                |                        | —, Lord, v. Plaskett (1 Dow. &amp; Cl. )                      | 40                      |
|                                                                |                        | Dimes v. Scott (4 Russ. ) . . . . .                           | 44, 560, 561, 563,      |
|                                                                |                        |                                                                             | 567, 568, 581           |
|                                                                |                        | Dinsdale v. Dudding (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. ) . . . . .          | 48                      |
|                                                                |                        | Disher v. Disher (1 P. W. ) . . . . .                         | 199                     |
|                                                                |                        | Dixon v. Dawson (2 Sim. &amp; St. ) . . . . .                 | 242                     |
|                                                                |                        | — v. Dixon (1 Beav. ) . . . . .                               | 525                     |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxvii

|                                                                            | PAGE               |                                                                                          | PAGE                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Dixon v. Olmius (2 Cor )                                            | 508                | Doswell v. Earle (12 Ves. )                                                       | 534, (535)                        |
| — v. Smith (1 Swanst. )                                             | 689                | Douce v. Torrington, Lady (2 My. &amp; K. ; 1 Keen )                       | 320, 322                          |
| Dobson v. Lyall (2 Phill. )                                         | 798                | Doughty v. Bull (2 P. W. )                                                        | 256                               |
| Docker v. Somes (2 My. &amp; K. )                                   | 191, 208, 922, 940 | Douglas v. Allen, (2 Dru. &amp; W. )                                              | 353                               |
| Dod v. Dod ( Amb. )                                                 | 137                | — v. Congreve (1 Keen ; 1 Beav. )                                          | 44, 132, 254, 560, 561            |
| Dodd v. Lydall (1 Hare )                                            | 676                | — v. Forrest (4 Bing. )                                                           | 15                                |
| — v. Wake (8 Sim. )                                                 | 107                | — v. Russell (4 Sim. ; 1 My. &amp; K. )                                    | 775, 778, 886                     |
| Doddington v. Hallet (1 Ves. )                                      | 797                | Douglass v. Cooper (3 My. &amp; K. )                                              | 494                               |
| Dodson v. Hay (3 Bro. )                                             | 137, 150           | Dover v. Gregory (10 Sim. )                                                       | 321, 323, 341                     |
| Doe v. Applin (4 T. R. )                                            | 162                | Dowbiggin v. Bourne (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                              | 843                               |
| — d. Tunstall v. Bottriell (5 B. &amp; Ad. )                        | 288                | Dowding v. Smith (3 Beav. )                                                       | 420                               |
| — d. Capps v. Capps (3 N. Ca. ; 5 Dow. P. C. )               | 686                | Dowell v. Dew (12 Law J. N. S. ; 1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                     | 493, 496, 505                     |
| — v. Carter (8 T. R. )                                              | 89                 | Dowling v. Maquire ( Llo. &amp; G. temp. Plunk. )                                 | 518                               |
| — v. Cavendish, Lord G. (4 T. R. )                                  | 587, 602           | Down v. Halling (4 B. &amp; C. )                                                  | 376                               |
| — v. Cooke (7 East )                                                | 127                | — v. Worrall (1 My. &amp; K. )                                                    | 84                                |
| — v. Cundall (9 East )                                              | 98, 124            | Downe, Lord, v. Morris (3 Hare )                                                  | 266, 642, 643, 662, 663, 676, 817 |
| — v. Davies (1 Ad. &amp; E. )                                       | 295                | Downes v. Timperon (4 Russ. )                                                     | 498                               |
| — d. Cadogan v. Ewart (7 Ad. &amp; E. )                             | 26, 173            | Downman's case (9 Rep. )                                                          | 22                                |
| — d. Fisher v. Giles (5 Bing. )                                     | 646                | Downshire, Marquis of, v. Sandys (6 Ves. )                                        | 571                               |
| — v. Goff (11 East )                                                | 150                | Dowson v. Bell (1 Keen )                                                          | 595, 597                          |
| — v. Hogg (4 Dow. &amp; Ry. )                                       | 787                | Doyle v. Blake (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. )                                              | 918, 919, 930, 946                |
| — v. Harris (2 Dow. &amp; R. )                                      | 295                | Doyley v. Att.-Gen. (2 Eq. Abr. )                                                 | 87                                |
| — v. Harvey (4 B. &amp; C. )                                        | 151                | Drake, ex parte (1 Mont. D. &amp; D. )                                     | 787                               |
| — v. Ironmonger (3 East )                                           | 150                | — v. Robinson (1 P. W. )                                                          | 594                               |
| — v. Jesson (5 M. &amp; Sel. )                                      | 150                | Draper v. Borlace (2 Vern. )                                                      | 765                               |
| — v. Joinville (3 East )                                            | 75                 | — v. Burlace (1808)                                                                      | 938                               |
| — d. Garnous v. Knight (5 B. &amp; C. )                             | 885, 899           | — v. Clarendon (2 Vern. )                                                         | 705                               |
| — v. Laming (2 Burr. )                                              | 150                | Drapers' Company v. Yardley                                                              | 757                               |
| — v. Maisey (3 M. &amp; R. )                                        | 646                | Drew v. Maudesley (5 Russ. )                                                      | 14                                |
| — d. Otley v. Manning (9 East )                                     | 288                | Drew v. Harman (5 Pri. )                                                          | 699, 813                          |
| — v. Moore (14 East )                                               | 95                 | — v. O'Hara (2 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                                    | 671                               |
| — v. Nicholls (1 B. &amp; C. )                                      | 295                | — v. Power (1 Scho. &amp; Lef. )                                                  | 807                               |
| — v. Noel (1 M. &amp; Sel. )                                        | 95                 | Drinkwater v. Combe (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                           | 345                               |
| — v. Over (1 Taunt. )                                               | 74                 | — v. Falconer (2 Ves. )                                                           | 441                               |
| — v. Oxenden (3 Taunt. )                                            | 592                | Drohan v. Drohan (1 Ba. &amp; Be. )                                               | 379                               |
| — v. Phillips (11 Jur. )                                            | 458                | Drought v. Eustace (1 Moll. )                                                     | 622, 623, 624, 625                |
| — v. Prigg (8 B. &amp; C. )                                         | 406                | Druce v. Denison (6 Ves. )                                                        | 475, 595                          |
| — v. Scott (4 Bing. )                                               | 504                | Drummond v. St. Albans, Duke of (5 Ves. )                                         | 647                               |
| — v. Simpson (5 East )                                              | 295                | Dryden v. Frost (3 M. &amp; C. )                                                  | 783, 813, 814                     |
| — v. Smith (5 M. &amp; Sel. )                                       | 74                 | Dubois v. Hole (2 Vern. )                                                         | 533                               |
| — d. Cheere v. Smith (1 Marsh )                                     | 787                | Duck v. Dixon (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. )                                               | 643, 662                          |
| — v. Staple (2 T. R. )                                              | 504                | Duckle v. Baines (8 Sim. )                                                        | 614                               |
| — v. Williams (5 Ad. &amp; E. )                                     | 714                | Duckworth v. Tucker (2 Taunt. )                                                   | 14                                |
| Dolley v. Ward (9 Ad. &amp; E. )                                    | 96, 97             | Duffield v. Duffield (3 Dow. N. S. ; 3 Bli. N. S. ; Dow. &amp; C. ) | 97, 100, 103, 173                 |
| Dolman v. Smith ( Pre. Ch. ; 2 Vern. ; Gilb. Eq. R. ) | 337, 339, 341, 818 | — v. Elwes (1 Bli. N. S. )                                                        | 657                               |
| Dolton v. Hewen (6 Mad. )                                           | 367                | Du Hourmelin v. Sheldon (1 Beav. )                                                | 266                               |
| Dommett v. Bedford, (6 T. R. ; 3 Ves. )                      | 89                 | Duke v. Doidge (2 Ves. )                                                          | 411, 415                          |
| Donations, Commissioners of, v. Wytrantz (2 J. &amp; L. )           | 363                | Dumas, ex parte (1 Atk. )                                                  | 298                               |
| Donn v. Penny (1 Mer. )                                             | 149, 152           | Dummer v. Pitcher (2 My. &amp; K. )                                               | 219, 595, 597                     |
| Donne v. Hart (2 R. &amp; M. )                                      | 475, 879           | Duncan v. Campbell (12 Sim. )                                                     | 486                               |
| — v. Lewis (2 Bro. )                                                | 324, 819, 823, 824 | — v. Chamberlayne (11 Sim. )                                                      | 857, 859                          |
| Donovan v. Fricker ( Jac. )                                         | 810, 811           | — v. Duncan (19 Ves. ; Coop. R. )                                          | 491                               |
| — v. Needham (9 Beav. )                                             | 461                | Dunch v. Kent (1 Vern. )                                                          | 353, 386, 757                     |
| Doran v. Simpson (4 Ves. )                                          | 360, 660           | Duncomb v. Duncomb (3 Liv. )                                                      | 948                               |
| — v. Wiltshire (3 Swanst. )                                         | 387                |                                                                                          |                                   |
| Dorchester v. Effingham (3 Beav. )                                  | 143, 166           |                                                                                          |                                   |
| Dormer v. Fortescue (3 Atk. )                                       | 845                |                                                                                          |                                   |
| Dornford v. Dornford (12 Ves. )                                     | 191, 192           |                                                                                          |                                   |
| Dorville v. Wolff (15 Sim. )                                        | 473                |                                                                                          |                                   |

|                                            | PAGE                                   |                                         | PAGE                          |
|--------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| Duncombe v. Hansley (cited 3 P. W.)        | 701                                    | Edwards v. Jones (1 M. & C.)            | 56, 57, 285,                  |
| —— v. Mayer (8 Ves.)                       | 46                                     |                                         | 852, 892, 899, 900, 901,      |
| Duncuft v. Albrecht (12 Sim.)              | 95                                     |                                         | 902, 903, 904, 906, 908,      |
| Dungannon v. Smith (10 Jur.)               | 94, 107, 110,                          |                                         | 910, 911, 912                 |
|                                            | 116, 118, 123                          | —— v. Lewis (3 Atk.)                    | 299                           |
| Dunk v. Fenner (2 Russ. & M.)              | 145                                    | —— v. Meyrick (2 Hare)                  | 305                           |
| Dunn v. Coates (1 Atk.)                    | 11                                     | —— v. Warwick (2 P. W.)                 | 256, 262, 270,                |
| —— v. Massey (6 Ad. & E.)                  | 615                                    |                                         | (282), 578                    |
| Dunnage v. White (1 J. & W.)               | 234                                    | Egg v. Devey (10 Beav.)                 | 936                           |
| Dunstan v. Patterson (11 Jur.; 2 Phill.)   | 631,                                   | Eland v. Eland (4 M. & C.)              | 383, 384, 385                 |
|                                            | 653, 671, 813                          | Elborne v. Goode (14 Sim.)              | 173, 174, (175),              |
| Durant v. Titley (7 Pri.)                  | 529, 541                               |                                         | (178), 179, 954               |
| Durham v. Wharton (3 Cl. & Fin.)           | 438                                    | Elcock v. Glegg (2 Dick.)               | 681                           |
| Durour v. Motteux (1 Ves.)                 | 239, 240                               | Elliot v. Brown (3 Swanst.)             | 207                           |
| Dutton v. Morrison (17 Ves.)               | 350, 351                               | —— v. Eliot (2 Ch. Ca.)                 | 215, 216, 217                 |
| —— v. Poole (1 Vent.)                      | 276, 277, 278                          | —— v. Merriman (Barnard.; 2 Atk.;       |                               |
| Du Vigier v. Lee (2 Hare)                  | 669, 684, 685,                         | 2 Eq. Abr.)                             | 367, 368, 369, 372, 373, 374, |
|                                            | 714, 715, 716, 718, 723, 724, 736, 737 |                                         | 381, 382, 383                 |
| Dyer v. Dyer (2 Ch. Ca.)                   | 765                                    | Elliott v. Cordell (5 Mad.)             | 482, 483, 484,                |
| —— v. —— (2 Cox)                           | 202, 214, 217, 218                     |                                         | 491, 508                      |
| —— v. —— (1 Mer.)                          | 420                                    | —— v. Minto, Lord (6 Mad.)              | 12                            |
| Dyose v. Dyose (1 P. W.)                   | 446                                    | Ellis v. Atkinson (3 Bro.)              | 514                           |
| Dyson v. Morris (1 Hare)                   | 675, 676, 769, 770                     | —— v. Ellis (1 Scho. & Lef.)            | 170, 185, 186                 |
| Eade v. Eade (5 Mad.)                      | 69                                     | —— v. Guavas (2 Ch. Ca.)                | 296                           |
| Eades v. Harris (1 Y. & C. C. C.)          | 707                                    | —— v. Maxwell (3 Beav.)                 | (168), 174                    |
| Eales v. Conn (4 Sim.)                     | 105                                    | —— v. Nimmo (L. & G.)                   | 58, 285, 286, 853,            |
| —— v. England (Pre. Ch.; 2 Vern.)          | 65                                     |                                         | 891, (892), (893), (915)      |
| —— v. Gee (Barnard.)                       | 888                                    | —— v. Selby (1 M. & C.)                 | 224, 225, 232, 244            |
| Earlom v. Saunders (Ambl.)                 | 41, 257, 258,                          | Ellison, ex parte (2 Y. & C.)           | 475                           |
|                                            | 260, 271                               | —— v. Airey (1 Ves.)                    | 418, 945                      |
| East v. Cook (2 Ves.)                      | 589                                    | —— v. Cookson (1 Ves. jun.; 2 & 3       |                               |
| —— v. East (5 Hare)                        | 60                                     | Bro.)                                   | 428, 431, 441, 443            |
| Eastabrook v. Scott (3 Ves.)               | 359                                    | —— v. Ellison (6 Ves.)                  | 52, 58, 69, 285,              |
| East India Company v. Henschman (1         |                                        |                                         | 883, 898, 903                 |
| Ves. jun.; 8 Bro. P. C.)                   | 299                                    | —— v. Elwyn (13 Sim.)                   | 476                           |
| —— v. Vincent (2 Atk.)                     | 765                                    | —— v. Wright (3 Russ.)                  | 813                           |
| Eastwood v. Vinke (2 P. W.)                | 429, 606, 607                          | Elmsley v. Young (2 My. & K.)           | 76, 539                       |
| Easum v. Appleford (5 M. & C.)             | 241                                    | Elsee, ex parte (1 Mont.)               | 938                           |
| Eaton v. Barker (2 Coll.)                  | 249                                    | Elton v. Eason (19 Ves.)                | 73, 152                       |
| —— v. Jaques (Doug.)                       | 786                                    | —— v. Elton (3 Atk.)                    | 285                           |
| Ebrand v. Dancer (2 Ch. Ca.)               | 215                                    | —— v. Shephard (1 Bro.)                 | 316, 579                      |
| Eccles v. Thawill (Pre. Ch.)               | 725                                    | Elwin v. Elwin (8 Ves.)                 | 41, 565                       |
| Ede v. Knowles (2 Y. & C. C. C.)           | 784, 887                               | Elworthy v. Bird (2 Jac.; 2 Sim. & St.) | 528,                          |
| Eden v. Smyth (2 Ves.)                     | 22, 913                                |                                         | 530                           |
| Edenborough v. Canterbury, Abp. of (2      |                                        | —— v. Wikstead (1 J. & W.)              | 482                           |
| Russ.)                                     | 939                                    | Elwyn v. Williams (7 Jur.; 13 Sim.)     | 476                           |
| Eedes v. Eedes (11 Sim.)                   | 482, 486                               | Emblym v. Freeman (Pre. Ch.)            | 231                           |
| Edge v. Salisbury (Ambl.)                  | 75, 76                                 | Emery v. England (3 Ves.)               | 412                           |
| —— v. Worthington (1 Cox)                  | 781, 783                               | —— v. Mucklow (10 Bing.)                | 854                           |
| Edgeworth v. Edgeworth (1 Beat.)           | 395, 398,                              | Emperor v. Rolfe (1 Ves.)               | 396, 397, 400                 |
|                                            | 414, 638                               | England v. Codrington (1 Eden.)         | 619, 620,                     |
| Edinburgh, Provost and Bailiffs of, v. Au- |                                        |                                         | 621, 814                      |
| brey (Ambl. 236)                           | 10                                     | —— v. Downs (2 Beav.)                   | 505                           |
| Edmonds v. Dennington (2 Vern. cited)      | 505                                    | ——, Bank of, v. Lunn (15 Ves.)          | 309                           |
| —— v. Townshend (1 Anstr.)                 | 487                                    | —— v. Parsons (15 Ves.)                 | 309                           |
| Edmunds v. Povey (1 Vern.)                 | 740, 742                               | Eno v. Eno (6 Hare)                     | 473                           |
| Edsell v. Buchanan (2 Ves. jun.; 4 Bro.)   | 710                                    | Ensworth v. Griffiths (5 Bro. P. C.; 2  |                               |
| Edwards v. Abrey (2 Phill.)                | 525                                    | Eq. Abr.; 15 Vin. Abr.)                 | 619, 623                      |
| —— v. Applebee (2 Bro.)                    | 640                                    | Entwistle v. Markland (6 Ves.)          | 185, 559                      |
| —— v. Cunliffe (1 Mad.)                    | 687                                    | Errat v. Barlow (14 Ves.)               | 186, (187), 188               |
| —— v. Fashion (Pre. Ch.)                   | 206                                    | Errington v. Chapman (12 Ves.)          | 185, 187,                     |
| —— v. Fidel (3 Mad.)                       | 237                                    |                                         | 188                           |
| —— v. Freeman (2 P. W.)                    | 51, 335, 394                           | Essex v. Atkins (14 Ves.)               | 512, 513                      |
| —— v. Hammond (1 N. C. P.)                 | (95)                                   | Estwick v. Cailland (5 T. R.)           | 351                           |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

IxiX

|                                                                           | PAGE                                                  |                                                | PAGE                                          |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------|
| Etty v. Bridges (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                                         | 859                                                   | Fendall v. Nash (5 Ves.)                       | 188, 190                                      |
| Evans v. Bicknell (6 Ves.)                                                | 46, 174, 756, 766, 767, 787, 858                      | Fenner v. Taylor (2 Russ. & M.)                | 488, 489, 492                                 |
| — v. Brown (5 Beav.)                                                      | 663                                                   | Fentiman v. Fentiman (13 Sim.)                 | 461                                           |
| — v. Charles (1 Anst.)                                                    | 536, 537                                              | Fenwick v. Greenwell (11 Jur.)                 | (923)                                         |
| — v. Cockeram (1 Col.)                                                    | 340                                                   | — v. Reed (1 Mer.; 5 B. & Al.)                 | 618                                           |
| — v. Evans (1 Hag. Con.)                                                  | 527                                                   | Fereday v. Wightwick (1 Russ. & M.)            | 207, 209                                      |
| — v. Hellier (Cl. & Fin.)                                                 | 167, 174, 179                                         | Fergus, Executors of, v. Gore (1 Scho. & Lef.) | 357                                           |
| — v. Jones (2 Col.)                                                       | 155                                                   | Ferraby v. Hobson (2 Phill.)                   | 924                                           |
| — v. Smithson                                                             | 824                                                   | Ferrand v. Wilson (4 Hare)                     | 105, (113), 114, 116, 572, 573, 574, 575, 936 |
| — v. Scott (1 Cl. & Fin. (N. S.); 11 Jur.)                                | (396) 406                                             | Ferrars v. Cherry (2 Vern.)                    | 195, 196, 363, 755, 756, 764                  |
| (See Sir E. Sugden's observations on this case, Law of Property, p. 146.) |                                                       | Ferreyes v. Robertson (Bunb.)                  | 37                                            |
| — v. Tweedy (1 Beav.)                                                     | 357                                                   | Fettiplace v. Gorges (3 Bro.; 1 Ves. jun.)     | 498, 507, 513                                 |
| Evelyn v. Evelyn (2 P. Wms.)                                              | 335, 393, 397, 405, 422, 574, 818                     | Field v. Donoughmore, Lord (1 Dr. & War.)      | 350, 354                                      |
| — v. Forster (8 Ves.)                                                     | 16                                                    | — v. Evans (15 Sim.)                           | 522                                           |
| — v. Templar (2 Bro.)                                                     | 285, 289, 890                                         | — v. Mostin (2 Dick.)                          | 607                                           |
| Ewer v. Corbet (2 P. W.)                                                  | 376, 380, 381                                         | — v. Schieffelin (7 Johns' R., U. S.)          | 376                                           |
| Ex parte — (2 Mad.)                                                       | 794                                                   | — v. Serres (1 N. R.)                          | 500                                           |
| Exton v. Greaves (1 Vern.)                                                | 620, 628                                              | — v. Sowle (4 Russ.)                           | 513, 515, 540                                 |
| Eyre v. Dolphin (2 Ball & B.)                                             | 756                                                   | Fielding v. Winwood (16 Ves.)                  | 285                                           |
| — v. Hanson (2 Beav.)                                                     | 687                                                   | Fiestel v. King's College (11 Jur.)            | 867                                           |
| — v. Marsden (2 Keen)                                                     | 166, 169, 178, 182, (4 Myl. & Cr.) 183, 184, 235, 236 | Finch v. Brown (3 Beav.)                       | 810                                           |
| Fagg's case (cited 2 Vern.)                                               | 741                                                   | — v. Finch (15 Ves.)                           | 201, 215, 217, 218                            |
| Fairebeard v. Bowers (2 Vern.)                                            | 888                                                   | — v. — (4 Bro.; 1 Ves. jun.)                   | 602                                           |
| Fairman v. Green (10 Ves.)                                                | 186, (187)                                            | — v. Hattersley (3 Russ.)                      | 321                                           |
| Farnham v. Wiggins (1847)                                                 | 28                                                    | — v. Winchelsea, Earl of (1 P. W.)             | 39, 40, 284, 640                              |
| Farmer v. Curtis (2 Sim.)                                                 | 697, 698, 700                                         | Finden v. Parker (11 M. & W.)                  | 872                                           |
| — v. Frances (2 Bing.; 2 Sim. & St.)                                      | 99                                                    | — v. Stephens (10 Jur.)                        | 72                                            |
| — v. Francis (9 Moo.; 3 Bing.)                                            | 25                                                    | Fisher v. Dudding (3 Man. & G.)                | 355                                           |
| Farquharson v. Balfour (8 Sim.)                                           | 630                                                   | — v. Giles (5 Bing.)                           | 646                                           |
| Farr v. Middleton (Pre. Ch.)                                              | 779                                                   | Fisk v. Fisk, (Pre. Ch.)                       | 681                                           |
| — v. Newman (4 T. R.)                                                     | 373, 378, 379                                         | Fitch v. Rochfort (13 Jur.)                    | 776                                           |
| — v. Sherriffe (10 Jur.)                                                  | 723                                                   | — v. Weber (12 Jur.)                           | 238                                           |
| Farrant v. Jackson (2 Vern.)                                              | 399                                                   | Fitcher v. Biles (1 T. R.)                     | 76                                            |
| — v. Lovel (3 Atk.)                                                       | 648                                                   | Fitzer v. Fitzer (2 Atk.)                      | 219, 528, 531                                 |
| Farrar v. Winterton, Earl of (5 Beav.)                                    | 267                                                   | Fitzgerald v. Fauconberg, Lord (1 Eq. Abr.)    | 302                                           |
| Farrow v. Rees (4 Beav.)                                                  | 767, 789                                              | — v. Field (1 Russ.)                           | 401                                           |
| Faulkner v. Bolton (7 Sim.)                                               | 671                                                   | — v. Jervoise (5 Mad.)                         | 260, 560, 565                                 |
| — v. Daniel (3 Hare)                                                      | 630, 697, 708, 748, 841, 843, 938                     | — v. Stewart (2 Sim.; 2 R. & M.)               | 296, 778, 779, 862                            |
| Fawcett v. Lowther (2 Ves.)                                               | 665                                                   | Fitzgibbon v. Scanlan (1 Dow.)                 | 300                                           |
| Fawcett v. Gee (3 Anst.)                                                  | 358                                                   | Flack v. Holme (1 Jac. & W.)                   | 15                                            |
| — v. Whitehouse (1 Russ. & M.)                                            | 208, 299, 945                                         | Flay v. Flay (2 Freem.)                        | 502                                           |
| Fazakerly v. Gillibrand (6 Sim.)                                          | 430                                                   | Flanagan v. Nolan (1 Moll.)                    | 191, (921), (951), 952                        |
| Fearns v. Young (9 Ves.)                                                  | 552, 580                                              | Flanders v. Clark (1 Ves.)                     | 65, 225                                       |
| — v. — (10 Ves.)                                                          | 939                                                   | Flarty v. Odium (3 T. R.)                      | 867                                           |
| Feasting v. Allen (12 M. & W.; 5 Hare)                                    | 94, 97, 98, 99, 396                                   | Fletch v. Webber (6 Hare)                      | 16                                            |
| Featherstone v. Fenwick                                                   | 791, 792                                              | Fletcher v. Ashburner (1 Bro.)                 | 256, 264                                      |
| Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick (17 Ves.)                                     | 208, 299, (792)                                       | — v. Chapman (3 Bro. P. C.)                    | 236                                           |
| Feise v. Randall (6 T. R.)                                                | 358                                                   | — v. Fletcher (2 Cox)                          | 528, 532, 541                                 |
| Fell, ex parte (10 Ves.)                                                  | 212                                                   | — v. — (4 Hare)                                | 531, 889, (890), 900                          |
| — v. Brown (2 Bro.)                                                       | 698, 700                                              | — v. Stevenson (3 Hare)                        | 578                                           |
| Fellows v. Mitchell (1 P. Wms.)                                           | 930                                                   | Flight v. Bentley (7 Sim.)                     | 786                                           |
| Feltham v. Clark (1 De G. & S.)                                           | 708, 776, 857                                         | — v. Leman (4 Ad. & E. N. S.)                  | 872                                           |
| Feltmakers, Company of, v. Davis (1 Bos. & P.)                            | 278                                                   | Flim v. Jenkins (8 Jur.)                       | 420                                           |
|                                                                           |                                                       | Flint v. Hughes (6 Beav.)                      | 70                                            |
|                                                                           |                                                       | — v. Warren (14 Sim.; 9 Jur.)                  | 235, 238, 293                                 |

|                                                  | PAGE                                                            |                                                          | PAGE                                                  |
|--------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------|
| Flower v. Marten (2 M. & C.)                     | 913                                                             | Francklyn v. Fern (Barn.)                                | 360, 618, 620, 659, 814                               |
| Floyer v. Lavington (1 P. W.)                    | 619, 621, 624, 626, 628, 710                                    | Frank v. Frank (3 Myl. & Cr.)                            | 588                                                   |
| — v. Sherrard (Amb.)                             | 625, 626                                                        | Frankland v. M'Justy (1 Knapp)                           | 15                                                    |
| Foden v. Finney (4 Russ.)                        | 482                                                             | Franklin v. England, Bank of (1 Russ.)                   | 309                                                   |
| Foley's case (2 Freem.)                          | 326                                                             | Franklyn v. Lay (2 Bli.)                                 | 151                                                   |
| Foley v. Burnell (1 Bro.)                        | 158                                                             | Franks v. Price (3 Beav.)                                | 134                                                   |
| — v. Hall (MS.)                                  | 309                                                             | Fraser v. Baillie (1 Bro. C. C.)                         | 534                                                   |
| — v. Parry (5 Sim.; 2 M. & K.)                   | 65, 66, 67, 68, 463                                             | Frazer v. Jones (5 Hare)                                 | 657, 731, 746, 787                                    |
| Follet v. Delany (12 Jur.)                       | 221, 885                                                        | Freak v. Hearsey (1 Ch. Ca.)                             | 682                                                   |
| Folliott v. Ogden (1 H. Bl.)                     | 10                                                              | Freak v. Cranefeldt (3 Myl. & Cr.)                       | 357                                                   |
| Fonnereau v. Poyntz (1 Bro.)                     | 446                                                             | — v. Horseley (2 Eq. Abr.)                               | 702                                                   |
| Forbes v. Ball (3 Mer.)                          | 76                                                              | Frederick v. Aynscombe (1 Atk.)                          | 265                                                   |
| — v. Cockrane (2 B. & C.)                        | 15                                                              | — v. Hartwell (1 Cox cited)                              | 512, 514, 537                                         |
| — v. Moffatt (18 Ves.)                           | 345, 657, 746, 748                                              | Freeman v. Fairlie (3 Mer.)                              | 917, 921, 939, 946                                    |
| — v. Peacock (11 Sim.; 11 M. & W.; 1 Phill.)     | 367, 368, 379, 383, 384                                         | — v. More (1 Bro. P. C.)                                 | 514                                                   |
| — v. Phipps (1 Eden)                             | 477                                                             | — v. Parsley (3 Ves.)                                    | 484                                                   |
| — v. Ross (2 Bro.; 2 Cox)                        | 300, 922, 943                                                   | — v. Tatham (5 Hare)                                     | 219, 943, 954                                         |
| Ford v. Fowler (3 Beav.)                         | 65, 70                                                          | Freemantle v. Banks (5 Ves.)                             | 435                                                   |
| — v. Rawlins (1 Sim. & Stu.)                     | 99                                                              | Freemoult v. Dedire (1 P. W.)                            | 316, 777                                              |
| — v. Wastell (6 Hare)                            | 688                                                             | French v. Baron (2 Atk.)                                 | 807, 945                                              |
| Fordyce v. Bridges (10 Beav.)                    | 355                                                             | — v. Chichester (2 Vern.)                                | 342                                                   |
| — v. Willis (3 Bro.)                             | 199, 886                                                        | — v. Davies (2 Ves. jun.)                                | 596                                                   |
| Forrest v. Elwes (2 Mer.; 4 Ves.)                | 807, 932                                                        | — v. Davidson (3 Mad.)                                   | 81, 88                                                |
| Forrester v. Cotton (1 Eden; Amb.)               | 587, 593, 595, 600, 603                                         | Frere v. Moore (8 Pri.)                                  | 728, 729, 745, (749), 750                             |
| Forrester v. Leigh, Lord (Amb.)                  | 829, 831, 832, 847                                              | Frewen v. Charleton (1 Eq. Abr.)                         | 949                                                   |
| Forshaw, re (16 Sim.)                            | 801                                                             | Friswell v. King (15 Sim.)                               | 800                                                   |
| Forsight v. Grant (1 Ves. jun.)                  | 433                                                             | Frogmorton v. Holyday (3 Burr.)                          | 96, 98                                                |
| Forster v. Hall (3 & 5 Ves.)                     | 20, 22                                                          | Fry v. Sherborne, Lord (3 Sim.)                          | 399, 406                                              |
| Forster v. Thompson (2 Con. & L.)                | 714                                                             | Fulham v. Jones (7 Bro. P. C.)                           | 265                                                   |
| Fortescue v. Barnett (1 Myl. & Cr.; 3 Myl. & K.) | 52, 55, 898, (899), 900, 902, 903, 905, 906, 907, 908, 913, 915 | Fuller v. Benett (2 Hare)                                | 760, 761, (762)                                       |
| Forth v. Chapman (1 P. W.)                       | 74, 127, 153                                                    | Fulton v. Gilmore (Rolls, 1845)                          | 47                                                    |
| — v. Gresley                                     | 66                                                              | Fultrope v. Foster (1 Vern.)                             | 617, 621                                              |
| — v. Norfolk, Duke of (4 Mad.)                   | 40, 799                                                         | Fulwood's case (4 Coke)                                  | 851                                                   |
| Fosbrooke v. Balguy (1 Myl. & K.)                | 300, 301, 304                                                   | Fursaker v. Robinson (Pre. Ch.)                          | 285                                                   |
| Foster v. Blackstone (1 Myl. & K.; 9 Bli.)       | 729, 804, 857, 858, 859                                         | Fust, in re (C. P. Coop.)                                | 570                                                   |
| — v. Cockerell (3 Cl. & Fin.; 9 Bli., N. S.)     | 729, 760, 858                                                   | Fyler v. Fyler (3 Beav.)                                 | 47, 918, 920, 934                                     |
| — v. Cooke (3 Bro.)                              | 594, 596, 831                                                   | Gabriel v. Sturgis (5 Hare)                              | 691                                                   |
| — v. Smith (1 Phill.; 2 Y. & C. C. C.)           | 28, 330, 370, 408                                               | Gaffee, re (13 Jur.)                                     | 524                                                   |
| — v. Vassall (3 Atk.)                            | 7                                                               | Gage v. Acton (1 Salk.)                                  | 480                                                   |
| Fothergill v. Kendrick (2 Vern.)                 | 640                                                             | Gainsborough v. Gainsborough                             | 245                                                   |
| — v. Fothergill (2 Freem.)                       | 893                                                             | Galton v. Hancock (2 Atk.)                               | 324, 431, 617, 818, 819, 820, 822, 823, 828, 831, 834 |
| Fowle v. Green (1 Ch. Ca.)                       | 368                                                             | Gambier v. Gambier (7 Sim.)                              | 14                                                    |
| Fowler v. Churchill (11 Mees. & W.)              | 309                                                             | Garbutt, ex parte (2 Rose)                               | 794                                                   |
| — v. Fowler (3 P. W.)                            | 444, 453, 501, 607, 608                                         | Gardener v. Fell (1 Jac. & W.)                           | 15                                                    |
| — v. Garlike (1 Russ. & M.)                      | 22, 80, 225                                                     | Gardiner v. Griffith (2 P. W.; Moseley; 2 Mad. Pr. & P.) | 629                                                   |
| — v. Reynell (1849)                              | 925                                                             | Gardner v. Marshall (14 Sim.)                            | 486                                                   |
| Fox v. Mackreth (2 Bro.)                         | 625, 765                                                        | — v. Townsend, Marquis of (G. Coop. R.)                  | 205                                                   |
| Foxhall, re (2 Phill.)                           | 943                                                             | — v. Parker (3 Mad.)                                     | 912                                                   |
| Fozier v. Andrews (2 Jo. & L.)                   | 49, 939                                                         | — v. Pullen (2 Vern.)                                    | 255                                                   |
| Frampton v. Frampton (4 Beav.)                   | 530                                                             | — v. Rowe (2 Sim. & St.; 5 Russell)                      | 21, 22                                                |
| Francis v. Grover (5 Hare)                       | 198, 226                                                        | Garforth v. Bradley (2 Ves.)                             | 480, 481                                              |
| — v. Wigzell (1 Mad.)                            | 516, 533                                                        | Garland v. Littlewood (1 Beav.)                          | 941                                                   |
|                                                  |                                                                 | Garlick v. Jackson (4 Beav.)                             | 688                                                   |
|                                                  |                                                                 | — v. James (12 Johns' R., U. S.)                         | 771                                                   |
|                                                  |                                                                 | Garmstone v. Gaunt (9 Jur.)                              | 547                                                   |
|                                                  |                                                                 | Garnett v. Armstrong (2 Con. & L.)                       | 747                                                   |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxi

|                                                 | PAGE                            |                                         | PAGE                    |
|-------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------|-----------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Garnons v. Knight (5 B. & C.)                   | 885, 899                        | Gillet v. Peppercorne (3 Beav.)         | 932, 944                |
| Garrard v. Lauderdale, Lord (2 R. & M.; 3 Sim.) | 58, 59, 279, 281, 860, 882      | Gillibrand v. Goold (5 Sim.)            | 408                     |
| Garret v. Evers (Mos.)                          | 605                             | Gittins v. Steele (1 Swanst.)           | 298                     |
| Garrett v. Noble (6 Sim.)                       | 933                             | Gladding v. Yapp (5 Mad.)               | 244                     |
| Garrick v. Camden, Lord (14 Ves.)               | 496                             | Gladstone v. Birley (2 Mer.)            | 796, 803                |
| Garry v. Sharratt (10 B. & C.)                  | 794                             | Gladwyn v. Hitchman (2 Vern.)           | 675, 864                |
| Garth v. Baldwin (2 Ves.)                       | 23, 151, 162                    | Glaister v. Hewer (8 Ves.)              | 478                     |
| —— v. Cotton (1 Dick.; 3 Atk.)                  | 570, 948, 950, 951              | Glanvill v. Glanvill (2 Mer.)           | 172                     |
| —— v. Earnshaw (3 Y. & C.)                      | 530                             | Glanville v. Payne (2 Atk.; Barnard.)   | 136                     |
| —— v. Thomas (2 Sim. & St.)                     | 698                             | Glasscott v. Lang (2 Phill.)            | 775                     |
| —— v. Ward (2 Atk.)                             | 705, 706                        | Glengall v. Barnard (1 Keen)            | 437, 439, 450           |
| Garthshore v. Chalié (10 Ves.)                  | 566, 608, 609, 610, 611         | Glenorchy, Lord, v. Bosville (Forrest.) | 129, 133, 137, 146      |
| Gascoine v. Douglas (Dick. 431)                 | 8                               | Glessen v. Ogden (3 Atk.)               | 284, 290                |
| Gascoigne v. Thwing (1 Vern.)                   | 201, 202                        | Globe v. Lord Carlisle (cited 2 Vern.)  | 682, 702                |
| Gaskell v. Durdice (1 Ball & B.)                | 705                             | Gloucester, Corp. of, v. Wood (3 Hare)  | 79, (147), 233, (238)   |
| —— v. Gaskell (2 Y. & J.)                       | 861                             | Glover v. Hall (2 Phill.)               | 671                     |
| —— v. Harman (11 Ves.)                          | 27, 41, 923                     | Glyn, ex parte (4 Jur.)                 | 778                     |
| Gaters v. Madeley (6 Mees. & W.)                | 477, 535, 852                   | —— v. Baster (1 Y. & J.)                | 513, 523                |
| Gawler v. Cadby (Jac. R.)                       | 149                             | Glynn v. Locke (3 Dru. & War.)          | 387                     |
| Gaynon v. Wood (1 Dick.)                        | 607                             | Goddard v. Snow (1 Russ.)               | 505                     |
| Gee v. Gurney (2 Coll.; 10 Jur.)                | 399, 417                        | Godden v. Crowhurst (10 Sim.)           | 90                      |
| Geldard v. Hornby (1 Hare)                      | 688                             | Godfrey v. Chadwell (2 Vern.)           | 705                     |
| Genery v. Fitzgerald (Jac.)                     | 173                             | —— v. Watson (3 Atk.)                   | 653, 741, 742, 807, 808 |
| George v. England, Bank of (7 Pri.)             | 219, 220, 597                   | Godhill v. Brigham (1 B. & P.)          | 497, 504                |
| —— v. Howard (7 Pri.)                           | 220, 883                        | Godolphin v. Godolphin (1 Ves.)         | 81                      |
| Gerrard v. Gerrard (2 Vern.)                    | 403                             | —— v. Penneck (2 Ves.)                  | 320                     |
| Gervis v. Gervis (14 Sim.)                      | 839                             | Godsal v. Webb (2 Keen)                 | 53, (261)               |
| Gibbins v. Phillips (7 B. & C.)                 | 351                             | Gold v. Canham (2 Swanst.)              | 10                      |
| Gibbon v. Strathmore (Calvert)                  | 696                             | Golding v. Haverfield (13 Pri.)         | 430                     |
| Gibbs v. Glamis (11 Sim.)                       | 59, 280                         | Goldsmid v. Goldsmid (1 Swanst.)        | 434, 438, 456, 605, 608 |
| —— v. Ougier (12 Ves.)                          | 256                             | Goldsworthy v. Crossley (4 Hare)        | 494                     |
| —— v. Rumsey (2 V. & B.)                        | 23, 224, 225, 241               | Goleborn v. Alcock (2 Sim.)             | 733                     |
| —— v. Tait (8 Sim.)                             | 161                             | Gomme v. West (2 Dick.)                 | 689                     |
| Giblett v. Hobson (3 Myl. & K.)                 | 233, 245                        | Gompertz v. Gompertz (2 Phill.)         | 249                     |
| Gibson v. Bott (7 Ves.)                         | 41, 44, 558, 560, 563, 565, 580 | Goodall v. Rivers (Moseley)             | 403                     |
| —— v. Hewitt (9 Beav.)                          | 671                             | Goode v. Burton (11 Jur.)               | 46                      |
| —— v. Jago (6 Hare)                             | 798                             | Goodenough v. Tremamondo (2 Beav.)      | 554, 555                |
| —— v. Kniven (1 Vern.)                          | 88                              | Goodere v. Lloyd (3 Sim.)               | 307, 496                |
| —— v. Nicol (9 Beav.; 24 Law J. N. S.)          | 690, 691                        | Goodess v. Williams (2 Y. & C. C. C.)   | 707                     |
| —— v. Rogers (Amb.)                             | 173, 295, 407, 422              | Goodfellow v. Burchett (2 Vern.)        | 434                     |
| —— v. Scudamore (Mos.)                          | 606                             | Goodier v. Ashton (18 Ves.)             | 681                     |
| Giddings v. Giddings (3 Russ.)                  | 300, 302, 546, 599              | Goodman v. De Beauvoir (10 Jur.)        | 36                      |
| Gifford v. Hort (1 Scho. & Lef.)                | 388, 705, 707                   | —— v. Grierson (2 Ball & Be.)           | 618, 619, 620, 621      |
| Gilbert v. Bennett (10 Sim.)                    | 465                             | —— v. Harvey (4 Ad. & E.)               | 755                     |
| —— v. Dyneley (3 Sco. N. R.)                    | 807                             | —— v. Kine (8 Beav.)                    | 648                     |
| —— v. Wetherell (2 Sim. & St.)                  | 913                             | Goodrich v. Shedder (8 Ves.)            | 15                      |
| Gilby v. Copley (3 Lev.)                        | 275                             | Goodrick v. Brown (1 Ch. Ca.)           | 877                     |
| Gilchrist v. Cator (1 De G. & S.)               | 491, 511                        | Goodright v. Moses (1 Bl.)              | 288                     |
| Giles v. Grover (6 Bli. N. S.; 1 Phill.)        | 33, 774                         | Goodson v. Ellison (3 Russ.)            | 47, 940                 |
| Gilham v. Locke (9 Ves.)                        | 889                             | Goodtitle v. Bailey (Cowp.)             | 654                     |
| Gill v. Att.-Gen. (Hard. R.)                    | 932                             | —— dem. Bishop (1 Y. & J.)              | 687                     |
| —— v. Cubitt (3 B. & C.)                        | 376                             | —— v. Morgan (1 T. R.)                  | 766                     |
| —— v. Eyton (7 Beav.)                           | 670                             | —— v. Whitley (1 Burr.)                 | 95, 97                  |
| Gillespie v. Alexander (3 Russ.)                | 297, 298                        | Goodwyn v. Goodwyn (1 Ves.)             | 285, 892                |
|                                                 |                                 | Gordon v. Atkinson                      | 238                     |
|                                                 |                                 | —— v. Gordon (3 Swanst.)                | 362                     |
|                                                 |                                 | —— v. Horsfall (11 Jur.)                | 662, 671, 704           |
|                                                 |                                 | —— v. Rutherford (Turn. & R.)           | 172, 466                |
|                                                 |                                 | —— v. Selby (11 Bli. N. S.)             | 622                     |

|                                                                | PAGE                                          |                                                   | PAGE                                             |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------|
| Gordon v. Whieldon (12 Jur.)                                   | 469                                           | Greenwood v. Rothwell (7 Beav.)                   | 708                                              |
| Gorge's case (3 Cro.)                                          | 217                                           | ——— v. Taylor (1 R. & M.)                         | 829, (834)                                       |
| Goring v. Bickerstaff (1 Ch. Ca.)                              | 30, 852                                       | ——— v. ——— (14 Sim.)                              | 677                                              |
| ——— v. Nash (3 Atk.)                                           | 195, (283), 284, 286, 288, 293, 892           | Gregg v. Arrott (Llo. & Goo.)                     | 649, 835                                         |
| Gosling v. Carter (1 Col.)                                     | 367, 368, 384                                 | ——— v. Cocks (4 Sim.)                             | 298                                              |
| Gott v. Atkinson (Willes)                                      | 315                                           | Gregory v. Gregory (Coop.)                        | 61, 305                                          |
| Gough v. Andrews (8 Jur.; 1 Col.)                              | 405, 939                                      | ——— v. ——— (2 Y. & C.)                            | 930, 931                                         |
| Gould v. Fleetwood (3 P. W.)                                   | 945                                           | ——— v. Lockyear (6 Mad.)                          | 519                                              |
| ——— v. Tancred (2 Atk.)                                        | 807, 809                                      | ——— v. West (2 Beav.)                             | 730                                              |
| Govett v. Richmond (7 Sim.)                                    | 765                                           | ——— v. Williams (3 Mer.)                          | 286                                              |
| Gornley v. Wood (9 Ir. Eq. R.)                                 | 946                                           | Grenfell v. Windsor, Dean and Canons of (2 Beav.) | 867                                              |
| Gower v. Grosvenor, (Barnard.; 5 Mad.)                         | 126, 128, 132, 140, 145, 149, 150, 156, (157) | ——— v. Girdlestone (2 Y. & C.)                    | 711                                              |
| (Overruled by Rowland v. Morgan; 13 Jur. 23; 2 Phillips, 764.) |                                               | Grenville v. Blyth (16 Ves.)                      | 877                                              |
| ——— v. Mainwaring (2 Ves.)                                     | 76, 77, 79, 86                                | Gresley v. Adderley (1 Swanst.)                   | 647                                              |
| ——— v. Mead (Pre. Ch.)                                         | 431, 818                                      | Greswold v. Marsham (2 Ch. Ca.)                   | 657, 746, 751                                    |
| Grafftey v. Humpage (1 Beav.)                                  | 536, 537                                      | Gretton v. Haward (1 Swanst.; 1 Mer.)             | 586, 587, 588, 589, 598, 601, 602, 603, 604, 612 |
| Graham v. Londonderry (3 Atk.)                                 | 502, 503                                      | Grey v. Grey (Finch Rep.; 2 Freem.; 2 Swanst.)    | 215, 216                                         |
| Grane v. Mitchell (10 Sim.)                                    | 687                                           | ——— v. Kentish (1 Atk.)                           | 866                                              |
| Grant v. Grant (3 Russ.)                                       | 15                                            | Grieverson v. Kirsop (2 Keen)                     | 84                                               |
| ——— v. ——— (3 Sim.)                                            | 741                                           | Griffin, ex parte (2 G. & J.)                     | 933                                              |
| ——— v. Lynam (4 Russ.)                                         | 74, 75, 76                                    | ——— v. Griffin (1 Scho. & Lef.)                   | 299, 300                                         |
| Grantley v. Garthwaite (6 Mad.)                                | 547, 549                                      | Griffith v. Evan (5 Beav.)                        | 82                                               |
| Grattan v. Howard (6 Taunt.)                                   | 150                                           | ——— v. Pruen (11 Sim.)                            | 235                                              |
| Gravenor v. Hallum (Amb.)                                      | 23, 224                                       | Griffiths v. Blunt (4 Beav.)                      | 181                                              |
| Graves v. Boyle (1 Atk.)                                       | 419, 428, 455, 589                            | ——— v. Vere (9 Ves.)                              | 25, 168, 176, 177, 182                           |
| ——— v. Dolphin (1 Sim.)                                        | 89                                            | Grigby v. Cox (1 Ves.)                            | 5, 504, 505, 515                                 |
| ——— v. Graves (cited 1 Sim. & St.)                             | 574                                           | Griggs v. Staplee (13 Jur.)                       | 505                                              |
| ——— v. ——— (8 Sim.)                                            | 320, 321, 322, 323                            | Grove v. Salisbury, Earl of (1 Bro.)              | 434                                              |
| ——— v. Hicks (6 Sim.)                                          | 335, 393                                      | Groves v. Clarke (1 Keen)                         | 489, 490                                         |
| Gray v. Limerick, Earl of (12 Jur.)                            | 412, (423)                                    | ——— v. Groves (3 Y. & J.)                         | 202, 204                                         |
| ——— v. Minnethorpe (3 Ves.)                                    | 337, 343                                      | ——— v. Perkins (6 Sim.)                           | 490                                              |
| Grayson v. Deakin (13 Jur.)                                    | 596, 597                                      | Grubb, ex parte (2 Moo. & P.)                     | 815                                              |
| Greatley v. Noble (3 Mad.)                                     | 515, 516, 517, 519                            | Grugeon v. Gerrard (4 Y. & C.)                    | 649, 675                                         |
| Greatorex v. Carey (6 Ves.)                                    | 596                                           | Gubbins v. Creed (2 Scho. & Lef.)                 | 628, 629, 632, 807                               |
| Greaves v. Mattison (T. Jones)                                 | 403                                           | Guidot v. Guidot (3 Atk.)                         | 254, 256                                         |
| Green, ex parte (1 Jac. & W.)                                  | 461                                           | Guise v. Small (1 Anst.)                          | 514                                              |
| ——— v. Belcher (1 Atk.)                                        | 407, 409                                      | Gulliers v. Moss (9 B. & C.)                      | 655                                              |
| ——— v. Briggs (6 Hare)                                         | 797, 798                                      | Gulliver v. Ashby (4 Burr.)                       | 105                                              |
| Greene v. Cramer (2 Con. & L.)                                 | 889                                           | Gurney v. Seppings (1 C. P. Coop.)                | 656                                              |
| ——— v. Ekins (2 Atk.)                                          | 139, 172                                      | Gutteridge v. Stilwell (1 My. & K.)               | 308                                              |
| ——— v. Folhgam (1 Sim. & St.)                                  | 6                                             | Guy v. Pearkes (18 Ves.)                          | 491                                              |
| ——— v. Green (9 Ves.; 2 Mer.)                                  | 587, 588, 601, 602, (604)                     | ——— v. Sharp (1 Myl. & K.)                        | 447                                              |
| ——— v. ——— (5 Hare, cited)                                     | 532                                           | Gwynne v. Edwards (9 Beav.)                       | 305                                              |
| ——— v. Harvey (1 Hare)                                         | 89, 243                                       | ——— v. ——— (2 Russ.)                              | 834                                              |
| ——— v. Howard (1 Bro.)                                         | 75, 76, 77                                    | Gyles v. Hall (2 P. Wms.)                         | 652, 653                                         |
| ——— v. Jackson (5 Russ.; 5 R. & M.)                            | 240, 941                                      | Habergham v. Vincent (2 Ves. jun.)                | 17, 239                                          |
| ——— v. King (2 Bl.)                                            | 218                                           | Hadow v. Hadow (9 Sim.)                           | 464                                              |
| ——— v. Lowes (3 Bro.)                                          | 388                                           | Haig v. Homan (4 Bli. N. S.)                      | 614                                              |
| ——— v. Otte (1 Sim. & St.)                                     | 491                                           | ——— v. Swiney (1 Sim. & St.)                      | 316, 579                                         |
| ——— v. Pertwee (5 Hare)                                        | 241                                           | Haigh, ex parte (11 Ves.)                         | 781                                              |
| ——— v. Spicer (1 R. & M.)                                      | 89                                            | Hailey, re (3 D. & C.)                            | 636                                              |
| ——— v. Stephens (17 Ves.)                                      | 134, 264                                      | Haldenby v. Spofforth (1 Beav.)                   | 369, 422                                         |
| ——— v. Greene (4 Mad.)                                         | 337, 341                                      | Hale v. Lamb (2 Eden)                             | 285                                              |
| ——— v. Ward (1 Russ.)                                          | 154                                           | Hales v. Bircham                                  | 792                                              |
| Greenfel v. Girdlestone (2 Y. & C.)                            | 60                                            | ——— v. Darrell (3 Beav.)                          | 438, 606, 607                                    |
| Greenwell v. Greenwell (5 Ves.)                                | 187, 189                                      | Haley v. Bannister (4 Mad.)                       | (107), 182, 188, (189)                           |
| Greenwood v. Evans (4 Beav.)                                   | 545, 547, 549, 550                            | ——— v. Halley (Mel. M. S. Rep.)                   | 214                                              |
| ——— v. Lidbetter (12 Pri.)                                     | 350, 358, 560                                 | Halkett, ex parte (3 V. & B.)                     | 797                                              |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxiii

|                                                                                                                                             | PAGE                         |                                                                       | PAGE              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------|
| Hall v. Brooker ( Gilb. Eq. R. ) . . .                                                                                               | 818                          | Hardman v. Johnson (3 Russ. &amp; M. ; 3 Mer. ) . . .   | 229, 303          |
| — v. Carter (2 Atk. ) . . .                                                                                                          | 403, 409                     | Hardwich v. Mynd (1 Anst. ) . . .                              | 38                |
| — v. Cox (3 Bro. ) . . .                                                                                                             | 342                          | Hardwicke v. Vernon (14 Ves. ) . . .                           | 921, 942          |
| — v. Dewes ( Jac. ) . . .                                                                                                            | 38, 947                      | Hardy, ex parte ( D. &amp; Ch. ) . . .                  | 789               |
| — v. Franck (13 Jur. ) . . .                                                                                                         | 940                          | — v. Reeves (4 & 5 Ves. ) . . .                                | 195, 649, 653     |
| — v. Hall (2 Vern. ) . . .                                                                                                           | 906                          |                                                                       | 711, 808          |
| — v. Hallett (1 Cox ) . . .                                                                                                          | 922, 939, 940                | Harford v. Carpenter . . .                                            | (792)             |
| — v. Hill ( Supra , vol. I. (575) 1 Con. & L. ; 1 Dr. &amp; War. ) 29, 214, 244, 246, 445, (452), 596, 605, 607 |                              | Hargrave v. Tindal (1 Bro. ) . . .                             | 316               |
| — v. Hewer ( Amb. ) . . .                                                                                                            | 412, 416                     | Hargreaves v. Rothwell (1 Keen ) . . .                         | 760, 761          |
| — v. Hugonin (14 Sim. ) . . .                                                                                                        | (487)                        | Hargthorpe v. Milforth (1 Cro. Eliz. ) . . .                   | 927               |
| — v. Luckup (4 Sim. ) . . .                                                                                                          | 412                          | Harland v. Trigge (1 Bro. ; 3 Beav. ) . . .             | 65, 67, 70, 75    |
| — v. Smith (14 Ves. ) . . .                                                                                                          | 757, 758                     | Harnawl v. Webster . . .                                              | 924               |
| Hallifax v. Higgins (2 Vern. ) . . .                                                                                                 | 632                          | Harwood v. Oglander (6 & 8 Ves. ) . . .                        | 18, 270, 324, 823 |
| Halliley v. Kertland (2 Ch. Rep. ) . . .                                                                                             | 723, 725                     | Harnett v. Macdougall (8 Beav. ) . . .                         | 523               |
| Halliwell v. Tanner (1 R. &amp; M. ) . . .                                                                                           | 838                          | Harper v. Fauldor (4 Mad. ) . . .                              | 789               |
| Hamerton v. Rogers (1 Ves. jun. ) . . .                                                                                              | 723, 725, 735                | — v. Ravenhill ( Taml. ) . . .                                 | 491               |
| Hames v. Hames (2 Keen ) . . .                                                                                                       | 536, 539                     | Harrington v. Long (2 Myl. &amp; K. ) . . .                    | 870, 871          |
| Hamil v. Stokes (4 Pri. ) . . .                                                                                                      | 863                          | — v. Price (3 B. &amp; Ad. ) . . .                             | 788, 789          |
| Hamilton v. Denny (1 Ball. &amp; B. ) . . .                                                                                          | 803, 808                     | Harris, ex parte (1 Mad. ) . . .                        | 212               |
| — v. Dutch East India Company (8 Bro. P. C. ) . . .                                                                                  | 10                           | — v. Davis (1 Col. ) . . .                                     | 150, (162)        |
| — v. Fry (2 Moll. ) . . .                                                                                                            | 920                          | — v. Davison (15 Sim. ) . . .                                  | 41                |
| — v. Houghton (1 & 2 Bli. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 314                          | — v. Harris (3 Atk. ) . . .                                    | 653               |
| — v. Royse (2 Scho. &amp; Lef. ) . . .                                                                                               | 836                          | — v. Lloyd ( Turn. &amp; R. ) . . .                            | 170               |
| — v. Worley (2 Ves. jun. ; 4 Bro. ) . . .                                                                                     | 336                          | Harrison, ex parte (2 Rose ) . . .                      | 797               |
| Hamley v. Gilbert (1 Jac. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 466                          | — v. Andrews (13 Sim. ) . . .                                  | 480               |
| Hamly v. Fisher (1 Dick. ; Amb. ) . . .                                                                                       | 829                          | — v. Barwell (10 Sim. ) . . .                                  | 717               |
| Hamlyn v. Lee (1 Dick. ) . . .                                                                                                       | 689                          | — v. Cage (2 Vern. ) . . .                                     | 344               |
| Hammond v. Maule (1 Col. ) . . .                                                                                                     | 100                          | — v. Davison (15 Sim. ) . . .                                  | 643               |
| — v. Messenger (9 Sim. ) . . .                                                                                                       | 854                          | — v. Duegnan (2 Dr. &amp; War. ) . . .                         | 198, 716          |
| — v. Hearne (1 Swanst. ) . . .                                                                                                       | 465, 466                     | — v. Forth ( Pre. Ch. ; 1 Eq. Abr. ) . . .              | 764               |
| Hammonds v. Barclay (2 East ) . . .                                                                                                  | 773, 796                     | — v. Gurney (2 Jac. &amp; W. ) . . .                           | 8                 |
| Hampshire v. Bradley (2 Col. ) . . .                                                                                                 | 47                           | — v. Harrison (2 Atk. ) . . .                                  | 932               |
| Hampton v. Hodges (8 Ves. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 649                          | — v. Hart ( Com. ) . . .                                       | 637, 769          |
| — v. Spencer (2 Vern. ) . . .                                                                                                        | 21, 624                      | — v. Naylor (2 Cox ) . . .                                     | 132               |
| Hanbury v. Hanbury (2 Bro. ) . . .                                                                                                   | 433, 438                     | — v. Owen ( West R. ) . . .                                    | 749               |
| — v. Kirkland (3 Sim. ) . . .                                                                                                        | 933, 934                     | — v. Wiltshire (9 Sim. ) . . .                                 | 806               |
| — v. Litchfield (2 Myl. &amp; K. ) . . .                                                                                             | 756, 759                     | Harrop v. Howard (3 Hare ; 9 Jur. ) . . .               | 522, 524          |
| Hancock v. Hancock (2 Vern. ) . . .                                                                                                  | 600                          | Hart v. Middlehurst (3 Atk. ) . . .                            | 137, 139          |
| Hancorn v. Allen (2 Dick. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 934                          | — v. Stephens (9 Jur. ) . . .                                  | 478               |
| Hancox v. Abbey (11 Ves. ) . . .                                                                                                     | 337, 342                     | Hartga v. England, Bank of (3 Ves. ) . . .                     | 309               |
| Handford v. Marshall . . .                                                                                                                  | 516                          | Hartley, ex parte (1 Deac. ) . . .                      | 651               |
| Hankey v. Vernon (2 Cox ) . . .                                                                                                      | 777                          | — v. Hurle . . .                                                      | 508, 510          |
| Hanby v. Fisher (2 Col. ) . . .                                                                                                      | 827                          | — v. Russell (2 Sim. &amp; St. ) . . .                         | 869, 871          |
| — v. Roberts ( Amb. ; 1 Dick. ) . . .                                                                                         | 831, 832                     | Hartly v. O'Flaherty (1 Beav. ; Llo. &amp; Goo. ) . . . | 803, 836, 837     |
| Hanning v. Ferrers (1 Eq. Abr. ) . . .                                                                                               | 576                          | Harton v. Harton (7 T. R. ) . . .                              | 295               |
| Hansard v. Hardy (18 Ves. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 671, 711                     | Hartop v. Whitmore (1 P. W. ) . . .                            | 432               |
| Hansen v. Miller (14 Sim. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 478, 495                     | Hartopp v. Hartopp (17 Ves. ) . . .                            | 439, (449)        |
| Hansond v. Derdy (2 Vern. ) . . .                                                                                                    | 808                          | Hartpole v. Walsh (5 Bro. P. C. ) . . .                        | 617               |
| Hanson v. Graham (6 Ves. ) . . .                                                                                                     | 94, 95, 395                  | Harvey, ex parte (1 Mont. &amp; C. ) . . .              | 783, 786          |
| — v. Keating (4 Hare ) . . .                                                                                                         | 475, 777, 485, 669, 723, 736 | — v. Ashley (3 Atk. ) . . .                                    | 600               |
| Harbidge v. Wogan (5 Hare ) . . .                                                                                                    | 493                          | — v. Cooke (4 Russ. ) . . .                                    | 172               |
| Harcourt v. Knowel (cited 2 Vern. ) . . .                                                                                            | 741                          | — v. Harvey (1 P. W. ; 1 Vern. ) . . .                  | 507               |
| Harden v. Parsons (1 Eden ) . . .                                                                                                    | 926, (927 n.), 929           | — v. — (2 P. W. ) . . .                                        | 461, 462          |
| Harding v. Glynn (3 Atk. ; 8 Ves. ) . . .                                                                                     | 72, 79, 82, 83               | — v. — (5 Beav. ) . . .                                        | 546, 555, 556     |
| — v. Grady (1 Dr. &amp; War. ) . . .                                                                                                 | 321                          | — v. M'Laughlin (1 Pri. ) . . .                                | 249               |
| Hardingham v. Nicholls (3 Atk. ) . . .                                                                                               | 753                          | — v. Tebbutt (1 Jac. &amp; W. ) . . .                          | 812, 814          |
| Hardman v. Ellames (2 Myl. &amp; K. ) . . .                                                                                          | 671                          | Harwood v. Took ( Mad. P. &amp; P. ) . . .                     | 865, 866          |
|                                                                                                                                             |                              | Haslewood v. Pope (3 P. W. ) . . .                             | 341, 820, 839     |

|                                                                             | PAGE                         |                                                                          | PAGE                                                     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------|
| Haslington v. Gill (3 Doug. )                                        | 530                          | Herbert v. Reid (16 Ves. )                                        | 446                                                      |
| Hassall v. Smithers (12 Ves. )                                       | 862                          | Hereford v. Ravenhill (1 Beav. )                                  | 236, 257, 258                                            |
| Hassell v. Hassell ( Dick. )                                         | 329                          | Hercy v. Dinwoody (4 Bro. )                                       | 60                                                       |
| Haughton v. Harrison (2 Atk. )                                       | 171                          | Heriz v. Riera (11 Sim. )                                         | 13                                                       |
| Hawes v. Warner (2 Vern. )                                           | 820, 821                     | Herne v. Meyrick (1 P. Wms. )                                     | 831                                                      |
| Hawkins, ex parte (13 Sim. )                                  | 265                          | Heron v. Heron ( Pre. Ch. )                                       | 301                                                      |
| —— v. Chappel (1 Atk. )                                              | 41                           | —— v. Stokes (2 Dr. &amp; War. ; 1 Con.& Law. ) | 149, 420, 469, 579                                       |
| —— v. Day ( Amb. )                                                   | 578, 927                     | Hervey v. Audland (14 Sim. )                                      | 906                                                      |
| —— v. Hamerton (13 Jur. )                                            | 473                          | —— v. Hervey (1 Atk. )                                            | 493                                                      |
| —— v. Kemp (3 East )                                                 | 38                           | Heveningham v. Heveningham (2 Vern. )                             | 838                                                      |
| —— v. Leigh (1 Atk. )                                                | 285                          | Hewitt v. Foster (6 Beav. )                                       | 933                                                      |
| —— v. Luscombe (2 Swanst. )                                          | 295                          | —— v. Hewitt (2 Eden )                                            | 85                                                       |
| —— v. Rambottom (1 Pri. )                                            | 635                          | —— v. Morris ( Turn. &amp; R. )                                   | 185                                                      |
| —— v. Taylor (2 Vern. )                                              | 737                          | —— v. Snare (1 De G. &amp; S. )                                   | 343                                                      |
| —— v. Watts (7 Sim. )                                                | 467                          | —— v. Wright (1 Bro. )                                            | 230                                                      |
| Haworth v. Bostock (4 Y. &amp; C. )                                  | 60, 257, 530                 | Heygate v. Annesley (3 Bro. )                                     | 477                                                      |
| Hay, ex parte (15 Ves. )                                      | 784                          | Heywood, ex parte (2 Rose )                                | 862, 863                                                 |
| —— v. Palmer (2 P. Wms. )                                            | 462                          | —— v. Grazebrook (1849)                                                  | 925                                                      |
| Hays v. Bailey (3 Sug. V. &amp; P. ; 10 Ed. )                 | 409                          | Hibbert v. Cooke (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                              | 574                                                      |
| Hayes v. Hayes (1 Ch. Ca. )                                          | 714                          | —— v. Hibbert (3 Mer. )                                           | 71                                                       |
| —— v. — (4 Russ. )                                                   | 105                          | Hichinbrooke v. Seymour (1 Bro. )                                 | 398                                                      |
| Hayford v. Benlow ( Amb. ; 2 Vern. )                          | 236                          | Hichins v. Congreve (1 R. &amp; M. )                              | 299                                                      |
| Haymer v. Haymer (2 Vent. )                                          | 661, 729                     | Hicks v. Morland (1835)                                                  | (815)                                                    |
| Haynes v. Mico (1 Bro. )                                             | 436, 438, 441, 606           | Hickes v. Cooke (4 Dow. )                                         | 632, 633                                                 |
| Head v. Egerton (3 P. Wms. )                                         | 768, 789                     | Hickson v. Aylward (3 Moll. )                                     | 942                                                      |
| —— v. Head (3 Atk. )                                                 | 491, 528, 530, 532           | Hiern v. Mill (13 Ves. )                                          | 730, 756, 757, 759,760, 781, 783, 786, 789, 790, 793 |
| Headley v. Readhead ( G. Coop. )                                     | 839                          | Higden v. Williams (3 P. Wms. )                                   | 866                                                      |
| Heamer v. Bance, (3 Atk. )                                           | 724, 725                     | Higgins v. Dowler (1 P. Wms. ; 2 Vern. )                   | 162                                                      |
| Hearle v. Greenbank (1 Ves. )                                        | 511                          | —— v. Franks (10 Jur. )                                           | 692                                                      |
| —— v. Greenland (3 Atk. )                                            | 29                           | —— v. Shaw (2 Dr. &amp; War. )                                    | 388                                                      |
| Heath v. Chadwick (2 Phill. )                                        | 664                          | —— v. York Buildings' Company (2Atk. )                        | 647                                                      |
| —— v. Hall (4 Taunt. ; 2 Rose )                               | 856                          | Higginson v. Barneby (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                          | 392                                                      |
| —— v. Perry (3 Atk. )                                                | 185, 461                     | —— v. Kelly (1 Rose )                                             | 503                                                      |
| Heathcote v. Hulme (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                                | 208                          | Higgon v. Calamy (1 Ch. Ca. )                                     | 741                                                      |
| —— v. Paignon (2 Bro. )                                              | 622, 623, 624                | Higham, ex parte (2 Ves. )                                 | 487                                                      |
| Heathe v. Heathe (2 Atk. )                                           | 143, 418                     | Highway v. Banner (1 Bro. )                                       | 139                                                      |
| Heatley v. Thomas (15 Ves. )                                         | 324, 496, 513,515, 540   | Hill, ex parte (1 Mad. )                                   | 797                                                      |
| Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright ( Forrest. )                             | 403,404                  | —— v. Adams, (2 Atk. )                                            | 734                                                      |
| Hedges v. Harpur (10 Jur. ; 9 Beav. )                         | 146, 150,472             | —— v. Caillovel (1 Ves. )                                         | 864                                                      |
| Heighington v. Grant (1 Phill. ; 5 Myl. &amp;Cr. ) | 191, 809, 922, 939, 942, 952 | —— v. Cock (1 V. &amp; B. )                                       | 234, 235, 238                                            |
| Henchman v. Att.-Gen. (3 Myl. &amp; K. )                             | 224,237, 266             | —— v. Gomme (1 Beav. ; 5 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                  | 276,280, 281, 883                                    |
| Henderson v. Eason, (10 Jur. )                                       | 296                          | —— v. Hill (6 Sim. )                                              | 142, 392                                                 |
| —— v. Henderson (3 Hare )                                            | 9, 10, 15                    | —— v. — (3 V. &amp; B. )                                          | 185, 461                                                 |
| —— v. Kennicot (12 Jur. )                                            | 400, 406                     | —— v. London, Bishop of (1 Atk. )                                 | 72, 223,226, 227, 228                                |
| Heneage v. Andover, Lord (3 Y &amp; J. )                             | 317, 547                     | —— v. Maurice (1 De G. &amp; S. )                                 | 680                                                      |
| —— v. Hunloke (2 Atk. )                                              | 411, 412                     | —— v. Paul (8 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                    | 614                                                      |
| Henley v. Philips (2 Atk. )                                          | 494                          | —— v. Price (1 Dick. )                                            | 679                                                      |
| —— v. Stone (3 Beav. )                                               | 666, 701                     | —— v. Simpson (7 Ves. )                                           | 298, 374, 376, 378,379                               |
| Hennessey, ex parte (1 Con. &amp; Law. )                      | 857, 859                     | —— v. Spencer ( Amb. )                                            | 888                                                      |
| Henniker v. Henniker (12 Jur. )                                      | 241                          | —— v. Turner (1 Atk. )                                            | 19, 199                                                  |
| Henning v. Ferrers ( Gilb. E. R. )                                   | 765                          | Hillary v. Waller (12 Ves. )                                      | 61                                                       |
| Henry v. Goldney (10 Jur. )                                          | 23                           | Hilliard, ex parte (1 Ves. jun. )                          | 922                                                      |
| —— v. Smith (1 Con. &amp; Law. ; 2 Dr.& War. )     | 704, 714, 715, 719           | Hills v. Downton (5 Ves. )                                        | 285                                                      |
| Henvell v. Whitaker (3 Russ. )                                       | 321, 322, 323, 341           | Hilton v. Giraud (11 Jur. )                                       | 20                                                       |
| Hepburn v. Brown (2 Dowl. P. C. )                                    | 889                          | Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe (3 Ves. )                              | 428, 429,431, 434, 438, 455, 595, 607                |
| Hepworth v. Heslop (3 Hare )                                         | 678                          | Hincks v. Nelthorpe (1 Vern. )                                    | 491                                                      |
| Herbert v. Herbert ( Pre. Ch. )                                      | 503                          |                                                                          |                                                          |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxv

|                                                                         | PAGE                      |                                                                                      | PAGE                                  |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|
| Hinde v. Blake (3 Beav. )                                        | 912                       | Holloway v. Holloway (5 Ves. )                                                | 131, 539                              |
| Hinder v. Rose (3 P. Wms. )                                      | 434                       | —— v. Lightburn (2 Mad. )                                                     | 477                                   |
| Hindley v. Westmeath, Marquis of (6 B. &amp; C. )                | 527, 528, 529, 541        | Holmes v. Bell (2 Beav. )                                                     | 689                                   |
| Hine v. Dodd (2 Atk. )                                           | 756, 759, 763             | —— v. Dring (2 Cox )                                                          | 299, 934                              |
| Hinne v. Edwards (3 Atk. )                                       | 267                       | Holt v. Dewell (4 Hare )                                                      | 859                                   |
| Hinves v. Hinves (3 Hare )                                       | 554, 556, 557             | —— v. Holt (1 Ch. Ca. )                                                       | 300, 304                              |
| Hinxman v. Poynder (5 Sim. )                                     | 65                        | —— v. Mill (2 Vern. )                                                         | 737                                   |
| Hippesley v. Spencer (5 Madd. )                                  | 648                       | Holtham v. Ryland ( Nels. )                                                   | 254                                   |
| Hitchcock v. Sedgwick (2 Vern. )                                 | 741, 742                  | Honner v. Morton                                                                     | 476                                   |
| Hitchins v. Hitchins (2 Free. ; Pre. Ch. ; Vern. ) | 594                       | Honor v. Honor (1 P. Wms. ; 2 Vern. )                                  | 136, 139, 141, 412                    |
| Hix v. Att.-Gen. ( Hard. )                                       | 220                       | Hood v. Phillips (3 Bro. )                                                    | 747, 748                              |
| —— v. Ling (2 Pow. on Mort. )                                    | 652                       | Hook v. Kinnear (3 Swanst. )                                                  | 287                                   |
| Hoare v. Hoare (2 Ridgw. Parl. C. )                              | 529                       | Hooley v. Hatton (1 Bro. )                                                    | 445                                   |
| Hobart v. Abbot (2 P. Wms. )                                     | 701                       | Hooper, ex parte (1 Mer. ; 19 Ves. )                            | 722, 723, 778, 781, 782, 784          |
| —— v. Selby (1 Stra. ; 2 Free. )                          | 629                       | —— v. Goodwin (18 Ves. ; 1 Swanst. )                                   | 239, 921                              |
| —— v. Suffolk, Countess of (2 Vern. )                            | 225, 228                  | Hope v. Clifden (6 Ves. )                                                     | 395, 400                              |
| Hobbs v. Hall (1 Cox )                                           | 526, 528                  | —— v. Harman (11 Jur. )                                                       | 350                                   |
| —— v. Norton (1 Vern. )                                          | 765                       | Hopkins v. Hopkins ( Forrest. ; 1 Atk. ; 1 Ves. )               | 173, 948                              |
| Hobson v. Bell (2 Beav. )                                        | 765, 770                  | —— v. Myall (2 R. &amp; M. )                                                  | 927                                   |
| —— v. Blackburn (1 Keen )                                        | 233                       | Hopkinson v. Ellis (2 Re. Pr. Con. Ca. ; 10 Beav. )                    | 234, 250, 323                         |
| —— v. Ferraby (2 Col. )                                          | 499                       | Hore v. Bechor (12 Sim. )                                                     | (480, n.)                             |
| —— v. Millard (2 Moo. &amp; R. )                                 | 859                       | —— v. Woulfe (2 Ball &amp; B. )                                               | 478                                   |
| —— v. Trevor (2 P. Wms. )                                        | 614, 853, 865, 866        | Horlock v. Smith (1 Col. )                                                    | 809, 810, 812, 813                    |
| Hockley v. Bantock (1 Russ. )                                    | 781, (783), 793, 924, 932 | Horn v. Horn (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                              | 389                                   |
| —— v. Mawbey (1 Ves. jun. )                                      | 150                       | Hornby v. Matcham (12 Jur. )                                                  | 691                                   |
| Hodge v. Att.-Gen. (3 Y. &amp; C. )                              | 663                       | Horne v. Pringle (8 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                          | 918, 920                              |
| Hodgens v. Hodgens (11 Bli. N. S. ; 4 Cl. &amp; Fin. )    | 488, 489, 500, 528        | Hornsby v. Lee (2 Mad. )                                                      | 476                                   |
| Hodges v. Waddington (2 Vent. )                                  | 297                       | Horrocks v. Ladsam (2 Col. )                                                  | 691                                   |
| Hodgeson v. Bussey (2 Atk. )                                     | 135, 145, 146, 149, 151   | Horseman v. Abbey (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                                          | 537                                   |
| Hodgson, ex parte (1 G. &amp; J. )                        | 636                       | Horsley v. Chaloner (2 Ves. )                                                 | 418                                   |
| —— v. Dean (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                   | 754, 763                  | Horwood v. West (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                                           | 69                                    |
| —— v. Espinasse (10 Beav. )                                      | 671, 708                  | Hoskins v. Hoskins ( Pre. Ch. )                                               | 434                                   |
| —— v. Green                                                             | 464                       | Hotchkin v. Humfrey (2 Mad. )                                                 | 401                                   |
| —— v. Parker (cited 2 Bro. )                                     | 676                       | Houghton, ex parte (17 Ves. ; 1 Rose )                          | 220                                   |
| —— v. Shaw (3 Moo. &amp; R. )                                    | 352, 748, 843             | —— v. Houghton (11 Sim. )                                                     | 211                                   |
| Hodle v. Healey (6 Madd. ; 1 Ves. &amp; Bea. )            | 710, 711                  | Houlditch v. Donegal, Lord (8 Bli. N. S. )                                    | 7, 15                                 |
| Hodsdon v. Ball (14 Sim. ; 1 Phill. )                     | 149, 952                  | Houston v. Hughes (5 Russ. )                                                  | 145                                   |
| —— v. Meresh (9 Pri. )                                           | 595                       | Hovenden v. Annesley (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                     | 60, 61, 62, 198                       |
| Hokins v. Myall (2 Russ. &amp; M. )                              | 512                       | Hovey v. Blakeman (4 Ves. )                                                   | 510, 522, 918, 931, 932               |
| Holderness v. Shackells (8 Bro. )                                | 797                       | How v. Vigiures (1 Ch. Rep. )                                                 | 677                                   |
| Holdich v. Holdich (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                        | 595, 596, 597             | Howard v. Digby (2 Cl. &amp; Fin. ; 8 Bli. N. S. ; 4 & 5 Sim. ) | (501)                                 |
| Holditch v. Mist (1 P. Wms. )                                    | 845                       | Howard v. Harris (1 Vern. ; 2 Ch. Ca. )                                | 618, 623, 632, 661, 710               |
| Holford v. Palmer (4 Russ. )                                     | 106                       | Howard v. Hopkins (2 Atk. )                                                   | 255                                   |
| —— v. Phipps (3 & 4 Beav. )                                      | 47, 939                   | Howden v. Rogers (1 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                                         | 14                                    |
| —— v. Wood (4 Ves. )                                             | 343                       | Howe v. Dartmouth, Lord (7 Ves. )                                             | 42, 552, 554, 557, 563, 568, 926, 934 |
| Holl v. Harrison (1 Ch. Ca. ; Finch )                     | 844                       | Howe v. Howe (1 Vern. )                                                       | 202                                   |
| Holland v. Baker (3 Hare )                                       | 699                       | Howard v. Prince (10 Beav. )                                                  | 534, 766                              |
| —— v. Hughes (16 Ves. ; 3 Mer. )                          | 44, 568, 934              | Howden v. Haigh (3 Per. &amp; Dav. )                                          | 357                                   |
| —— v. Humble (1 Stark. N. P. )                                   | 863                       | Howell v. Howell (2 Ves. )                                                    | 140                                   |
| Holloway v. Clarkson (2 Hare )                                   | 536, 537                  | —— v. Price ( Pre. Ch. ; 1 P. Wms. )                                   | 334, 394, 617, 818, 819, 822          |
| —— v. Headington (8 Sim. )                                       | 285, 882, (914), 915      | Howes v. Wadham ( Ridgw. ; Ca. Hardw. )                                | 698                                   |
|                                                                         |                           | Howgrave v. Cartier (3 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                                      | 399, 402                              |

|                                                                   | PAGE                       |                                                          | PAGE                      |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------|
| Howman v. Corie (2 Vern. )                                 | 479                        | Ibbotson v. Rhodes (2 Vern. )                     | 765, 766                  |
| Howorth v. Deem (1 Eden )                                  | 757                        | Ilchester, Earl of, ex parte                      | 589                       |
| Howse v. Chapman (4 Ves. )                                 | 235                        | ——, Earl of, v. Carnarvon, Lord (1                       |                           |
| Hoy v. Master (6 Sim. )                                    | 67                         | Beav. )                                           | 335, 336, (825), 826      |
| Hubard v. Young (10 Beav. )                                | 557                        | Inchiquin v. French (1 Cox )                      | 235; ( Amb. ) 336, |
| Hubert v. Parsons (2 Ves. )                                | 395, 398                   |                                                          | 337, 341                  |
| Hudson's case (2 Vern. )                                   | 882                        | Incledon v. Northcote (3 Atk. )                   | 185, 475                  |
| Hughes, ex parte (6 Ves. )                          | 304                        | Inge v. Kenny (4 Hare )                           | 954                       |
| —— v. Doulbis (2 Cox ; 2 Bro. )                     | 316, 317                   | Ingram v. Pelham ( Amb. )                         | 751                       |
| —— v. Evans (13 Sim. )                                     | 23                         | Innes v. Jackson (16 Ves. )                       | 306, 307, 515, 665,       |
| —— v. Hughes (1 Bro. )                                     | 462                        |                                                          | 841                       |
| —— v. Kelly (3 Dr. &amp; War. )                            | 198                        | —— v. Mitchell (6 & 9 Ves. )                      | 27, 583, 584              |
| —— v. Stubbs (1 Hare )                                     | 59, 884                    | Ireson v. Denn (2 Cox )                           | 666, 726                  |
| —— v. Williams (12 Ves. )                                  | 650, 806                   | Irnham v. Child (1 Bro. )                         | 620, 625                  |
| —— v. Wynne (1 Myl. &amp; K. ; Turn. &amp;          |                            | Irons v. Smallpiece (2 B. &amp; Al. )             | 915                       |
| R. )                                                       | 356, 357, 741              | Irving v. Richardson (2 B. &amp; Ad. )            | 775                       |
| Hulkes v. Barrow ( Tam. )                                  | 544                        | Irwin v. Farrer (19 Ves. )                        | 495, 496                  |
| Hulme v. Chitty (9 Beav. )                                 | 541                        | Ithell v. Beane (1 Ves. )                         | 283, 291, 381, 384        |
| —— v. Hulme (9 Sim. ; 5 Myl. &amp; K. )             | 249, 947                   | Ivy v. Gilbert ( Pre. Ch. ; 2 P. Wms. )    | 407, 408,                 |
| —— v. Tenant (1 Bro. ; 2 Dick. )                    | 5, 324,                    |                                                          | 422                       |
| 504, 505, 507, 513, 515, 518, 540                                 |                            | Izard v. Hurst (2 Freem. )                        | 441                       |
| Humberstone v. Chase (2 Y. &amp; C. )                      | 309                        | Izod v. Lamb (1 Cromp. &amp; J. )                 | 507                       |
| —— v. Humberstone (2 Vern. )                               | 140,                       |                                                          |                           |
|                                                                   | 141                        | Jack v. Burnett (12 Cl. &amp; Fin. )              | 247, 248                  |
| Humble v. Bill (2 Vern. )                                  | 374                        | Jackman v. Mitchell (13 Ves. )                    | 357, 359                  |
| Hume v. Rundell (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                        | 26, 393                    | Jackson, ex parte (1 Ves. jun. )           | 278                       |
| Humphrey v. Morse (2 Atk. )                                | 939                        | —— v. Cator (5 Ves. )                             | 765                       |
| Humphreys v. Harrison (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                   | 649                        | —— v. Davison (4 B. Ald. )                        | 359                       |
| Humsden v. Chegney (2 Vern. )                              | 765                        | —— v. Duchaire (3 T. R. )                         | 358                       |
| Hunt, ex parte (4 Jur. )                            | 785                        | —— v. Farrand (2 Vern. )                          | 397                       |
| —— v. Flownes (9 Ves. )                                    | 813, 815                   | —— v. Hobhouse (2 Mer. )                          | 512, 517, 520,            |
| —— v. Hunt ( M. S. ; 1 Fonb. )                      | 486                        |                                                          | 521                       |
| —— v. Pitt ( Freem. )                                      | 479                        | —— v. Hurlock ( Amb. ; 2 Eden )            | 23, 226                   |
| —— v. Priest (2 Dick. )                                    | 647, 689                   | —— v. Innes (1 Bli. )                             | 306, 644, (665),          |
| Hunter v. Daniel (4 Hare )                                 | 870, 871, 872              |                                                          | 841, 842                  |
| —— v. Judd (4 Sim. )                                       | 94, 98, 100                | —— v. Jackson (1 Atk. )                           | 934                       |
| —— v. Macklew (5 Hare )                                    | 703                        | —— v. ——— (9 Ves. )                               | 143, 206, 207,            |
| Huntington v. Greenville (1 Vern. )                        | 741                        |                                                          | 209                       |
| —— v. Huntington (2 Vern. ;                                |                            | —— v. Langford (2 Ves. )                          | 725                       |
| 2 Bro. P. C. )                                             | 306, 515, 841              | —— v. Lomas (4 T. R. )                            | 358                       |
| Hurst v. Beach (5 Mad. ) i. (574); ii.                     | 444, 445,                  | —— v. Majoribanks (12 Sim. )                      | 95, 96, 104,              |
| 447, 451                                                          |                            |                                                          | 184                       |
| Huson v. Hewson (4 Ves. )                                  | 687                        | —— v. Parker ( Amb. )                             | 306, 307                  |
| Hussey v. Christie (13 Ves. )                              | 797                        | —— v. Petrie (10 Ves. )                           | 7                         |
| —— v. Hussey (5 Mad. )                                     | 570, 572                   | —— v. Rowe (2 Sim. &amp; St. ; 4 Russ. )   | 756,                      |
| Hutcheon v. Mannington (1 Ves. jun. )                      | 27, 565                    |                                                          | 757                       |
| Hutchins v. Lee (1 Atk. )                                  | 19                         | Jacob v. Shephard (cited 1 Burr. )                | 351                       |
| —— v. Smith (9 Sim. )                                      | 477                        | Jacobs v. Amyatt (4 Bro. )                        | (147), 148, 162           |
| Hutchinson v. Massareene, Lord (2 Ball                     |                            | —— v. ——— (1 Mad. )                               | 483                       |
| & B. )                                                     | 344, 600                   | James, ex parte (8 Ves. )                  | 301, 944                  |
| Hutton v. Hayley (1849)                                           | 789                        | —— v. Biou (3 Swanst. ; 2 Sim. &amp; St. ) | 649,                      |
| Hyde v. Dallaway (2 Hare )                                 | 714                        |                                                          | 651, 689, 699             |
| —— v. Hyde (3 Ch. Rep. )                                   | 833                        | —— v. Bydder (4 Beav. )                           | (897)                     |
| —— v. Johnson (3 Sco. )                                    | 713                        | —— v. Dean (11 & 15 Ves. )                        | 299, 304                  |
| —— v. Price (3 Ves. )                                      | 511, 512, 525, 527         | —— v. Frearson (1 Y. &amp; C. )                   | 918                       |
| —— v. Seymour (2 Free. )                                   | 25                         | —— v. Gammon (15 L. J. )                          | 42                        |
| Hynes v. Redington (1 J. &amp; Lat. )                      | 397, 406                   | —— v. Oades (2 Vern. )                            | 710                       |
| Hythe, Corp. of, ex parte (4 Y. &amp; C. ; see also |                            | Jarman v. Woolloton (3 T. R. )                    | 503                       |
| ex parte Corp. of Cambridge, 6 Hare , 30)           | 35                         | Jason v. Eyres ( Coote )                          | 632                       |
| Ibbetson v. Ibbetson (10, 12, & 13 Sim. ;                  |                            | Jeacock v. Falkener (1 Bro. )                     | 430, 431, 435,            |
| 4 & 5 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                     | 107, (110), 112, 113, 156, |                                                          | 606                       |
| 157, 160, 342, 953                                                |                            | Jee v. Audley (1 Cox )                            | 107, 119                  |
|                                                                   |                            | —— v. Thurlow (2 B. &amp; C. )                    | 528, 529, 532, 540        |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxvii

|                                                                | PAGE                                  |                                                                         | PAGE                                                              |
|----------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Jeffereys v. Small (1 Vern. )                           | 207, 469                              | Jones v. Lewes (2 Ves. )                                         | 937                                                               |
| Jeffery v. Honeywood (4 Mad. )                          | 151, 152, 420, 469                    | — v. Lewis (1 Cox )                                              | 47                                                                |
| Jefferys v. Jefferys (1 C. &amp; P. )                   | 58, 199, 285, 889, 890, 891, 906      | — v. Marsh ( Forrest. )                                          | 219, 528                                                          |
| — v. Reynous (6 Bro. P. C. )                            | 400                                   | — v. Matthie (11 Jur. )                                          | 634, 635                                                          |
| Jeffs v. Wood (2 P. Wms. )                              | 606                                   | — v. Meredith ( Bunb. )                                          | 661, 662                                                          |
| Jenkins, re (5 Russ. )                           | 477                                   | — v. Morgan (1 Bro. )                                            | 131, 134, 135, 150, 345, 748                                      |
| — v. Hiles (6 Ves. )                                    | 368, 369, 382                         | — v. — (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                          | 439                                                               |
| — v. Jenkins (cited 1 Atk. )                            | 455                                   | — v. Morley (12 Mod. )                                           | 20                                                                |
| — v. Keymis (1 Lev. ; 1 Ch. Ca. ; Hard. ) | 574, 949                              | — v. Powell (1 Eq. Abr. )                                        | 888                                                               |
| — v. Melford (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                         | 650                                   | — v. Powles (3 Myl. &amp; K. )                                   | 734                                                               |
| — v. Perry (3 Y. &amp; C. )                             | 356                                   | — v. Price (11 Sim. )                                            | 38                                                                |
| — v. Portman (1 Keen )                                  | 614                                   | — v. Randall (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                                  | 584                                                               |
| Jenks v. Holford (1 Vern. )                             | 6                                     | — v. Roe (3 T. R. )                                              | 855, 865                                                          |
| Jenkyns v. Kemys (1 Lev. )                              | 286, 949                              | — v. Salter (2 Russ. &amp; M. )                                  | 521, 524                                                          |
| Jennings, ex parte (2 Swanst. ; 1 Mad. )  | 793                                   | — v. Skipworth (9 Beav. )                                        | 479                                                               |
| — v. Looks (2 P. Wms. )                                 | 431                                   | — v. Scott ( Dom. Proc. ; 1 R. &amp; M. )                 | 357                                                               |
| — v. Moore (2 Vern. )                                   | 640                                   | — v. Smith (1 Hare ; 1 Phill. ; Sug. V. &amp; P. ) | 195, 656, 658, 666, 690, 754, 755, (756), 757, 758, 759, 762, 789 |
| — v. Ward (2 Vern. )                                    | 620, 628                              | — v. — (2 Ves. Jun. )                                            | 723, 726, 734, 771                                                |
| Jervoise v. Northumberland, Duke of, (1 Jac. &amp; W. ) | 23, 129, 131, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137 | — v. Stanley (2 Eq. Abr. )                                       | 753                                                               |
| Jesus College v. Bloom (3 Atk. )                        | 573                                   | — v. Torin (6 Sim. )                                             | 78, 83                                                            |
| Jesson v. Wright (2 Bli. )                              | 145, 150, 152                         | — v. Tripp ( Jac. )                                              | 630                                                               |
| Jessop v. Watson (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                     | 238                                   | — v. Wade (9 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                    | 527                                                               |
| Jewson v. Moulson (2 Atk. )                             | 852                                   | — v. Waite (5 Bing. N. S. )                                      | 527                                                               |
| Jodrell v. Jodrell (9 Beav. )                           | 500, 501, 530 (531)                   | — v. Westcombe (1 Eq. Abr. )                                     | 28                                                                |
| Johnson v. Baber (8 Beav. )                             | 370                                   | — v. Williams (1 Col. )                                          | 322                                                               |
| — v. Bourne (2 Y. &amp; C. )                            | 813                                   | Jordan v. Jones (2 Phill. )                                      | 505, 793                                                          |
| — v. Child (4 Hare )                                    | 827, 832, (840) 841 (847)             | Jory v. Cox ( Pre. Ch. )                                         | 629, 631                                                          |
| — v. Johnson (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                         | 476, 480, 482, 487, 489, 491          | Josselyn v. Josselyn (9 Sim. )                                   | 184                                                               |
| — v. — (10 Jur. )                                       | 42                                    | Joy v. Campbell (3 Bli. N. S. )                                  | 327                                                               |
| — v. — (1 Keen )                                        | 525                                   | — v. Campbell (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                               | 40, 930, 932                                                      |
| — v. Kennett (3 Myl. &amp; K. )                         | 382, (383), (384), 387                | Joynes v. Statham (3 Atk. )                                      | 620                                                               |
| — v. Kershaw (11 Jur. )                                 | 354                                   | Jubber v. Jubber (9 Sim. )                                       | 471                                                               |
| — v. Legard (3 Mad. )                                   | 291, 292                              | Judd v. Judd (3 Sim. )                                           | 98                                                                |
| — v. Smith (1 Ves. )                                    | 883                                   | — v. Pratt (13 Ves. )                                            | 594, 595                                                          |
| — v. Telford (1 Russ. &amp; M. )                        | 598                                   | Juxon v. Brian ( Pre. Ch. )                                      | 344                                                               |
| — v. Woods (2 Beav. )                                   | 223, 235, 237, 238                    | Kampf v. Jones (2 Keen )                                         | 106, 127, 183, 249                                                |
| Johnstone v. Lumb (15 Sim. )                            | 495                                   | Keane v. Roberts (4 Mad. )                                       | 47, 298, 375                                                      |
| Jolland v. Stainbridge (3 Ves. )                        | 763                                   | Kearsley v. Woodcock (3 Hare )                                   | 90, 91                                                            |
| Jones, ex parte (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. )            | 783                                   | Kebble, ex parte (11 Ves. )                               | 186, 187, 189, 190                                                |
| — v. Beale (2 Vern. )                                   | 74, 76                                | Keech v. Hall ( Doug. )                                          | 646, 661                                                          |
| — v. Bruce (11 Sim. )                                   | 327                                   | — v. Sandford ( Sel. Ca. Ch. )                                   | 300                                                               |
| — v. Clough (2 Ves. )                                   | 87                                    | Keeling v. Brown (5 Ves. )                                       | 321, 327, 829                                                     |
| — v. Creswicke (9 Sim. )                                | 687                                   | Keir v. Leeman (9 Q. B. )                                        | 530                                                               |
| — v. Croucher (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                       | 897, 909                              | Kelland v. Melluish (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. )                        | 783                                                               |
| — v. Davids (4 Russ. )                                  | 748                                   | Kellett v. Kellett (1 Ball &amp; B. ; 3 Dowl. P. C. )     | 232, 235                                                          |
| — v. Goodchild (3 P. Wms. )                             | 308                                   | Kemp v. Kemp (5 Ves. )                                           | 85, 87                                                            |
| — v. Gibbons (9 Ves. )                                  | 655, 785, 857, 858, 859               | — v. Westbrook (1 Ves. )                                         | 637, 769, 772, 773                                                |
| — v. Harris (9 Ves. )                                   | 512, 517, 518                         | Kendal, ex parte (17 Ves. )                               | 213, 828                                                          |
| — v. Jones (3 Bro. )                                    | 46                                    | Kendal v. Hulls (11 Jur. )                                       | 688, 760                                                          |
| — v. — (5 Hare )                                        | 304, 544, 545, 549, 550               | Kendall v. Micfeild ( Barnard. )                                 | 651                                                               |
| — v. — (8 Sim. )                                        | 730                                   | Kenebel v. Scrafton (13 Ves. )                                   | 815                                                               |
| — v. — (13 Sim. )                                       | 400                                   | Kenge v. Delavall (1 Vern. )                                     | 576                                                               |
| — v. Kendrick (2 Eq. Abr. ; 5 Bro. P. C. )       | 653, 692                              | Kennedy v. Cassillis (2 Swanst. )                                | 11, 12                                                            |
| — v. Laughton (1 Eq. Ca. Abr. )                         | 139                                   | — v. Daly (1 & 2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                               | 195, 196, 867                                                     |
|                                                                |                                       | — v. Green (3 Myl. &amp; K. )                                    | 755, 756, 757, 758, 760, 762                                      |
|                                                                |                                       | — v. Kingston (2 J. &amp; W. )                                   | 82, 87                                                            |

|                                                                               | PAGE                                                |                                                                           | PAGE                             |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Kennell v. Abbott (4 Ves. )                                            | 23, 260                                             | Kirwan v. Daniel, (11 Jur. ; 5 Hare )                       | 60, 860, 862                     |
| Kenney v. Browne (3 Ridgw. P. C. )                                     | 756, 863, 873                                       | Knatchbull v. Fearnhead (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                        | 49, 917                          |
| Kensington, ex parte (2 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                       | 781, 782, 784                                       | Knight v. Atkyns (2 Vern. )                                        | 262, 272, 273                    |
| ——— v. Dollond (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                                      | 505, 508                                            | ——— v. Boughton ( Dom. Proc. ; 8 Jur. )                     | 68                               |
| Kentish v. Newman (1 P. Wms. )                                         | 26, 260                                             | ——— v. Davis ( Myl. &amp; K. )                                     | 774                              |
| Kenworthy v. Bate (6 Ves. )                                            | 638                                                 | ——— v. Duplessis (2 Ves. )                                         | 570                              |
| Ker v. Wanchope (1 Bli. )                                              | 603                                                 | ——— v. Ellis (2 Bro. ) (147), (148),                               | 152, 162                         |
| Kerr v. Dungannon, Lord (1 Con. &amp; Law. ; 1 Dr. &amp; War. ) | 93, 107, 110, (117 to 123), 125, 127, 182, 301, 944 | ——— v. Hunt (5 Bing. )                                             | 358, 359                         |
| Kerrick v. Bransby (7 Bro. P. C. )                                     | 19                                                  | ——— v. Knight (3 P. Wms. )                                         | 701, 702                         |
| ——— v. Saffery (7 Sim. )                                               | 636, 679, 697                                       | ——— v. ——— (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                     | 100                              |
| Kerswill v. Bishop (2 Cromp. &amp; J. )                                | 775                                                 | ——— v. ——— (6 Sim. )                                               | 524                              |
| Kettle v. Townsend (1 Salk. )                                          | 285                                                 | ——— v. ——— (3 Beav. 5 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                      | 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 72, 78       |
| Kettleby v. Atwood (1 Vern. )                                          | 254, 255, 256, 262, 274                             | ——— v. Maclean (3 Bro. )                                           | 741                              |
| Keys v. Williams (3 Y. &amp; C. )                                      | 781, 783, 854, 863                                  | ——— v. Martin (1 R. &amp; M. )                                     | 940                              |
| Kidney v. Cousmaker (12 Ves. )                                         | 326, 591, 592, 598, 887                             | ——— v. Plymouth, Earl of (1 Dick. ; 3 Atk. )                | 48, 937                          |
| Kilbee v. Sneyd (2 Moll. )                                             | 920                                                 | ——— v. Selby (3 Man. &amp; G. )                                    | 233                              |
| Kildare v. Eustace (1 Vern. )                                          | 6, 7                                                | Knightley v. Knightley, (2 Ves. jun. )                             | 327                              |
| Killick, ex parte (3 M. D. &amp; D. )                           | 507                                                 | Knott, ex parte (11 Ves. )                                  | 728, 735, 738, 739, 750          |
| Kilner v. Leech (10 Beav. )                                            | 496, 536                                            | Knott v. Cottee (2 Phill. )                                        | 67                               |
| Kilpin v. Kilpin (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                                    | 53, 215, 216, 217                                   | Knox v. Kelly (6 Ir. Eq. R. )                                      | 363                              |
| Kilvington v. Gray (2 Sim. &amp; St. ; 10 Sim. )                | 460, 463, 569                                       | Knye v. Moore (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                                  | 858, 893                         |
| Kime v. Welfit (3 Sim. )                                               | 190                                                 | Lacam v. Mertins (1 Ves. )                                         | 827, 834                         |
| Kinch v. Ward (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                      | 131, 151                                            | Lacey, ex parte (6 Ves. )                                   | 637                              |
| King, ex parte (1 Atk. )                                        | 666                                                 | ——— v. Ingle (2 Phill. )                                           | 735, 740, 743, 744, (745)        |
| ——— v. Ballett (2 Vern. )                                              | 643                                                 | Lacon v. Mertins (3 Atk. )                                         | 650, 653                         |
| ——— v. Burchell (1 Eden; Amb. )                                        | 104, 150, 151                                       | Lade v. Lade (1 Serj. Wil. R. )                                    | 201                              |
| ——— v. Cotton (2 P. Wms. )                                             | 884, 886                                            | Laing v. Laing (10 Sim. )                                          | 511                              |
| ——— v. Denison (1 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                                    | 20, 223, 225, 227, 228, 231, 296                    | Lake v. Craddock (3 P. Wms. ; 1 Eq. Abr. )                  | 207, 803                         |
| ——— v. Essex, Inhabitants of (4 T. R. )                                | 938                                                 | ——— v. Gibson (1 Eq. Abr. )                                        | 206, 207                         |
| ——— v. King (3 P. Wms. )                                               | 617, 819                                            | ——— v. Lake ( Amb. ; 1 Wils. )                              | 228, 244, 245                    |
| ——— v. Leach (2 Hare )                                                 | 793                                                 | ——— v. Thomas (3 Ves. )                                            | 710                              |
| ——— v. Marissall (cited 2 Atk. )                                       | 661                                                 | Lamb v. Milnes (5 Ves. )                                           | 483, 508                         |
| ——— v. Melling (2 Lev. ; 1 Vent. )                              | 145, 876                                            | Lampet's case (10 Coke )                                           | 850                              |
| ——— v. Robinson ( Wightw. )                                            | 89                                                  | Lamphier v. Despard (2 Dr. &amp; War. )                            | 327, 340, 341, 342               |
| ——— v. Sewers, Com. of (1 B. &amp; Ad. )                               | 938                                                 | Lamphir v. Creed (8 Ves. )                                         | 503                              |
| ——— v. Smith (2 & 6 Hare )                                             | 648, 670, 676, 677, 699                             | Lampley v. Blower (3 Atk. )                                        | 145, 161, 162                    |
| ——— v. Watson (2 T. R. )                                               | 33                                                  | Lamplugh v. Lamplugh (1 P. Wms. )                                  | 214, 216, 217                    |
| ——— v. Withers (3 P. Wms. ; Forrest. )                          | 397, 421                                            | Lancashire v. Lancashire (11 & 12 Jur. ; 1 De G. &amp; S. ) | 83, 86, 88, 668                  |
| Kinder v. Miller ( Pre. Ch. )                                          | 301                                                 | Lancaster v. Evors (4 & 10 Beav. )                                 | 300, 657, 672, 702, (842), 843   |
| Kingdon v. Bridges (2 Vern. )                                          | 218, 219                                            | Lancy v. Fairechild (2 Vern. )                                     | 262, 270                         |
| Kingham v. Lee (15 Sim. )                                              | 517, 571                                            | Lane v. Dighton ( Amb. )                                           | 201, 203, 204, 205, 301          |
| Kingsland, Lord, v. Tyrconnell, Lord (1 Vin. Abr. )                    | 62                                                  | Lang v. Lang (8 Sim. )                                             | 13, 609                          |
| Kinnoul, Lord, v. Money (3 Swanst. )                                   | 677                                                 | Langford v. Gascoyne (11 Ves. )                                    | 931, 932, 934                    |
| Kirk v. Paulin (7 Vin. Abr. )                                          | 510                                                 | ——— v. Mahony (2 Con. &amp; Law. )                                 | 800                              |
| ——— v. Webb ( Pre. Ch. )                                               | 21, 202, 203, 204, 205, 301                         | Langham v. Sandford (2 Mer. ; 17 Ves. )                     | 233, 244, 246                    |
| Kirkman v. Miles (13 Ves. )                                            | 254, 263, 272                                       | Langley v. Oxford, Earl of ( Amb. )                                | 377, 812, 858                    |
| ——— v. Smith (1 Ves. )                                                 | 308                                                 | ——— v. Sneyd (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                                   | 269, 271                         |
| Kirkpatrick v. Kirkpatrick (13 Ves. )                                  | 147, 150, 161                                       | Langstaffe v. Fenwick (10 Ves. )                                   | 650, 807                         |
|                                                                               |                                                     | Langston, ex parte (17 Ves. ; 1 Rose )               | 781, 785                         |
|                                                                               |                                                     | ——— v. Olivant ( Coop. )                                           | 926                              |
|                                                                               |                                                     | Langton v. Horton (5 Beav. ; 1 Hare )                       | 39, 221, 313, 760, 775, 776, 866 |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxix

|                                                                                       | PAGE                                                        |                                                               | PAGE                              |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Lann v. Church (4 Mad. )                                                       | 802                                                         | Leicester v. Rose (4 East )                            | 355, 358, 359                     |
| Lanoy v. Athol (2 Atk. )                                                       | 393, 462, 481, 803, 827, 834                                | Leigh v. Barry (3 Atk. )                               | 930                               |
| Lansdowne v. Lansdowne (1 Jac. &amp; W. ; 1 Mad. )                      | 573                                                         | —— v. Macaulay (1 You. )                               | 195                               |
| La Terriere v. Bulmer (2 Sim. )                                                | 559, 560, 567                                               | —— v. Norbury (13 Ves. )                               | 155                               |
| Latimer v. Neate (4 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                           | 655, 671                                                    | Leister v. Foxcroft (cited Gilb. Eq. R. )              | 279                               |
| Latouche v. Dunsany (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                       | 727, 751, 763                                               | Leith v. Irvine (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                     | 630, 649, 807                     |
| Latter v. Dashwood (6 Sim. )                                                   | 810                                                         | Lemaitre v. Banister (2 Bro. )                         | 70                                |
| Lattingstone's case (cited 2 Bulst. )                                          | 40                                                          | Leman v. Whitley (4 Russ. )                            | 20, 21                            |
| Law v. Hunter (1 Russ. )                                                       | 932                                                         | Lenden v. Blackmore (10 Sim. )                         | 420                               |
| —— v. Law (2 Col. )                                                            | 360                                                         | Leoffes v. Lewen ( Pre. Ch. ; Gilb. Eq. R. )    | 884                               |
| —— v. Urlwin (12 Jur. )                                                        | 424                                                         | Leonard v. Sussex, Countess of 2 ( Vern. )             | 133                               |
| Lawes v. Bennett (cited 14 Ves. )                                              | 209                                                         | Lepard v. Vernon (2 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                  | 54                                |
| Lawless v. Shaw (1 Llo. &amp; Goo. ; 5 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                 | 66, 67, 71                                                  | Lepine v. Ferard (2 R. &amp; M. )                      | 149                               |
| Lawley v. Hooper (3 Atk. )                                                     | 617, 622, 625, 626                                          | Leslie v. Baillie (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )               | 12                                |
| Lawrence v. Bowle (2 Phill. )                                                  | 48, 941                                                     | —— v. Devonshire, Duke of (2 Bro. )                    | 236                               |
| —— v. Lawrence (2 Freem. ; 2 Vern. ; 1 L. Raym. )                | 594                                                         | —— v. Leslie ( Llo. &amp; Goo. )                       | 186, 461                          |
| —— v. Maggs (1 Eden )                                                          | 545                                                         | Letheullier v. Tracey ( Amb. ; 3 Atk. )         | 148                               |
| Lawson v. Lawson (1 P. Wms. )                                                  | 912                                                         | Lett v. Morris (4 Sim. )                               | 779, 859, 860                     |
| Lavender v. Stanton (6 Mad. )                                                  | 387                                                         | Lench v. Lench (10 Ves. )                              | 203, 204, 205, 206                |
| Leach v. Leach (13 Sim. )                                                      | 91, 464                                                     | Le Vasseur v. Scratton (14 Sim. )                      | 476                               |
| Leake v. Leake                                                                        | 430                                                         | Levett v. Needham (2 Vern. )                           | 230                               |
| —— v. Robinson (2 Mer. )                                                       | (107)                                                       | —— v. Lewes (6 Sim. ; 2 Keen )                  | 89                                |
| Lear v. Legatt (2 Sim. ; 1 R. &amp; M. )                                | 89                                                          | —— v. Morgan (5 Pri. )                                 | 631, 735                          |
| Leche v. Kilmorey, Lord ( Turn. &amp; R. )                                     | 466, 883                                                    | Lewes, re (1 Hall &amp; Tw. )                   | 670                               |
| Lechmere v. Carlisle, Lord (3 P. Wms. ; Forr. )                         | 51, 129, 205, 254, 255, 256, 260, 262, 266, (274), 438, 610 | Lewin v. Okeley (2 Atk. )                              | 317                               |
| —— v. Charlton (15 Ves. )                                                      | 393                                                         | Lewis, ex parte (1 G. &amp; J. )                | 581, 636                          |
| —— v. Lavie (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                                                 | 69, 70                                                      | —— v. John (1 C. P. Coop. ; 9 Sim. )            | 681, 792, 814                     |
| —— v. Lechmere. See Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, S. C.                                  |                                                             | —— v. King (2 Bro. )                                   | 603                               |
| Lee v. Barlow (5 Railway Ca. )                                                 | 801                                                         | —— v. Lane (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                          | 52                                |
| —— v. Cox. See Lee v. D'Aranda (1 Ves. sen. ; 3 Atk. )                  | 456                                                         | —— v. Lewis (1 Cox )                                   | 84, 86                            |
| —— v. D'Aranda (3 Atk. )                                                       | 439                                                         | —— v. Maddocks (8 Ves. ; 17 Ves. )              | 205, 254, 301, 778                |
| —— v. Henley (1 Vern. )                                                        | 886                                                         | —— v. Nangle (2 Ves. ; Amb. ; 1 Cox )    | 335, 515, 702, 842                |
| —— v. Lockars (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                              | 359                                                         | —— v. Zouche, Lord (2 Sim. )                           | 708                               |
| —— v. Muggeridge (1 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                                          | 513                                                         | Lidderdale v. Montrose, Duke of (4 T. R. )             | 614                               |
| —— v. Pain (4 Hare )                                                           | 446                                                         | Liebman v. Harcourt (2 Mer. )                          | 204                               |
| —— v. Prieaux (3 Bro. )                                                        | 508                                                         | Like v. Berresford (3 Ves. )                           | 482                               |
| —— v. Rook ( Mos. )                                                            | 844                                                         | Liley v. Hey (1 Hare )                                 | 74, 75                            |
| Leech v. Leech (1 Ch. Ca. )                                                    | 351, 882                                                    | Lillia v. Airey (1 Ves. jun. )                         | 513, 515, 518                     |
| —— v. —— (2 Dr. &amp; War. )                                                   | 409                                                         | Lincoln, Countess of, v. Newcastle, Duke of (12 Ves. ) | 135, 137, 142, 145, 156, 157, 158 |
| Leeds, Duke of, v. Amherst, Lord (10 Jur. ; 14 Sim. ; 2 Phill. ) | 571                                                         | Lincoln, Lady, v. Pelham (10 Ves. )                    | 28, 29, 412, 416, 418, 419, 420   |
| Leeming v. Sheratt (2 Hare )                                                   | 94, 99, 395, 396                                            | Linden, ex parte (1 M. D. &amp; D. )            | 803                               |
| Lees v. Mosley (1 Y. &amp; C. ; 2 Jur. )                                | 145, 150, 152                                               | Lindon v. Fleetwood (6 Sim. )                          | 142                               |
| —— v. Nuttall (1 R. &amp; M. )                                                 | 203, 300                                                    | Lindopp v. Eborall (3 Bro. )                           | 594                               |
| Leg v. Godwire ( Forrest. )                                                    | 412                                                         | Lindsell v. Thacker (12 Sim. )                         | 37                                |
| Legard v. Hodges (1 Ves. jun. ; 4 Bro. )                                | 30, 253, 256, 867                                           | Ling v. Colman (10 Beav. )                             | 936                               |
| —— v. Johnson (3 Ves. )                                                        | 527                                                         | Lingard v. Derby, Earl of (1 Bro. )                    | 407                               |
| Legatt v. Sewell (2 Vern. )                                                    | 23                                                          | Linguen v. Souray (1 P. Wms. ; Pre. Ch. )       | 270, 456                          |
| Legg v. Goldwire ( Forrest. )                                                  | 140                                                         | Lister v. Bradley (5 Jur. ; 1 Hare )            | 97                                |
| Legh v. Legh (15 Sim. )                                                        | 424                                                         | —— v. Lister (6 Ves. )                                 | 300                               |
| —— v. —— (1 B. &amp; P. )                                                      | 854, 905                                                    | —— v. Payn (11 Sim. )                                  | 221                               |
| —— v. Warrington, Earl of (1 Bro. P. C. )                                      | 320                                                         | —— v. Turner (5 Hare ; 10 Jur. )                | 288, 290, 778, 793, 795           |
| Le Gros v. Cockerell (5 Sim. )                                                 | 681                                                         | Litchfield, Earl of, re (1 Atk. )               | 933                               |
|                                                                                       |                                                             | Littlehalls v. Gascoyne (3 Bro. )                      | 300, 927                          |
|                                                                                       |                                                             | Livesey v. Harding (1 Beav. )                          | 655, 670                          |
|                                                                                       |                                                             | —— v. Livesey (13 Sim. )                               | 416                               |

|                                                                                    | PAGE                                            |                                                           | PAGE                                   |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|
| Llewellyn v. Mackworth ( Barnard. )                                         | 63                                              | Lucam v. Mertins (1 Serg. Wils. )                  | 808                                    |
| Lloyd, ex parte (17 Ves. ; 1 Rose )                           | 863                                             | Lucas v. Commerford (3 Bro. ; 1 Ves. jun. ) | 785, 786, 792                          |
| — ex parte (1 G. &amp; J. )                                          | 782                                             | Lucas v. Dennison (13 Sim. )                       | 713                                    |
| — v. Harvey (2 R. &amp; M. )                                                | 439, 440, (451)                                 | — v. Lucas (1 Atk. )                               | 502                                    |
| — v. Jones (12 Sim. )                                                       | 812                                             | — v. Peacock (9 Beav. )                            | 802                                    |
| — v. Johnes (9 Ves. )                                                       | 707                                             | — v. Seale (2 Atk. )                               | 678                                    |
| — v. Lloyd (4 Beav. )                                                       | 241; (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                 | Luccraft v. Hite (2 Hare )                         | 690                                    |
| — v. Mason (5 Hare )                                                        | (489), 490                                      | Lucknow v. Brown (12 Jur. )                        | 107, 466                               |
| — v. Read (1 P. Wms. ; 1 Eq. Abr. )                                  | 215, 216, 217, 219                              | Lucy v. Gardener ( Bunb. )                         | 830                                    |
| — v. Spillet (2 Atk. ; Barn. )                                       | 194, 198, 199, 203                              | Lupton v. Tempest (2 Vern. )                       | 498                                    |
| — v. Wait (1 Phill. )                                                       | 668, 724                                        | Lushington v. Boldero (6 Mad. )                    | 571                                    |
| — v. Williams (2 Atk. )                                                     | 318, 325                                        | — v. Price (9 Sim. )                               | 686                                    |
| — v. — (1 Mad. )                                                            | 482, 488, 489, 492                              | Lutkins v. Leigh ( Forrest. )                      | 819, 820, 830, 832, 834                |
| Lock v. Lock (2 Vern. )                                                     | 544                                             | Lutton v. Rodd (2 Ch. Ca. )                        | 652                                    |
| Lockhart v. Hardy (10 Jur. ; 9 Beav. ; 2 R. P. &amp; C. Ca. ) | 334, 342, (346), (347), 646, 682, 683, 771, 819 | Lyddon v. Lyddon (14 Ves. )                        | 409, 410                               |
| Lockwood v. Ewer (2 Atk. )                                                  | 637, 769, 770                                   | Lyde v. Lyde (1 T. R. )                            | 162                                    |
| Loder v. Loder (2 Ves. )                                                    | 417                                             | — v. Mynn (4 Sim. ; 1 Myl. &amp; K. )       | 30, 254, 778, 866                      |
| Lodge v. Lyseley (4 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                        | 39, 313                                         | Lygon v. Coventry, Lord (14 Sim. )                 | 404                                    |
| Lodington v. Kime (1 Salk. )                                                | 150, 352                                        | Lyne v. — (1 You. )                                | 508                                    |
| Loftus v. Swift (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                        | 666, 674, 814                                   | — v. Willis (2 Eq. Abr. ; 3 P. Wms. )       | 681                                    |
| Logan v. Birkett (1 Moo. &amp; R. )                                         | 532                                             | Lynn v. Ashton (1 Russ. &amp; M. )                 | 52                                     |
| Lomas v. Wright (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                                          | 828, 888                                        | Lyon v. Blinken ( Jac. )                           | 280                                    |
| Lomax v. Bird (1 Vern. )                                                    | 668                                             | — v. Chandos, Duke of (3 Atk. )                    | 403, 406                               |
| — v. Hyde (2 Vern. )                                                        | 705, 814                                        | — v. Colville (1 Col. )                            | 313, 314, 315, 385                     |
| Lombe v. Stoughton (12 Sim. )                                               | 45, 179                                         | — v. Mitchel (1 Mad. )                             | 98, 145, 149, 150, 151, 160, (161)     |
| London, Bishop of, v. Webb (1 P. Wms. )                                     | 571                                             | Lyse v. Kingdon (1 Col. )                          | 940                                    |
| — City of, v. Garway (2 Vern. )                                             | 228                                             | Lyster v. Dolland (3 Bro. ; 1 Ves. jun. )   | 643                                    |
| Long v. Hughes (1 De G. &amp; S. )                                          | 330                                             | Lythe v. Milne (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                  | 896                                    |
| — v. Long (5 Ves. )                                                         | 577, 600                                        | Maber v. Hobbs (2 Y. &amp; C. )                    | 523                                    |
| — v. Short (1 P. Wms. ; 2 Vern. )                                    | 832, 839                                        | Maberly v. Turton (14 Ves. )                       | 85                                     |
| — v. Stewart (5 Ves. )                                                      | 932                                             | Macaulay v. Phillips (4 Ves. )                     | 477, 483, 491, 492                     |
| Longdon v. Simson (12 Ves. )                                                | 25, 167, 168, 182                               | M'Cleland v. Shaw (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )             | 236                                    |
| Longhead v. Phelps (2 Bla. )                                                | 93, 126                                         | M'Cormic v. Buller (cited 8 Ves. )                 | 534                                    |
| Longmore v. Broom (7 Ves. )                                                 | 83, 86, 87, 420                                 | M'Donald v. Bryce (2 Keen )                        | (174), 184                             |
| — v. Elcum (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                           | 88, 460, 461                                    | M'Donough v. Shewbridge (2 Ball &amp; B. )         | 702                                    |
| Lonsdale v. Church (3 Bro. )                                                | 922                                             | M'Fadden v. Jenkins (1 Hare ; 1 Phill. )    | 20, 53, 285, 886, 891, 898, (913), 914 |
| Lord v. Bunn (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                         | 91                                              | M'Ghee v. Morgan (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )              | 622                                    |
| — v. Wightwick (2 Phill. )                                                  | 516                                             | M'Guire v. Scully ( Beatty )                       | 139                                    |
| — v. Wormleighton ( Jac. )                                                  | 802                                             | Mackell v. Winter (3 Ves. )                        | 172                                    |
| Lorimer v. Lorimer (10 Ves. )                                               | 218                                             | Mackenzie v. Mackenzie (16 Ves. )                  | 354, 358                               |
| Longuet v. Scawen (1 Ves. )                                                 | 616, 617, 625, 626                              | — v. Robinson (3 Atk. )                            | 629, 678                               |
| Love v. Gaze (8 Beav. )                                                     | 245                                             | Mackie v. Mackie (5 Hare )                         | 43, 44                                 |
| Lovell v. Andrew (15 Sim. )                                                 | 708                                             | Mackintosh v. Barber (1 Bing. )                    | 367                                    |
| Lovell's case (cited 1 Eden )                                               | 663                                             | Mackreth v. Symmons (15 Ves. )                     | 738, 739                               |
| Loveridge v. Cooper (3 Russ. )                                              | 729, 730, 857, 858                              | Mackworth v. Hinxman (2 Keen )                     | 110, 127                               |
| Low v. Richard (8 Ves. )                                                    | 625                                             | Maclean v. Dunn (4 Bing. )                         | 203                                    |
| Lowe v. Carter (1 Beav. )                                                   | 595                                             | M'Lean v. Louglands (5 Ves. )                      | 502, 503                               |
| — v. Morgan (1 Bro. )                                                       | 674, 702                                        | M'Leod v. Drummond (14 & 17 Ves. )                 | 298, 373, 374, 377, 378                |
| Lowes v. Lowes (5 Hare )                                                    | 596                                             | M'Leroth v. Bacon (5 Ves. )                        | 73, 75                                 |
| Lowless v. Mansfield (1 Dr. &amp; War. )                                    | 631, 803                                        | Macqueen v. Farquhar (11 Ves. )                    | 417                                    |
| Lowry v. Fulton (9 Sim. )                                                   | 689, 918, 919                                   | Macquire v. Scully (2 Hag. )                       | 136                                    |
| Lowson v. Copeland (2 Bro. )                                                | 923, 934                                        | Maddocks v. Wren (2 Ch. Rep. )                     | 648                                    |
| Lowther v. Carleton ( Forrest. )                                            | 734                                             | Madison v. Andrew (1 Ves. )                        | 84, 86, 88, 369, 419, 422              |
| — v. Carlton (2 Atk. )                                                      | 196                                             | Maghee v. Mahon (1 Moll. )                         | 688                                    |
| Lowthian v. Hasel (3 Bro. )                                                 | 723, 724, 725                                   | Mahon v. Savage (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )               | 76                                     |
| Loy v. Duckett (1 Cr. &amp; Ph. )                                           | 308, 309                                        |                                                           |                                        |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxx

|                                                           | PAGE                                          |                                          | PAGE                                                                                                  |
|-----------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Maitland v. Bateman (8 Jur.)                              | (922), 923                                    | Maskelyne v. Maskelyne (Amb.)            | 495                                                                                                   |
| Major v. Lansley (2 Russ. & M.)                           | 475, 504                                      | Mason v. Bogg (2 Myl. & Cr.)             | 829                                                                                                   |
| Makins, ex parte (2 M. D. & D.)                    | 804                                           | —— v. Mason (Amb. cited)                 | 572                                                                                                   |
| Malcolm v. Charlesworth (1 Keen)                          | 483, 776, 865                                 | —— v. Masters (cited 1 Eden)             | 483                                                                                                   |
| —— v. Martin (3 Bro.)                                     | 420                                           | Massenburgh v. Ash (1 Vern.)             | 24                                                                                                    |
| —— v. Scott (3 Hare)                                      | 59, 285, 855, 860, 862                        | Massey v. Banner (1 Jac. & W.; 4 Mad.)   | 773, 917, 934                                                                                         |
| —— Taylor (2 Russ. & M.)                                  | 105                                           | —— v. Davies (2 Ves. jun.)               | 922                                                                                                   |
| Malim v. Keighley (2 & 3 Ves. jun.)                       | 66, 68, 69, 70, 79                            | —— v. Kemp (1845)                        | 99                                                                                                    |
| Mallabar v. Mallabar (Forrest.)                           | 239, 240, 241, 244                            | —— v. Parker (2 Myl. & K.)               | 509                                                                                                   |
| Maline v. Maline (West's Ap. Ca.)                         | 49                                            | Master v. Laprimaudage (2 Col.)          | 239                                                                                                   |
| Mallock v. Galton (3 P. Wms.)                             | 681                                           | —— v. Miller (4 T. R.)                   | 854                                                                                                   |
| Malony v. Kennedy (10 Sim.)                               | 479                                           | Masters v. Fuller (4 Bro.; 1 Ves. jun.)  | 514, 515                                                                                              |
| Malpas v. Ackland (3 Russ.)                               | 756, 757                                      | —— v. Masters (1 P. Wms.)                | 433, 833                                                                                              |
| Man v. Ricketts (13 L. J.; Hill on Trus.)                 | 197                                           | Mather v. Thomas (6 Sim.)                | 655                                                                                                   |
| Manlove v. Ball (2 Vern.)                                 | 620, 653, 808                                 | Mathews v. Mathews (2 Ves.)              | 428, 606, 607, 608                                                                                    |
| Mann v. Ballet (1 Vern.)                                  | 921                                           | Matson v. Swift (8 Beav.)                | 253, 268, 271, 636                                                                                    |
| —— v. Burlington (1 Keen)                                 | 233                                           | Mattheson v. Hardwicke (cited 2 P. Wms.) | 335                                                                                                   |
| Manning's, Matthew, case (8 Co.)                          | 94                                            | Matthews v. Cartwright (2 Atk.)          | 721, 737                                                                                              |
| —— v. Burgess (1 Ch. Ca.)                                 | 652                                           | —— v. Jones (2 Anstr.)                   | 313, 388                                                                                              |
| —— v. Cox (7 Moo.)                                        | 854                                           | —— v. Paul (3 Swanst.)                   | (415), 416, 418                                                                                       |
| —— v. Spooner (3 Ves.)                                    | 823, 824                                      | —— v. Wallwyn (4 Ves.)                   | 656, 864                                                                                              |
| Mansel v. —— (1 Mad. P. & P.)                             | 680                                           | Matthie v. Edwards, see Jones v. Matthie |                                                                                                       |
| Mansell v. Mansell (2 P. Wms.)                            | 195, 728, 876, 948, 949                       | Mattison v. Tarfield (3 Beav.)           | 420                                                                                                   |
| Mansfield v. Dugard (1 Eq. Abr.)                          | 95                                            | Maugham v. Mason (1 Ves. & Bea.)         | 234, 238                                                                                              |
| March v. Lee (1 Eq. Abr.; Ch. Ca.; 2 Vent.)               | 727, 735, 737, 739, 740, 741, 742, 751, (752) | Maund's case (7 Co.)                     | 851                                                                                                   |
| —— v. Russell (3 Myl. & Cr.)                              | 297                                           | Maundrell v. Maundrell (7 Ves.; 10 Ves.) | 230, 457, 498, 734                                                                                    |
| Marchington v. Vernon (27 Geo. III. K. B.)                | 278                                           | Mawson v. Stock (6 Ves.)                 | 357, 359                                                                                              |
| Margetts v. Barringer (7 Sim.)                            | 508, 510                                      | Maxwell v. Ashe (Rolls, 1742)            | 303                                                                                                   |
| Margrave v. Le Hooke (2 Vern.)                            | 666, 726                                      | Maxwell v. Montacute (Pre. Ch.)          | 620                                                                                                   |
| Markby, in re (4 Myl. & Cr.)                       | 578, 582                                      | May v. Selby (1 Y. & C. C. C.)           | 942                                                                                                   |
| Marlborough, Duke of, v. Godolphin, Lord (2 Ves.; 1 Eden) | 18, 82, 84, 104, 106, 114, 494                | —— v. Wood (3 Bro.)                      | 94, 103, 395                                                                                          |
| Marlin, ex parte (2 Bro.)                          | 213                                           | Mayhew v. Cricket (2 Swanst.)            | 843                                                                                                   |
| Marlow v. Pitfield (1 P. Wms.)                            | 353                                           | Meacher v. Young (2 Myl. & K.)           | 466, 467                                                                                              |
| Marnell v. Blake (4 Dow.; 2 Ball & B.)                    | 638                                           | Mead v. Cave (1 Ch. Rep.)                | 411                                                                                                   |
| Marrow, ex parte (Cr. & Ph.)                       | 670                                           | Mead v. Orrery, Lord, (3 Atk.)           | 206, 375, 376, 378, 379, 647                                                                          |
| Marryat v. Townley (1 Ves.)                               | 103, 143                                      | Meade v. Bandon, Earl of, (2 Dow.)       | 652                                                                                                   |
| Marsack v. Lyster (10 Beav.)                              | 482, 483                                      | Meals v. Meals (1 Dick.)                 | 483                                                                                                   |
| Marsh v. Hunter (6 Mad.)                                  | 563, 924                                      | Medland v. Gray (2 Col.)                 | 934                                                                                                   |
| —— v. Marsh (1 Bro.)                                      | 76                                            | Medley v. Horton (14 Sim.; 8 Jur.)       | 512, 513, 523, 524, 747                                                                               |
| Marshall v. Bousfield (2 Mad.)                            | 134, 137                                      | Medlicott v. O'Donel (1 Ball & B.)       | 300, 728                                                                                              |
| —— v. Collett (1 Y. & C.)                                 | 539                                           | Meek v. Kettlewell (1 Hare; 1 Phill.)    | 30, 55, 56, 57, 614, 776, 857, 866, 879, 882, 898, 899, 902, 903, 906, 908, 909, (910), 911, 912, 915 |
| —— v. Holloway (5 Sim.; 2 Swanst.)                        | 169, 181, 182, 189, 774, 946                  | Meeker v. Tanton (2 Ch. Ca.)             | 702                                                                                                   |
| —— v. Rutton (8 T. R.)                                    |                                               | Meggison v. Moore (2 Ves. jun.)          | 67, 68                                                                                                |
| Marten v. Whichelo (Cr. & Ph.)                            | 361                                           | Mehrtens v. Andrews (3 Beav.)            | 44, 552, 581                                                                                          |
| Martin v. Martin (2 R. & M.)                              | 13                                            | Meller v. Woods (1 Keen)                 | 792                                                                                                   |
| —— v. —— (Vin. Abr.)                                      | 196                                           | Mellish v. Brooks (3 Beav.)              | 695, 700                                                                                              |
| —— v. Maugham (14 Sim.)                                   | 91                                            | Mellor v. Lees (2 Atk.)                  | 617, 621, 625, 626, 628                                                                               |
| —— v. Mitchell (2 Jac. & W.)                              | 306, 504                                      | Mence v. Mence (18 Ves.)                 | 218, 226, 244                                                                                         |
| —— v. —— (cited 1 Mad.)                                   | 489                                           | Meredith v. Heneage (1 Sim.)             | 66, 67, 70, 224                                                                                       |
| —— v. Nicolls (3 Sim.)                                    | 15                                            | Merest v. James (6 Mad.; 1 Brod. & B.)   | 152, 879                                                                                              |
| —— v. Sedgwick (9 Beav.)                                  | 857, 859                                      | Merewether v. Shaw (2 Cox)               | 766                                                                                                   |
| Martinez v. Cooper (2 Russ.)                              | 671, 767                                      | Mertins v. Jolliffe (Amb.)               | 757, 764                                                                                              |
| Martyn v. Hind (Coup.)                                    | 278                                           | Mesgreth v. Mesgreth (2 Vern.)           | 88                                                                                                    |
| —— v. Macnamara (2 Con. & Law.)                           | 887                                           | Mestaer v. Gillespie (11 Ves.)           | 221, 279, 639                                                                                         |
| Mascal v. Mascal (1 Ves.)                                 | 442, 444, 607                                 | Metcalfe v. Champion (1 Moll.)           | 807                                                                                                   |

|                                                                        | PAGE                                  |                                                                                            | PAGE                                   |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|
| Metcalf v. Pulvertoft (1 & 2 Ves. &amp; Bea. )           | 289, 706                              | Molone v. Geraghty (2 Con. &amp; Law. )                                      | 791                                    |
| ——— v. York, Abp. of (6 Sim. ; 1 Myl. &amp; Cr. ) | 30, 254, 778, 792                     | Molony v. Gibbons (2 Campb. )                                                | 15                                     |
| Methodist Episcopal Chapel v. Jaques (3 Johns' Ch. R. )  | 513                                   | Monck v. Monck (1 Ball &amp; B. )                                            | 438, 441, 443, 447                     |
| Meure v. Meure (2 Atk. )                                 | 132, 137                              | Mondey v. Mondey (1 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                                        | 547, 680                               |
| Meux, ex parte (1 G. &amp; J. )                          | 789                                   | Monell v. Monell (5 Johns, Ch. R., U. S. )                                   | 952                                    |
| ——— v. Bell (1 Hare )                                    | 46, 729, 760, 855, 857, 858, 859, 860 | Monger v. Kett (12 Mod. )                                                    | 723                                    |
| ——— v. Fearne (1828)                                            | 795                                   | Monro, ex parte ( Buck )                                                     | 655, 656, 857, 859                     |
| ——— v. Howell (4 East )                                  | 351                                   | Montague v. Ratcliffe (2 Fonbl. )                                            | 805                                    |
| Meyer v. Townsend (3 Beav. )                             | 249                                   | Montford, Lord, v. Cadogan, Lord (17 Ves. ; 19 Ves. ; 2 Mer. ) | 299, 544, 545, 936                     |
| Meynel v. Howard ( Pre. Ch. )                            | 819                                   | Montgomerie v. Bath, Marquis of (3 Ves. )                                    | 675                                    |
| Meynell v. Massey (2 Vern. )                             | 407, 545                              | Montgomery v. Calland (14 Sim. )                                             | 809, 812                               |
| Miall v. Brain (4 Mad. )                                 | 595, 596                              | Monnypenny v. Mascall (2 Col. )                                              | 323                                    |
| Michell v. Michell (7 Jur. ; 4 Beav. )            | 404, 410, 422, 578                    | Moodie v. Reid (1 & 2 Mad. )                                                 | 503                                    |
| ——— v. ——— (5 Mad. )                                     | 341                                   | Moody v. Matthews (7 Ves. )                                                  | 302, 303                               |
| Midland Counties Railw. Co. v. Westcomb (2 Railw. Ca. )  | 670                                   | ——— v. Walters (16 Ves. )                                                    | 47, 949, 950                           |
| Middleton, Lord, v. Eliot (11 Jur. ; 15 Sim. )    | 652, 690, 691                         | Moore v. Bennett (2 Ch. Ca. )                                                | 755                                    |
| Middleton v. Onslow, Lord , (1 P. Wms. )                 | 357, 358                              | ——— v. Butler (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                           | 588, 602                               |
| Middleton v. Reag (13 Jur. )                             | 943                                   | ——— v. Cleghorn (9 & 12 Jur. )                                               | 233                                    |
| Middleton v. Spicer (1 Bro. )                            | 233, 237, 266                         | ——— v. Edwards (4 Ves. )                                                     | 203                                    |
| Miles v. Langley (1 & 2 R. &amp; M. )                    | 756, 759                              | ——— v. Frowd (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                             | 945                                    |
| ——— v. Williams (1 P. Wms. )                             | 477, 851                              | ——— v. Jervis (2 Col. )                                                      | 863                                    |
| Milfield, re (2 Phill. )                                 | 943                                   | ——— v. Macnamara (1 Ball &amp; B. )                                          | 705                                    |
| Millar v. Horton ( Coop. )                               | 315                                   | ——— v. Meynell (2 Vern. )                                                    | 533                                    |
| Millard's case (2 Freem. )                               | 728                                   | ——— v. Moore (1 Atk. )                                                       | 500                                    |
| Miller v. Craig (6 Beav. )                               | 942                                   | ——— v. ——— (1 Coll. )                                                        | 522, 523, 524                          |
| Millet v. Rowse (7 Ves. )                                | 486                                   | ——— v. ——— (2 Ves. )                                                         | 600                                    |
| ——— v. Woodward (2 Beav. )                               | 470                                   | Moores v. Choat (8 Sim. )                                                    | 266, 786, 787                          |
| Mills v. Banks (3 P. Wms. )                              | 85, 369, 404                          | ——— v. Greg (2 Phill. ; 8 Sim. )                                      | 787, 791, 792                          |
| ——— v. Eden (10 Mod. )                                   | 837                                   | More v. Scarborough, Earl of (2 Eq. Abr. )                                   | 500                                    |
| ——— v. Mills (7 Sim. )                                   | 44, 553, 555, 557, 569                | ——— v. Freeman ( Bunb. )                                                     | 506                                    |
| ——— v. Roberts (1 Russ. &amp; M. ; Taml. )        | 461                                   | ——— v. Ellis ( Bunb. ; 1 Bro. P. C. )                                 | 527                                    |
| ——— v. Farmer (1 Mer. )                                  | 246, 247                              | Mores v. Huish (5 Ves. )                                                     | 512, 513                               |
| Milltown, Lord, v. Trench (4 Cl. &amp; Fin. )            | 574                                   | Morgan, ex parte (12 Ves. )                                                  | 786                                    |
| Milner v. Singleton (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )               | 22                                    | ——— v. Brundrett (5 B. &amp; Ad. ; 2 Nev. &amp; M. )                  | 351                                    |
| Milnes v. Busk (2 Ves. jun. )                            | 514                                   | ——— v. Lewes (4 Dow. )                                                       | 942                                    |
| ——— v. Lawley (4 Pri. )                                  | 62                                    | ——— v. Scott (2 Ir. Eq. R. )                                                 | 800                                    |
| ——— v. Slater (8 Ves. )                                  | 229, 547, 823, 824                    | ——— v. Sherrard (1 Vern. )                                                   | 660                                    |
| Milroy v. Milroy (14 Sim. )                              | 96, 100, 102, 103                     | Morice v. Durham, Bishop of (10 Ves. )                                       | 65, 72, 81, 223, 225                   |
| Milsington, Lord, v. Mulgrave, Lord (3 & 5 Mad. )        | 544                                   | Morison v. Morison (4 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                       | 630                                    |
| Milton v. Edgeworth (5 Bro. P. C. )                      | 631                                   | Morley v. Bird (3 Ves. )                                                     | 469                                    |
| Milward v. Saville ( Dyer )                              | 367                                   | ——— v. Bridges (2 Col. )                                                     | 646, 814                               |
| Minuel v. Sarazine ( Mos. )                              | 606                                   | ——— v. Freer (6 Bing. )                                                      | 905                                    |
| Minter v. Wraith (2 Bla. )                               | 93                                    | ——— v. Morley (2 Ch. Ca. )                                                   | 937                                    |
| Mirehouse v. Scaife (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                  | 320, 321, 328, 329, 830, 832, (833)   | Morony v. O'Dea (1 Ball &amp; B. )                                           | 617, 632, 633, 814                     |
| Mitford v. Mitford (9 Ves. )                             | 475, 481, 483, 484, 879               | ——— v. Vincent (2 Moll. )                                                    | 921, 940                               |
| Mocatta v. Murgatroyd (1 P. Wms. )                       | 746, 765, 766, 814                    | Morret v. Paske (2 Atk. )                                                    | 300, 303, 657, 723, 735, 739, 740, 741 |
| Mogg v. Hodges (2 Ves. )                                 | 827                                   | ——— v. Westerne (2 Vern. )                                                   | 705                                    |
| ——— v. Mogg (1 Mer. )                                    | 155                                   | Morris v. Barrett (3 Y. &amp; J. )                                           | 207, 211                               |
| Moggridge v. Thackwell (7 & 13 Ves. )                    | 79, 247                               | ——— v. Ellis (7 Jur. )                                                       | 714                                    |
| Mohun v. Mohun (1 Swanst. )                              | 939                                   | ——— v. Elme (1 Ves. jun. )                                                   | 15                                     |
| Mole v. Mole (1 Dick. )                                  | 185, 462                              | ——— v. Howes (4 Hare ; 10 Jur. )                                      | 493, 524, 538                          |
| Molloy v. Irwin (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                     | 633                                   | ——— v. Livie (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                          | 865                                    |
|                                                                        |                                       | ——— v. Morris (2 Phill. )                                                    | 11                                     |
|                                                                        |                                       | ——— v. Morris (15 Sim. ; 11 Jur. )                                    | 571                                    |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxxiii

|                                                      | PAGE                              |                                                       | PAGE                   |
|------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------|------------------------|
| Morris v. Preston (7 Ves.)                           | 947                               | Neave v. Alderton (1 Eq. Abr.)                        | 828                    |
| Morse v. Morse (2 Sim.)                              | 149, 469, 470                     | Needham v. Needham (1 Phill.)                         | 691                    |
| — v. Royal (12 Ves.)                                 | 637                               | Needler v. Deeble (1 Ch. Ca.; 1 Eq. Abr.)             | 812                    |
| Mortimer v. Davies (10 Ves.)                         | 141, 220                          | Neesom v. Clarkson (Coop.; Sel. Ca. Ch.; 2 & 4 Hare)  | 671, 736, 757, 803     |
| — v. West (2 Sim.)                                   | 141, 150                          | Nelson, Earl, v. Bridport (8 Beav.)                   | 13                     |
| Mortimer v. Ireland (11 Jur.)                        | 38                                | — v. Callow (15 Sim.)                                 | 105                    |
| Mortlock v. Buller (10 Ves.)                         | 370                               | — v. Duncombe (9 Beav.)                               | 938                    |
| Morton v. Tewart (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                   | 22, 65, 73                        | Nelthorpe v. Law (13 Ves.)                            | 7                      |
| Mosely v. Mosely (Finch)                             | 85                                | Nelthrop v. Hill (1 Ch. Ca.)                          | 298                    |
| Moser v. Newman (6 Bing.)                            | 351                               | Nesbitt, ex parte (2 Sch. & Lef.)                     | 800                    |
| Moses v. Levi (3 Y. & C.)                            | 931, 932                          | — v. Tredennick (1 Ball & B.)                         | 302, 303               |
| — v. Macferlan (2 Burr.)                             | 5                                 | Nettleship, ex parte (5 Jur.; 2 M. D. & D.)           | 784                    |
| Mosley v. Ward (11 Ves.)                             | 922, 940                          | Nevill v. Nevill (2 Vern.)                            | 462                    |
| Mosley v. Hawke, Lord (2 Y. & J.)                    | 920                               | Neville v. Wilkinson (1 Bro.)                         | 359                    |
| Moss v. Gallimore (Doug.)                            | 646                               | Newbery v. James (2 Mer.)                             | 6                      |
| Mountford, ex parte (14 Ves.)                        | 781, 784, 785, 792                | Newcastle, Duke of, v. Lincoln, Countess of, (3 Ves.) | 159, 160               |
| — v. Scott (3 Mad.; Turn. & R.)                      | 760, 761, 782                     | Newcomb v. Bonham; see Bonham v. Newcomb.             |                        |
| Mousley v. Carr (4 Beav.)                            | 563, 564                          | Newdigate v. Newdigate (1 Sim.)                       | 571                    |
| Moyse v. Gyles (2 Vern.)                             | 206                               | Newenham v. Pemberton (11 Jur.)                       | 485, 525               |
| Mucklow v. Fuller (Jac.)                             | 919, 923, 940                     | Newland v. Champion (1 Ves.)                          | 360                    |
| Mulvany v. Dillon (1 Ball & B.)                      | 299                               | — v. Shephard (2 P. Wms.)                             | 124                    |
| Mumma v. Mumma (2 Vern.)                             | 216                               | Newlands v. Paynter (10 Sim.; 4 Myl. & Cr.)           | 39, 313, 481, 503, 525 |
| Munch v. Cockerell (5 Myl. & Cr.)                    | 933, 935, 936, 937                | Newman v. Barton (2 Vern.)                            | 297, 298               |
| Munday v. Howe, Lord (4 Bro.)                        | 466, 467                          | — v. Cartony (cited 2 Atk.)                           | 514                    |
| Murkin v. Phillipson (3 Myl. & K.)                   | 99                                | — v. Newman (1 Bro.)                                  | 588                    |
| Murless v. Franklin (1 Swanst.)                      | 215, 216, 217, 218                | — v. — (10 Sim.)                                      | 96, 97, 98, 100, 103   |
| Murray v. Addenbrooke (4 Russ.)                      | 98, 162                           | New River Comp. v. Graves (2 Vern.)                   | 26                     |
| — v. Barlee (3 Myl. & K.; 4 Sim.)                    | 324, 515, 516, 519, 526, 540, 868 | — v. Henley (2 Vern.)                                 | 26                     |
| — v. Elibank, Lord (10 Ves.)                         | 477, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492      | Newton v. Aldous (1804)                               | 795                    |
| — v. Harding (2 Bla. Rep.; 3 Wils.)                  | 624, 625                          | — v. Askew (1848)                                     | 886                    |
| — v. Jones (2 Ves. & Bea.)                           | 28                                | — v. Bennet (1 Bro.)                                  | 315, 318, 939, 940     |
| — v. Tancered (10 Sim.)                              | 171, 172                          | — v. Egmont, Earl of (5 Sim.)                         | 700, 705, 708          |
| Murrell v. Cox (2 Vern.)                             | 932                               | — v. GrandJunction Railway Comp. (16 M. & W.)         | 355                    |
| Musket v. Cliffe (12 Jur.)                           | 819                               | — v. Preston (Pre. Ch.)                               | 202                    |
| Muskerry v. Chinnery (Llo. & Goo. temp. Sugd.)       | 576, 577, 638                     | — v. Reid (4 Sim.)                                    | 521                    |
| Mutter v. Chauvel (1 Mer.)                           | 629                               | Nicholas v. Nicholas (Pre. Ch.)                       | 19                     |
| Myler v. Fitzpatrick (6 Mad.)                        | 47                                | Nicholl, ex parte (Turn. & R.)                        | 309                    |
| Nab v. Nab (10 Mod.)                                 | 21, 886                           | Nicholls v. Crisp (4 Ves.; Amb.)                      | 234, 243               |
| Nail v. Punter (5 Sim.)                              | 515, 920                          | — v. Danvers (2 Vern.)                                | 491, 511               |
| Nairn v. Majoribanks (cited 3 Russ.)                 | 573                               | — v. Judson (2 Atk.)                                  | 605, 606, 607          |
| Naldred v. Gilham (1 P. Wms.)                        | 882, 885, 889, 899                | Nichols v. Osborne (2 P. Wms.)                        | 171                    |
| Nanney v. Martin (1 Ch. Ca.)                         | 477                               | Nicholson, in re (1 Mad. P. & P.)                     | 782                    |
| Nanny v. Edwards (4 Russ.)                           | 687                               | — v. Hooper (4 Myl. & Cr.)                            | 772                    |
| Nantes v. Corrock (9 Ves.)                           | 513, 516, 518                     | — v. Wordsworth (2 Swanst.)                           | 919                    |
| Napier v. Napier (1 Dru. & War.)                     | 483, 485, 486, 491                | Nightingale v. Lawson (1 Bro.)                        | 546                    |
| Nash v. Dillon (1 Moll.)                             | 939                               | Nixon v. Nixon (2 J. & Lat.)                          | 497                    |
| — v. Nash (2 Mad.)                                   | 478                               | — v. Robinson (2 J. & Lat.)                           | 200                    |
| Naylor v. Arnitt (1 R. & M.)                         | 46                                | Noel v. Henley, Lord (7 Pri.)                         | 327, 337, 344, 569     |
| Neale v. Att.-Gen. (Mos.)                            | 688                               | — v. Noel (12 Pri.)                                   | 335                    |
| — v. Neale (1 Keen)                                  | 288                               | — v. Robinson (1 Vern.)                               | 8, 297, 298            |
| Neal's (Sir Paul) case (Pre. Ch. cited)              | 479, 502                          | Norcoll v. Gordon (14 Sim.)                           | 597                    |
| Neate v. Marlborough, Duke of (3 Myl. & Cr.; 9 Sim.) | 41, 643, 661, 662, 798, 799       | Norfolk's, Duke of, case (3 C. C.; 1 Eq. Abr.; Pol.)  | 24, 948                |
|                                                      |                                   | Norfolk, Duke of, v. Browne (Pre. Ch.)                | 198, 199, 884          |

|                                                                       | PAGE                    |                                                                                                                      | PAGE                              |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Norfolk, Duke of, v. Howard (1 Vern. )                  | 469                     | Ord v. White (3 Beav. )                                                                                | 855, 863                          |
| Norman v. Morrell (4 Ves. )                             | 833                     | Orde v. Heming (1 Vern. )                                                                              | 618                               |
| ——— v. Stiby (9 Beav. )                                 | 717                     | O'Reilly v. Featherstone (4 Bli. N. S. )                                                               | 650                               |
| Norris v. Le Neve (3 Atk. )                             | 303                     | Orford, Earl of, v. Albemarle, Earl of (12 Jur. )                                                      | 423                               |
| ——— v. Wilkinson (12 Ves. )                             | 781, 783, 784, 785      | Orley v. Trigg (2 Eq. Abr. ; 9 Mod. )                                                           | 619, 631                          |
| Norrish v. Marshall, (5 Mad. )                          | 656, 703, 864           | Ormonde v. Kynersley (5 Mad. ; 2 Sim. & St. )                                            | 305, (517), 571                   |
| North v. Compton (cited 2 Vern. )                       | 245                     | (See the observations of the Vice-Chancellor of England on this case in Kingham v. Lee , 15 Sim. 399). |                                   |
| ——— v. Crompton (1 Ch. Ca. )                            | 228                     | Orr v. Kaines (2 Ves. )                                                                                | 298                               |
| ——— v. Martin (6 Sim. )                                 | 150, 151                | ——— v. Newton (2 Cox )                                                                                 | 923, 926                          |
| ———, Lord, v. Purdon (2 Ves. )                          | 232                     | Orrok v. Binney ( Jac. )                                                                               | 309                               |
| ——— v. Williams (2 Ch. Ca. ; 1 Vern. )           | 877, 878                | Osborn v. Lea (9 Mod. )                                                                                | 639                               |
| Northumberland, Earl of, v. Egremont, Earl of (1 Eden ) | 26, 412, 414            | Osborne v. Foreman (2 Hare )                                                                           | 389                               |
| Norton v. Norton (3 P. Wms. )                           | 434                     | ——— v. Leeds, Duke of (5 Ves. )                                                                        | 447                               |
| ——— v. Turvill (2 P. Wms. )                             | 506, 515, 518, 533      | ——— v. Osborne (cited 19 Ves. )                                                                        | 572                               |
| Norway v. Rowe (19 Ves. )                               | 207, 648                | Osbourn v. Fallows (1 R. &amp; M. )                                                                    | 699                               |
| Nouaille v. Greenwood ( Turn. &amp; R. )                | 878                     | Osbreys v. Bury (1 B. &amp; B. )                                                                       | 948                               |
| Nourse v. Finch (1 Ves. jun. )                          | 244                     | Osgoode v. Stroode (2 P. Wms. )                                                                        | 280, 282, 284, 285                |
| ——— v. Tarworth ( Finch )                               | 25                      | Ossulton, Lord, v. Yarmouth, Lord (1 Vern. ; 2 Salk. )                                          | 656                               |
| Noy v. Ellis (2 Ch. Ca. )                               | 651                     | Oswell v. Probert (2 Ves. jun. )                                                                       | 484, 485                          |
| Noys v. Mordaunt (2 Vern. )                             | 586, 602, 603           | Otley v. Manning (9 East )                                                                             | 288                               |
| Nugent v. Gifford (1 Atk. )                             | 375, 378, 381, 384      | Otway v. Otway (cited 2 Ves. jun. )                                                                    | 69                                |
| Nun v. Wilsmore (8 T. R. )                              | 282, 283, 290, 291, 350 | Overton v. Banister (3 Hare )                                                                          | 766                               |
| Nunn v. Ladbroke (8 T. R. )                             | 520                     | Oursell, ex parte ( Amb. )                                                                             | 298                               |
| Nurse v. Craig (1 Bos. &amp; P. N. R. )                 | 518                     | Ouseley v. Anstruther (10 Beav. )                                                                      | 925                               |
| ——— v. Yerworth (3 Swanst. )                            | 487                     | Oxenden v. Compton (2 Ves. jun. )                                                                      | 263                               |
| Nyssen v. Gretton (2 Y. &amp; C. )                      | 321, 328                | ——— v. Oxenden ( Pre. Ch. ; 2 Vern. )                                                           | 486, 491, 511                     |
| Oakes, ex parte (5 Jur. )                               | 784                     | Oxenham v. Esdaile (2 Y. &amp; J. )                                                                    | 796                               |
| ——— v. Strachey (7 Jur. ; 13 Sim. )              | 553                     | Oxford, Earl of, v. Rodney, Lady (14 Ves. )                                                            | 336, 819                          |
| Oates v. Jackson (2 Stra. )                             | 420                     | Oxford, University of, v. Clifton (1 Eden )                                                            | 153                               |
| O'Brien v. O'Brien (1 Moll. )                           | 932                     | Oxwith v. Plummer (2 Vern. ; 5 Bac. Abr. )                                                      | 640, 756, 759                     |
| O'Callaghan v. Cooper (5 Ves. )                         | 940                     | Owden v. Campbell (8 Sim. )                                                                            | 533                               |
| Ockenden, ex parte (1 Atk. )                            | 774                     | Owens v. Dickenson ( Cr. &amp; Ph. )                                                                   | 324, 361, 515, 516, 518, 519, 540 |
| Oddie v. Woodford (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                   | 139                     | Owen v. Williams ( Amb. )                                                                              | 208, 808                          |
| O'Fallon v. Dillon (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                 | 852                     | Pace v. Marsden ( Seton on Decrees )                                                                   | 679                               |
| Offley v. Offley ( Pre. Ch. )                           | 501, 502                | Pack v. Clinton, Lord (12 Ves. )                                                                       | 355, 638, 666, 671, 695, 698      |
| Oglander v. Baston (1 Vern. )                           | 477                     | Packer v. Wyndham ( Pre. Ch. )                                                                         | 47, 478, 491                      |
| Ogle v. Carthorn (9 Jur. )                              | 508                     | Packham v. Gregory (4 Hare )                                                                           | 83                                |
| ——— v. Cook (1 Bro. )                                   | 234                     | Page v. Adam (4 Beav. )                                                                                | 382, 383                          |
| O'Gorman v. Comyn (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                  | 290, 408, 799           | ——— v. Broom (4 Russ. )                                                                                | 59                                |
| O'Hara v. O'Neil (2 Eq. Abr. ; 7 Bro. P. C. )    | 203                     | ——— v. Horne (9 Beav. )                                                                                | 140                               |
| O'Henlihy v. Hedges (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                | 208                     | ——— v. Leapingwell (18 Ves. )                                                                          | 316, 446, 579                     |
| Ohrly v. Jenkins (11 Jur. )                             | 691                     | ——— v. Linwood (4 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                                                     | 806                               |
| Okeden v. Okeden (1 Atk. )                              | 397, 407, 408, 422      | ——— v. Way (3 Beav. )                                                                                  | 90                                |
| Oldfield v. Oldfield (1 Vern. )                         | 344                     | Pagett v. Hoskins ( Gilb. ; Pre. Ch. )                                                          | 206, 579                          |
| Oldham v. Hughes (2 Atk. )                              | 256, 263                | Paice v. Canterbury, Archbishop of (14 Ves. )                                                          | 225, 247                          |
| ——— v. Slater (3 Sim. )                                 | 244                     | Pain v. Smith (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                                                                       | 791, 795                          |
| Oliver v. Brighthouse (cited 1 Ves. )                   | 609                     | Paine v. Wagner (12 Sim. )                                                                             | 470, 472                          |
| ——— v. Court (8 Pri. )                                  | 370, 919                | Palin v. Hills (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                                                                      | 536, (537), (538)                 |
| Omerod v. Hardman (5 Ves. )                             | 344                     | Palmer v. Bate (2 Bro. &amp; B. )                                                                      | 614                               |
| Ommaney, ex parte (10 Sim. )                            | 670, 699                | ——— v. Carlisle (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                                                                    | 674, 702                          |
| ——— v. Butcher ( Turn. &amp; R. )                       | 80                      |                                                                                                                      |                                   |
| Oneal v. Mead (1 P. Wms. )                              | 820, 838                |                                                                                                                      |                                   |
| O'Neill v. Lucas (2 Keen )                              | 184                     |                                                                                                                      |                                   |
| Onge v. Truelock (2 Moll. )                             | 844                     |                                                                                                                      |                                   |
| Orby, Lady C., v. Mahun, Lord (2 Vern. )                | 574                     |                                                                                                                      |                                   |
| Ord v. Noel (5 Mad. )                                   | 38                      |                                                                                                                      |                                   |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxxv

|                                                             | PAGE                                        |                                                                                                                                      | PAGE                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| Palmer v. Danby ( Eq. Abr. ; Pre. Ch. )       | 661                                         | Pearson v. Morgan (2 Bro. ; see Richman v. Morgan)                                                                            | 436                               |
| — v. Fraser (3 Y. &amp; C. )                         | 527                                         | — v. Pearson (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                                                                             | 566                               |
| — v. Graves (1 Keen )                                | 322                                         | Pearson v. Stephen (2 Dow. &amp; C. ; 5 Bli. )                                                                         | 146, 471                          |
| — v. Holford (4 Russ. )                              | 107, 181                                    | Peat v. Crane (2 Dick. )                                                                                                      | 934                               |
| — v. Jones (1 Vern. )                                | 924                                         | Pechell v. Watson (8 M. &amp; W. )                                                                                            | 872                               |
| — v. Mitchell (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                     | 208, 922                                    | Peele, ex parte (6 Ves. )                                                                                              | 279                               |
| — v. Neave (11 Ves. )                                | 359                                         | Pemberton, ex parte (18 Ves. )                                                                                         | 800                               |
| — v. Wheeler (2 Ball &amp; B. )                      | 638                                         | Pendlebury v. Walker (4 Y. &amp; C. )                                                                                         | 359, 843, 844                     |
| — v. Young (1 Vern. )                                | 208, 299                                    | Penfold v. Bouch (4 Hare )                                                                                                    | 47                                |
| Pannell v. Taylor ( Turn. &amp; R. )                 | 533                                         | Penn v. Baltimore, Lord (1 Ves. )                                                                                             | 6, 32                             |
| Papillon v. Papillon (11 Sim. )                      | 430                                         | Penner v. Jemmatt (2 Bro. )                                                                                                   | 788, 789                          |
| — v. Voice (2 P. Wms. )                              | 132, 133, 134                               | Penny v. Pretor (9 Sim. )                                                                                                     | 680                               |
| Paris v. Paris (10 Ves. )                            | 569                                         | — v. Turner (2 Phill. )                                                                                                       | 420                               |
| Parker v. Ash (1 Vern. )                             | 62                                          | — v. Watts (13 Jur. 459) (658), 754, 759                                                                                      |                                   |
| — v. Brooke (9 Ves. )                                | 195, 197, 507                               | Penrhyn v. Hughes (5 Ves. )                                                                                                   | 551, 649, 674, 714                |
| — v. Calcraft (6 Mad. )                              | 648                                         | Pepperv. Bloomfield (2 Con. &amp; Law. )                                                                                      | 330, (331), 840                   |
| — v. Carter (4 Hare )                                | 877                                         | Perdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. )                                                                                                  | 863, 864                          |
| — v. Dillon                                                 | 761, 762                                    | Perfect v. Curzon, Lord (5 Mad. )                                                                                             | 399                               |
| — v. Fearnley (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                    | 322, 329                                    | — ex parte (1 Mont. )                                                                                                  | 796                               |
| — v. Housefield (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                   | 791, 792, 793, (795)                        | Perkins v. Bayntun (1 Bro. )                                                                                                  | 922                               |
| — v. Marchant (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. ; Phill. ) | 321, 336                                    | — v. Bradley (1 Hare )                                                                                                        | 6, 32, 761, 773                   |
| Parkes v. Bott (9 Sim. )                             | 855                                         | Perkin v. Stafford (10 Sim. )                                                                                                 | 691                               |
| — v. White (11 Ves. )                                | 197, 493, 501, 504, 506, 512, 513, 514, 525 | Perrot v. Treby ( Pre. Ch. )                                                                                                  | 939                               |
| Parks v. Wilson (10 Mod. )                           | 254                                         | Perry v. Barker (8 & 13 Ves. )                                                                                                | 347, 682, 683, 684                |
| Parnell v. Taylor ( Turn. &amp; R. )                 | 15                                          | — v. Marston (2 Bro. )                                                                                                        | 622, 654, 711                     |
| Parrott v. Congreve (13 Jur. )                       | 776                                         | — v. Meddowcroft (4 Beav. )                                                                                                   | 621                               |
| Parry v. Carwarden (2 Dick. )                        | 289                                         | — v. Philips (4 & 17 Ves. )                                                                                                   | 205                               |
| — v. Wright (5 Russ. ; 1 Sim. &amp; St. )     | 657, 745, 746, 747                          | — v. Whitehead (6 Ves. )                                                                                                      | 185                               |
| Parsons v. Baker (18 Ves. )                          | 77                                          | Peter v. Beverley (10 Peter, R., U. S. )                                                                                      | 368                               |
| — v. Briddock (2 Vern. )                             | 362, 843                                    | — v. Rich (1 Ch. Rep. )                                                                                                       | 844                               |
| — v. Freeman ( Amb. )                                | 336                                         | — v. Russel (1 Eq. Abr. ; 2 Vern. ; Gilb. )                                                                     | 767                               |
| Parteriche v. Powlet (2 Atk. ; West )         | 207, 469, 515, 573, 842                     | Peters v. Erving (3 Bro. )                                                                                                    | 834                               |
| Partyn v. Roberts ( Amb. )                           | 140                                         | Petit, ex parte (2 G. &amp; J. )                                                                                       | 725                               |
| Pasley v. Freeman (3 T. R. )                         | 766                                         | Petre v. Esspinasse (2 Myl. &amp; K. ) (55), 56, 868                                                                          | 883, 904                          |
| Passingham v. Sherborn (9 Beav. )                    | 300                                         | — v. Petre (3 Atk. )                                                                                                          | 462                               |
| Paterson v. Tash (2 Stra. )                          | 376                                         | Pett v. Fellows (1 Swanst. )                                                                                                  | 170, 171, 186, 46,                |
| Pattison v. Hawkesworth (10 Beav. )                  | 709                                         | Pettward v. Prescott (7 Ves. )                                                                                                | 588                               |
| Patton v. Randall (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                 | 367                                         | Petty v. Styward (9 Ves. )                                                                                                    | 214                               |
| Paul v. Birch (2 Atk. )                              | 298                                         | — v. Wathen (1849)                                                                                                                   | 800, 801                          |
| Payne, ex parte (2 Y. &amp; C. )              | 71                                          | Peyton v. Bury (2 P. Wms. )                                                                                                   | 88                                |
| Paul, St., v. Dudley and Ward, Visct. (15 Ves. )     | 345                                         | Phene v. Gillan (5 Hare )                                                                                                     | 774                               |
| Pawlett v. Att.-Gen. ( Hardr. )                      | 32, 643, 663                                | Philanthropic Soc. v. Kemp (4 Beav. )                                                                                         | 233, 235                          |
| Pawlet v. Delaval (2 Ves. )                          | 514                                         | Philipps v. Philipps (8 Beav. )                                                                                               | 28                                |
| Payler, ex parte (16 Ves. )                   | 793                                         | Phillipo v. Munning (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                                                                       | 48, 62, 308, 937                  |
| Peachy v. Somerset, Duke of, ( Pre. Ch. )            | 639                                         | Phillips v. Bateman (16 East )                                                                                                | 279                               |
| Peck v. Cardwell (2 Beav. )                          | 803                                         | — v. Brydges (3 Ves. )                                                                                                        | 270                               |
| Peacock v. Burt, (cited 8 Sim. ; Coote )      | 730, 737                                    | — v. Chamberlaine (4 Ves. )                                                                                                   | 583                               |
| — v. Monk (2 Ves. )                                  | 492, 493, 498, 506, 513, 515                | — v. Eastwood ( Llo. &amp; Goo. temp. Sug. )                                                                                  | 324, 343, 620, 626                |
| — v. Spooner (2 Vern. )                              | 151, 152, 162                               | — v. Evans (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                                                                             | 671                               |
| Peacocke v. Pares (2 Keen )                          | 411, 413, 415                               | — v. Garth (3 Bro. )                                                                                                          | 76                                |
| Pearce ex parte (1 Buck )                     | 782                                         | — v. Phillips (2 Freem. )                                                                                                     | 934                               |
| — v. Baron ( Jac. )                                  | 143                                         | — v. — (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                                                                                                     | 209, 232, 235, 237, 238, 239, 240 |
| — v. Edmeades (1 Youn. )                             | 420                                         | Phillipson v. Gatty (13 Jur. ; 6 Hare )                                                                                | 49, 925, 954                      |
| — v. Loman (3 Ves. )                                 | 847                                         | Phipps v. Ackers (9 Cl. &amp; Fin. ; 4 Man. &amp; G. ; 9 Bli. N. S. ; 3 Cl. &amp; Fin. ; 5 Sim. ) | 99, 141                           |
| — v. Slocombe (3 Y. &amp; C. )                       | 355                                         |                                                                                                                                      |                                   |
| Pearse v. Green (1 Jac. &amp; W. )                   | 921, 922, 940                               |                                                                                                                                      |                                   |

|                                                                   | PAGE                |                                                                  | PAGE                    |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Phipps v. Anglesea, Lord (1 Fonb. ; 1 Mad. ) | 489                 | Portlock v. Gardner (1 Hare )                      | 942                     |
| —— v. Bath & Wells, Bp. of (2 Dick. )               | 689                 | Portmore, Lord, v. Morris (2 Bro. )                | 620, 625                |
| —— v. Mulgrave, Lord (3 Ves. )                      | 149, 150            | Postlethwaite v. Blythe (3 Mad. )                  | 653                     |
| Phipson v. Turner (9 Sim. )                         | 896                 | —— v. Mounsey (6 Hare )                            | 953                     |
| Physician's case (1 Vent. )                                | 277                 | Pothonier v. Dawson ( Holt's N. P. )               | 771, 774                |
| Pickering v. Keeling (1 Ch. Rep. )                  | 886                 | Potter v. Chapman ( Amb. ; 1 Dick. )        | 88                      |
| —— v. Pickering (4 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                 | 43,                 | Poulet v. Poulet (1 Vern. ; 2 Vent. )       | 396, 399,               |
| (2 Beav. )                                                 | 552, 554, 555       |                                                                  | 421                     |
| —— v. Stamford, Lord (2 & 3 Ves.                    |                     | Pounset v. Humphreys (1 C. P. Coop. )              | 802                     |
| jun. )                                                     | 233, 598            | Povye's case (2 Freem. )                                  | 834                     |
| Pickstock v. Lyster (3 M. &amp; S. )                | 350, 351            | Powel v. Cleaver (2 Bro. )                         | 428, 429, 430, 431,     |
| Pickup v. Atkinson (4 Hare )                        | 43, 552, 561        |                                                                  | 435                     |
| Pierce v. Thornely (2 Sim. )                        | 477, 483            | Powell v. Evans (5 Ves. )                          | 923, 926, 934           |
| Piercy v. Roberts (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                | 89, 91              | —— v. Glover (3 P. Wms. )                          | 657                     |
| Piers v. Piers (1 Ves. )                            | 573                 | —— v. Knowler (2 Atk. )                            | 873                     |
| Pierson v. Garnet (2 Bro. )                         | 52, 66, 70, 76      | —— v. Powell ( Pre. Ch. )                          | 680                     |
| —— v. Robinson (3 Swanst. )                         | 697, 797            | —— v. Price (2 P. Wms. )                           | 139, 141, 195           |
| Pieschel v. Paris (2 Sim. &amp; St. )               | 247                 | —— v. Robins (7 Ves. )                             | 321                     |
| Piety v. Stace (4 Ves. )                            | 922, 939, 940       | —— v. Squire ( Rolls , 1841)                       | 107                     |
| Pigot v. Bullock (1 Ves. jun. ; 3 Bro. )     | 570                 | Power v. Bailey (1 Ball &amp; B. )                 | 498, 513                |
| Peggin v. Cheetham (2 Hare )                        | 687                 | Powis v. Burdett (9 Ves. )                         | 400, 401                |
| Pike v. Hoare (2 Eden )                             | 8                   | —— v. Capron (4 Sim. )                             | 105                     |
| —— v. White (3 Bro. )                               | 431                 | —— v. Corbet (3 Atk. )                             | 324                     |
| Pilkington v. Cuthbartson                                  | 506, 507            | Powlet v. Herbert (1 Ves. jun. )                   | 932, 940                |
| —— v. Shaller (2 Vern. )                            | 614                 | Powys v. Mansfield, Lord (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )       | 185,                    |
| Pile v. Pile (1 Eq. Abr. ; 1 Ch. Rep. )      | 444                 |                                                                  | 394, 440, 443           |
| Pinbury v. Elkin (1 P. Wms. )                       | 150                 | Praed v. Gardiner (2 Cox )                         | 773                     |
| Pinket v. Wright (2 Hare )                          | 40, 204             | —— v. Hull (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                     | 686, 687                |
| Piper v. Piper (3 My. &amp; K. )                    | 85                  | Prankerd v. Prankerd (1 Sim. &amp; St. )           | 215                     |
| Pipon v. Pipon ( Amb. )                             | 12                  | Pratt v. Church (4 Beav. )                         | 466                     |
| Pitcher v. Rigby (9 Pri. )                          | 630                 | —— v. Sladden (14 Ves. )                           | 225, 244, 245, 364      |
| Pitt v. Pitt ( Turn. &amp; R. )                     | 307, 308, 345       | Prebble v. Boghurst (1 Swanst. )                   | 506                     |
| Plaskett v. Dillon (2 Bli. N. S. )                  | 799                 | Prendergast v. Eyre (1 Llo. &amp; Goo. )           | 48                      |
| Platt v. Platt (3 Sim. )                            | 605                 | —— v. Lushington (5 Hare )                         | 355, 923                |
| —— v. Sprigg (2 Vern. )                             | 950                 | Preston v. Melville (15 Sim. )                     | 12, 42                  |
| Playters v. Abbott (2 Myl. &amp; K. )               | 370, 548            | —— v. Wilson (11 Jur. ; 5 Hare )            | 665                     |
| Plowden v. Thorpe (7 Cl. &amp; Fin. )               | 714                 | Prevost v. Clark (2 Mad. )                         | 65, 78                  |
| Plumb v. Fluitt (2 Anstr. )                         | 755, 756, 758, 767, | Price v. Anderson (15 Sim. )                       | 569                     |
| (787), 788, 789, 790, (795)                                       |                     | —— v. Carver (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                   | 681, 792, 793           |
| Plunkett v. Lewis (3 Hare )                         | 46, 428, 433, 435,  | —— v. Copner (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                   | 711                     |
| 447, (458), 605, 608                                              |                     | —— v. Dewhurst (8 Sim. ; 4 Myl. &amp; Cr. ) | 9, 10,                  |
| Plunket v. Penson (2 Atk. )                         | 316, 643, 701, 702  |                                                                  | 12, 13, 14, 15, 16      |
| Plymouth v. Hickman (2 Vern. )                      | 202                 | —— v. Fastnedge ( Amb. )                           | 724, 725, 726           |
| Pocock v. Lee (2 Vern. )                            | 515                 | —— v. Hathaway (6 Mad. )                           | 232                     |
| —— v. Reddington (5 Ves. )                          | 940                 | —— v. North (1 Phil. ; 4 Y. &amp; C. )      | 320, 334                |
| Packington v. Barrow ( Pre. Ch. )                   | 660                 | —— v. Perrie (2 Free. )                            | 618, 620                |
| Pockley v. Pockley (1 Vern. )                       | 819, 821            | —— v. Strange (6 Mad. )                            | 536                     |
| Podmore v. Gunning (7 Sim. )                        | 21, 68, 279         | —— v. Williams ( Coop. )                           | 648                     |
| Pole v. Pole (1 Ves. )                              | 217, 218            | Prichard v. Ames ( Turn. &amp; R. )                | 508                     |
| —— v. Somers, Lord (6 Ves. )                        | 435, 593, 595       | —— v. Murray (12 Jur. )                            | 953                     |
| Pollen v. Husband (1 P. Wms. )                      | 350, 353            | Priddy v. Rose (3 Mer. )                           | 614, 858, 863, 867      |
| Polley v. Seymour (2 Y. &amp; C. )                  | 259, 545, 636       | Pride v. Fooks (2 Beav. )                          | 183, 184, 299, 927, 939 |
| Pomfret, Earl, v. Windsor, Lord (2 Ves. )           | 728,                | Prince v. Stebbing (2 Ves. )                       | 609, 610, 611           |
| 745                                                               |                     | Prior v. Hill (4 Bro. )                            | 483                     |
| Ponten v. Page (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. )                | 770                 | Pritchard v. Arbouin (3 Russ. )                    | 233                     |
| Poole v. Pass (1 Beav. )                            | 37, 939             | —— v. Quinchant (5 Ves. )                          | 87                      |
| Poor v. Miall (6 Mad. )                             | 229                 | Procter v. Bath and Wells, Bishop of (2 H.         |                         |
| Pope v. Garland (4 Y. &amp; C. )                    | 758                 | Bl. )                                                     | 107, 125                |
| —— v. Onslow (2 Vern. )                             | 666, 726            | —— v. Cowper (2 Vern. ; Pre. Ch. )          | 656, 710                |
| —— v. Pope (10 Sim. )                               | 68, 69, 70, 225     | —— v. Oates (2 Atk. )                              | 711                     |
| —— v. Whitcombe (3 Mer. )                           | 75, 76              | Prosser, ex parte (2 Bro. )                        | 16                      |
| Porey v. Marsh (2 Vern. )                           | 834                 | —— v. Edmonds (1 Y. &amp; C. )                     | 863, 868, 869,          |
| Portarlington v. Soulby (3 Myl. &amp; K. )          | 7                   |                                                                  | 872, 873                |
| Porter v. Fox (6 Sim. )                             | 107                 | Prouting v. Hammond (8 Taunt. )                    | 914                     |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxxvii

|                                                                                                                                     | PAGE     |                                                                                | PAGE     |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------|
| Pryce v. Burn (5 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                                     | 305      | Raven v. Waite (1 Wils. C.C. ) . . . . .                         | 461      |
| Pugh v. Smith (2 Atk. ) . . . . .                                                                                     | 602      | —— v. White (1 Swanst. ) . . . . .                               | 186      |
| Pullen v. Cresy (3 Anstr. ) . . . . .                                                                                 | 606      | Ravenscroft v. Frisby (1 Coll. ) . . . . .                       | 937      |
| Pulsford v. Hunter (3 Bro. ) . . . . .                                                                                | 100      | Ravenshew v. Hollier (7 Sim. ) . . . . .                         | 195, 777 |
| Pulteney v. Darlington, Lord (1 Bro. ; 7 Bro. P. C. ) 254, 256, 265, 270, 271, 595                             |          | Ravald v. Russell (1 You. ) 306, 664, 709, 714                   |          |
| Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft (18 Ves. ) 52, 282, 285, 289, 291, 728, 883, 889, 898                                        |          | Rawe v. Chichester ( Amb. ) 208, 209, 304; (1 Bro. ) 507  |          |
| Purcel v. Macnamara (14 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                              | 62       | Rawlings v. Jennings (13 Ves. ) . . . . .                        | 583      |
| Purcell v. Blennerhassett (3 J. &amp; Lat. ) . . . . .                                                                | 953      | Rawlins v. Powel (1 P. Wms. ) . . . . .                          | 607      |
| Purdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. ) 476, 477, 479, 487                                                                       |          | Ray, ex parte (1 Mad. ) . . . . .                                | 507      |
| Purefoy v. Purefoy (1 Vern. ) : . . . .                                                                               | 352      | —— v. Adams (3 Myl. &amp; K. ) . . . . .                         | 69       |
| —— v. Rogers (2 Lev. ) . . . . .                                                                                      | 218      | Rayner v. Mowbray (3 Bro. ) . . . . .                            | 76, 79   |
| Purson v. Garnett (2 Bro. ) . . . . .                                                                                 | 411      | Raynor v. Oastler (6 Mad. ) . . . . .                            | 710      |
| Pushman v. Filliter (3 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                               | 69, 81   | Read v. Crop (1 Bro. ) . . . . .                                 | 596      |
| Putland v. Burrows (5 Bro. P. C. ) . . . . .                                                                          | 639      | —— v. Snell (2 Atk. ) . . . . .                                  | 162      |
| Pybus v. Smith (1 Ves. jun. ; 3 Bro. ) 512, 513, 522, 523, 924                                                 |          | —— v. Willis (1 Coll. ) . . . . .                                | 155      |
| Pye, ex parte (18 Ves. ) 29, (53), (55), 57, 285, 394, 429, 432, 898, 909                                             |          | Reade v. Sparkes (1 Moll. ) . . . . .                            | 699      |
| —— v. Daubuz (3 Bro. ; 2 Dick. ) 639, 640, 679, 783                                                            |          | Reake v. Lea (2 Freem. ) . . . . .                               | 357      |
| —— v. George (1 P. Wms. ; 2 Salk. ) 40, 948, 949                                                               |          | Reddington v. Reddington (3 Ridg. P.C. ) 216                     |          |
| Pym v. Lockyer (12 Sim. ; 5 Myl. &amp; Cr. ) 91, 394, 430, 432                                                 |          | Redshaw v. Newbold (12 Jur. ) . . . . .                          | 793      |
| Pyot v. Pyot (1 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                                      | 73       | Reed v. Norris (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. ) . . . . .                     | 208      |
| Quarrell v. Beckford (13 Ves. ; 1 Madd. ) 15, 645, 649, 705, 741, 807, 809, 811, 812                           |          | Reech v. Kennegal (1 Ves. ) . . . . .                            | 279      |
| Rackham v. Siddall (12 Jur. ) . . . . .                                                                               | 364      | Reed v. O'Brien (7 Beav. ) . . . . .                             | 55, 887  |
| Radcliffe v. Eccles (1 Keen. ) . . . . .                                                                              | 680      | Reeks v. Postlethwaite ( Coop. ) . . . . .                       | 711      |
| —— v. Warrington (12 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                                 | 642      | Rees v. Keith (11 Sim. ) . . . . .                               | 477, 478 |
| Radnor v. Vendebendy ( Show. P. C. ) . . . . .                                                                        | 734      | —— v. Williams (1 De G. &amp; S. ) . . . . .                     | 564, 925 |
| Raffety v. King (1 Keen ) 664, 710, 711, 714, 920                                                                     |          | Reeve v. Hicks (2 Sim. &amp; St. ) . . . . .                     | 306, 664 |
| Raikes v. Hall (cited 3 F. &amp; C. ) . . . . .                                                                       | 676      | Reeves v. Att.-Gen. (2 Atk. ) . . . . .                          | 32       |
| —— v. Ward (1 Hare ; 5 Jur. ) 2, 20, 77, 88, 420, 463, 464, 470                                                |          | —— v. Creswick (3 F. &amp; C. ) 545, 547, 549, 550               |          |
| Rakestraw v. Brewer (2 P. Wms. ) . . . . .                                                                            | 808      | —— v. Glastonbury Canal Company (14 Sim. ) . . . . .             | 687      |
| Ram, ex parte (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. ) . . . . .                                                                           | 309      | Reg. v. Chambers (4 F. &amp; C. ) . . . . .                      | 794      |
| Ramsbottom v. Wallis ( Coote ) . . . . .                                                                              | 676      | Reid v. Shergold (10 Ves. ) . . . . .                            | 493, 496 |
| Ramsden v. Langley (2 Vern. ; 1 Eq. Abr. ) . . . . .                                                           | 813, 814 | Reith v. Seymour (4 Russ. ) . . . . .                            | 495, 496 |
| Rancliffe v. Parkyns (6 Dowl. ) 410, 586, 592, 593, 603                                                               |          | Rennie v. Ritchie (12 Cl. &amp; Fin. ) 512, 522                  |          |
| Rand v. Cartwright (1 Ch. Ca. ) . . . . .                                                                             | 660      | Renvoize v. Cooper (6 Mad. ; 1 Sim. &amp; St. ) . . . . . | 655, 687 |
| Randall v. Bookey (2 Vern. ; Pre. Ch. ) 223, 228, 232, 234                                                     |          | Reresby v. Newland (2 P. Wms. ) . . . . .                        | 403      |
| —— v. Errington (10 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                                  | 637, 943 | Rex v. Benson (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. ) . . . . .                    | 786      |
| —— v. Morgan (12 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                                     | 21       | —— v. Vaughan (4 Burr. ) . . . . .                               | 15       |
| —— v. Randall (7 Sim. ) . . . . .                                                                                     | 211      | Reynard v. Spence (4 Beav. ) . . . . .                           | 599      |
| —— v. Russell (3 Mer. ) 299, 303, 304                                                                                 |          | Reynish v. Martin (3 Atk. ) . . . . .                            | 462      |
| —— v. Willis (5 Ves. ) . . . . .                                                                                      | 141      | Reynold v. Jones (2 Sim. &amp; St. ) . . . . .                   | 196      |
| Randoll v. Doe d. Roake and others (5 Dow. ) . . . . .                                                                | 95       | Reynoldson v. Perkins ( Amb. ) . . . . .                         | 680, 707 |
| Ranelaugh v. Hayes (1 Vern. ) . . . . .                                                                               | 845      | Rich v. Cockell (9 Ves. ) . 494, 506, 507, 508, 589, 591, 603    |          |
| Ranson v. Sacheverel (2 Ch. Ca. ) . . . . .                                                                           | 729      | Richards, ex parte (1 J. &amp; W. ) . . . . .                    | 670      |
| Raphael v. Boehm (1 Mad. ; 11 Ves. ; 13 Ves. ) (190), (191), 192, 809, 811, (921), (922), 932, 939, 940 |          | —— v. Bergavenny, Lady (2 Vern. ) 145, 146, 157                  |          |
| Rashley v. Masters (1 Ves. jun. ) 264, 268, 269, 270, 271                                                             |          | —— v. Chambers (10 Ves. ) 477, 487, 492, 512, 514, 534           |          |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Cooper (5 Beav. ) . . . . .                                | 674, 708 |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Syms ( Barnard. ; 2 Eq. Abr. ) 640, 749, 913        |          |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | Richardson v. Chapman (5 & 7 Bro. P. C. ) 51, 82, 83, 943        |          |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Greese (3 Atk. ) . . . . .                                 | 606, 607 |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Hastings (7 Beav. ) . . . . .                              | 695      |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Horton (7 Beav. ) 290, 313, 315, 388                       |          |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Moore (6 Mad. ) . . . . .                                  | 551      |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | —— v. Nixon (2 J. &amp; Lat. ) . . . . .                         | 667      |
|                                                                                                                                     |          | Rickabe v. Garwood (8 Beav. ) . . . . .                          | 420      |

|                                                                                 | PAGE                                  |                                                                               | PAGE                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Ricketts v. Bell (11 Jur. ; 10 Law J. ; 1 De G. &amp; S. ) | 575                                   | Robinson v. Rosher (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                              | 787, 791                |
| ——— v. Turquand (1 H. L. Ca. )                                           | 595                                   | ——— v. Smith (6 Sim. )                                                 | 539                     |
| Rickman v. Morgan (1 & 2 Bro. )                                          | 435, 436, 438, 456                    | ——— v. Taylor (2 Bro. ; 1 Ves. jun. )                           | 237, 238, 256           |
| Rider v. Jones (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                    | 801, 814                              | ——— v. Tickell (8 Ves. )                                               | 463                     |
| ——— v. Kidder (10 Ves. )                                                 | 202, 215, 218, 219, 220, 597          | ——— v. Tonge (1 P. Wms. )                                              | 827                     |
| ——— v. Wager (2 P. Wms. )                                                | 820, 821                              | ——— v. Waddelow (8 Sim. )                                              | 74, 473                 |
| Ridgeway v. Munkettrick (1 Dr. &amp; War. )                              | 151                                   | ——— v. Wood (5 Beav. )                                                 | 48                      |
| Ridgway v. Roberts (4 Hare )                                             | 221, 775                              | Roch v. Callen (6 Hare )                                               | 953                     |
| Ridout v. Lewis (1 Atk. )                                                | 501                                   | Roche, in re (2 Dr. &amp; War. )                                | 947                     |
| ——— v. Plymouth, Earl of (2 Atk. )                                       | 407, 548                              | ——— v. O'Brien (1 Ball &amp; B. )                                      | 62                      |
| Rielly v. Fitzgerald (1 Dru. )                                           | 397                                   | Rochford v. Fitzmaurice (1 Con. &amp; Law. )                           | 134, 135, 136, 137      |
| Rigden v. Vallier (2 Ves. ; 3 Atk. )                              | 206, 214                              | Rocke v. Hart (11 Ves. )                                               | 922, 927, 940           |
| Right v. Creber (5 Barn. &amp; C. )                                      | 150                                   | ——— v. Rocke (9 Beav. )                                                | 184                     |
| Rightson v. Overton (2 Freem. )                                          | 650                                   | Rockwood's case (1 Leon. )                                             | 279                     |
| Riky v. Kemmis (1 Llo. &amp; Goo. )                                      | 927                                   | Roddy v. Williams (3 J. &amp; Lat. )                                   | 675, 889                |
| Rilley v. Dannel (1 Danv. Abr. )                                         | 276                                   | Rodgers v. Marshall (17 Ves. )                                         | 284, 431                |
| Ring v. Hardwick (4 Jur. ; 2 Beav. )                              | 98, 116, 127, 183                     | Rodney v. Chambers (2 East )                                           | 529                     |
| Ripley v. Waterworth (7 Ves. )                                           | 6, 209, 234, 536, 538                 | Roe v. Bedford (4 M. &amp; S. )                                        | 135                     |
| Rippon v. Dawding ( Amb. )                                               | 498                                   | ——— v. Green (2 Wils. )                                                | 145, 150                |
| ——— v. Norton (2 Beav. )                                                 | 91                                    | ——— v. Mitton (2 Wils. )                                               | 290                     |
| Rishton v. Cobb (9 Sim. )                                                | 490                                   | Rogers, ex parte (2 Mad. )                                      | 154                     |
| Rivers, Earl of, v. Derby, Earl (2 Vern. )                               | 397, 407, 421                         | ——— v. Gibson (1 Ves. )                                                | 172, 173                |
| Roach v. Callen (12 Jur. )                                               | 618                                   | ——— v. Grazebrook (8 Q. B. )                                           | 615                     |
| ——— v. Hammond ( Pre. Ch. )                                              | 74, 75                                | ——— v. Maule (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                    | 33, 663                 |
| ——— v. Wadham (6 East )                                                  | 523                                   | ——— v. Rogers ( Forrest. ; 3 P. Wms. )                          | 227, 228, 232           |
| Roache v. Garvan (1 Ves. )                                               | 462                                   | ——— v. Skillicorne ( Amb. )                                            | 383, 384, 387           |
| Roadley v. Dixon (3 Russ. )                                              | 596                                   | ——— v. Soutten (2 Keen. )                                              | 185, 953                |
| Roberdeau v. Rous (1 Atk. )                                              | 7, 8                                  | ——— v. Humphreys (5 Nev. &amp; M. ; 4 Ad. &amp; E. )            | 647                     |
| Roberts v. Dixall (2 Eq. Abr. )                                          | 638                                   | Rollfe v. Budder ( Bunb. )                                             | 507                     |
| ——— v. Dixwell (1 Atk. )                                                 | 133, 136, 137, 140                    | Rolleston v. Morton (1 Con. &amp; Law. ; 1 & 2 Dr. &amp; War. ) | 662, 703, 704, 705      |
| ——— v. Kinsley (1 Ves. )                                                 | 141                                   | Roome v. Roome (3 Atk. )                                               | 430                     |
| ——— v. Lloyd (2 Beav. )                                                  | 55, 898                               | Roper v. Hallifax (8 Taunt. )                                          | 105                     |
| ——— v. Roberts ( Dan. R. )                                               | 884                                   | Ros v. Willoughby (10 Pri. )                                           | 530                     |
| ——— v. Smith (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                                         | 596                                   | Roscarrick v. Barton (1 Ch. Ca. )                                      | 680                     |
| ——— v. Spicer (5 Mad. )                                                  | 507, 508                              | Rose v. Page (2 Sim. )                                                 | 708                     |
| ——— v. Tunstall ( Lewin )                                                | 305                                   | ——— v. Rose (17 Ves. )                                                 | 232                     |
| ——— v. Walker (1 R. &amp; M. )                                           | 235, 323                              | Rosewell v. Bennett (3 Atk. )                                          | 434, 443, 447           |
| ——— v. Williams (4 Hare. )                                               | 652, 675                              | Ross v. Ewer (3 Atk. )                                                 | 494, 512                |
| Robertson v. Morrice (11 Jur. )                                          | 922                                   | ——— v. Ross (1 J. &amp; W. )                                           | 89, 90                  |
| ——— v. Norris (12 Jur. )                                                 | 475                                   | Rosse, Lord, v. Stirling (4 Dow. )                                     | 843                     |
| Robinson, ex parte (1 Mad. P. &amp; P. )                          | 794                                   | Roundell v. Breary (2 Vern. )                                          | 777                     |
| ——— v. Cleater (15 Ves. )                                                | 86                                    | ——— v. Currer (2 Bro. )                                                | 592                     |
| ——— v. Cumming (2 Atk. )                                                 | 809                                   | Routledge v. Dorril (2 Ves. jun. )                                     | 104, 107, 125, 126, 590 |
| ——— v. Davison (1 Bro. )                                                 | 737                                   | Rovold v. Russell (1 Yo. )                                             | 664, 709, 714           |
| ——— v. Dugate (2 Vern. )                                                 | 495                                   | Row v. Dawson (1 Ves. )                                                | 852, 855, 858, 860      |
| ——— v. Evans (7 Jur. )                                                   | 942                                   | ——— v. Pote (2 Vern. )                                                 | 765, 768                |
| ——— v. Gee (1 Ves. )                                                     | 644, 819, 820, 841, 842               | Rowe v. Jackson (2 Dick. )                                             | 489, 490                |
| ——— v. Hardcastle (2 Bro. )                                              | 587, 590                              | ——— v. Wood (2 J. &amp; W. )                                           | 650                     |
| ——— v. Knight (2 Eden )                                                  | 266, 268                              | Rowel v. Whalley (1 Ch. Rep. )                                         | 300                     |
| ——— v. Litton (3 Atk. )                                                  | 648                                   | Rowland v. Gorsuch (2 Cox )                                            | 539                     |
| ——— v. Macdonnell (5 M. &amp; S. )                                       | 775, 778, 866                         | Rowlandson, ex parte (1 Rose )                                  | 212                     |
| ——— v. Pett (3 P. Wms. )                                                 | 299, 945, 946                         | Rowley v. Adams (7 Beav. )                                             | 942                     |
| ——— v. Pennyman ( Lord Colch. M.S. )                                     | 688                                   | Rowth v. Howell (3 Ves. )                                              | 937                     |
| ——— v. Ridley (6 Mad. )                                                  | 304                                   | Rudge v. Birch (1 T. R. )                                              | 854                     |
| ——— v. Robinson (3 Atk. )                                                | 152                                   | Ruffin, ex parte (6 Ves. )                                      | 212, 213                |
| ——— v. ——— (12 Jur. )                                                    | 560, 561, 563, 564, (580), (581), 925 | Rufford v. Bishop (5 Russ. )                                           | 629                     |
|                                                                                 |                                       | Rumbold v. Rumbold (3 Ves. )                                           | 587, 588                |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

lxxxix

|                                                                                                      | PAGE                             |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Ruscombe v. Hare (6 Dow. ; 2 Bli. N. S.)                                                             | 306, 644, 665, 841               |
| Rushout v. Rushout (2 Sch. & Lef.)                                                                   | 587                              |
| Russel v. Russel (1 Bro.)                                                                            | 781, 785, 791                    |
| Russell v. Buchanan (7 Sim.)                                                                         | 100                              |
| — v. Clowes (2 Coll.), (364), (see Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 636 ; also Mapp v. Elcock, 13 Jur. 290) |                                  |
| — v. Smithies (1 Anst.)                                                                              | 808                              |
| Rutland v. Rutland (2 P. Wms.)                                                                       | 228                              |
| Rutledge v. Rutledge (2 Bli. N. S.)                                                                  | 599                              |
| Rutter v. Maclean (4 Ves.)                                                                           | 587, 592, 602                    |
| Ryal v. Ryal (1 Atk. ; Amb.)                                                                         | 21, 201, 203                     |
| Ryall v. Rodle (1 Atk.)                                                                              | 771                              |
| — v. Rowles (1 Ves. ; 1 Atk.)                                                                        | 729, 856, 857, 858               |
| Ryan v. Cowley (Llo. & Goo. temp. Sug.)                                                              | 150, 151                         |
| Rycroft v. Christy (3 Beav.)                                                                         | 55, 507                          |
| Ryland v. Smith (1 Myl. & Cr.)                                                                       | 477, 478                         |
| Sabbarton v. Sabbarton (Forrest.)                                                                    | 162                              |
| Saberton v. Skeels (1 Russ. & M.)                                                                    | 537                              |
| Sackett v. Basset (4 Mad.)                                                                           | 629                              |
| Sadler, ex parte (15 Ves.)                                                                           | 358, 359                         |
| — v. Hobbs (2 Bro.)                                                                                  | 930, 931                         |
| — v. Turner (8 Ves.)                                                                                 | 926                              |
| Safford, ex parte (2 G. & J.)                                                                        | 6                                |
| Sagitary v. Hyde (1 Vern.)                                                                           | 828, 834                         |
| Sainsbury v. Jones (2 Beav. ; 5 Myl. & Cr.)                                                          | 765                              |
| St. George v. Wake (1 Myl. & K.)                                                                     | 505                              |
| St. John, Lord, v. Boughton (9 Sim.)                                                                 | 713                              |
| — v. St. John (11 Ves.)                                                                              | 528, 532, 541                    |
| — v. Wareham (cited 2 Free.)                                                                         | 624                              |
| St. Paul v. Dudley and Ward, Viscount (15 Ves.)                                                      | 748                              |
| Sale v. Moore (1 Sim.)                                                                               | 66                               |
| Salisbury v. Petty (3 Hare)                                                                          | 83                               |
| Salisbury, Earl of, v. Lambe (Amb. ; 1 Eden)                                                         | 400                              |
| — v. Salisbury (12 Jur.)                                                                             | (608), 609                       |
| Salkeld v. Vernon (1 Eden)                                                                           | 149, 150                         |
| Salt v. Chattaway (3 Beav.)                                                                          | 235, 240                         |
| — v. Donegall (Llo. & Goo.)                                                                          | 647                              |
| Saltern v. Melhuish (Amb.)                                                                           | 893                              |
| Salway v. Salway (2 R. & M.)                                                                         | 920                              |
| Salwey v. Salwey (Amb.)                                                                              | 481                              |
| Sammes v. Rickman (2 Ves.)                                                                           | 940                              |
| Sampson v. Pattison (1 Hare)                                                                         | 676                              |
| — v. Sampson (2 Ves. & Bea.)                                                                         | 285                              |
| Samuel v. Samuel (9 Jur.)                                                                            | 146, 134                         |
| Sanders v. Deligne (2 Freem.)                                                                        | 741                              |
| — v. Franks (2 Mad.)                                                                                 | 496, 497, 537                    |
| — v. Richards (2 Coll.)                                                                              | 636                              |
| Sanderson v. Walker (13 Ves.)                                                                        | 944                              |
| Sandon v. Hooper (6 Beav.)                                                                           | 808, 809, 813                    |
| Sandys v. Sandys (1 P. Wms.)                                                                         | 397, 403                         |
| Sanford v. Sanford (1 De G. & S.)                                                                    | 455                              |
| Sansum v. Dewar (3 Russ.)                                                                            | 480                              |
| Sargent v. Roberts (12 Jur.)                                                                         | 556, (821), 822                  |
| Saunders v. Dehew (2 Vern.)                                                                          | 40, 735, 737, 739, 745, 747, 753 |
| — v. Vautier (1 Cr. & Ph. ; 4 Beav.)                                                                 | 99, 184, 395                     |

|                                                | PAGE                         |
|------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|
| Savage v. Carrol (1 B. & B.)                   | 205, 301, 414, 416           |
| — v. Foster (9 Mod.)                           | 765                          |
| — v. Lane (6 Hare)                             | 827, 953                     |
| — v. Taylor (Forr.)                            | 948                          |
| Savery v. Dyer (Ambl.)                         | 579, 583                     |
| Savill v. Savill (2 Col.)                      | (611), (612)                 |
| Sawyer v. Shute (1 Anst.)                      | 486                          |
| Saxton v. Davis (18 Ves.)                      | 665                          |
| Say and Sele, Lord, v. Jones (3 Bro. P. C.)    | 24                           |
| Sayers v. Whitfield (1 Knapp)                  | 630                          |
| Scarborough v. Borman (1 Beav. ; 4 Myl. & Cr.) | 525                          |
| Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale, Lord (4 Y. & C.)  | 411, 412, 414                |
| Scattergood v. Harrison (Mos.)                 | 299                          |
| Scawen v. Scawen (1 Y. & C. C. C.)             | 215                          |
| Scawin v. Watson (1 Beav.)                     | 249, (250)                   |
| Schank v. Morland (1 Mad. P. & P.)             | 860                          |
| Schenk v. Legh (9 Ves.)                        | 400                          |
| Scholefield v. Heafield (7 & 8 Sim.)           | 680, 697, 792, 793           |
| — v. Ingham (C. P. Coop.)                      | 810                          |
| Scholey v. Goodman (8 Moo.)                    | 532                          |
| Schoole v. Sall (1 Sch. & Lef.)                | 646, 684, 690                |
| Scott v. Beecher (5 Madd.)                     | 336, 824, 825, 826           |
| — v. Brest (2 T. R.)                           | 807                          |
| — v. Davis (4 Myl. & Cr.)                      | 522, 525                     |
| — v. Nesbitt (14 Ves.)                         | 15                           |
| — v. Nicoll (3 Russ.)                          | 707                          |
| — v. Porcher (3 Mer.)                          | 58, 778, 862                 |
| — v. Scholey (8 East)                          | 643                          |
| — v. Scott (Amb. ; 1 Cox ; 1 Eden)             | 358, 359, 829, 831           |
| — v. Tyler (2 Dick. ; 2 Bro.)                  | 373, 374, 377                |
| Scriven v. Tapley (2 Eden ; Ambl.)             | 488, 491                     |
| Scroope v. Scroope (1 Ch. Ca.)                 | 217, 218                     |
| Scudamore v. Scudamore (Pre. Ch.)              | 25, 260, 263, 268            |
| Scurfield v. Howes (3 Bro.)                    | 930, 931                     |
| Seagrave v. Seagrave (13 Ves.)                 | 257, 500, 501, 528, 531      |
| Seal v. Seal (Pre. Ch. ; 1 P. Wms.)            | 134, 161                     |
| Sear v. Ashwell (3 Swanst.)                    | 882, 885                     |
| Searle v. Carpenter, Lord (Ambl.)              | 626                          |
| — v. Colt (1 Y. & C. C. C.)                    | 709                          |
| — v. Law (15 Sim.)                             | 285, 286, 884, 886, 909, 911 |
| Seaward v. Willock (5 East)                    | 150                          |
| Seddon v. Connell (10 Sim.)                    | 765                          |
| Seed v. Bradford (1 Ves.)                      | 458                          |
| Seers v. Hind (1 Ves. jun.)                    | 940                          |
| Seifferth v. Bodham (9 Beav.)                  | 539                          |
| Selby v. Alston (3 Ves.)                       | 41, 260, 270, 876            |
| — v. Selby (4 Russ.)                           | 828, 832, 833, 834, 839      |
| Sellack v. Harris (5 Vin. Abr.)                | 279                          |
| Selsey, Lord, v. Lake, Lord (1 Beav.)          | 748                          |
| — v. Rhoades (2 Sim. & St.)                    | 301                          |
| — v. — (1 Bli. N. S.)                          | 63, 944                      |
| Senhouse v. Earle (Ambl.)                      | 195                          |

|                                                | PAGE                              |                                                                             | PAGE                                 |
|------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| Serle v. St. Eloy (2 P. Wms.)                  | 346, 819, 822                     | Shuttleworth v. Laycock (1 Vern.)                                           | 666, 724                             |
| Service v. Castaneda (2 Col.)                  | 14                                | ——— v. Lowther (cited 7 Ves.)                                               | 814                                  |
| Seton v. Slade (7 Ves.)                        | 619, 631                          | Siddon v. Charnells (Bunb.)                                                 | 741                                  |
| —— v. Smith (11 Sim.)                          | 591                               | Sidmouth v. Sidmouth (2 Bea.)                                               | 215, 216                             |
| Sevier v. Greenway (19 Ves.)                   | 620, 622                          | Sidney v. Sidney (3 P. Wms.)                                                | 500                                  |
| Sewell v. Musson (1 Vern.)                     | 354                               | Sidny v. Ranger (12 Sim.)                                                   | 637                                  |
| —— v. Walker (12 Jur.)                         | 479                               | Silberschildt v. Schiott (3 Ves. & Beav.)                                   | 855                                  |
| Shackleton v. Shackleton (2 Sim. & St.)        | 815                               | Silcock v. Roynon (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                                         | 691                                  |
| Shader v. Groves (6 Hare)                      | 472, 473                          | Silk v. Prime (1 Dick.; 1 Bro.)                                             | 315, 317, 839                        |
| Shaftesbury, Earl of, v. Marlborough,          |                                   | Silkreg v. Davies (2 Dow.)                                                  | 209                                  |
| Duke of (2 Myl. & K.)                          | 407, 545, 547                     | Silver v. Norwich, Bishop of (3 Swanst.)                                    | 799                                  |
| ———, Lord, v. Russell (1 B. & C.)              | 40                                | Silvester v. Wilson (2 T. R.)                                               | 24                                   |
| Shallcross v. Finden (3 Ves.)                  | 326, 327                          | Simmond v. Hibbert (1 Russ. & M.)                                           | 296                                  |
| Shapland v. Smith (1 Bro.)                     | 24, 295                           | Simmonds v. Bolland (cited 3 Hare)                                          | 578                                  |
| Sharp v. Johnstone (2 Scott)                   | 14                                | ——— v. Edwards (11 Jur.)                                                    | 40                                   |
| Sharpe, re (15 Sim.)                           | 954                               | Simmons v. Gutteridge (12 Ves.)                                             | 297                                  |
| —— v. Scarborough, Lord (4 Ves.)               | 643, 662, 799, 820                | ——— v. Simmons (6 Hare)                                                     | 499, 506                             |
| Shaw, ex parte (1 Madd.)                       | 354                               | ——— v. Wood (2 Hare)                                                        | 677, 691                             |
| ——— (8 Sim.)                                   | 37                                | Simon v. Barber (5 Russ.)                                                   | 247                                  |
| —— v. Borrer (1 Keen)                          | 320, 321, 367, 368, 382           | Simons v. Horwood (1 Keen)                                                  | 508, 533                             |
| —— v. Rhodes (5 Cl. & Fin.; 1 Myl. & Cr.)      | 166, 167, 174, 179, 183           | Simpson v. Earles (11 Jur.)                                                 | 43                                   |
| —— v. Weigh (1 Eq. Abr.; 8 Mod.; Ambl.)        | 36, 145, 295                      | Simson v. Jones (2 Russ. & M.)                                              | 499                                  |
| Sheddon v. Goodrich (8 Ves.)                   | 239, 261                          | Sinhouse v. Earl (2 Ves.)                                                   | 692                                  |
| Shee v. Hall (13 Ves.)                         | 89                                | Sisson v. Shaw (9 Ves.)                                                     | 172                                  |
| Sheffield v. Bucks, Duchess of (West)          | 681                               | Sitwell v. Bernard (6 Ves.)                                                 | 41, 43, 179, 185, 559, 565, 566, 569 |
| —— v. Coventry, Earl of (2 R. & M.)            | 440                               | Skapholme v. Hart (Finch)                                                   | 870                                  |
| —— v. Orrery, Lord (3 Atk.)                    | 74                                | Skarff v. Soulby (13 Jur.)                                                  | 887                                  |
| Sheldon v. Cox (2 Eden)                        | 760                               | Skeats v. Skeats (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                                          | 216, 218                             |
| —— v. Dormer (2 Vern.)                         | 408                               | Skeffington v. Budd (9 Cl. & Fin.)                                          | 660                                  |
| Shelley's case (Fearne, C. R.)                 | 145                               | ——— v. Whitehurst (3 Y. & C.)                                               | 642, 660                             |
| Shelmardine v. Harrop (6 Mad.)                 | 690                               | Skelton v. Skelton (2 Swanst.)                                              | 570                                  |
| Shephard v. Elliot (6 Mad.)                    | 809                               | Skett v. Whitmore (2 Freem.)                                                | 19                                   |
| —— v. Lutwidge (8 Ves.)                        | 316                               | Skey v. Barnes (2 Mer.)                                                     | 98, 171, 172                         |
| Shepherd v. Ingram (Ambl.)                     | 98, 171                           | —— v. Bennet (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                                              | 676, 724                             |
| —— v. Mouls (4 Hare)                           | 564, 924, (925)                   | Skinner v. Sweet (3 Mad.)                                                   | 802                                  |
| —— v. Towgood (Turn. & R.)                     | 953                               | Skipp v. Wyatt (1 Cox)                                                      | 699                                  |
| Sheppard v. Phillips (Ld. Hard.)               | 455                               | Skrymsher v. Northcote (1 Swanst.)                                          | 226, 241                             |
| —— v. Wilson (9 Jur.; 4 Hare)                  | 91, 408, 461, 462                 | Slade v. Rigg (3 Hare)                                                      | 701, 770                             |
| Shepperd v. Titley (2 Atk.)                    | 735                               | Slaney v. Styles (M. 1733, MS.)                                             | 606                                  |
| Sheridan v. Joyce (2 J. & Lat.)                | 194                               | Slanning v. Style (3 P. Wms.)                                               | 502, 503                             |
| Sherman, ex parte (Mad. P. & P.)               | 787                               | Slater v. Willis (1 Beav.)                                                  | 221                                  |
| Shermer v. Robbins (Finch)                     | 682                               | Sleece v. Thorington (2 Ves.)                                               | 483, 486, 491, 511                   |
| Sherwood, re (3 Beav.)                         | 945                               | Sloane v. Cadogan, (56), 880, 897, 898, 899, (900), 902, 903, 908, 911, 915 |                                      |
| Shine v. Gough (1 Ball & B.)                   | 803                               | Small v. Atwood (1 You.)                                                    | 195                                  |
| Shipbrook v. Hinchinbrook (16 Ves.)            | 920, 929, 931, 932, 934           | —— v. Marwood (9 B. & C.)                                                   | 59, 351                              |
| Shirley v. Ferrers, Lord (1 Bro.)              | 355                               | —— v. Wing (5 Bro. P. C.)                                                   | 399, 407, 422                        |
| —— v. Watts (3 Atk.)                           | 661                               | Smart v. Hunt (4 Ves.)                                                      | 710, 711                             |
| Shirt v. Westby (16 Ves.)                      | 325                               | —— v. Sandars (10 Jur.)                                                     | 774                                  |
| Shore v. Shore (2 Phill.)                      | 675                               | Smith, ex parte (1 & 3 Mont. D. & D.)                                       | 794                                  |
| Short v. Long (2 Vern.; 1 P. Wms.)             | 839                               | —— v. Baker (1 & 2 Atk.)                                                    | 201, 202, 285                        |
| Shrapnell v. Blake (West; 2 Eq. Abr.)          | 652, 723, 724                     | —— v. — (1 Y. & C. C. C.)                                                   | 866                                  |
| Shrewsbury v. Shrewsbury (3 Bro.; 1 Ves. jun.) | 345, 748                          | —— v. Bicknell (3 Ves. & Bea.)                                              | 690                                  |
| Shudall v. Jekyll (2 Atk.)                     | 394, 428, 432, 441, 444, 447, 449 | —— v. Bromley (cited 2 Doug.)                                               | 358                                  |
| Shuttleworth v. Greaves (4 Myl. & Cr.)         | 595, 597                          | —— v. Campbell (G. Coop.; 19 Ves.)                                          | 76                                   |
|                                                |                                   | —— v. Chichester (2 Dr. & War.; 1 Con. & Law.)                              | 699, 800                             |
|                                                |                                   | —— v. Claxton (4 Mad.)                                                      | 235, 241, (242), (243)               |
|                                                |                                   | —— v. Clay (Amb.)                                                           | 60, (3 Bro.) 61                      |
|                                                |                                   | —— v. Death (5 Mad.)                                                        | 81                                   |
|                                                |                                   | —— v. Evans (Amb.)                                                          | 403, 407                             |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

xci

|                                                               | PAGE                                                            |                                                         | PAGE                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Smith v. Everett (4 Bro.)                                     | 860                                                             | Spencer v. Spencer (8 Sim.)                             | 412, 413, 416           |
| — v. Frederick (1 Russ.)                                      | 424                                                             | Sperling v. Rochfort (8 Ves.; 1 Cox)                    | 517, 534                |
| — v. Garland (2 Mer.)                                         | 288, 289                                                        | Spong v. Spong (3 Bli. N.S.; 1 Dow. N.S.;1 Y. & J.) | 327, 328, 830, 832, 833 |
| — v. Green (1 Coll.)                                          | 646, 653, 814                                                   | Spooner v. Sandilands (1 Y. & C. C. C.)                 | 54                      |
| — v. Henley (1 Phill.)                                        | 240                                                             | Spottiswoode v. Stockdale (Coop.)                       | 354                     |
| — v. Hurst (1 Coll. C. C.)                                    | 41, 309                                                         | Spragge v. Stone (Doug.)                                | 15                      |
| — v. Low (1 Atk.)                                             | 757                                                             | Spraggs v. Binks (5 Ves.)                               | 852                     |
| — v. Lyne (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                                   | 883                                                             | Sprange v. Bernard (2 Bro.)                             | 69                      |
| — v. Marsack (12 Jur.)                                        | 476, 534, (535)                                                 | Sprat v. Agar (1 Vent.)                                 | 277                     |
| — v. Nelson (Seton on Decrees)                                | 791                                                             | Spring v. Allen (cited 2 Myl. & K.)                     | 791, 795                |
| — v. Palmer (13 Jur.)                                         | 537                                                             | — d. Fitcher v. Biles (1 T. R.)                         | 76                      |
| — v. Phillips (1 Keen)                                        | 657, 747                                                        | Sproule v. Prior (8 Sim.)                               | 833                     |
| — v. Smith (5 Ves.)                                           | 207, 211                                                        | Spurrett v. Spiller (1 Atk.)                            | 357, 358                |
| — v. — (2 Crompt. & M.)                                       | 859                                                             | Spry v. Broomfield (9 & 10 Sim.)                        | 97, 98, 396             |
| — v. Streatfield, (1 Mer.)                                    | 420                                                             | Spurgeon v. Collier (1 Eden)                            | 620, 621, 628, 814      |
| — v. Strong (4 Bro.)                                          | 436                                                             | Spurway v. Glynn (9 Ves.)                               | 327                     |
| — v. Tyler (1 Jur.)                                           | 33                                                              | Squib v. Wyn (1 P. Wms.)                                | 852                     |
| — v. Valence (1 Rep. Ch.)                                     | 654                                                             | Squire v. Huetson (1 Q. B.)                             | 776                     |
| — v. Warde (15 Law J.; 15 Simons)                             | (57) 885                                                        | Stacey v. Elph (1 Myl. & K.)                            | 918                     |
| — v. Wilkinson, (3 Ves.)                                      | 21                                                              | Stacpoole v. Stacpoole (4 Dow.; 2 Con. &Law.)       | 191, 292, 778, 922      |
| Smithson v. Thompson (1 Atk.)                                 | 740                                                             | Stafford, Lord, v. Buckley (2 Ves.)                     | 74                      |
| Smyth, ex parte (1 Swanst.)                                   | 582                                                             | — v. Selby (2 Vern.)                                    | 740                     |
| — v. Eden (5 Ves.)                                            | 608                                                             | Stamford, Earl of, v. Hobart (3 Bro.P. C.)          | 133                     |
| — v. Foley (3 Y. & C.)                                        | 28, 402, 404                                                    | Stamper v. Barker (5 Mad.)                              | 476, 532                |
| Smythe v. Smythe (2 Swanst.; Wils.)                           | 570                                                             | — v. Millar (3 Atk.)                                    | 258                     |
| Snelling v. Squib (2 Ch. Ca.)                                 | 728                                                             | Standford v. Marshall (2 Atk.)                          | 513, 514, 515           |
| Snow v. Poulden (1 Keen)                                      | 96, 104, 186                                                    | Stanhope v. Manners (2 Eden)                            | 675                     |
| Snowball v. Proctor (2 Y. & C. C. C.)                         | 146                                                             | —, Earl of, v. Verney (2 Eden)                          | 729, 733                |
| Snowdon v. Dales (6 Sim.)                                     | 90                                                              | Staniforth v. Staniforth (2 Vern.)                      | 397, 403, 409           |
| Soames v. Martin (10 Sim.)                                    | 460                                                             | Stanes v. Parker (9 Beav.)                              | 48, 942                 |
| — v. Robinson (1 Myl. & K.)                                   | 314, 315, 317, 318, 829                                         | Stanley v. Bernes (3 Hag. Ec.)                          | 12, 13                  |
| Sober v. Kemp (6 Hare)                                        | 669, (692), 693                                                 | — v. Leigh (2 P. Wms.)                                  | 149, 150, 157, 162      |
| Socket v. Wray (2 Atk.; 4 Bro.)                               | 495, 512, 513, 514, 515, 517                                    | — v. Stanley (1 Atk.; 16 Ves.)                          | 132, 141, 397, 404, 406 |
| Solomon v. Solomon (13 Sim.)                                  | 706, 707                                                        | Stansfield v. Habergham (10 Ves.)                       | 950, 951                |
| Souley v. Clockmaker's Comp. (1 Bro.)                         | 33                                                              | Stanton v. Hall (2 Russ. & M.)                          | 483, 508, 509, 510      |
| South, ex parte (3 Swanst.)                                   | 778, 860, 863                                                   | — v. Sadler (2 Vern.)                                   | 741                     |
| Southampton, Lord, v. Hertford, Marquis of(2 Ves. & Bea.) | 25, 156, 120, (181), 182, 183, (see the Jurist, Nos. 511, 512). | Staples, re (13 Jur.)                                   | 954                     |
| Southcote's case (4 Co.)                                      | 937                                                             | Stapleton v. Colville (Forrest.)                        | 337, 818                |
| Southley v. Stonehouse (2 Ves.)                               | 494                                                             | — v. Stapleton (1 Atk.)                                 | 288                     |
| Southouse v. Bate (2 V. & B.)                                 | 225, 364                                                        | — v. — (14 Sim.)                                        | 53                      |
| Sowersby v. Lacy (4 Mad.)                                     | 367, 387                                                        | Stead v. Nelson (2 Beav.)                               | 5, 505, 513             |
| Sowden v. Sowden (1 Bro.)                                     | 204, 205, 610                                                   | — v. Newdigate (2 Mer.)                                 | 256, 257, 262, 271, 272 |
| Sowerby v. Clayton (3 Hare)                                   | 581                                                             | Steed v. Cragh (2 Eq. Ab.)                              | 475                     |
| — v. Gutteridge (1848)                                        | 890                                                             | Steedman v. Poole (6 Hare)                              | 323                     |
| Spackman v. Timbrell (8 Sim.; 15Law J.)                   | 378, 383, 388                                                   | Steele v. Maunder (1 Coll.)                             | 697                     |
| Spain, King of, v. Hullett (1 Cl. & Fin.;7 Bli.)          | 15                                                              | — v. Philips (1 Beatty)                                 | 643                     |
| — v. Muchado (4 Russ.)                                        | 667                                                             | Steimetz v. Halthin (1 G. & J.)                         | 488                     |
| Spalding v. Ruding (6 Beav.; 7 Jur.)                          | 773, 774                                                        | Stephens v. Bridges (6 Mad.)                            | 747, 748                |
| — v. Shalmer (1 Vern.)                                        | 386                                                             | — v. Olive (2 Bro.)                                     | 528                     |
| Sparkes v. Cator (3 Ves.)                                     | 438, 439                                                        | — v. Stephens (Ca. temp. Talb.)                         | 116                     |
| — v. Smith (2 Vern.)                                          | 614                                                             | — v. Trueman (1 Ves.)                                   | 279, 282, 283           |
| Sparling v. Parker (10 Jur.; 9 Beav.)                         | 43, 44, 207, 260, 561, 562                                      | Stephenson, ex parte (12 Jur.)                          | 827                     |
| Speake v. Speake (1 Vern.)                                    | 610                                                             | — v. Dawson (3 Beav.)                                   | 775                     |
| Spencer v. Boyes (4 Ves.)                                     | 681                                                             | — v. Haywood (Pre. Ch.)                                 | 59                      |
| — v. Latimer                                                  | 503                                                             |                                                         |                         |

|                                                                                        | PAGE               |                                                            | PAGE                      |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------|------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------|
| Stephenson v. Heathcote (1 Eden )                                               | 337, 342           | Stubbs v. Roth (2 B. &amp; B. )                     | 303                       |
| Sterling v. Vaughan (1 East )                                                   | 885                | —— v. Sargon (2 Keen ; 3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )    | 66, 224, 232              |
| Sterndale v. Hankinson (1 Sim. )                                                | 716                | —— v. Stubbs (2 Keen ; 3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )    | 80                        |
| Stevens v. Bagwell (15 Ves. )                                                   | 494, 867, 870, 873 | Sturch v. Young (5 Beav. )                          | 689                       |
| —— v. Dethick (3 Atk. )                                                         | 403, 404, 406      | Sturge v. Dimsdale (6 Beav. )                       | 233                       |
| —— v. Pillen (12 Jur. )                                                         | 939                | Sturgis v. Champneys (5 Myl. &amp; Cr. )            | 480, (483), 485, 879      |
| —— v. Stevens ( Forrest. )                                                      | 173                | —— v. Corp (13 Ves. )                               | 504, 513, 534             |
| —— v. —— (11 Jur. ; 2 Col. )                                             | 767                | Sturt v. Mellish (2 Atk. )                          | 25                        |
| Stewart v. Denton (4 Doug. )                                                    | 774                | Styan, in re (1 Phill. )                     | 859                       |
| —— v. Moody (1 C. M. &amp; R. )                                                 | 351                | Style v. Style (1799, Mad. MS. )                    | 462                       |
| Stickney v. Sewell (1 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                          | 42, 925            | Suisse v. Lowther (2 Hare )                         | 429, 430                  |
| Stiffe v. Everitt (1 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                           | 476, 480, 483, 879 | Suffolk v. Greenville (3 Ch. Rep. )                 | 852                       |
| Stikeman v. Dawson (11 Jur. ; 1 De G. &amp; S. )                         | 766                | Supple v. Lowson ( Amb. )                           | 76, 83                    |
| Stillman v. Ashdown (2 Atk. ; Amb. )                                     | 218, 408, 798, 799 | Sutherland v. Cooke (1 Col. )                       | 42, 43, 44, 556, 563, 567 |
| Stiles v. Att.-Gen. (2 Atk. )                                                   | 889                | Sutton v. Chetwynd (3 Mer. )                        | (286), 288                |
| —— v. Cowper (3 Atk. )                                                          | 765                | —— v. Sharpe (1 Russ. )                             | 934                       |
| —— v. Guy (4 Y. &amp; C. )                                                      | 926, 931           | —— v. Stone (2 Atk. )                               | 639, 679, 793             |
| Stilwell v. Wilkins ( Jac. )                                                    | 623                | Swain v. Wall (1 Ch. Rep. )                         | 844                       |
| Stirling v. Forrester (3 Bli. )                                                 | 843                | Swaine v. Barton (15 Ves. )                         | 143                       |
| Stocken v. Stocken (4 Sim. ; 2 Myl. &amp; K. ; 4 Myl. &amp; Cr. ) | 428, 466, 467, 472 | Swan v. Swan (8 Pri. )                              | 304, 655                  |
| Stocks v. Dodsley (1 Keen )                                                     | 497                | Swann v. Fonnereau (3 Ves. )                        | 258, 259                  |
| Stokes v. Clendon (3 Swanst. )                                                  | 674                | Swannock v. Lyford ( Amb. )                         | 661                       |
| —— v. Holden (1 Keen )                                                          | 421, 852, 866      | Sweet v. Southcote (2 Bro. )                        | 764                       |
| Stokoe v. Robson (3 Ves. &amp; Bea. ; 19 Ves. )                          | 690                | Sweetstaple v. Bindon (2 Vern. )                    | 133, 134, 264             |
| Stone v. Forsyth ( Doug. )                                                      | 494                | Swift, ex parte (1 R. &amp; M. )             | 461                       |
| —— v. Lidderdale (2 Anst. )                                                     | 614, 866, 867      | —— v. Gazebrook (12 Jur. )                          | 541                       |
| —— v. Maule (2 Sim. )                                                           | 149                | Swinburne, ex parte ( Mont. &amp; C. )       | 804                       |
| —— v. Theed (2 Bro. )                                                           | 547                | Sydney v. Shelley (19 Ves. )                        | 133, 135                  |
| —— v. Yea ( Jac. )                                                              | 870, 872           | —— v. Sydney (3 P. Wms. )                           | 257, 867                  |
| Stony v. Windsor, Lord (2 Atk. )                                                | 753                | Sykes v. Megnal (1 Dick. )                          | 481                       |
| Stonehouse v. Evelyn (3 P. Wms. )                                               | 223                | Symance v. Tattam (1 Atk. )                         | 949                       |
| Stonehewer v. Thompson (2 Atk. )                                                | 662                | Symmes v. Symonds (4 Bro. P. C. )                   | 727                       |
| Stones v. Cooke (7 Sim. )                                                       | 868                | Symons v. James (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )              | 322                       |
| Stonor v. Curwen (5 Sim. )                                                      | 129, 135, 136, 137 | —— v. Rutter (2 Vern. )                             | 260, 263                  |
| Story v. Johnson (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                               | 655                | Synge v. Hales (2 Ball. &amp; B. )                  | 134, 143                  |
| —— v. Tonge (7 Beav. )                                                          | 487                | Tabor v. Grove (2 Vern. ; 2 Freem. )         | 651                       |
| —— v. Windsor (2 Atk. )                                                         | 196                | —— v. Tabor (3 Swanst. )                            | 650                       |
| Stott v. Hollingworth (3 Mad. )                                                 | 559                | Taggart, ex parte (1 De G. )                 | 637                       |
| Strachan v. Brander (1 Eden )                                                   | 871, 873           | —— v. Taggart (1 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                  | 469                       |
| Strahan v. Sutton (3 Ves. )                                                     | 596                | Tait v. Hilbert (2 Ves. jun. )                      | 503                       |
| Strange, Lord, v. Smith ( Amb. )                                                | 512                | —— v. Northwick, Lord (4 Ves. )                     | 337, 340                  |
| Stratford v. Powell (1 Ball &amp; B. )                                          | 136, 158, 883      | Talbot v. Braddill (1 Vern. )                       | 617, 618, 621, 669        |
| Strathmore v. Bowes (2 Cox ; 1 Ves. jun. ; 2 Bro. )               | 499, 505           | —— v. Radnor, Earl of (3 Myl. &amp; K. )            | 591                       |
| Stratton v. Best (1 Ves. jun. )                                                 | 595                | —— v. Tipper ( Skin. )                              | 577                       |
| Streatfield v. Streatfield ( Forrest. )                                         | 141, 602           | Tancred v. Potts (2 Fonbl. )                        | 770                       |
| Streeton v. Collier (10 Law J. )                                                | 686                | Taner v. Ivie (2 Ves. )                             | 814                       |
| Stretch v. Watkins (1 Mad. )                                                    | 186, 462, 583      | Tanfield v. Irvine (2 Russ. )                       | 689                       |
| Strickland v. Aldridge (9 Ves. )                                                | 21                 | Tankerville v. Fawcett (1 Cox )                     | 335                       |
| —— v. Strickland (10 Sim. )                                                     | 824                | Tanner v. Byne (1 Sim. )                            | 290, 889                  |
| Stringer v. Murray (2 B. &amp; Al. )                                            | 614                | —— v. Elworthy (4 Beav. )                           | 301, 302                  |
| Strudholme v. Hodgson (3 P. Wms. )                                              | 172                | Tapfield v. Hillman (7 Jur. )                       | 776                       |
| Strutt v. Finch (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                             | 587                | Tappenden v. Walsh (1 Phill. )                      | 506                       |
| Stuart v. Bruce (3 Ves. )                                                       | 469                | Tarback v. Marbury (2 Vern. )                       | 350                       |
| —— v. Bruere (6 Ves. )                                                          | 185                | Tardiffe v. Robinson (2 Russ. )                     | 551                       |
| —— v. Kirkwall, Lord (3 Mad. )                                                  | 515, 516, 868      | Target v. Gaunt (1 P. Wms. )                        | 150                       |
| —— v. Worrall (1 Bro. )                                                         | 671                | Targus v. Puget (2 Ves. )                           | 26                        |
|                                                                                        |                    | Tasburgh v. Echlin (2 Bro. P. C. )                  | 621, 623                  |
|                                                                                        |                    | Tasker v. Small (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. ; 6 Sim. ) | 266, 654, 668, 669, 677   |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

xciii

|                                                                               | PAGE                                   |                                                                                | PAGE                                                                              |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Taster v. Marriott ( Amb. )                                            | 808                                    | Thomlinson v. Smith ( Rep. temp. Finch )                                | 376, 377                                                                          |
| Tate v. Austin (1 P. Wms. ; 2 Vern. )                           | 515, 841, 842                          | Thompson v. Attfeild (1 Vern. )                                         | 893                                                                               |
| — v. Clark (1 Beav. )                                                  | 150, 152                               | — v. Butler ( Moo. )                                                    | 480                                                                               |
| — v. Hilbert (2 Ves. jun. )                                            | 885, 912                               | — v. Griffen ( Cr. &amp; Ph. )                                          | 467                                                                               |
| Tatlock v. Harris (3 T. R. )                                           | 862                                    | — v. Leake (1 Mad. )                                                    | 220                                                                               |
| Tattersall v. Howell (2 Mer. )                                         | 936                                    | — v. Nelson (1 Cox )                                                    | 596                                                                               |
| Tawney v. Crowther (3 Bro. )                                           | 22                                     | — v. Smith (1 Mad. )                                                    | 614                                                                               |
| — v. Ward (1 Beav. )                                                   | 496                                    | — v. Thompson (1 Coll. )                                                | 207                                                                               |
| Taylor v. Bacon (8 Sim. )                                              | 97, 98                                 | Thomson, re (12 Sim. )                                           | 684                                                                               |
| — v. Baker (5 Pri. ; Daniel's Rep. )                            | 658, 756, 757, 814                     | Thorby v. Yeats (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                  | 47                                                                                |
| — v. Beverley (1 Col. )                                                | 473                                    | Thorn v. Newman (3 Swanst. )                                            | 487                                                                               |
| — v. Biddall (2 Mod. )                                                 | 156                                    | Thornborough v. Baker (2 Freem. ; 1 Ch. Ca. ; 3 Swanst. ) | 619, 624, 650, 651                                                                |
| — v. Blake ( Dow. )                                                    | 776                                    | Thornbury v. Jew ( Amb. )                                               | 497                                                                               |
| — v. Clark (1 Hare )                                                   | 44, (558), (559), (560), (561)         | Thorne v. Thorne (1 Vern. )                                             | 302                                                                               |
| — v. Coates (3 Hare )                                                  | 686                                    | — v. Watkins (2 Ves. )                                                  | 12                                                                                |
| — v. Glanville (3 Mad. )                                               | 47                                     | Thorneycroft v. Crockett ( Sug. Law of Prop. ; 13 Jur. )         | 650, (666), (667), 806                                                            |
| — v. Haggarth (14 Sim. )                                               | 237, 266                               | Thornton v. Bright (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                  | 577                                                                               |
| — v. Harewood, Earl of (3 Hare )                                       | 414, 416, 441                          | — v. Curling (8 Sim. )                                                  | 14                                                                                |
| — v. Hawkins (8 Ves. )                                                 | 377, 378                               | — v. Dixon (3 Bro. )                                                    | 210                                                                               |
| — v. Hibbert (1 J. &amp; W. )                                          | 559                                    | — v. Hawley (10 Ves. )                                                  | 254, 257, 258, 263, 271                                                           |
| — v. Johnson (2 P. Wms. )                                              | 171                                    | Thorp v. Owen (2 Hare )                                                 | 466                                                                               |
| — v. Lendey (9 East )                                                  | 862                                    | Thorpe v. Gartside (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                     | 792                                                                               |
| — v. Plumer (3 M. &amp; S. )                                           | 204, 205                               | — v. Jackson (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                           | 214                                                                               |
| — v. Pugh (1 Hare )                                                    | 505                                    | — v. Owen (5 Beav. )                                                    | 55                                                                                |
| — v. Salmon (4 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                        | 203                                    | Thrupp v. Harman (3 Myl. &amp; K. )                                     | 501                                                                               |
| — v. Stibbert (2 Ves. jun. )                                           | 756, 757, 759                          | Thruxton v. Att.-Gen. (1 Vern. )                                        | 663                                                                               |
| — v. Tabrum (6 Sim. )                                                  | 362, 939                               | Thurston v. Essington (1 Jac. )                                         | 70                                                                                |
| — v. Taylor (1 Atk. )                                                  | 216                                    | Thwaites v. Foreman (10 Jur. )                                          | 330                                                                               |
| — v. — (6 Sim. )                                                       | 820                                    | Thynne v. Duvall (2 Vern. )                                             | 551                                                                               |
| — v. — (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                          | 596                                    | —, Lady E., v. Glengall, Earl of (12 Jur. ; 1 Keen )             | (437), (455)                                                                      |
| — v. Waters (1 M. &amp; C. )                                           | 674                                    | Tibbitts v. George (5 Ad. &amp; E. )                                    | 856, 860                                                                          |
| — v. Wharton (2 Mod. )                                                 | 98                                     | Tibbitts v. Tibbitts (19 Ves. ; Jac. )                           | 65, 66, 70, 604                                                                   |
| — v. Wheeler (2 Salk. ; 1 Eq. Ab. ; 2 Vern. )            | 639, 640                               | Tidd v. Lister (5 Mad. )                                                | 46                                                                                |
| Teasdale v. Teasdale ( Sel. Ca. Ch. )                                  | 765                                    | Tiernan v. Jackson (5 Pet. Am. R. )                                     | 862                                                                               |
| Tebbs v. Carpenter (1 Mad. )                                           | 191, 192, 917, 922, 923, 934, 939, 940 | Tily v. Smith (1 Coll. )                                                | 234                                                                               |
| Teed v. Carruthers (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                              | 675, 677, 691                          | Tilly v. Bridges ( Pre. Ch. )                                           | 846                                                                               |
| Temple, ex parte (1 G. &amp; J. )                               | 658                                    | Timewell v. Perkins (2 Atk. )                                           | 592                                                                               |
| —, Earl, v. Price                                                             | 842, 843                               | Timson v. Ramsbottom (2 Keen )                                          | 729, 858                                                                          |
| Tenison v. Sweeny (1 J. &amp; Lat. )                                   | 735, 751                               | Tipping v. Piggot (1 Eq. Abr. )                                         | 949                                                                               |
| Terrell v. Matthews (11 Jur. )                                         | 930, 932, 933, 939, 941                | — v. Power (1 Hare )                                                    | 793                                                                               |
| Teulon v. Curtis (1 You. )                                             | 617                                    | — v. Tipping (1 P. Wms. )                                               | 820, 821, 829, 830, 834, 838                                                      |
| Tew v. Winterton (3 Bro. )                                             | 741                                    | Tissen v. Tissen (1 P. Wms. )                                           | 171                                                                               |
| Teynham v. Webb (2 Ves. )                                              | 397, 398, 411, 415, 416                | Titley v. Davies ( Serj. Hill's MS. )                                   | 836                                                                               |
| Theebridge v. Kilburne (2 Ves. )                                       | 146, 151                               | — v. Davis (2 Eq. Abr. )                                                | 651, 666                                                                          |
| Theobald v. Defay (1729)                                                      | 853                                    | — v. Jenyns (cited 2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                | 726                                                                               |
| Thellusson v. Woodford (4 Mad. ; 11 & 13 Ves. ; 1 Dow. ) | 165, 434, 590, 602                     | — v. Wolstenholme (7 Beav. )                                            | 38                                                                                |
| Thexton v. Betts (2 Freem. )                                           | 629                                    | Todd v. Wilson (9 Beav. )                                               | 48, 942                                                                           |
| Thomas v. Bennet (2 P. Wms. )                                          | 136, 607                               | Toft v. Stephenson (1848)                                                      | 197                                                                               |
| — v. Brigstocke (4 Russ. )                                             | 647                                    | Tolderoy v. Colt (1 Y. &amp; C. )                                       | 26                                                                                |
| — v. Britnell (2 Ves. )                                                | 320, 322, 334                          | Tollemache v. Coventry, Earl of (2 Cl. &amp; Fin. ; 8 Bli. )     | 109, 110, 127, 136                                                                |
| — v. Freeman (2 Vern. )                                                | 852                                    | Toller v. Carteret (2 Vern. )                                           | 6                                                                                 |
| — v. Holl ( Forrest. )                                                 | 75, 420                                | Tollett v. Tollett (2 P. Wms. )                                         | 82, 503                                                                           |
| — v. Phillips (11 Jur. )                                               | 301                                    | Tolson v. Collins (4 Ves. )                                             | 428, 608                                                                          |
| — v. Tyler (3 Y. &amp; C. )                                            | 862                                    | Tombs v. Roch (2 Coll. )                                                | 331, 334, 336, 343, 817, 820, 827, 829, 830, (831), 832, (837), (839), (846), 847 |
|                                                                               |                                        | Tomkins v. Tomkins (cited 1 Burr. )                                     | 97, 124                                                                           |

|                                                  | PAGE                                                                                                             |                                                           | PAGE                                 |
|--------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| Tomlin v. Hatfield (12 Sim.) .                   | 83, 419                                                                                                          | Tucker v. Boswell (5 Beav.) .                             | 559, 569                             |
| —— v. Tomlin (1 Hare) .                          | 361                                                                                                              | —— v. Thurstan (17 Ves.) .                                | 642, 643                             |
| Tomlinson v. Dighton (1 P. Wms.) .               | 496                                                                                                              | —— v. Tucker (4 B. & Ad.) .                               | 854                                  |
| —— v. Gill (Amb.) .                              | 287                                                                                                              | —— v. Wilson (1 P. Wms.; 5 Bro. P. C.) .                  | 637, 769                             |
| Tooke v. Hartley (2 Bro.; 2 Dick.)               | 347, 682                                                                                                         | Tuffnell v. Constable (8 Sim.) .                          | 912                                  |
| —— v. Hastings (2 Vern.) .                       | 254, 610                                                                                                         | Tudor v. Anson (2 Ves.) .                                 | 892                                  |
| Tooker v. Ormesley (5 Sim.) .                    | 570, 572                                                                                                         | Tullet v. Tullet (1 Dick.; 1 Amb.) .                      | 572                                  |
| Toplis v. Baker (2 Cox) .                        | 674                                                                                                              | Tullett v. Armstrong (1 Beav.; 4 Myl. & Cr.)              | 90, 515, 520, 522, 525, (539), (540) |
| Tothill or Daws v. Pitt (7 Bro. P. C.; 1 Mad.) . | 149, 161                                                                                                         | Tulloch v. Hartley (1 Y. & C.) .                          | 15                                   |
| Toulmin v. Steere (3 Mer.)                       | 657, 689, 746, 760                                                                                               | Tunstall v. Boothby (10 Sim.) .                           | 614, 867                             |
| Tourle v. Rand (2 Bro.)                          | 639, 679, 767, 788, 789                                                                                          | —— v. Trappes (3 Sim.) .                                  | 643, 662, 799                        |
| Tourville v. Naish (3 P. Wms.) .                 | 753                                                                                                              | Tunstill v. Bottriell (5 B. & Ad.) .                      | 288                                  |
| Townley v. Bedwell (6 Ves.) .                    | 236                                                                                                              | Turing v. Turing (10 Jur.; 15 Sim.) .                     | 473                                  |
| —— v. —— (14 Ves.) .                             | 209                                                                                                              | Turkington v. Kearnan (Llo. & Goo.)                       | 647, 648                             |
| —— v. Sherborne (Bridg. R.) .                    | 927                                                                                                              | Turner's case (1 Vern.) .                                 | 475, 879                             |
| Townsend, ex parte (1 Moll.) .                   | 935                                                                                                              | Turner v. Buck (22 Vin. Ab.) .                            | 741                                  |
| —— v. Carn (13 Law J., N. S.) .                  | 79                                                                                                               | —— v. Coaney (5 Beav.) .                                  | 942                                  |
| —— v. Westacott (2 Beav.) .                      | 887                                                                                                              | —— v. Crane (1 Vern.) .                                   | 476                                  |
| —— v. Wilson (1 B. & Al.)                        | 38, 947                                                                                                          | —— v. Hind (12 Sim.) .                                    | 389                                  |
| Townshend, Marquis, v. Stangroom (6 Ves.) .      | 620                                                                                                              | —— v. Hudson (10 Beav.) .                                 | 420                                  |
| —— v. Townshend (1 Bro.)                         | 48, 62, 63                                                                                                       | —— v. Newport (2 Phill.; 14 Sim.; 1 C. P. Coop.) .        | 44, 552, 561, 563, 568               |
| —— v. Windham (2 Ves.)                           | 290, 856, 887                                                                                                    | —— v. Richmond (2 Vern.) .                                | 737, 742                             |
| Tracey v. Hereford (2 Bro.) .                    | 573                                                                                                              | —— v. Turner (4 Sim.) .                                   | 185, 190                             |
| Trafford v. Ashton (1 P. Wms.)                   | 407, 422                                                                                                         | Turquand v. Knight (14 Sim.) .                            | 940                                  |
| —— v. Boehm (3 Atk.)                             | 254, 264, 934, 936                                                                                               | Turton v. Benson (1 P. Wms.; 2 Vern.)                     | 863                                  |
| —— v. Trafford (3 Atk.) .                        | 142, 156                                                                                                         | Tweedale, Marchioness of, v. Coventry, Earl of (1 Bro.) . | 822                                  |
| Trail v. Bull (1 Col.) .                         | 308                                                                                                              | —— v. Tweedale (10 Sim.) .                                | 579, 583                             |
| Trash v. White (3 Bro.) .                        | 674                                                                                                              | Tweddell v. Tweddall (2 Bro.) .                           | 335, 819                             |
| Travers v. Townsend (1 Moll.) .                  | 939                                                                                                              | Twisden v. Twisden (9 Ves.)                               | 430, 438, 609                        |
| Trecothick v. —— (2 Ves. & Bea.)                 | 813, 814                                                                                                         | Twopenny v. Peyton (10 Sim.; 1 Coll.)                     | 89, 91                               |
| Tregonwell v. Sydenham (3 Dow.)                  | 98, (107), 121, 229, 230, 231, 234, 256; see Sir E. Sugden's Observations on this case, Law of Property, p. 262. | Tylden v. Hyde (2 Sim. & St.) .                           | 296, 367                             |
| Trevannion v. Vivian (2 Ves.) .                  | 172                                                                                                              | Tylee v. Webb (6 Beav.)                                   | 698, 760, (790), 791                 |
| Trevelyan v. White (1 Beav.) .                   | 304                                                                                                              | Tyler v. Lake (2 Russ. & M.; 4 Sim.)                      | 507, 508, 509, 510, 748              |
| Trevor's case (2 P. Wms.) .                      | 853                                                                                                              | Tynt v. Tynt (2 P. Wms.) .                                | 829                                  |
| Trevor v. Trevor (1 Mad. P. & P.) .              | 610                                                                                                              | Tyrconnel, Earl, v. Ancaster, Duke of (2 Ves.) .          | 576                                  |
| —— v. —— (1 Cl. & Fin. Ho. of L. Ca.) .          | 417                                                                                                              | Tyrrell's, Lady, case (2 Freem.) .                        | 502                                  |
| —— v. —— (2 Myl. & K.)                           | 345, 551                                                                                                         | —— v. Hope (2 Atk.) .                                     | 508, 510                             |
| —— v. —— (1 P. Wms.; 1 Eq. Ab.; 5 Bro. P. C.) .  | 136, 141                                                                                                         | —— v. Tyrrell (4 Ves.) .                                  | 171, 186                             |
| —— v. —— (13 Sim.)                               | 132, (138), 145, 576                                                                                             | Ulrich v. Litchfield (2 Atk.) .                           | 445                                  |
| Trew, ex parte (3 Mad.) .                        | 794                                                                                                              | Underwood v. Courtown, Lord (2 Sch. & Lef.) .             | 762, 763                             |
| Triburgh v. Pomfret, Lord (cited 15 Vin. Abr.) . | 666                                                                                                              | Underwood v. Hatton (5 Beav.) .                           | 297                                  |
| Trickey v. Trickey (3 Myl. & K.)                 | 180, 183                                                                                                         | —— v. Stevens (1 Mer.)                                    | 922, 931, 932, 933, 934              |
| Trimleston v. Hamill (1 Ball & B.)               | 649, 650, 806, 808, 813                                                                                          | Unett v. Wilkes (Amb.) .                                  | 586                                  |
| Trimmer v. Bayne (7 & 9 Ves.; 4 Russ.)           | 244, 246, 438, 439, 441, 442, 443, 451, 827, 834                                                                 | Uniacke v. Gills (2 Moll.)                                | 884, 886, 891, 893, 906, 907         |
| Triquet v. Thornton (13 Ves.) .                  | 271                                                                                                              | Unwin v. Oliver (cited 1 Burr.) .                         | 351                                  |
| Trollope v. Linton (1 Sim. & St.) .              | 593                                                                                                              | Upperton v. Harrison (7 Sim.) .                           | 678                                  |
| Troughton v. Binkes (6 Ves.)                     | 360, 659, 661, 663, 671                                                                                          | Uppington v. Bullen (2 Dr. & War.)                        | 630, 631                             |
| —— v. Troughton (1 Ves.)                         | 724, 726                                                                                                         | Urch v. Walker (3 Myl. & Cr.)                             | 191, (917), 919, 929                 |
| Trulock v. Robey (12 & 15 Sim.)                  | 698, 713, 811                                                                                                    | Urquhart v. King (7 Ves.) .                               | 226, 441                             |
| Tubbs v. Broadwood (2 Russ. & M.) .              | 204                                                                                                              | Usborne v. Usborne (1 Dick.) .                            | 648                                  |
| Tuck v. Tooke (9 B. & C.; 4 Bing.) .             | 350                                                                                                              | Uther v. Rich (10 Ad. & E.) .                             | 755                                  |
|                                                  |                                                                                                                  | Utterson v. Mair (2 Ves. jun.; 4 Bro.)                    | 659, 664                             |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

XCV

|                                                         | PAGE                               |                                            | PAGE                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------|-------------------------|
| Uvedale v. Halfpenny (2 P. Wms.)                        | 26                                 | Walker v. Burrows (1 Atk.)                 | 290                     |
| —— v. Uvedale (3 Atk.)                                  |                                    | —— v. Denne (2 Ves. jun.)                  | 237, 257, 263, 266, 272 |
| Van v. Barnett (19 Ves.)                                | 257, 268, 271                      | —— v. Jefferys (1 Hare)                    | 697                     |
| Vance v. Vance (1 Beav.)                                | 862                                | —— v. Shore (19 Ves.)                      | 41, 370, 558, 559, 561  |
| Vandergucht v. De Blaquiére (5 Myl. & Cr.)              | 529, 530, 540, 868                 | —— v. Smallwood (Ambl.)                    | 369, 382, 705, 706      |
| Vanderzee v. Willis (3 Bro.)                            | 662, 724, 726, 772                 | —— v. Symonds (3 Swanst.)                  | 61                      |
| Vane v. Dungannon, Lord (2 Sch. & Lef.)                 | 590, 603                           | —— v. Walker (5 Madd.)                     | 77, 81, 86              |
| Vaughan v. Buck (7 Jur.; 13 Sim.; 1 Phill.)             | 43, 482, 483, 552                  | —— v. —— (2 Atk.)                          | 279, 620                |
| Vaughan v. Burslem (3 Bro.)                             | (157), 158                         | —— v. Wetherell (6 Ves.)                   | 461                     |
| Vaughan v. Headfort, Marquis of (10 Sim.)               | 27, 143, 469                       | Wall v. Bright (1 J. & W.)                 | 267                     |
| —— v. Wood (1 Myl. & K.)                                | 770                                | —— v. Thurborne (1 Vern.)                  | 88                      |
| Vauxhall Bridge Comp. ex parte (1 G. & J.)              | 794                                | —— v. Tomlinson (16 Ves.)                  | 478                     |
| Vawdry v. Geddes (1 R. & M.)                            | 100, 102, 181                      | —— v. Wall (15 Sim.)                       | 455, 588                |
| Vega, De la, v. Vianna (1 B. & Ad.)                     | 14                                 | Wallace v. Pomfret (11 Ves.)               | (452), 454, 606, 607    |
| Venables v. Morris (7 T. R.)                            | 24                                 | Walley v. Walley (1 Vern.)                 | 304                     |
| Verlander v. Codd (Turn. & R.)                          | 22                                 | Walton v. Walton (14 Ves.)                 | 227, 239                |
| Verner v. Winstanley (2 Sch. & Lef.)                    | 622                                | Wallwyn v. Coutts (3 Mer.; 3 Sim.)         | 59, 60                  |
| Verney v. Verney (Amb.; 1 Ves.)                         | 544                                | —— v. Lee (9 Ves.)                         | 733, 734, 768           |
| Vernon v. Bethell (2 Eden)                              | 619, 620                           | Walter v. Hodge (2 Swanst.)                | 502                     |
| —— v. Vaudrey (Barn.)                                   | 315                                | —— v. Makin (6 Sim.)                       | 539                     |
| —— v. Vernon (2 P. Wms.)                                | 51, 195, 255, 280, (282), 284, 285 | —— v. Maunde (1 J. & W.)                   | 758                     |
| —— v. —— (2 Myl. & Cr.)                                 | 717                                | Walters v. Saunders (1 Eq. Abr.)           | 477                     |
| Vezey v. Jamson (1 Sim. & St.)                          | 231                                | Warburton v. Warburton (2 Vern.)           | 25, 77, 86, 407         |
| Vice v. Thomas (4 Y. & C.)                              | 845, 846                           | Ward v. Arch (12 Sim.; 10 Jur.; 16 Law J.) | 197, 256, 293           |
| Vickers v. Cowell (1 Beav.)                             | 666, 702                           | —— v. Audland (8 Beav.; 16 M. & W.)        | 480, (904), (905), 915  |
| —— v. Oliver (1 Y. & C. C. C.)                          | 820                                | —— v. Barton (11 Sim.)                     | 813                     |
| —— v. Scott (3 Myl. & K.; 1 C. P. Coop.)                | 43, 569                            | —— v. Baugh (4 Ves.)                       | 600                     |
| Vigor v. Harwood (12 Sim.)                              | 565                                | —— v. Bevil (1 Y. & J.)                    | 145                     |
| Villers v. Beaumont (1 Vern.)                           | 878, 882, 885                      | —— v. Biddles (16 Law J.; 11 Jur.)         | 468                     |
| Vincent v. Newcombe (You.)                              | 565                                | —— v. Combe (7 Sim.)                       | 569                     |
| Valliamy v. Noble (3 Mer.)                              | 190, 770                           | —— v. Devon (9 Feb. 1805)                  | 367                     |
| Wade's case (5 Co.)                                     | 615                                | —— v. Dudley, Lord (2 Bro.)                | 393, 394                |
| —— v. Coope (2 Sim.)                                    | 844                                | —— v. Hartpole (3 Bli.)                    | (577)                   |
| Waddington v. Yates (15 Law J.)                         | 261                                | Wardell v. Wardell (3 Bro.)                | 285                     |
| Wadley v. North (3 Ves.)                                | 171                                | Wardle v. Claxton (9 Sim.)                 | 508, 510                |
| —— v. Wadley (2 Col.)                                   | 548                                | Waring, ex parte (2 Rose)                  | 796                     |
| Wagstaff v. Smith (9 Ves.)                              | 508, 511, 513, 514, 523            | —— v. Coventry (1 Myl. & K.)               | 105                     |
| Wain v. Egmont, Lord (3 Myl. & K.)                      | 355                                | —— v. Ward (5 Ves.)                        | 343                     |
| Wainwright v. Bendlows (2 Vern.; Pre. Ch.; 1 Gilb. Eq.) | 226, 329, 518                      | Warman v. Seaman (Finch; 2 Ch. Ca.)        | 148, 149, 162           |
| —— v. Hardisty (2 Beav.)                                | 516                                | Warmstrey v. Tanfield (1 Ch. Rep.)         | 24, 852                 |
| Waite v. Whorewood (2 Atk.)                             | 204                                | Warner, ex parte (19 Ves.)                 | 781, 785                |
| Waithman, ex parte (4 D. & C.)                          | 857                                | Warren v. Davies (2 Myl. & K.)             | 322                     |
| Wake v. Parker (2 Keen)                                 | 533                                | —— v. Warren (1 Bro.)                      | 429, 432                |
| —— v. Woke (1 Ves. jun.)                                | 598                                | Warrender v. Warrender (2 Cl. & Fin.)      | 527                     |
| Wakefield v. Newbon (6 Q. B.)                           | 801                                | Warrington v. Warrington (2 Hare)          | 420, 473                |
| Wakerell v. Delight (9 Ves.; Coop.)                     | 686, 688                           | Warter v. Hutchinson (1 Sim. & St.)        | 392, 393, 397           |
| Walburn v. Ingilby (1 Myl. & K.)                        | 285                                | Warwick v. Edwards (1 Eq. Abr.)            | 501                     |
| Walcot v. Hall (1 P. Wms.)                              | 298                                | —— v. Warwick (3 Atk.)                     | 141, 195                |
| Walcott v. Bloomfield (4 Dr. & War.; 2 Con. & Law)      | 392, 414, 424, 439                 | Waters v. Bailey (2 Y. & C.)               | 808                     |
| Waldo v. Waldo (7 Sim.)                                 | 573                                | —— v. Groom (11 Cl. & Fin.)                | 635                     |
| Walker, re (Llo. & Goo.)                                | 489                                | Wathen v. Smith (4 Madd.)                  | 353, 607                |
| —— v. Bell (2 Madd.)                                    | 689                                | Watkins v. Cheek (1 Myl. & K.)             | 298                     |
|                                                         |                                    | —— v. —— (2 Sim. & St.)                    | 374, 382, 383, 384      |
|                                                         |                                    | Watkins v. Watkins (2 Atk.)                | 486, 488, 491           |

|                                                                                                                    | PAGE                                            |                                                                                | PAGE                                             |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------------------------------------------------|
| Watson v. Birch (15 Sim. )                                                                                  | 713, 716                                        | Whately v. Kempt (cited 2 Ves. )                                        | 139                                              |
| — v. Brickwood (9 Ves. )                                                                                    | 340, 820                                        | Whatford v. Moore (3 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                   | 26, 399, 400                                     |
| — v. Dennis (3 Russ. )                                                                                      | 476                                             |                                                                                | (401), 406, 410                                  |
| — v. Hayes (5 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                                                              | 100, 101, 223                                   | Whatton v. Craddock (1 Keen )                                           | 688                                              |
| — v. King (4 Camp. )                                                                                        | 54                                              | — v. Toone (5 Mad. )                                                    | 62                                               |
| — v. Lincoln, Lord ( Ambl. )                                                                                | 428, 435                                        | Wheate v. Hall (17 Ves. )                                               | 142                                              |
| — v. Parker (2 Phill. )                                                                                     | (363)                                           | Wheatley v. Purr (1 Keen )                                              | 52, 861, 898, 909                                |
| — v. Wellington, Duke of (1 Russ. )                                                                         | 779, 860                                        | Wheeler v. Sheer ( Mos. )                                               | 232                                              |
| Watt v. Grove (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                                                          | 633                                             | Wheldale v. Partridge (5 & 8 Ves. )                                     | 254, 256, 257, 258, 263, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272 |
| — v. Girdlestone (6 Beav. )                                                                                 | (925)                                           | Whelpdale v. Cookson (1 Ves. ; Belt, Supp. )                     | 300, 637                                         |
| Watts v. Creswell (2 Eq. Abr. ; 9 Vin. Abr. )                                                        | 765                                             | Whetherell v. Wilson (1 Keen )                                          | 91                                               |
| — v. Hyde (2 Col. )                                                                                         | 354, 358, (361)                                 | Whetstone, Lady, v. Sainsbury ( Pre. Ch. ; 2 P. Wms. )           | 639                                              |
| — v. Kaney ( Toth. )                                                                                        | 382                                             | Whichcote v. Lawrence (3 Ves. )                                         | 300                                              |
| — v. Syme (13 Jur. )                                                                                        | 657                                             | Whitton, ex parte (1 Keen )                                      | 684                                              |
| — v. Thomas (2 P. Wms. )                                                                                    | 665                                             | Whistler v. Newman (4 Ves. )                                            | 506, 514                                         |
| Weall v. Rice (2 Russ. &amp; M. )                                                                           | 52, 430, 438, 439, 440, 443, 450, 451, 456, 607 | — v. Webster (2 Ves. jun. ; Bunb. )                              | 587, 590, 592, 598, 603, 699                     |
| Weatherby v. Giorgio (2 Hare )                                                                              | 389                                             | Whitbread, ex parte (19 Ves. ; 1 Rose )                   | 781, 785                                         |
| Webb v. Kelly (9 Sim. )                                                                                     | 460                                             | — v. Jordan (1 & 4 Y. &amp; C. )                                        | 756, 785, 789, 791                               |
| — v. Lugar (2 Y. &amp; C. )                                                                                 | 209, 299                                        | White v. Baylor (4 Dr. &amp; War. )                                     | 800                                              |
| — v. Lymington, Lord (1 Ed. S. )                                                                            | 46                                              | — v. Briggs (15 Sim. )                                                  | 225                                              |
| — v. Rorke (2 Sch. &amp; Lef. )                                                                             | 617, 632, 633, 654                              | — v. — (15 Law J., N. S. )                                              | 66, 69                                           |
| — v. Webb (2 Vern. )                                                                                        | 469                                             | — v. Carter (2 Eden ; Ambl. )                                    | 132, 136                                         |
| — v. — (1 P. Wms. )                                                                                         | 146, (151), 152, 162                            | — v. Evans (2 Ves. jun. )                                               | 244                                              |
| — v. — (2 Beav. )                                                                                           | 167                                             | — v. Hall (12 Ves. )                                                    | 9, 10                                            |
| Webber v. Hunt (1 Mad. )                                                                                    | 810                                             | — v. Hillacre (4 Jur. ; 3 & 4 Y. &amp; C. )                      | 677, 724, 726                                    |
| Wedderburn v. Wedderburn (2 Beav. ; 4 Myl. &amp; Cr. ; 2 Keen )                               | 12, 48, 61, 62, 922                             | — v. Parnther (1 Knapp )                                                | (663)                                            |
| Wedge v. Newlyn (4 B. &amp; A. )                                                                            | 351                                             | — v. Peterborough, Bishop of ( Jac. ; 3 Swanst. )                | 679, 799                                         |
| Welby v. Welby (2 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                                                                         | 589, 603                                        | — v. Vitty (2 Russ. )                                                   | 327, 366                                         |
| Weld v. Bradbury (2 Vern. )                                                                                 | 418, 419                                        | — v. White (2 Dick. )                                                   | 589                                              |
| Welham v. Welham (10 Beav. )                                                                                | 708                                             | — v. — (5 Beav. )                                                       | 37                                               |
| Wellesley v. Wellesley (4 Myl. &amp; Cr. ; 6 Sim. )                                                  | 205, 254, 527, 528, 571, 777, 778, 866          | — v. — (4 & 9 Ves. )                                                    | 544, 546, 547, 649, 551                          |
| Wellman v. Bowring (1 Sim. &amp; St. ; 2 Russ. ; 3 Sim. )                                     | 536                                             | Whitfield v. Bewit (2 P. Wms. )                                         | 573                                              |
| Wells v. Forster (8 M. &amp; W. )                                                                           | 614                                             | — v. Prickett (2 Keen )                                                 | 89                                               |
| — v. Price (5 Ves. )                                                                                        | 486, 493                                        | Whiting v. White ( Coop. ; 2 Cox )                               | 711                                              |
| West v. Erissey (2 P. Wms. ; 1 Bro. P. C. )                                                          | 136, 139, 141, 412                              | Whitmarsh v. Robertson (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. ; 1 Coll. )          | 480, 495                                         |
| — v. Reid (2 Hare )                                                                                         | 755, 756, 757, 758, 787, 789                    | Whitmore v. Trelawney (6 Ves. )                                         | 84                                               |
| — v. Skip (1 Ves. )                                                                                         | 212, 213                                        | Whittel v. Dudin (2 J. &amp; W. )                                       | 127, 249                                         |
| Westby v. Westby (1 Con. &amp; Law. )                                                                       | 530                                             | Whitem v. Sawyer (1 Beav. )                                             | 490                                              |
| Westmeath v. Salisbury (5 Bli. N. S. )                                                                      | 527, 528, 529                                   | Whittle v. Hemming (12 Jur. )                                           | 487, 536                                         |
| — v. Westmeath ( Jac. ; 1 Dow &amp; C. )                                                             | 527, 528, 533                                   | Whitwick v. Jermin (2 Vern. )                                           | 265                                              |
| Weston v. Cartwright ( Sel. Ca. Ch. )                                                                       | 62                                              | Whitworth v. Gaugain (1 Phill. ; Cr. &amp; Ph. ; 3 Hare ) | 39, (325), 640, 774, 786, 790, 793, 794, 835     |
| Wetherby v. Dixon ( Coop. )                                                                                 | 430                                             | Whorewood v. Whorewood (1 Ch. Ca. )                                     | 500                                              |
| Wethered v. Wethered (2 Sim. )                                                                              | 30                                              | Wickham v. Wickham (19 Ves. )                                           | 572                                              |
| Wetherell, ex parte (11 Ves. )                                                                       | 782, 785                                        | Wigg v. Wigg (1 Atk. )                                                  | 753                                              |
| — v. Collins (3 Mad. )                                                                                      | 670, 699                                        | Wigsell v. Wigsell (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                  | 345                                              |
| — v. Wilson (1 Keen )                                                                                       | 465                                             | Wilcocks v. Wilcocks (2 Vern. )                                         | 204, 438, 610                                    |
| Weyland v. Weyland (2 Atk. )                                                                                | 610                                             | Wild's case (6 Co. Rep. ; 2 Jur. )                               | 146, 469                                         |
| Whale v. Booth (4 T. R. )                                                                                   | 373, 378, 381                                   | Wild v. Lockhart (10 Beav. )                                            | 676, 678                                         |
| Wharton v. Durham, Lord (3 Myl. &amp; K. ; 5 Sim. ; 10 Bli. N. S. ; 3 Cl. &amp; Fin. ) | 433, 458                                        | Wilde v. Wilde (1 Rop. H. &amp; W. )                                    | 219                                              |
| — v. May                                                                                                           | 440                                             | Wilding v. Richards (1 Coll. )                                          | 350                                              |
|                                                                                                                    |                                                 | Wildman v. Wildman (9 Ves. )                                            | 477                                              |
|                                                                                                                    |                                                 | Wilkes v. Bodington (2 Vern. )                                          | 728                                              |

TABLE OF CASES REFERRED TO.

xcvii

|                                                                               | PAGE                         |                                                                        | PAGE                        |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------|
| Wilkes v. Wilkes (2 Dick. )                                            | 532                          | Wilson v. Foreman (2 Dick. )                                    | 610                         |
| Wilkins v. Stevens (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                              | 202, 204, 298                | —— v. Halliley ( Russ. &amp; M. )                               | 547                         |
| Wilkinson v. Charlesworth (10 Beav. )                                  | 476, 482, 483, 491, 535      | —— v. Hart (1 Moo. )                                            | 203                         |
| —— v. Henderson (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                                     | 214                          | —— v. Maddison (2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                           | 185, 470                    |
| —— v. Simson (2 Moo. Priv. Co. R. )                                    | 748                          | —— v. Major (11 Ves. )                                          | 233, 241                    |
| —— v. South (7 T. R. )                                                 | 149                          | —— v. Metcalfe (1 Russ. )                                       | 809, 811, 812               |
| —— v. Wilkinson (1 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                                 | 51                           | —— v. Moore (1 Myl. &amp; K. )                                  | 298, 374, 375, 376          |
| Willats v. Cay (2 Atk. )                                               | 487, 514                     | —— v. Mount (3 Ves. )                                           | 588                         |
| Willes v. Kibble (1 Beav. )                                            | 945                          | —— v. —— (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                    | 537                         |
| Willett v. Winnell (1 Vern. )                                          | 620, 623                     | —— v. Mushett (3 B. &amp; Ad. )                                 | 533, (540) 541              |
| Williams, ex parte (11 Ves. )                                   | 208, 212, 213, 276, 310      | —— v. Poe (9 Ir. Eq. Rep. )                                     | 356                         |
| —— (Buck.)                                                                    | 278                          | —— v. Short (6 Hare )                                           | 665                         |
| —— (1 J. &amp; W. )                                                    | 146                          | —— v. Spencer (3 P. Wms. )                                      | 397, 398                    |
| —— v. Bolton, Duke of ( Cox )                                          | 570, 572                     | —— v. Townsend, Lord J. (2 Ves. jun. )                          | 588                         |
| —— v. Bosanquet (3 Moo. )                                              | 786                          | —— v. Wilson (14 & 15 Sim. ; 12 Jur. )                   | 527, 528, 530, 532          |
| —— v. Callow (2 Vern. )                                                | 491, 511                     | —— v. —— (1 De G. &amp; S. )                                    | 592                         |
| —— v. Carter ( Sug. on Pow. )                                          | 23, 142                      | Wiltshire v. Rabbits (14 Sim. )                                 | 730                         |
| —— v. Chitty (3 Ves. )                                                 | 324, 327                     | —— v. Smith (3 Atk. )                                           | 653                         |
| —— v. Coade (10 Ves. )                                                 | 256                          | Winch v. Brutton (14 Sim. )                                     | 67, 70; (8 Jur. ) 71 |
| —— v. Corbet (8 Sim. )                                                 | 71                           | —— v. James (4 Ves. )                                           | 493                         |
| —— v. Everett (14 East )                                               | 58, 296, 778, 860            | —— v. Page ( Bunb. )                                            | 483                         |
| —— v. Jekyl (2 Ves. )                                                  | 148                          | Winchester, Bishop of, v. Beavoir (4 Ves. )                     | 681, 703, 705               |
| —— v. Jones (10 Ves. )                                                 | 225, 229, 245                | —— v. Paine (11 Ves. )                                          | 382, 383, 705, 706          |
| —— v. Kirshaw (1 Keen )                                                | 233                          | Wind v. Jekyl (1 P. Wms. )                                      | 853                         |
| —— v. Lambe (3 Bro. )                                                  | 733                          | Windham v. Graham (1 Russ. )                                    | 414, 416                    |
| —— v. Medlicot (6 Pri. )                                               | 785                          | —— v. Jennings (2 Rep. Ch. )                                    | 724                         |
| —— v. Nixon (2 Beav. )                                                 | (928)                        | —— v. Richardson (2 Ch. Ca. )                                   | 728                         |
| —— v. Owen (5 Myl. &amp; Cr. ; 10 Sim. )                        | 619, 620, 621, 622           | Wingrave v. Palgrave (1 P. Wms. )                               | 399                         |
| —— v. Owens (2 Ves. jun. )                                             | 18                           | Winkworth v. Winkworth (8 Bea. )                                | 249                         |
| —— v. Piggott ( Jac. )                                                 | 630                          | Winn v. Littleton (2 Ch. Ca. ; 1 Vern. )                 | 296, 702                    |
| —— v. Powell (2 Phill. )                                               | 63                           | Winnington v. Foley (1 P. Wms. )                                | 949                         |
| —— v. Springfield (1 Vern. )                                           | 300, 303                     | Winslow v. Tighe (2 B. &amp; B. )                               | 302                         |
| —— v. —— (3 Mer. )                                                     | 6                            | Winter v. Anson, Lord (3 Russ. )                                | 760, 761, 785               |
| —— v. Williams (15 Ves. )                                              | 571                          | Wise v. Wise (2 J. &amp; Lat. )                                 | 859                         |
| Williamson v. Gordon (19 Ves. )                                        | 681                          | Wiseman v. Westland (1 Y. &amp; J. )                            | 763, 785                    |
| —— v. Seaber (3 Y. &amp; C. )                                          | 304                          | Witcher v. Penley (1 Coll. ; 9 Beav. )                   | 83                          |
| Willie v. Lugg (2 Eden )                                               | 726                          | Withers v. Kennedy (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                           | 321                         |
| Willis v. Fineux ( Pre. Ch. )                                          | 639                          | —— v. Withers ( Amb. )                                          | 202                         |
| —— v. Lucas (1 P. Wms. ; 2 Cox )                                | 135, 777                     | Withrington v. Banks ( Sel. Ca. Ch. )                           | 649                         |
| —— v. Hiscox (4 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                       | 47                           | Withy v. Mangles (4 Beav. )                                     | (143), (215), 893           |
| —— v. Willis (2 Atk. ; 3 Ves. )                                 | 201, 202, 204, 400           | (Was heard on appeal in the House of Lords, 10 Cl. &amp; Fin. ) |                             |
| Willock v. Willis (26 June , 1818)                                     | 356                          | —— v. —— (10 Cl. &amp; Fin. )                                   | 496                         |
| Willoughby v. Willoughby (1 T. R. ; Belt. Supp. ; Amb. ) | 733, 743                     | Witts v. Boddington (3 Bro. )                                   | 82                          |
| Willox v. Rhodes (2 Russ. )                                            | 830                          | —— v. Dawkins (12 Ves. )                                        | 512, 513, 522               |
| Wilson v. Pack ( Pre. Ch. )                                            | 479, 502, 503                | Wollen v. Tanner (5 Ves. )                                      | 590                         |
| Wills, ex parte (1 Ves. jun. ; Cox )                     | 639, 777                     | Wombwell v. Belasyse (cited 6 Ves. )                            | 571                         |
| —— v. Sayer (4 Mad. )                                                  | 507, 508                     | —— v. Laver (2 Sim. )                                           | 478                         |
| Wilman v. Bowring (3 Sim. )                                            | 307                          | Woodstock v. Shillito (6 Sim. )                                 | 420                         |
| Wilmot v. Woodhouse (4 Bro. )                                          | 443, 608                     | Wolestoncroft v. Long (1 Ch. Ca. )                              | 319                         |
| Wilmott v. Pike (5 Hare )                                              | 645, 729, 730, 735, 764, 858 | Wolstan v. Aston ( Hard. )                                      | 632                         |
| Wilson, ex parte (2 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                           | 647                          | Wood v. Briant (2 Atk. )                                        | 458                         |
| ——, in re (8 Sim. )                                             | 684                          | —— v. Cox (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                                   | 72, 80, 224, 226            |
| —— v. Bath, Lord (cited 4 Ves. )                                       | 342                          | —— v. Downes, (18 Ves. )                                        | 305                         |
| —— v. Cluer (3 Beav. )                                                 | 810, 811                     |                                                                        |                             |
| —— v. Fielding (2 Vern. )                                              | 828                          |                                                                        |                             |

|                                                                     | PAGE                               |                                                                             | PAGE                                    |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------|
| Wood v. Hitchings (3 Beav. )                                 | 10                                 | Wright v. Simpson (6 Ves. )                                          | 9, 845                                  |
| — v. Londonderry, Marquis of (12 Jur. )                      | 299                                | — v. Ward (4 Russ. )                                                 | 779                                     |
| — v. Percy (5 Vin. Abr. )                                    | 254                                | — v. Wood (12 Jur. )                                                 | 708                                     |
| — v. Richardson (4 Beav. )                                   | 466                                | — v. Wright (1 Ves. )                                                | 30, 52, 289, 852(853) 855, 866, 892 |
| — v. Roberts (2 Stark. )                                     | 358                                | — v. — (16 Ves. )                                                    | 223, 242                                |
| — v. Sanders (2 P. Wms. )                                    | 162                                | Wrightson v. Hudson (2 Eq. Abr. )                                    | 763                                     |
| — v. White (2 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                               | 105, 367, 368, 634                 | — v. Macaulay (4 Hare )                                              | 260, 261, 271                           |
| — v. Williams (4 Mad. )                                      | 700, 707                           | Wrixon v. Vize (1 & 2 Con. &amp; Law. ; 3Dr. &amp; War. ) | 705, 714, 715, 716, 717, 812            |
| — v. Wood (3 Hare )                                          | 75                                 | Wroughton v. Colquhoun (1 De G. &amp; S. )                           | 330                                     |
| Woodcock v. Dorset, Duke of (3 Bro. )                        | 400, 402                           | Wyatt v. Barwell (19 Ves. )                                          | 763                                     |
| Woodgate v. Field (2 Hare )                                  |                                    | — v. Wallace (1 C. P. Coop. )                                        | 581                                     |
| — v. Unwin (4 Sim. )                                         | 143                                | — v. Sharratt (3 Beav. )                                             | 42                                      |
| Woodhouse v. Hoskins (3 Atk. )                               | 949, 950                           | Wycherley v. Wycherley (2 Eden )                                     | 58, 284                                 |
| Woodman v. Morrel ( Freem. )                                 | 216                                | Wyndham's case (3 Swanst. )                                          | 199                                     |
| Woodmeston v. Walker (2 Russ. &amp; M. )                     | 525                                | Wynn v. Williams (5 Ves. )                                           | 734                                     |
| Woods v. Woods (1 Myl. &amp; Cr. )                           | 73, 74, 78, 463, 470               | Wynne v. Hawkins                                                            | 65                                      |
| Wooley v. Drag (2 Anst. )                                    | 650, 808                           | — v. Styan (2 Phill. )                                               | 661, 701, 714                           |
| Woollands v. Crowcher (12 Ves. )                             | 534                                | Wynter v. Bold (1 Sim. &amp; St. )                                   | 405, 408, 409                           |
| Woolmore v. Burrows (1 Sim. )                                | 129                                | Wyth v. Blackman (1 Ves. )                                           | 419                                     |
| Worrall v. Harford, (8 Ves. )                                | 804                                | Wythe v. Henniker (2 Myl. &amp; K. )                                 | 327, 342, 343, 819, 820, 832            |
| — v. Jacob (3 Mer. )                                         | 532                                | Wytham v. Cawthorn (1 Eq. Abr. )                                     | 489                                     |
| — v. Johnson, (2 J. &amp; W. )                               | 802                                | Yallop, ex parte (15 Ves. )                                   | 220                                     |
| Worthington v. Morgan (13 Jur. )                             | 768, 781, (788), 789, 794          | Yates v. Compton (2 P. Wms. )                                        | 240                                     |
| Wortley v. Birkhead (2 Ves. ; 3 Atk. )                | 737, 738, (751), 752               | — v. Hambly (2 Atk. )                                                | 616, 617, 618, 699, 710, 845            |
| Wragg v. Denham (2 & 4 Y. &amp; C. )                         | 650                                | — v. Phettiplace (2 Vern. )                                          | 421                                     |
| Wray v. Steele (2 V. &amp; B. )                              | 202                                | — v. Sherrington (11 M. &amp; W. )                                   | 477                                     |
| Wrey v. Smith (14 Sim. )                                     | 561                                | Yea v. Yea (2 Rop. H. and W. )                                       | 531                                     |
| Wright, ex parte (19 Ves. )                           | 782, 783                           | Yeates v. Groves (1 Ves. jun. )                                      | 351, 860                                |
| — v. Atkyns ( Turn. &amp; R. )                               | 64, 66, 67, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77 | York v. Brown (1 Col. )                                              | 939, 946                                |
| — v. Cadogan, ( Amb. ; 2 Eden ; 1 Bro. P. C. ) | 493, 637                           | York Building Company v. Mackenzie, (8 Bro. P. C. )                  | 304                                     |
| — v. Dorchester, Lord (3 Russ. )                             | 858                                | Young, ex parte (2 Ves. &amp; Bea. )                          | 797                                     |
| — v. Eaglefield; see Wright v. Cadogan.                             |                                    | — v. English (7 Beav. )                                              | 800, 813                                |
| — v. Morley (11 Ves. )                                       | 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 491, 843  | — v. Hassard (1 J. &amp; Lat. )                                      | 839                                     |
| — v. Nutt (3 Bro. ; 1 H. Bl. )                        | 9, 834, 845                        | — v. Macintosh (13 Sim. )                                            | 511                                     |
| — v. Pearson (1 Eden )                                       | 23, 134                            | — v. Martin (7 Jur. ; 2 Y. &amp; C. C. C. )                   | 66, 69                                  |
| — v. Pilling ( Pre. Ch. )                                    | 742                                | — v. Peachy (2 Atk. )                                                | 199, 200, 202                           |
| — v. Rose (2 Sim. &amp; St. )                                | 636                                | — v. Waterpark, Lord (10 Jur. )                                      | 23                                      |
| — v. Row (1 Bro. )                                           | 23, 226, 229                       | — v. Wilson (10 Ir. Eq. R. )                                         | 363                                     |
| — v. Ratter (2 Ves. jun. )                                   | 587                                | Younghusband v. Gisborne (1 Col. 89; 2 R. Prop. Cases )       | 91                                      |

TABLE OF STATUTES.

|                      | PAGE     |                  | PAGE                              |
|----------------------|----------|------------------|-----------------------------------|
| 11 Hen. VII. c. 20   | 139      | 13 Eliz. c. 4    | 32                                |
| 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10  | 588      | 13 Eliz. c. 5    | 290, 351                          |
| 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9   | 863, 870 | 27 Eliz. c. 4    | 288, 290, 351, 883, 886, 887, 893 |
| 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39  | 220      | 43 Eliz. c. 4    | 33                                |
| 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16 | 868      | 21 Jac. I. c. 19 | 722, 856, 857                     |

TABLE OF STATUTES.

cxix

|                                                  | PAGE                             |                                                                               | PAGE                                                                                |
|--------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10                           | 434                              | 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 27                                                         | 457                                                                                 |
| 29 Car. II. c. 23                                | 40, 194, 781                     | 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 45                                                         | 648                                                                                 |
| 29 Car. II. c. 3                                 | 194, 643                         | 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92                                                         | 9                                                                                   |
| 1 Jac. II. c. 17                                 | 74                               | 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 100                                                        | 714                                                                                 |
| 3 Will. & M. c. 14. 313, 314, 315, 317, 388, 830 |                                  | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27                                                         | 61, 62, 194, 626, 674, 685, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 716, 718, 719, 722, 724, 937   |
| 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 16                           | 645                              | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 28                                                         | 325, 355                                                                            |
| 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 16                           | 740                              | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41                                                         | 9                                                                                   |
| 4 & 5 Will. & M. c. 20                           | 722, 798                         | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42                                                         | 685, 716, 717                                                                       |
| 8 & 9 Will. III. c. 11                           | 480                              | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 43                                                         | 724                                                                                 |
| 5 Anne, c. 8                                     | 11                               | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55                                                         | 221, 774, 775                                                                       |
| 6 Anne, c. 2                                     | 751                              | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74                                                         | 24, 504, 639, 679, 680, 728, 878, 948                                               |
| 7 Anne, c. 12                                    | 14                               | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 98                                                         | 615, 640                                                                            |
| 7 Anne, c. 19                                    | 16, 645                          | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104                                                        | 265, 313, 318, 319, 330, 331, 334, 336, 344, 388, 663, 725, 799, 817, 830, 833, 936 |
| 12 Anne, stat. 2, c. 16                          | 640                              | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105                                                        | 388, 598                                                                            |
| 2 Geo. II. c. 19                                 | 578, 582                         | 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106                                                        | 224                                                                                 |
| 2 Geo. II. c. 22                                 | 854                              | 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 22                                                         | 463, 577, 578, 582                                                                  |
| 7 Geo. II. c. 20                                 | 685, 686, 687, 688, 697          | 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23                                                         | 6, 32, 220, 663, 684                                                                |
| 9 Geo. II. c. 36                                 | 20, 230, 855                     | 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 29                                                         | 42                                                                                  |
| 14 Geo. III. c. 79                               | 640                              | 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 82                                                         | 696                                                                                 |
| 17 Geo. III. c. 26                               | 643                              | 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 92                                                         | 139                                                                                 |
| 26 Geo. III. c. 60                               | 220                              | 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76                                                         | 33, 35                                                                              |
| 34 Geo. III. c. 68                               | 220                              | 6 Will. IV. c. 14                                                             | 799                                                                                 |
| 39 Geo. III. c. 99                               | 776                              | 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71                                                         | 578                                                                                 |
| 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88                          | 32                               | 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 28                                                   | 716, 719                                                                            |
| 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98                          | 25, 165, 236, 252                | 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 78                                                   | 35                                                                                  |
| 47 Geo. III. c. 72                               | 386                              | 1 Vict. c. 6                                                                  | 26                                                                                  |
| 47 Geo. III. c. 74                               | 388, 389                         | 1 Vict. c. 26. 6, 17, 18, 36, 52, 153, 233, 267, 295, 329, 589, 594, 879, 895 |                                                                                     |
| 48 Geo. III. c. 149                              | 267                              | 1 Vict. c. 28                                                                 | 714                                                                                 |
| 53 Geo. III. c. 141                              | 643                              | 1 Vict. c. 80                                                                 | 640                                                                                 |
| 52 Geo. III. c. 101                              | 37                               | 1 & 2 Vict. c. 69                                                             | 616, 684                                                                            |
| 54 Geo. III. c. 145                              | 6                                | 1 Vict. c. 110                                                                | 518, 640, 643, 704, 722, 740, 798, 799                                              |
| 55 Geo. III. c. 192                              | 594                              | 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110                                                            | 7, 41, 91, 309, 319, 352, 355, 688, 704, 722, 724, 735, 741, 794, 795               |
| 57 Geo. III. c. 99                               | 778                              | 1 & 2 Vict. c. 117                                                            | 36                                                                                  |
| 58 Geo. III. c. 93                               | 640                              | 2 Vict. c. 11                                                                 | 722, 763, 798                                                                       |
| 3 Geo. IV. c. 47                                 | 640                              | 2 & 3 Vict. c. 37                                                             | 776                                                                                 |
| 4 Geo. IV. c. 76                                 | 493                              | 2 & 3 Vict. c. 69                                                             | 336                                                                                 |
| 4 Geo. IV. c. 83                                 | 376, 773                         | 3 & 4 Vict. c. 105                                                            | 704                                                                                 |
| 6 Geo. IV. c. 16                                 | 40, 213, 221, 351, 615, 722, 856 | 5 Vict. c. 5                                                                  | 858                                                                                 |
| 6 Geo. IV. c. 94                                 | 376, 773, 774                    | 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116                                                            | 665                                                                                 |
| 6 Geo. IV. c. 110                                | 221, 775                         | 6 & 7 Vict. c. 66                                                             | 722                                                                                 |
| 7 Geo. IV. c. 57                                 | 352                              | 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70                                                             | 351                                                                                 |
| 9 Geo. IV. c. 14                                 | 713, 716                         | 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76                                                             | 948                                                                                 |
| 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 46                  | 88, 315, 364                     | 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96                                                             | 776                                                                                 |
| 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 47                  | 314                              | 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89                                                             | 221                                                                                 |
| 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 58                  | 868                              | 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106                                                            | 97, 855, 896, 948                                                                   |
| 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 60                  | 16, 32, 48, 670, 684, 943        | 8 & 9 Vict. c. 110                                                            | 879                                                                                 |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 7                                 | 722                              | 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112                                                            | 616                                                                                 |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 36                                | 7, 680                           | 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96                                                           | 49, 952, 954                                                                        |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 40                                | 245                              |                                                                               |                                                                                     |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 47                                | 313, 388, 680, 681               |                                                                               |                                                                                     |
| 1 Will. IV. c. 104                               | 592                              |                                                                               |                                                                                     |
| 1 & 2 Will. IV. c. 36                            | 691                              |                                                                               |                                                                                     |
| 2 Will. IV. c. 33                                | 696                              |                                                                               |                                                                                     |
| 2 Will. IV. c. 110                               | 868                              |                                                                               |                                                                                     |

ERRATA IN VOL. II.

---

- Page 9, note (b), last line but two, for "law," read "lien."
16, 48, 670, 684, and 943, before "1 Will. IV. c. 10," add "11 Geo. IV. and "
36, for § 32, read § 31.
47, note (h), before "Goodson v. Ellison," insert "Curteis v. Candler, 6 Mad. 123 ; and see."
70, note (c), for "Mansfield," read "King."
78, note (a), for 70 read 85.
97, note (f), for "Fry," read "Spry."
126, eighteenth line, after issue, add "for life."
224, first line, for "that," read "where."
229, strike out the last passage in note (c).
235, head line, for "note," read "rule."
315, last line, for "quasi," read "qua."
335, eleventh line, insert "not," between "be" and "also."
340, note (e), read "2 Jarm. on Wills, 572, et seq."
379, note (d) of p. 378, fourth line, for "1 Atk." read "3 Atk."
471, for "Stirpes," read "Stirps ;" also in the Report there cited.
515, note (a), second line, for "1 Bro." read "2 Bro."
534, heading of additional note I., for 426, read 476.
538, thirteenth line, for 175, read 474-5.
565, note (a), for 655, read 555.
577, note (d), for "4 Ves." read "5 Ves."
593, note (e), last line, for 14, read 15.
619, head line, for "separation," read "re-purchase."
626, note (c), for 248, read 243.
642, note (a), seventh line, for 447, read 44, 47.
730, note (a), for "Eldon," read "Erskine."

In Chapter III. "executory" is in some instances used where "directory" is meant.

---

IN VOL. I.

- 529, note (c), after "Doe v. Ellis," insert "but see 1 Vict. c. 26, § 29 ; supra, p. 475, and Vol. II. p. 154."

PART THE THIRD.

---

BOOK THE FIRST.

EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS IN PROPERTY, REAL AND PERSONAL, WHICH ARE RECOGNIZED BY THE COURT OF CHANCERY; THEIR NATURE AND INCIDENTS.

---

CHAPTER I.

GENERAL VIEW OF EQUITABLE ESTATES AND INTERESTS CREATED BY WAY OF EXPRESS DECLARATION.

SECTION I.—Introduction.—Equitable Interests and Equitable Rights distinguished.—Foreign Jurisdiction as regards Equitable Interests and Rights.

Distribution of the subject of Equitable Jurisdiction as regards specific property.

Jurisdiction of the Court ranges itself under two great divisions.

In the first Equitable Estates and Interests are the subject.

In the second the Legal Estate or Title is the subject, in virtue of an Equitable Right.

In the first the Court recognizes and preserves the Legal Estate.

In most cases Person having Equitable Estate is not entitled to call for Legal Estate—in some simple cases he may—these seldom subject of litigation.

In some cases it is essential the Legal Estate should remain permanently in the Trustee—Permanent Trusts—in Special Trusts it must remain in him for the purposes of the Trust.

In those cases which belong to the second division the Legal Title has been acquired or is retained wrongfully—the object of the Jurisdiction is to give the Legal Title to the Party entitled to it in conscience—to enforce an Equitable Right.

Some Cases of Trusts by operation of Law come within the first division.

Other Equitable Interests embraced in the first division.

First subject to be considered—Express Trusts—two classes of Express Trusts.

Power of creating a Trust co-extensive with power to dispose—but Trust may be created where no power of actual Transfer.

Every kind of Alienable Property may be subject of a Trust.

Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in respect of Property situate beyond the bounds of its jurisdiction, in reference both to Equitable Estates and Equitable Rights, considered.

Exercised by coercion of the person when the party found within the jurisdiction.

Court will not interfere in regard to Property within the jurisdiction of a Foreign Tribunal, unless it be necessary for the ends of justice.

2      Two divisions into which the Jurisdiction separates itself.

In what cases, generally speaking, the Court will, and when it will not hold the Sentence of a Foreign Tribunal of competent jurisdiction binding.

Course of the Court as regards Contracts entered into in Scotland or in the Colonies.

Suit as to Contract entered into between the Parties in a Foreign Country—Contracts construed according to the law of the Place—Remedy given according to English course of proceeding.

Right of Alien to sue.

Sovereign Prince may sue, Liabilities where he submits to the Jurisdiction.

In the absence of Evidence showing that a different principle should be applied the Court will apply its own principles to a Transaction in the Colonies.

Treaties between East India Company and Sovereign Princes in India not the subject of Municipal Jurisdiction.

Infant may be ordered to convey Lands out of the Jurisdiction, but not out of the Queen's Dominions.

THE jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, where it is exercised in regard to specific property, as will have been collected from the general view which is contained in the former volume, ranges itself under two great heads or divisions; under the one, equitable estates and interests in real and personal property, created by the Court of Chancery, and unknown to the Common Law, are the subjects of its jurisdiction; under the other, the subject of the jurisdiction is in effect, directly or indirectly, the legal estate title or interest itself; the Court, in each case where it grants relief, operating primarily at least, on the person. In the cases which range themselves under the first division, the Court recognises and preserves a legal estate or title, as well as an equitable title; indeed, in most cases, the legal estate or interest has been devised or conveyed to the person in whom it is vested expressly for the purposes of the trust, and the legal title is only so far interfered with as to make it subservient to the enjoyment of the co-existent equitable interests.

Where a person is entitled to an equitable estate, generally speaking, as has already been observed, it is no part of his right to have the legal estate conveyed to him. Undoubtedly in the simple case of all the trusts excepting that which was created in favour of some individual having run out or been exhausted, the cestui que trust, unless in the case of a married woman or an infant (a), may require the legal estate to be conveyed to him; that is, he may insist that his absolute beneficial interest shall be clothed with the legal estate. But this description of case is seldom the subject of litigation; the cases which chiefly engage the attention of the Court of Chancery are those where there are subsisting trusts, and in which many persons concurrently or in succession, or in both those ways, are interested. In all such cases it is essential to the interests of the several parties concerned, that the legal estate or interest should remain in a trustee: the trusts which have been described as Permanent Trusts are of this description (a).

(a) V. sup. vol. i. p. 496; and Raikes v. Ward, there cited.

So if a person claims a legacy or sum of money, which is to be raised for his benefit out of real or personal estate, under a devise or a conveyance in trust to sell, or under a charge imposed upon the estate in his favour, it would plainly not be an execution of the trust to convey to him the legal estate; in almost every such case some other person besides himself must be interested in the due raising of money, and generally speaking in the application of the proceeds; it is necessary, therefore, that the trustee should have the legal estate or interest, so that he may be enabled by sale or mortgage to raise and satisfy the charges on the estate, and, that done, to transfer the residue of the estate, or of the proceeds, to the parties interested. These are the trusts which have been described as Special or Temporary Trusts (b). Both of these classes come under the description of express trusts.

The cases which range themselves under the second division, are those in which the legal title has not been conveyed to the party in whom it is vested by way of trust, but has been acquired, or is retained against conscience and equity; and the equitable doctrines which govern this branch of the jurisdiction are put in force for the purpose of having the legal title in the property transferred to the person who, according to honesty and conscience, in the view of the Court of Chancery, is entitled to the property: there is no object to be attained, as in the cases which come under the first division, which requires that the legal estate should be kept outstanding: the claimant seeks to enforce an equitable right, not to secure an equitable estate: so that the doctrine of constructive trusts is applied in these cases only for the purpose of effecting an immediate transfer of the beneficial interest to the person who is entitled in equity to the legal interest: such cases therefore do not properly belong to the present volume.

There are some trusts which come under the class of constructive trusts, which have this feature in common with those which have been before described and classed under the first division of the subject, namely, that the legal estate has been rightfully vested in the person declared to be a trustee but, as in the cases which are ranged under the second division, there is no purpose for which the legal estate

(a) Vol. i. pp. 448, 466.

(b) Mr. Lewin, on Trusts, p. 23, has given a classification of the various kinds of trusts which the reader will do well to refer to.

should remain outstanding; for instance, where an estate is purchased by one person, with his own money, but in the name of another, so as to make such person his trustee (a), here the only duty which such a person has to perform is to convey the estate to the actual purchaser, for whom he is constructively a trustee, or as he shall direct, and it is neither a case of a permanent trust nor of a special or temporary trust, as above defined. In the instance of resulting trusts also (b) it is not required for any purpose that the legal estate or the possession should continue in the trustee. But as the legal estate or possession, in both the cases above referred to, becomes vested in the person so declared to be trustee, by the act or instrumentality of some party entitled, or at least not by wrong, such trusts, though not express trusts but constructive implied or presumptive trusts (c), I have considered as belonging to the first division of the subject, and therefore to be treated of in this volume.

There are, as will be seen in the following pages, other Equitable Interests in real and personal property, arising out of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery; for instance, the equity of redemption of a mortgagee: all such interests will be considered in this volume. The Equitable Interests of the vendor and purchaser under a contract for sale will also be noticed, but the details more properly belong to the head of Specific Performance, which forms one of the subjects of Equitable Rights.

According to the course above proposed, our attention, in the following pages, will first be directed to those equitable estates and interests in real and personal property, created by way of express trust, which are recognized by the Court of Chancery, and to which a title may be acquired, which title does not, excepting in the instances above alluded to, involve the right of calling for a transfer of the legal estate or interest; we shall shortly examine what is the nature and what are the incidents of this kind of right to the enjoyment of property, real and personal, including what are the rights of the cestuis que trust, and what are the rights and duties of the trustees: but although the main inquiry will relate to express trusts, yet in prosecuting this subject we shall frequently have to refer to the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to trusts by construction of law (d). The jurisdiction of the

(a) V. supra, Vol. i. p. 511.

(b) V. supra, Vol. i. pp. 510, 451.

(c) See Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. 592; supra, Vol. i. p. 496.

(d) Trusts, it will be remembered, were, for the sake of elementary consideration, classed under two divisions:—1st. Express Trusts,

(Vol. i. pp. 439, 495-6,) whether created by act inter vivos, or by will. 2nd. Trusts arising by implication or construction of law (Vol. i. p. 508), comprising implied trusts (Vol. i. p. 509), resulting trusts (Vol. i. p. 510), and constructive trusts (Vol. i. p. 511).

Court of Chancery as to trusts in the more comprehensive sense of that term (a), namely, that which includes constructive trusts and other trusts by operation of law, embraces a large portion of its jurisdiction; for whoever has the possession of goods or lands, either has the absolute property or estate in them by a sufficient title, or so far as this is wanting is considered by the Court of Chancery, generally speaking, as a trustee for the true owner (b).

There are two classes of express trusts of real and of personal property:—1st. Those where the trust is defined, and the trustee or person who is to carry the trust into execution is expressly pointed out; of which there are also two descriptions, namely, those which are imposed by direct words of trust, and those which are imposed in the way of wish or recommendation (c). 2ndly. Those where the trust is defined, but the person who is to carry it into effect is not pointed out, so that the character of trustee has to be imposed on some person for the purpose of carrying the trust into execution; in such case the trust, as regards the person of the trustee, is a trust by construction of law (d).

The power of creating a trust of real or personal estate on the part of the owner of such property, is co-extensive with the ability to dispose; but a trust may be created, as will be seen hereafter, where no legal disposition could be effected. Infants are disqualified by law, and persons of unsound mind are incapable. Married women may create a trust of their real estate by disposition, according to the mode of alienation prescribed by law (e); and they may create a trust of their separate personal property and of such real property over which a separate power of disposition is secured to them, as effectually as if they were single (f).

(a) V. supra, Vol. i. p. 509—512.

(b) This applies, even at law, in some few cases, as in the instance of money paid to another by mistake, 2 Fonbl. 2, 3, and Buller's N. P. 131; Bize v. Dickason, 1 T. R. 285; Moses v. Macferlane, 2 Burr. 1010: v. supra, Vol. i. p. 634. Equitable rights, which are secured through the medium of constructive trusts, belong, as before observed, to the second principal division; but they are incidentally noticed in this volume.

(c) Trusts of this description have usually been classed with implied trusts, but for the reasons after mentioned, it appears to me that they should be treated as express trusts.

(d) Supra, Vol. i. p. 509, n. (d).

(e) Formerly by fine—now by deed acknowledged, supra, Vol. i. p. 167—169.

(f) V. infra, Chap. vii. Sect. ix., "Separate

Estate of Married Women." In reference to who has the power to dispose, it may be useful to observe, that as regards Bankrupts, although all the property of a bankrupt up to the time of obtaining his certificate becomes under the Bankrupt Acts vested in his assignees, so as generally to deprive him of all power of alienation, his statutory allowance vests in him on the payment of the sufficient dividend, and that whether he be living at the time or not, Ex parte Safford, 2 Gl. & J. 128; so that he may dispose of his statutory allowance, as he may of the ultimate surplus of his estate, if any. As regards Felons, the forfeiture of goods and chattels takes effect by the conviction of the party of treason or felony, and has no relation back to the commission of the offence; therefore a felon may, before conviction, assign his personal property for a valuable considera-

6 Express Trusts, General Rules—Property out of the Jurisdiction.

Every kind of property, real and personal—indeed, whatever will yield profit, and which is alienable—may be the subject of a trust (a).

It may be taken as a general rule, that although there be an allegation of a trust, that will not alone give the court jurisdiction; the plaintiff is bound to state how the trust arises, for the court is to carry out the trust, and is not therefore to be left in the dark on the subject (b). And although there may be a remedy at law in respect of the trust created—for instance, where it depends upon a covenant on which the covenantees might sue at law—still, where a more convenient and effectual remedy may be obtained by decree, the Court of Chancery will entertain jurisdiction (c).

It may be useful in this place to recur to and add some further illustrations of the principles upon which the Court of Chancery acts in applying its equitable jurisdiction in regard to property situate without the bounds of its jurisdiction; and to notice also the principles which are applied in the English courts in respect of the sentences of foreign tribunals, and as to suits by foreigners.

It was observed in the former volume, that the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, to secure the enjoyment of equitable interests and to enforce equitable rights, is not confined to cases where the property in respect to which such equitable title or right is claimed is in England. The court, it will be remembered, according to its original constitution, operated upon the conscience of the person (d), not upon the property, or in rem (e); and now the primary decree is tion; but if the alienation be colourable and without consideration, for the purpose of avoiding a forfeiture, it is fraudulent and void against the Crown, Perkins v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 219, 227-8-9. In that case an assignment of stock by a prisoner under a charge of felony, in trust to secure payment of an antecedent debt and the costs to be incurred in his defence, was established against the Crown. As regards real estate, attainder has relation back to the time when the offence was committed, 4 Bla. Com. 381; but by the statute 54 Geo. III. c. 145, no attainder for felony, except in cases of treason, petit treason, or murder, shall extend to the disinheriting any heir, or to the prejudice of the right of any person other than the offender during his life. The stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, as to escheat and forfeiture, will be noticed hereafter, et v. supra, Vol. i. p. 289.

(a) Including a recipe for a medicine, Green v. Folgham, 1 Sim. & St. 398, the Golden Ointment case. Lord Nottingham, indeed, on an attempt being made to make a child bring some chemical receipts given to her by her father, into hotchpot, said he would not countenance these sorts of receipts, which he thought in most cases savoured of quackery, so as to put a value on them in Chancery; "for aught I know," said his Lordship, "a receipt to make mince pies or catch rats may be as valuable," Jenks v. Holford, 1 Vern. 62; but see Newbery v. James, 2 Meriv. 446; Williams v. Williams, 3 Meriv. 160; Green v. Folgham, ubi supra; and Dietrichsen v. Cadburn, 2 Phill. 52. By the new Stat. of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26 (supra, Vol. i. p. 473), the question in regard to devises of stock, noticed by Lord Eldon in Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 440, 441, is put an end to.

(b) Lord Cottenham, Jackson v. North Wales Railway Company, xiii. Jur. 70, affirming the decision of the V.-C. K. Bruce.

(c) See int. al. Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 599, and Williamson v. Codrington, 1 Ves. 518, and Davenport v. Bishop, 1 Phill. 698, 705.

(d) Supra, Vol. i. p. 391—427; Toller v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494.

(e) The Court of Chancery, in the reign of James I., established its authority contrary always against the person. All that is necessary, in order to enable the Court to exercise its primary authority, is that the person should be amenable to its jurisdiction. Where, therefore, a case is made out against a person resident here, in respect of property situate out of the jurisdiction of the Court, but within the empire or its dependencies, which would call for the interference of the Court of Chancery, if the property were situate in this country, the Court, as it had the power, so it has assumed the jurisdiction, where such an interference is necessary to the ends of justice, of enforcing the equitable rights of the parties to or over property out of its jurisdiction, by coercion of the person and sequestration of his property here (a), in the same manner as it would have done had the property been situate in this country. Where parties, defendants, are resident in England, said Sir J. Leach, and brought by subpoena here, this Court has full authority to act upon them personally, with respect to the subject of the suit, as the ends of justice require; and with that view, to order them to take or to omit to take any steps or proceedings in any other court of justice, whether in this country or in a foreign country (b). This court does not pretend to any interference with the other court; to its original constitution (v. sup. vol. i, 391—2) to issue a writ of assistance for enforcing a decree for delivering possession of land, see Roberdeau v. Rous, 1 Atk. 544; Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 454, which is now obtained at once on demand and refusal to obey the order; stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 36, § 15, Rule 19; Gen. Order, 26 Aug. 1841, § 13. The legislature has conferred on the court the power of issuing execution by fiery facias and elegit, as at law, stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 18, Gen. Orders, 10 May, 1839. The same statute has extended the remedy by elegit and fiery facias, § 11, 12, 13, 20. Now all the freehold and copyhold lands of a debtor may be taken in execution under an elegit, and choses in action may be taken under a writ of fiery facias, v. sup. vol. i. p. 392, 505.

(a) V. sup. vol. i. p. 427; Bent v. Young, 9 Sim. 190; a case relating to a Surinam mortgage, Foster v. Vassall, 3 Atk. 589; Lord Cranstown v. Johnston, 3 Ves. 182, 13 Ves. 324; Jackson v. Petrie, 10 Ves. 164; and see Archer v. Preston, 1 Eq. Abr. 133, pl. 3, where a bill was sustained for an account of rents and profits of an estate in Ireland, though not for a partition; and see, on this point, Angus v. Angus, West's Rep. 24; Roberdeau v. Rous, 1 Atk. 544 (a case as to property in the colonies), Earl of Kildare v. Eustace, 1 Vern. 421; Arglasse v. Muschamp, 1 Vern. 77, and the cases cited in Raithby's note;

Cartwright v. Pettus, 2 Ch. Ca. 214; Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sen. 444, 454-5; (case of specific performance of articles in regard to the boundaries of two provinces in America), Earl of Derby v. Duke of Atholl, 1 Ves. 204, and the other cases cited, supra, vol. i. p. 427, n. (g); Houlditch v. Lord Donnegal, 8 Bli. N. S. 344. In the last cited case it was held by the House of Lords that the Court of Chancery in Ireland might examine into the propriety of a decree of the Court of Chancery in England, in a suit instituted in Ireland to carry it into effect.

As regards Fraud, Lord Hardwicke said, in Angus v. Angus, West's Rep. p. 23—"This had been a good bill as to fraud and discovery if the lands had been in France, in case the persons had been resident here, for the jurisdiction of this court as to frauds, is upon the conscience of the party;" but the difference of the laws of the two countries would prevent any question of trust from being entertained here as to lands in France. See Code Nap. art. 896.

The service of subpoenas in suits instituted here, on parties living out of the jurisdiction, is regulated by 32nd of the general orders of 8 May, 1845.

(b) Per Leach, M.R.; Bushby v. Munday, 5 Mad. 307; and see Portarlington v. Soulby, 3 My. & K. 108; Lord Brougham there clearly states the result of the authorities.

it acts upon the defendant by punishment for his contempt, in his disobedience to the order of the court; and if he continue contumacious, and ultimately obtain a judgment in the other court, this court will protect the plaintiff here against the consequences of that judgment (a).

A sale of an estate in the colonies, in order to realise a sum of money charged upon it, may be made in a suit instituted here (b); and it seems that in a suit here in respect of a mortgage in the colonies, the mortgagee will have the same relief here that he might obtain by a suit in the colonies; the mortgagor, therefore, will be protected from the vexation of double suits instituted by the mortgagee—one here, the other in a colonial court; though the court will reserve to itself the power of giving such directions in regard to the colonial suit, as to ensure to the mortgagee all his rights (c).

The Court of Chancery has no power directly to affect property situate out of the bounds of its jurisdiction (d); and therefore, as a decree made here may be ineffectual, it is no bar to a suit instituted in a colonial court (e).

(a) Sir J. Leach, Bushby v. Munday, 5 Mad. 307. In that case there was an action in Scotland, and a suit here, both involving the same question—namely, whether by the law of England the defendant Clowes had a right to recover upon the bond in question. Sir J. Leach considered that the Court of Chancery was the more convenient court for determining the question, for if the plaintiff established his case, the bond would be ordered to be delivered up, so that he would be relieved from all further liability, here or elsewhere; and here the plaintiff would have the benefit of Mr. Munday's admissions on oath, which in the suit in Scotland he would not. If the Court of Session should come to erroneous conclusions on the subject, it would be in vain to urge that this court ought to be concluded by that judgment; the substantial ends of justice would require that this court should pursue its better means of determining, both as to the law and the fact; if the opinion of this court did not concur with that of the Court of Session, the defendant Clowes must be restrained by the injunction of this court from taking the fruit of his judgment there; and if the opinion of this court did concur with that of the Court of Session, the defendant would have the fruit of that judgment, not by the proper force of that judgment, but because he was entitled to it by the opinion of the court. His Honour, therefore, at once granted an injunction, but he bound the plaintiff to submit to such steps in Scotland by judgment or otherwise, as would secure to the defendant Clowes the benefit of the preferable lien, which he might have acquired by his suit in Scotland on the land in Scotland, if he should ultimately establish any demand on the bond, 5 Mad. 308-9.

(b) Gascoine v. Douglas, Dick. 431; as to the mode of making a plantation in the colonies liable for a debt contracted here, see Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vern. 460.

(c) Beckford v. Kemble, 1 Sim. & St. 15; and see Harrison v. Gurney, 2 Jac. & W. 563. Mr. Bell, in Beckford v. Kemble, stated that there were cases in which this court, noticing the law of Jamaica, had upon foreclosure decreed a sale instead of foreclosure, of the estate in the West Indies, so as to give the mortgagee the same benefit by his suit here as he would have obtained by that in Jamaica.

(d) Roberdeau v. Rous, 1 Atk. 544, and see 2 Swanst. 323-4, note; therefore the validity of a will of lands in the colonies is not triable in Westminster-hall, though made in England, Pike v. Hoare, 2 Eden, 184; but see Lord Henley's note, p. 185, and his work on Injunctions, p. 142-3; nor can a partition be obtained, supra, p. 7, note (b).

(e) Bayley v. Edwards, 3 Swanst. 710, Lord Camden, C.

But, as before observed, the court will not interfere in these cases, unless it be necessary for the ends of justice. If a matter becomes the subject of litigation in, and of adjudication by, a court of competent jurisdiction in the colonies or elsewhere, the same parties will not be permitted to open the same subject of litigation in the Court of Chancery, any more than they would, in case there had been such an adjudication in one of the tribunals in this country, in respect of matter which might have been brought forward as part of the subject of contest, but which was not brought forward by the party complaining only because he has, from negligence, inadvertence, or even accident, omitted a part of his case (a).

But where the court refrains from interference it is on the presumption that justice has been or will be fairly and properly administered. Natural law, said Lord Eldon, requires the courts of this country to give credit to those of another for the inclination and power to do justice; but if that presumption is proved to be ill-founded in any particular case the court cannot, of course, act on the presumption (b).

If a decree obtained in a foreign or colonial court is impeached, as being so plainly against natural justice (c), or contrary to the jus gentium (d), as that it may be considered as altogether null and void; or if it appear to have been obtained by fraud (e), the Court of Chancery, in such cases, would probably assume jurisdiction in the same manner as if the matter had never been adjudicated upon; but an allegation of a mere irregularity in the proceedings, or even of an apparent error in the judgment in point of law (f), is insufficient to sustain a bill seeking to have the whole matter opened in this court after an adjudication in a foreign or colonial court of competent jurisdiction. As regards the colonial courts, there is an appeal from such courts to the judicial committee of the Privy Council (g), which tribunal may reform the

(a) V. C. Wigr.; Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare, 115, and the cases there cited. Lord Camden, in Bayley v. Edwards, 3 Swanst. 710, was of opinion, on appeal, that the pendency of a suit here could not be effectually pleaded to a suit instituted in Jamaica where the property was situate, for the same matter.

(b) See Wright v. Simpson, 6 Ves. 730. Lord Eldon, in this case, in which the question arose whether a creditor can be compelled to resort to any lien he may have upon the property of his creditor out of the kingdom, before he proceeds here against the debtor personally; decided against the opinions of Lord Thurlow, Wright v. Nutt, 1 H. Black, 136;

3 Bro. 326, 339. Lord Kenyon and Lord Rosslyn; see Eden's note, 3 Bro. 340, that he could not, more especially as the law in that case was not a subject of contract, but was given by the act of the foreign state.

(c) See Becquet v. Mac Carthy, 2 Barn. & Adol. 951, 958.

(d) See the authorities cited in Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim. 291.

(e) Mitford on Pl. 256; White v. Hall, 13 Ves. 324; Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim. 302-3.

(f) See White v. Hall, 12 Ves. 323-4.

(g) See Stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 41.

errors of any of the colonial courts, and call for further evidence if necessary (a), and even suspend the execution of the decree pending the appeal if justice requires that it should be suspended (b).

If a person has, by proceedings in a foreign court, improperly obtained what is there considered as the equitable as well as the legal title, the court has jurisdiction in a suit instituted here to declare him to be trustee for those who are beneficially entitled to the property, and to enforce such decree by its process against the party, if within the jurisdiction (c).

Where a sentence of a foreign court has affected the relative rights of the parties in that country as between themselves, and then proceedings are taken by one of them in this country, if the interference of the Court of Chancery is necessary, in order to protect the rights of the party sued, the court will not examine into the merits of the sentence which has been so obtained, in reference to the law of the country where it was pronounced (d); it might be different if a suit were instituted here merely to carry such a sentence into execution (e).

Confiscation in a foreign country cannot operate upon property here: no nation executes the criminal judgments of another (f).

When the matter has not been the subject of judicial decree or decision, if it be a matter within the jurisdiction of another tribunal of competent authority, the court will, unless under special circumstances, leave it to be disposed of by that tribunal, though it will, when necessary, so far interfere as to secure or make available the fund as to the disposal of which the question has arisen. Thus, where a person domiciled in England founded a charity which was to be administered in Scotland, where there are courts competent to give the necessary directions for its regulation if such should be required, the Court of Chancery secured the fund, but would not entertain jurisdiction to administer the trusts (g). But the Court of Chancery being a superior court of general jurisdiction, the presumption in its

(a) Wood v. Hitchings, 3 Beav. 511.

(b) V. C. Wigr.; Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare, 114. The V. C. gave no opinion as to whether the court would entertain jurisdiction where a decree so impeached was made by a foreign tribunal, from which there was no appeal to any superior court which the Court of Chancery could regard as competent to administer justice in the case, ib. p. 118; and see White v. Hall, 12 Ves. 324.

(c) Lord Cottenham, Price v. Dewhurst, 4 My. & Cr. 85, though the authority of the case on which his lordship relied has been impeached, so far as relates to an English probate, by the late decision in the House of Lords, in Barrs v. Jackson, ix. Jurist, p. 609, infra.

(d) See Gold v. Canham, 2 Swanst. 325, note, before Lord Nottingham, Hamilton v. Dutch, E. I. Comp. 8 Bro. P. C. 264, 269; and Anon. 2 Swanst. 326.

(e) See 8 Bro. P. C. 269.

(f) Folliott v. Ogden, 1 H. Bla. 125; Barclay v. Russell, 3 Ves. 429.

(g) Attorney-Gen. v. Lepine, on appeal, 2 Swanst. 181; Provost and Bailiffs of Edinburgh v. Aubery, Ambl. 236.

favour is, that nothing of equitable cognizance shall be intended to be out of its jurisdiction which is not shown and alleged to be so; if, therefore, it be sought to exclude the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, it is an essential requisite to show that another court of competent authority has jurisdiction of the matter (a).

The Court will not compel a person resident here to make a discovery to be used in a suit in a foreign court, unless it be shown that a suit has been instituted, and that the discovery is essential to the proceedings there, and that the parties to the suit are deprived of the benefit of that discovery by the party to make it being in this country (b).

If two suits are instituted, one in the Court of Chancery, the other in the Court of Session of Scotland (c), which is a court of law and of equity (d), to enforce equitable rights in respect of property partly within the jurisdiction of the Court of Session and partly within that of the Court of Chancery, the Court of Chancery cannot on principle (e) restrain the proceedings in the Court of Session; at least, as regards that portion of the property which is subject to equitable rights of which that court properly has cognizance, if such proceedings appear to have been instituted bonâ fide, and not by collusion. The Court of Session might with greater propriety, perhaps, restrain the proceedings here in respect of that portion of the property. But the Court of Chancery will retain its own suit. The relief given by the Court of Session on the whole matter may not be exactly the same as that given in the Court of Chancery here; the national character of the individuals, and the character of the property which the decree affects, will determine, on the ultimate hearing of the cause, whether the English or Scottish notions of equity are to be applied; if in the

(a) Lord Hardw., Earl of Derby, v. D. of Athol, 1 Ves. 203-4; Nabob of Carnatic v. E. I. Comp. 1 Ves. J. 388; S. C. Bro. C. C. and see Mitf. on Plead. 256.

(b) See Bent v. Young, 9 Sim. 190. This suit related to proceedings in Surinam; and see 1 Ves. 205; Dunn v. Coates, 1 Atk. 288. It would seem that the court will perpetuate testimony, with a view to proceedings in a foreign court; Morris v. Morris, 2 Phillips, 205.

(c) By the Act of Union it is declared, that no causes in Scotland be cognizable by the Court of Chancery or any other court in Westminster Hall, and that such courts shall have no power to cognosce, review, or alter the acts or sentences of the judicatures within Scotland, or stop the execution of the same, 5 Anne, c. 8, art. 19. Sir J. Leach, in granting an injunction in Bushby v. Munday, ubi inf., said, as to the argument derived from this article of the union, his mind was in no degree affected by it; the article only meant that the courts should remain as independent as they were before the union; if the Act of Union had never been made, he should have granted the injunction; the injunction in no way broke in upon the absolute independence of the Court of Session, but touched only the party affected by it. This course of reasoning was applied successfully, as we have seen in the former volume, to enable the Court of Chancery to nullify the judgments of the common-law court of Westminster Hall, when contrary to natural justice.

(d) See 2 Swanst. 321.

(e) See on this subject the cases cited in Mr. Swanston's note to Kennedy v. Cassillis, 2 Swanst. 325; Eden on Injunctions, 141, et seq. The subject will be more fully considered under the title "Injunctions."

Scottish court, Scottish principles of equity should be applied to the subject-matter to which English equitable principles ought to be applied, the Court of Chancery will, as it is presumed, so far as its powers over the persons and the property will enable it, set right any decree that may be made by the Court of Session in Scotland (a).

If the question in litigation depends upon the right to land according to the law of the colony where it is situate, the Court of Chancery will leave the question to be decided there (b); as the right to land or immoveables (unlike personal property, which follows the domicile) (c) is to be determined by the law of the country where it is situate; but if that question is mixed up with others,—for instance, with matters of account,—which can be more conveniently (d) disposed of here, the court will entertain jurisdiction of the whole matter, giving such directions as may be necessary as to any proceedings which it may be thought advisable to institute in the colonial courts (e).

As to the inconvenience of having different suits here and in the colonies, considering the difficulties of administering justice between parties occasionally living under separate jurisdictions, Lord Camden thought that, as regards questions of equitable cognizance, the parties ought to be amenable to every court possible where they are travelling from country to country: the Court of Chancery, said his lordship, will correct the mischiefs of these double suits as much as it can, by allowing in each country the benefit of all the other proceedings in the other parts of the British dominions; and this should be introduced to the notice of the court by supplemental bill, or insisted upon by answer, according as the occasion may require (f).

As regards contracts relating to property in Scotland or in the

(a) See Kennedy v. Lord Cassillis, 2 Swanst. 321-2; and see Bushby v. Munday, 5 Mad. 308-9; supra, p. 7. The Vice-Ch. K. Bruce, in Leslie v. Baillie, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 96-7, held that payment by English executors of a legacy to the surviving wife—domiciled in Scotland, whose husband, who was also domiciled there, and who, by the law of Scotland, was entitled to the legacy, so that it had passed to his representatives—was a good payment, though the executors had notice that the husband and wife were Scotch persons, but not that the Scotch law differed from the English law.

(b) See Attorney-General v. Stewart, 2 Meriv. 156; Elliott v. Lord Minto, 6 Mad. 16; Price v. Dewhurst, 4 My. & Cr. 81, 83, 84; Bent v. Young, 9 Sim. 190, 191; Beckford v. Kemble, ubi sup.

(c) Pipon v. Pipon, Ambl. 25, App. D.,

Blunt's Ed.; Thorne v. Watkins, 2 Ves. 35; Campbell v. French, 3 Ves. 321; Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim. 299; and see Stanley v. Bernes, 3 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 435-8, and the cases in the argument.

(d) So if the whole matter may be more conveniently disposed of here, Beckford v. Kemble, 1 Sim. & S. 15.

(e) Bunbury v. Bunbury, 1 Beav. 326, 331; and see Bushby v. Munday, 5 Mad. 308, 309. When the Court of Chancery has made a decree in a suit embracing all the questions between the parties, no one ought to take proceedings in a foreign court relative to the same subject though they are intended to be auxiliary only, without leave of this court, Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Beav. 214.

(f) Lord Camden, Bayley v. Edwards, 3 Swanst. 711, where the leading authorities, down to that time, may be found.

colonies, where the law varies from that which is administered here, if the Court of Chancery has to carry out such contracts, the construction will be very much influenced by where the contract was entered into, as that circumstance in most cases will afford a material index to the intention. When a contract is entered into in this country in regard to an estate in the colonies,—for instance, for the sale of a plantation, and the settlement of the proceeds upon certain trusts,—though the contract by the law of the colony may be a nullity so far as regards the estate, yet the Court of Chancery, where the intention of the parties is plain, will, so far as they are concerned, carry it into effect. But the equity of the parties claiming under the contract until a bill is filed to enforce it, is personal only as against those who have the legal dominion of the estate; so that a mortgagee having obtained the legal title from a party to the contract, even with notice, will not, it seems, be disturbed (a).

However, as a general rule, a contract which is void by the laws of the country in which it was made cannot be enforced here (b).

A settlement executed in Scotland between Scotch parties will be construed according to the law of Scotland if a suit be instituted here in regard to it; for it is not to be supposed that the parties had any English equities in their contemplation (c). So, articles executed in England in the English form, and not referring to any thing dehors the articles, will receive the construction which is proper to be put upon such an instrument in England, though the question in contention arise upon a right depending upon the law of Scotland, and such construction may not be conformable to that which would have been put upon the same words in an instrument drawn in Scotland and in Scotch form (d).

If the parties in a foreign country express that they are contracting in reference to English law, there can, of course, be no doubt that English doctrines will be applied to the contract here (e).

Where infants resident here become entitled to personal property

(a) Martin v. Martin, 2 Russ. & M. 507, 529, 530. That was the case of a settlement made on the marriage of a ward under the directions of the court.

(b) Heriz v. Riera, on a Plea, 11 Sim. 325.

(c) Anstruther v. Adair, 2 My. & K. 513, 516.

(d) Marquis of Breadalbane v. Marquis of Chandos, 2 My. & Cr. 738, on appeal.

(e) See Lang v. Lang, 8 Sim. 452, 464. In Stanley v. Bernes, 3 Haggard, 441-7, Sir

John Nicholl held, that the will of a person domiciled in a foreign country, made with the intent that it should operate as an English will, should be admitted to probate, though it was not made conformably to the laws of the country where he was domiciled; but this decision was reversed by the delegates, ibid. p. 465; 8 Sim. 300. But in Anstruther v. Chalmer, 2 Sim. 1; 8 Sim. 301, where a party domiciled in England made a will in a foreign country, that will was proved here, and it under the decree of a foreign tribunal, it will be administered for their benefit here just as any other property to which they may have become entitled. Any right which the father might have in the country in which he is domiciled over the property of the infants will not follow him (a).

Though in construing contracts the law of the place in which they are made must govern, the remedy upon them must be pursued by such means as the law of the country where the parties reside points out. A person suing in this country must take the law as he finds it; he cannot by virtue of any regulation in his own country enjoy greater advantages than other suitors here, and he ought not to be deprived of any superior advantage which the law of this country may confer (b): a Portuguese, for instance, was allowed to arrest another here, though the law of Portugal did not allow arrest for debt (c). Foreigners suing in our courts are entitled to equal justice with a subject, but not to a greater measure of indulgence than a subject would have (d).

As regards the right of an alien friend to sue, equity follows the law; an alien cannot hold real property in this country, therefore he cannot sue in respect of it; but he may hold personal property, and therefore may bring any personal action (e); and in a creditor's suit an alien creditor resident abroad may, on giving security for costs, go in and prove his debt before the master (f). An injunction will not be awarded against a foreigner here who is acting as a mere agent under the orders of the ambassador of his sovereign (g).

A sovereign prince, resident in the dominions of another, is ordinarily exempt from the jurisdiction of the courts there; but it is now settled that a foreign sovereign may sue at law and in the Court of Chancery, though he cannot be sued; and if he sues in this court, or being made a party in order that all parties interested may be before the court, he comes in, as he may, to enforce his claims, he submits was decided that it must be construed according to the law of England; and see Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim. 279, 302; S. C. on appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 86. If probate be granted here, that, in the Court of Chancery, is conclusive that the instrument is a will, so far as regards the appointment of executors; but not that the English law is to be applied to its construction; that will depend on the domicile of the testator, and the executors may be declared to be trustees against the provisions of the will, Thornton v. Curling, 8 Sim. 300, 301; S. C. 30.

(a) Gambier v. Gambier, 7 Sim. 270.

(b) See De la Vega v. Vianna, 1 Barn. & Adol. 284; Anstruther v. Adair, 2 My. & K. 513; Ashcomb's case, 1 Ch. Ca. 232.

(c) Ibid., and see Sharp v. Johnston, 2 Scott, 407.

(d) Note to Duckworth v. Tucker, 2 Taunt. 37; and 1 Bar. & Adol. 287-8, Lord Tenterden.

(e) Mitford on Pl. 229. Lord Redesdale adds, an alien enemy may sue under some circumstances.

(f) Drever v. Maudesley, 5 Russ. 11.

(g) Service v. Castaneda, 2 Coll. 58-9; and see stat. 7 Anne, c. 12, there stated.

himself to the jurisdiction; and where he is a plaintiff, if a cross bill be filed against him he must answer personally on oath (a).

It would seem that the Court of Chancery has no discretion to refuse a ne exeat regno upon an equitable demand where an equitable debt is positively sworn to, although the defendant's usual residence is in the West Indies, or Scotland, or Ireland, or in a foreign country; and although, as regards transactions in the British dominions, a bill may have been filed against the party in the country where he usually resides (b). It may be observed it is only where the demand is upon a balance of account that the writ will be issued where bail might be obtained at law (c).

As a general rule, in an application to a court of equity in this country for its interference in respect of a transaction in one of the colonies, the court will apply the same reasoning,—at least, in the absence of evidence that, according to the law of the colony, a different principle ought to be applied,—as would be applied to a similar transaction in this country (d), always, however, having regard to the different nature of landed property in the colonies (e).

It may be observed that the power of the Court of Chancery to appoint managers and consignees (f) of property in the colonies, they giving security duly to account (g), is an important engine for effectuating its decrees, in respect of property so situate (h).

The Court of Chancery will not entertain a suit instituted by a sovereign prince of India against the East India Company, where the matter arises out of a transaction in which the sovereign Indian prince

(a) Duke of Brunswick v. King of Hanover, 6 Beavan, 37; see particularly pp. 39, 42, 60. The whole of the judgment is important on this subject; all the authorities were cited and observed upon in this case; The King of Spain v. Hullett, 1 Cl. & Finell. 333; S. C. 7 Bli. 359; and see Calvert on Parties, pp. 401-2.

(b) Howden v. Rogers, 1 Ves. & B. 132; Grant v. Grant, 3 Russ. 604, 606; Flack v. Holme, 1 Jac. & W. 407, 411, 413, 415, 417; the defendant was a native of Russia, carrying on business there.

(c) Ibid. and Parnell v. Taylor, Turner & Russ. 103.

(d) See Henderson v. Henderson, 3 Hare, 115; Bentinck v. Willink, 2 Hare, 8.

(e) Scott v. Nesbitt, 14 Ves. 444, 445.

(f) See Seton on Decrees, p. 327.

(g) Morris v. Elme, 1 Ves. J. 138.

(h) V. int. al., Quarrel v. Beckford, 13

Ves. 378. The general question as to how far foreign judgments are binding, and to what extent they may be examined into in the English courts, offers too large a field of inquiry to be here entered into, and it belongs rather to a work on the common law. The Vice-Chancellor of England reviewed some of the authorities on the subject in Martin v. Nicolls, 3 Simons, 461-5. The Vice-Chancellor, in Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Simons, 302, appears to have adhered to his opinion in that case, though Lord Brougham had expressed some doubts upon it. See also Burge, Conf. of Laws, iii. 1054; Houlditch v. Lord Donegal, 8 Bli. 346; Buchanan v. Rucker, 9 East, 192; Cavan v. Stewart, 1 Starkie R. 525; Frankland v. McJusty, 1 Knapp, 274; Molony v. Gibbons, 2 Campb. 504; Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bingh. 686; Becquett v. McCarthy, 2 Barn. & Ad. 958.

treated with the Company as an independent sovereign (a)—it is not a subject of municipal jurisdiction.

An infant trustee may be ordered to convey under the stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 60, passed in substitution for the stat. 7 Anne, c. 19, though the lands of which he is trustee are situate in Ireland, the East Indies, or any other of the British dominions excepting Scotland (b), but the Act does not extend to lands out of the Queen's dominions (c).

The reader will bear in mind, as regards the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery generally, that the jurisdiction of this court cannot be taken away merely by another jurisdiction having cognizance given it of the same matters (d), though, as we have seen in the preceding volume (e)—and other instances will be noticed hereafter (f)—if the jurisdiction assumed by the courts of law over a matter originally cognizable in the Court of Chancery is effectual for all purposes, the Court of Chancery will then decline to entertain jurisdiction of the matter.

(a) Nabob of Arcot v. E. I. Comp. 4 Bro. 198; and see S. C. 1 Ves. J. 371, 3 Bro. 292.

(b) 1 Will. IV. c. 60, § 29, q. v. The decisions in the stat. of Anne had extended that statute to Ireland, the East Indies and the colonies, Expte. Prosser, 2 Bro. 325; Expte. Anderson, 5 Ves. 240, 242; Evelyn v. Forster, 8 Ves. 96. These cases proceeded on the principle that the order operated in personam.

(c) Price v. Dewhurst, 8 Sim. 620.

(d) Lord Cottenham, Attorney-General v. Aspinall, 2 My. & Cr. 628; Beckford v. Hood, 7 T. R. 620.

(e) V. supra, vol. i. p. 694, Action on the Case.

(f) V. infra, Assignments of Choses in Action.

SECTION II.—General Doctrines relating to Express Trusts.

Trusts created by Will most frequent.

In determining the Effect of the Testamentary Act, Equity follows the Law.

New Stat. of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26, as to Revocation.

Construction of Devises.

Wills of Personal Estate, as to what matters the Ecclesiastical Court has exclusive Jurisdiction.

Creation of Trusts which are to have Effect during the Life of the Party.

Where Trusts may be created by Parol, and where not.

No Form necessary even where Writing required.

Evidence sufficient to show that a Trust was created.

At what time a Trust may be declared.

Trust must be certain in its Nature, and in its Subject and Object.

Where plain Intent to create a Trust, and the Trust fails, the Property goes to Donor, or his Representatives.

Where there is a Charge which is not an Exception from the Gift, and it fails, the Devisee takes.

Limitations by way of Trust analogous to Legal Limitations.

Trusts extended to Personal Estate.

Other Equitable Interests in Personal Estate.

Doctrine of Perpetuities, and Rules as to Trusts for Accumulation apply to Trusts.

Cognizance of Trusts belongs exclusively to Court of Chancery.

Directing Principle which governs the Court of Chancery in the Exercise of its Jurisdiction as to Trusts is the Intention.

IN a subsequent part of this volume, the various kinds of express trusts of real and personal estate under which equitable interests are acquired which usually occur in practice, will be considered under distinct heads. But it may be proper first to recur to, and in some instances to enter a little more at large into, the general doctrines and rules which are applied to trust estates and interests, including the rules relating to the mode of their creation, the nature of the office of trustee, and the rights and interests of the cestui que trust.

Trusts created by will are those which most frequently come before the Court of Chancery.

When the Court of Chancery, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, has to determine upon the effect of the testamentary act itself, it is governed by the same rules as prevail in the courts of law (a). Thus, before the late Act for regulating wills (b), what would have been a revocation of a devise of an equitable estate was determined by the same general principles as were applied by courts of law to legal estates (a), though there were exceptions; as, where the beneficial interest, being distinct from the legal interest, was devised, and the devisor afterwards took the legal estate without any new modification or alteration, and where having the complete legal and beneficial estate at the date of the will, he divested himself of the legal estate, but remained owner of the equitable interest, as in the case of a mortgage or conveyance for payment of debts (b). But the law in regard to the revocation of devises by an alteration of estate is placed by the late Act upon an entirely new footing, equally binding upon courts of law and of equity (c); so that now, no conveyance or other act done subsequently to the testamentary act, will prevent the operation of the will on such estate or interest as the testator shall have power to dispose of at the time of his death.

(a) V. sup. vol. i. p. 524; and see Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. Jun. 235, 236, Lord Loughborough.

(b) "The head of revocation, once so bulky and intricate, is on the whole greatly reduced and simplified by the Act of the 1 Vict. c. 26."

As regards the construction of devises, as well as of deeds and contracts in writing, the rules, unless in some peculiar instances, are the same at law and in equity (d), the Court of Chancery having now, in general cases (e), no greater latitude in the constructions of wills than a court of law (f). But although the Court of Chancery is equally competent as a court of law, if it shall think fit, to decide upon all questions of construction, even on a legal devise, such questions, whether arising on limitations strictly legal, or on trust limitations analogous to legal limitations, are usually, in order to preserve uniformity of decision, sent to a court of law (g).

As regards wills of personal estate, the probate is conclusive both

Hayes, Elem. of Convey. vol. i. p. 377, 378, et seq.

(a) See Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. Jr. 598; 1 Jarm. on Wills, 134.

(b) Lord Alv. in Harwood v. Oglander, 6 Ves. 223.

(c) 1 Vict. c. 26, § 23, et v. sup. vol. i. pp. 473, 476; Hayes, Elem. ubi sup.

(d) See vol. i. p. 502; Lord Talbot, Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 3 P. W. 259.

(e) The exceptions have been adverted to, vol. i. pp. 195, 523; the doctrine as regards executory trusts will be separately considered hereafter.

(f) Lord Hardwicke, in Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, 2 Ves. 74<sup>o</sup>. The general rules for construction of deeds and wills have been stated, sup. vol. i. pp. 517—573.

(g) V. sup. vol. i. pp. 517—520. It may be remarked that Lord Hardwicke considered that in questions upon a legal title to an estate on the construction of a will, if there was any doubt, it was not the proper or convenient course to determine it on demurrer, though the inclination of the opinion of the judge might be in favour of the demurring party. But, he added, if the opinion of the court is, that on the face of the bill the plaintiff has no title, and the will is set forth verbatim in the bill, it is just, and more for the benefit of the parties, to cut it short on the demurrer, since it must still be determined on the same matters as are before the court on the demurrer, Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves. Sen. 246, 247; and the same reason will, of course, apply to a case of construction upon a trust estate.

as to the sanity of the testator (a), and the dispositions contained in the will (b); and even on other points incident to the granting of administration over which the ecclesiastical court has jurisdiction, as on the question who is the next of kin of the intestate, the decision of that court is conclusive (c). The Court of Chancery having jurisdiction over all testamentary bequests, necessarily has to construe such bequests; but it has lately been decided by the highest authority that the court cannot advert to any matter out of the will, excepting for the purpose of construction; so that the Court of Chancery cannot declare a person to be a trustee for another of property which is bequeathed to him, when by fraud and misrepresentation and for his own benefit, he has caused the testator to revoke a bequest of part of it which the testator had made to another person (d).

The ecclesiastical courts have jurisdiction to decree the payment of a legacy, or a share of the residue; but the Court of Chancery has also a concurrent jurisdiction (e). In all cases of bequests in trust, the Court of Chancery has exclusive jurisdiction, as that court alone can enforce the trust (f).

As regards the Creation of trusts, which are to have effect during the life of the party, it is clear as an abstract proposition that in the case of personal property (exclusive of chattels real, as terms for years in lands and tenements) (g), a declaration of trust may still (a) Williams on Executors, p. 423, and cases there cited. In Dew v. Clarke, before Sir John Nicholl, a will of a man who was proved to be generally competent to the management of his affairs was set aside by Sir John Nicholl, and his decision was affirmed by the delegates, at the instance of the daughter of the testator, who was his sole next of kin, on the ground chiefly of delusion, as regards his daughter; see the judgment by Dr. Haggard, p. 98. It is remarkable that the daughter did not, as heiress at law, attempt to dispute the will so far as regarded the real estate, and as regards the real estate, it was established by the Court of Chancery. Lord Lyndhurst had refused to advise His Majesty to grant a further commission of review.

(b) See Williams on Executors, p. 423, and cases there cited. In Allen v. Macpherson, Dom. Proc. 1847, xi. Jurist, 785, all the leading authorities were reviewed. Lord Lyndhurst considered that Barnesly v. Powel, 1 Ves. 119, which it is to be remarked was decided after Kerrick v. Bransby, 7 Bro. P. C. 437, had been overruled, ib. 787. Lord Cottenham, see particularly p. 788 a, and Lord Langdale, see p. 789 b, dissented from the judgment pronounced by the House of Lords.

(c) Boucher v. Taylor, 4 Bro. P. C. 708; Williams on Executors, 424, and the other cases, n. (f); Barrs v. Jackson, ix. Jur. 609; 1 Phillips, 582, 588, before Lord Cottenham, on appeal. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in an elaborate judgment, 1 Y. & Coll. 587—602, in which he examined the civil law authorities as well as our own, had pronounced a contrary opinion.

(d) Allen v. Macpherson, Dom. Proc. supra, note (b).

(e) V. supra, vol. i. p. 581, 582.

(f) Lord Hardw. Hill v. Turner, 1 Atk. 516; Anon. 1 Atk. 491; and see Prec. Ch. 548.

(g) Skett v. Whitmore, 2 Freem. p. 281, and there are many other cases to the same effect. The doctrine that parol evidence cannot be admitted to create a trust of chattels real was recognized by Lord Hardwicke in Hutchins v. Lee, 1 Atk. 447, though parol evidence was there admitted for the avoidance of a fraud, under peculiar circumstances.

be made without writing (a), notwithstanding the Stat. of Frauds (b). Money secured on real estate has been treated as being personal estate, not coming within the provisions of the Stat. of Frauds, so far as relates to declarations of trust (c). Parol trusts of copyholds, unless perhaps some special custom may control it, are within the operation of the statute (d). But as regards express trusts of real estate, no evidence can be received to establish such a trust, but that which the statute prescribes; namely, a writing signed by the party (e). A son conveyed his estate to his father in consideration, as it was expressed, of 400*l.*, but really as trustee, in order, as appeared, but by parol only, that he, being in better credit than the son, might raise money on the estate for the benefit of the son; it was held, that the Statute of Frauds excluded the evidence of the trust attempted to be set up, and that the only relief the son could obtain, and which was given under the prayer for general relief, was an equitable lien for the 400*l.*, which had not been, and was not intended to be paid (f).

In those cases in which a writing signed is required under the statute to evidence the trust (g), no form is requisite, either as regards the nature of the instrument or the language; the absence of the word trust is a circumstance to be attended to, but nothing more; if the whole frame of the instrument creates a trust, for the particular purpose of satisfying which the estate is devised or conveyed, the law is the same though the word trust is not used (h).

Where there is no evidence of the actual creation, any writing, which on a due construction is sufficient to show that a trust was (a) Sup. vol. i. p. 498, Foster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 707, et seq.; McFadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Hare, 461, V. C. Wigram, and the cases cited, ibid. n. (p).

(b) Supra, vol. i. p. 497.

(c) Dict. of Sir J. Leach, Benbow v. Townsend, 1 M. & K. 510. The case of Bel-lasis v. Compton, 2 Vern. 294, seems rather to have turned on the effect of parol evidence to repel a resulting trust. But see Hill on Trustees, p. 17. A different construction has been put upon the stat. 9 Geo. II. c. 36, commonly called the Stat. of Mortmain, it having been held that moneys secured by mortgage of lands, in fee or for years, or by an assignment of poor's rates or county rates, and even judgment debts, so far as they operate as a charge on real estate, are within the stat. See Jarm. on Wills, i. 199; but the reason in the latter case appears to be, that if money secured on mortgage might be given to charity, the charity by foreclosure might acquire the land itself, contrary to the policy of the statute (v. infra, "Charities"), a reason which in some measure applies to the policy of the Statute of Frauds. However, even under the stat. 9 Geo. II. c. 36, shares in the London Dock Company and West India Docks, which are declared by act of parliament to be transmissible as personal property, are not within the act. Hilton v. Giraud, V. C. K. Bruce, 26 March, 1847, xi. Jurist, 839.

(d) This seems to be assumed in Devenish v. Baines, Prec. Chan. 3.

(e) Supra, vol. i. p. 497, 498.

(f) Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russell, 422.

(g) See vol. i. p. 497.

(h) Lord Eldon, King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 273; and see Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, 447, 448.

created and is still subsisting, will avail to establish the trust (a); thus, a letter or note, or memorandum in writing, signed by the person charged to be a trustee, will be sufficient (b). So will a deposition in answer to interrogatories, or a confession in an answer to a bill, though the Statute of Frauds be expressly pleaded; for in such a case the statute is not permitted to be a cover for fraud (c). Indeed, any written evidence under the hand of the party which is inconsistent with the fact of the apparent owner being other than a trustee, will constitute him a trustee in the view of the Court of Chancery (d). In a late case, where an instrument was signed by two parties, which was drawn up for the purpose of regulating their own interests in an estate purchased on speculation, and therein a trust for a third person not a party, but with whom a previous parol agreement had been entered into by which he was to have one-third of the profits to be made by means of the estate in question, was recognized,—that was considered as a sufficient declaration of trust, and to entitle such third person to enforce the parol agreement (e).

The omission of the trustee to declare a trust on which property is held, may be made good within any reasonable time, so as to affect any person claiming under the trustee, not being a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, provided the bona fides of the transaction be established. Thus, where a bankrupt, after committing an act of bankruptcy, by deed declared himself to be a trustee of a lease granted to him more than a year before, it having been found on an issue directed to try that fact that the lease had actually been granted to the bankrupt as trustee, the deed was established against the assignees as a valid declaration of trust (f).

(a) See Randall v. Morgan, 12 Ves. 74, and sup. vol. i. p. 498.

(b) Though in the form of a promise, Belamy v. Burrow, on appeal, Forrest, 97, 106.

(c) Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 655-7. 658, 660; Hampton v. Spencer, 2 Vern. 288. In the conveyance a consideration was expressed; yet the trust, which only appeared by the defendant's answer in favour of the grantor's wife and children, was decreed. Ryal v. Ryal, 1 Atk. 59; Nabb v. Nabb, 10 Mod. 404; Cottingham v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 156; where Lord Hardwicke said, "An admission of an express trust for one person is likewise an admission of a resulting trust for another." It is to be observed that there the defendant, who confessed the trust, had also pleaded the Statute of Frauds; and see on this point Strickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. 519; Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 P. W. 323; Smith v. Wilkinson, cited 3 Ves. 705; and see Degg v. Degg, 2 P. W. 412, and other cases cited 2 Fonbl. 35, 36; but the marginal note to Kirk v. Webb, Prec. Ch. is not supported by the judgment, see p. 88. The doctrine, in regard to a plea of the statute to a bill for specific performance, is different; for although the defendant admits a parol agreement by his answer, yet if he relies on the statute, he has the benefit of it, Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 37; see Mitf. on Pleading, 267.

(d) See Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 427; Cripps v. Jee, 4 Bro. 472.

(e) Dale v. Hamilton, on appeal, xi. Jurist, 575, 576, reported on original hearing, 5 Hare, 369.

(f) Gardner v. Rowe, 2 Sim. & St. 346, affirmed on appeal, 5 Russ. 258. Some letters

Where it is sought to affect any property, real or personal, with a trust, the trust sought to be established must be certain in its nature and in its subject and object (a). In those cases where a writing is required, if the signed document refer to any other document which shows what was meant by the parties, that will be sufficient (b); and, further than this, where there is a writing signed so as primâ facie to satisfy the requisitions of the statute, then, if the terms of the trust do not sufficiently appear upon the face of it, evidence may be received for the purpose of showing the position in which the party signing stood when he wrote and signed the document, the circumstances by which to his knowledge he was surrounded, and the degree of weight and credit which, independently of any question of construction, may belong to the document so signed (c); and if the judge, so assisted, can collect that the intention and views of the parties required a positive trust, and the objects of the trust are plain, the court will enforce it (d). Illustrations of this doctrine, in regard to recommendatory trusts, will be given in a succeeding section (e).

Where there is a plain intent to create a trust, and the property is conveyed for that purpose, but the trust attempted to be declared is too uncertain or indefinite for the court to execute, it would be unreasonable that the trustee should keep the property for himself, which plainly was not intended (f). The property, therefore, in the view of the Court of Chancery, goes to the party, whether the donor himself, his heir at law, or next of kin, or other claimant, who would have been entitled to it if there had been no specific act of disposition of the property; had passed between the parties on the subject before the bankruptcy, but they do not appear to have affected the judgment; and see Milner v. Singleton, 2 Y. & Coll. N. S. p. 75, as to letting in parol evidence of circumstances to create a trust on the ground of agency; there the trust was denied by the answer.

(a) V. C. K. Bruce, Morton v. Tewart, 2 Y. & Coll. N. S. 80; Foster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 706, 707; S. C. 5 Ves. 308. "There must be certainty of the thing demanded to be adjudged or decreed, or at least a means to reduce it to a certainty; for otherwise the court will not know how to give judgment." Hobart, 174, Siderf. 270; and see the other cases cited, Treat. Eq. by Fonbl. i. 173, 174; and see ib. ii. 39, Downman's case, 9 Rep. 9 a, &c. As to the corresponding doctrine in the creation of uses, v. sup. vol. i. p. 499.

(b) See Tawney v. Crowther, 3 Brown, 319, 320, Eden's edn.; Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 250. These cases are decisions on the fourth section, supra, vol. i. p. 646, but the principle applies to the seventh; the words of the fourth section are, "unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith," or some person lawfully authorized by him.

(c) Morton v. Tewart, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 75, 77, 79; and see Gardner v. Rowe, 5 Russ. and Milner v. Singleton, before Lord Cottenham, cited 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. ubi supra; Verlander v. Codd, Turner & Russ. 356. The same principle is laid down by Lord Thurlow, as to the construction of a will, in Eden v. Smyth, 5 Ves. 355-6, et v. supra, vol. i. p. 557.

(d) Morton v. Tewart, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 80, 81.

(e) Under the head of "Trusts created by Words of Recommendation," &c. infra, p. 64, et seq.

(f) V. supra, vol. i. p. 499, and see Fowler v. Garlike, 1 Russ. & M. 235.

and it is the same if the trust attempted to be declared be void, or become incapable of taking effect. Where the property is conveyed or devised in trust, but the trust declared does not exhaust the property, the portion unaffected by the trust will equally belong to the person who would have been entitled to it had there been no disposition (a). But where there is an absolute devise to a person not as trustee, but, for anything that appears to the contrary, beneficially, and an imperfect or inefficient trust is then attempted to be imposed, the property, as noticed in the former volume, will remain in the donee, for there is an actual gift, and the subsequent act being a nullity, there is nothing in fact to impair the effect of the gift (b).

Limitations by way of trust, of real estate, it will be remembered, have always been considered in the Court of Chancery in the same light and as having the same incidents, generally speaking, as corresponding legal estates at law (c).

(a) Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1 Bro. p. 503; Cogan v. Stephens, Lewin on Trusts, Append. No. VII. p. 719, et seq.; Hughes v. Evans, 13 Sim. 496, sup. Vol. i. pp. 510, et v. infra, "Resulting Trusts."

(b) Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 297, sup. Vol. i. p. 499. On the same principle it has been held that where there is a devise subject to a charge which fails, it sinks for the benefit of the devisee, Jackson v. Hurlock, Amb. 687; 2 Eden, 263, 274; Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 811, dict. of Lord Alvanley. The other cases on this point are collected by Mr. Hill on Trustees, p. 112, et seq., and Mr. Jarman on Wills, i. pp. 302, 307, et seq.; the conflicting decisions are stated and reviewed in each of those works, Mr. Jarman leaning to the title of the heir, pp. 308-9. In Cooke v. Stationers' Company, 3 My. & K. 264, Sir J. Leach thus states the law as regards a residuary devisee, and which affords a general principle wherever the intention can be ascertained:—"Where a real estate is directed to be sold, and the testator wills that a sum of 1000*l.*, or any other sum of money, shall be applied to a particular purpose, and the residue of the produce of the sale only is given to A., and the particular purpose fails, either by lapse or because it is void at law, then the heirs, and not A. will take the 1000*l.* or other sum of money, because the whole is real estate at the death of the testator, and A. can take no more of that estate than is expressly given to him—namely, the residue of the real estate, after deducting the 1000*l.* or other sum;" and then his Honour states the leading cases as to this point. "Where real estate is not directed to be sold, and the residuary devise is not of the produce but of the corpus of the real estate, then the question arises between the heir-at-law and the devisee as to the intention of the testator. If the devise to a particular person or for a particular purpose is to be considered as intended by the testator to be an exception from the gift to the residuary devisee the heir takes the benefit of the failure. If it is to be considered as intended by the testator to be a charge only upon the estate devised, and not an exception to the gift, the devisee will be entitled to the benefit of the failure." And see Wright v. Row, 1 Bro. p. 61, where the same distinction is taken in the margin of the case, and Gravenor v. Hallum, Amb. 643.

(c) Supra, Vol. i. p. 503, "I am of opinion," said Lord Henley, "that a limitation of a trust perfected and declared by a testator must have the same construction as the devise of a legal estate executed, and to hold the contrary would make property very precarious and uncertain. The testator would mean one thing in this court, and directly the contrary on the other side of the hall," Wright v. Pearson, 1 Eden, 125. This opinion was called forth in consequence of Lord Hardwicke's expression in Garth v. Baldwin, 2 Ves. 655, being cited, that the construction ought to be the same, "unless the intention of the testator, or the author of the trust, plainly appeared to the contrary;" and see Austen v. Taylor, 1 Eden, 366-368; Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 1 Ed. 417; Jervoise v. Duke of Northumberland, 1 Jac. & Walk. 570; Legatt v. Sewell, 2 Vern. 551, a case of an executory trust; see also Mr. Butler's note to Co. Litt. 290 b, which the student will do well to read, though part of it is now obsolete, by reason of the recent statutes relating to real property. It is to be observed, that the rule in Shelley's

It has already been observed, that trusts were from an early period extended to personal estate; the executory limitations of terms for years and personal chattels which were at length allowed by the courts to prevail in wills (a) having been the creatures of the Court of Chancery, it was natural that in that court such limitations should be allowed to take effect when created by deed by way of trust (b). The limitations of a trust of a term, and an executory devise of a term, are governed by the same rules (c).

Many other equitable interests in personal estate, as, for instance, by assignments of choses in action, which will be noticed more particularly hereafter, were recognized and enforced in the Court of Chancery, though they were regarded as nullities in courts of law (d).

But although the limitations of equitable estates and interests, in all their incidents, have very closely followed the corresponding limitations of legal estates; yet in respect of one of the most important trusts of personal estate, and that which is now of constant occurrence, namely, for the separate use of married women—which will form a distinct subject of consideration hereafter—the doctrines of the common law in regard to marital right not only have not been followed, but, as will be more particularly noticed hereafter, they have been made to give way altogether to rights created by the court for the wife as a distinct person (e).

Every estate and interest given by way of trust must be confined within the limits prescribed by the doctrine relating to perpetuities (f). As regards trusts for accumulation, originally the limits to the accumulation of annual income and the creation of future estates were the same: that which was too remote a period for the suspension of the acquisition of full power over the corpus of the property was likewise case (sup. Vol. i. p. 142) applies to equitable as well as legal interests, and whether the trust be created by deed or by will, see 1 Fonbl. 407, and the cases there cited; provided both interests be created by the same instrument: but no union takes place unless the limitation to the heirs, and the limitation to the ancestor be of the same quality, i. e. both legal or both equitable; see Jarm. on Wills. ii. 243-4. To make a good tenant to the præcipe, said Lord Thurlow (Shapland v. Smith, 1 Bro. 76), it is necessary that there should be a legal estate for life, with a legal reversion in tail, or an equitable estate for life, with an equitable reversion in tail; and see Lord Say and Sele v. Jones, 3 Bro. P. C. 113; Silvester v. Wilson, 2 T. R. 444; and Venables v. Morris, 7 T. R. 342-

438; but the mode of barring entails, as before mentioned, is now regulated by the statute for disentailing lands and abolishing fines and recoveries, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74.

(a) Supra, Vol. i. 194.

(b) See Warmstey v. Tanfield, 1 Ch. Rep. 16; D. of Norfolk's case, 3 C. C. 1; 1 Eq. Abr. 192; Massenburgh v. Ash, 1 Vern. 234, 304.

(c) Fearne, Ex. Dev. 354; agreed Massenburgh v. Ask, 1 Vernon, p. 234.

(d) See Vol. i. p. 457, and infra, Chap. ix.

(e) V. supra, Vol. i. pp. 596-7, et infra, Chap. viii. s. ix.

(f) See Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 1 Ed. 417, 418, and infra, Chap. ii.

too remote for the accumulation, and consequent deprivation of the beneficial enjoyment of accruing profits (a). Any attempt to carry on an accumulation (except in certain cases, as for payment of children's portions and debts) for more than twenty-one years, has been restrained by statute (b): but it has been adjudged that if the trust exceed the prescribed limits, it is not altogether void, but only for the excess beyond twenty-one years, or the other period fixed by the statute (c). But these subjects will be more fully considered hereafter (d).

From what has been said, it will at once be seen that the cognizance of estates and interests created by way of trust, as distinct from the legal estate or interest, must belong exclusively to the Court of Chancery, which court is their parent (e). The courts of law, in modern times at least, have not shown any disposition to take cognizance of trust estates or interests; indeed, if a case be sent to a court of law, it will refuse to give its opinion, if the question as stated in the case appears to arise upon a trust (f); when, therefore, a case as to the effect of a limitation of a trust estate is sent to a court of law, the case is always so drawn up as to obtain an opinion upon an analogous legal gift, not that which is presented to the Court of Chancery. However, the courts of law, in some cases, are compelled collaterally to take notice of trusts, as in the case of an estate devised upon trusts, in which the question whether the trustees take any and what estate, depends upon the nature and purposes of the trust (g).

The directing principle which governs the Court of Chancery in the exercise of its jurisdiction in regard to trusts, and which may be traced throughout almost every other branch of its jurisdiction, is the intention (h); indeed, it may be stated, as an almost universal proposition,

(a) Jarm. on Wills, 264; Lewis on Perpetuities, 592; Sir W. Grant, 2 Ves. & B. 61.

(b) 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98. See next note.

(c) Griffiths v. Vere, 9 Ves. 131; and see Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295.

(d) V. infra, "Trusts for Accumulation."

(e) There are still some other courts of equity, the Chancery of Lancashire, for instance, but all are governed by the same principles.

(f) See 5 Ves. 581, et v. vol. i. p. 517. However, in one case, viz., Farmer v. Francis, 9 Moore, 310; S. C. 3 Bing. 151, the Court of Common Pleas certified that certain parties took equitable estates in fee.

Lord Hardwicke defines a trust to be "such a confidence between the parties, that no action at law will lie, but is merely a case for the consideration of courts of equity;" Sturt v. Mellish, 2 Atk. 612; such a confidence, therefore, as would found an action at law, he would not have called a trust.

(g) Jarman on Wills, 251, note i. ii., 202-228.

(h) "Fidei Commissa are only supported on the intention, which is their life and foundation," D'Aguessau, Evans' Pothier, ii. 516, and see Com. Dig. Chanc. 4 W. 13, infra. It may be observed, that in the early cases, both at law (Co. Lit. 24 b, and Hargrave's note,) and in equity (see particularly Nourse v. Tarworth, Finch, 159; Hyde v. Seymour, 2 Freem. 42; Scudamore v. Scudamore, Pr. Ch. 544; Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Vern. 421; Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Ves. 513,) special favour has been shown to the "heir," but latterly the claims of the heir have been that, provided the intention do not contravene the policy of the law, or the rules and maxims which govern the rights and incidents of property (a), the Court of Chancery will give effect to the intention without regard to form (b).

A public trust, or thing for the public good, more especially shall be liberally expounded (c). In executory trusts—as where the testator has directed money to be laid out in land to be settled—it is not material whether he has used any technical terms, or confounded technical terms; if there be a clear intention, the court will execute that intention, by correcting, adding to, or altering the sense; it is sufficient to discover the intent (d); but this will be more fully considered hereafter.

In ascertaining what is the intention, the established rules of evidence and of construction—which have been shortly stated in the preceding volume—are resorted to. But though it can hardly be said that there are any rules of construction peculiarly applicable to trusts, unless in the instance of legacies (e), yet it has been said that the maxim, qui hæret in litera hæret in cortice, is more especially applicable to cases of trusts; and in such cases the court will from the general frame of the will or settlement, collect the intent contrary to the express words of a particular clause (f): so where a term has been so placed in a settlement, that the trust might be defeated, the court has corrected the mistake (g). But if the words are clear, whatever inconveniences may result, they must be followed; thus, if a testator thinks proper, whether prudently or not, to say distinctly that his considered without reference to any special favour, see 1 Fonb. 428; 2 Fonb. 97; Toldervy v. Colt, 1 Y. & Coll. 621. Some rules however have descended to our times which have been considered as founded on this special favour, see Doe v. Ewart, 7 Adol. & Ell. 649, one of which, namely, as to the different meanings to be given to dying without issue, was put an end to by the late Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 6, § 29.

(a) Browne v. De Laet, 4 Bro. 535.

(b) See Lord Northington's judgment in Earl of Northumberland v. Earl of Egremont, 1 Eden, 446.

(c) New River Company v. Graves, 2 Vern. 431; Same v. Henley, ib. 432; Lord Somers, Com. Dig. Ch. 4 W. 13.

(d) Lord Rosslyn (1794), Browne v. De Laet, 4 Bro. 535; Banks v. Lady Le Despencer, 10 Sim. 589; supra vol. i. p. 527, et seq.

(e) Supra vol. i. p. 524.

(f) As in the instance 2 Ventr. Com. Dig. Ch. 4 W. 13, a case of a will; Targus v. Puget, 2 Ves. 195; a case of executory trust in marriage articles, was decided on the "impossibility of a design to carry away from the issue of the marriage (though so on the words) in favour of a remote relation;" Kentish v. Newman, 1 P. W. 234, to the same effect. "In the construction of all instruments," said Sir J. Leach, "it is the duty of the court not to confine itself to the force of a particular expression, but to collect the intention from the whole instrument taken together. But a court is not authorized to deviate from the force of a particular expression, unless it finds in other parts of the instrument expressions which manifest that the author of the instrument could not have the intention which the literal force of a particular expression would impute to him. However capricious may be the intention which is clearly and unequivocally expressed, every court is bound by it, unless it be plainly controlled by other parts of the instrument." Hume v. Rundell, 2 Sim. & S. 177; and see Lord Cottenham's judgment in Whatford v. Moore, 3 M. & C. 289, stated infra, title "Portions."

(g) Uvedale v. Halfpenny, 2 P. W. 152.

legatees, pecuniary or residuary, shall not have the legacies or the residue, unless they live to receive them in hard money, there is no rule against such an intention if clearly expressed (a); but that would be open to so much inconvenience and fraud, causing the legatees to be defeated by the negligence of the trustees, or the contrivance of the parties interested against the legatees, that the court is not in the habit of making conjectures in favour of such an intention (b); and some general rules of construction in these cases have been adopted, which will be noticed in a future page.

As regards wills, as has been observed in the former volume (c), the circumstances in which the settlor or donor stood, in relation to the subject and objects of the trust, must all have their due weight. In the construction of particular devises, little assistance is to be derived from prior decided cases; the decision on the expressions used by one testator can scarcely afford any clue to the meaning of another (d): but some rules, founded on general convenience, in the instance of trusts, as in other cases calling for judicial construction, have necessarily been introduced, as, for instance, to fix the meaning of terms when unexplained by the context, and to render definite expressions in constant use which do not of themselves import any precise or definite meaning: for ascertaining these rules, precedents must be resorted to; and where any words or expressions have thus received an uniform judicial interpretation, whatever conjectures may in the particular instance arise, that interpretation must be given to them, unless upon the context it is clear that they were used in a different sense (e). If there is a settled construction, said Lord Eldon, founded upon decisions applying to the terms used, it is better to adhere to that settled construction, though the judge may entertain some doubt whether it is according to the intention, than, upon grounds on which

(a) Innes v. Mitchell, 6 Ves. 461.

(b) Lord Eldon, Gaskell v. Harman, 11 Ves. 497, 502-7; the testator had there directed that each of his residuary legatees should have 500*l*. "when that sum could be clearly ascertained for them," an inquiry into the property was directed; and see Hutcheon v. Mannington, 1 Ves. J. 366. In Bernard v. Montague, 11 Ves. 508 a, note, 508 c, Sir Wm. Grant states the rule in these cases to be, that what might have been got in or realized for the legatee must be considered as got in and realized; in that case the payment of the testator's debts was made a condition precedent to the vesting of the legacies.

(c) Supra, vol. i. p. 557-9.

(d) "This case," said the Vice-Chancellor of England, Vaughan v. Marquis of Headfort, 10 Sim. 641, "shows, as I have often observed before, that no light is thrown on questions like the present by quoting other cases. By the laws of this country every testator, in disposing of his property, is at liberty to adopt his own nonsense, and a decision on the expressions used by one testator seldom affords any clue to the meaning of another." But still, even in such cases, precedents may be usefully referred to, if it were only to show the astuteness which has been exercised in order to give a consistent and intelligible meaning to instruments incapable, at first sight, of any rational construction.

(e) V. supra, vol. i. p. 542.

he cannot rest in every view of the case, to come to a decision having a tendency to shake that which forms a rule of construction, and what may in practice have been acted upon in many cases (a).

Generally speaking, in doubtful cases, the prevailing intention will be carried out (b): the intentions expressed in a will may be apparently inconsistent, in which case the court will have to reconcile them, or to carry out the prevailing intent. Thus, where a testator devised and bequeathed his estates to trustees, upon trust, to receive the rents and profits thereof, as the same should become payable, and thereout pay an annuity of 200*l.* to his wife, and on the death of his wife to convey the estate to his three sisters: here the prevailing intent was considered to be the securing an annuity to the widow, and the gift over was considered to be after full payment of an annuity to the amount of 200*l.*, so that the rents not being sufficient, the arrears were ordered to be paid out of the corpus (c). But if the prevailing intent appears to be, that the estate should be secured entire to those to whom it is given in succession, the corpus will be preserved; such was the case in Phillips v. Phillips, lately decided by Lord Langdale, where annuities were directed to be charged on the estates to be purchased, which were given over, on the death of the annuitants, to several persons in succession (d). There may be an expression importing a kind of condition, on which an estate is to go over; but where the prevailing intent shows that such apparent condition was only inserted with a view to some particular persons first enjoying the estate, if there should be any, that construction will prevail. Thus, in cases where, in the event of all the children of the testator dying under twenty-one, the property is given over, and no child is born, the having a child has been held not to be a condition essential to the bequest over; in these cases the limitation is considered as depending on the failure of that which preceded it, and that the testator has not taken in all the modes by which it might fail (e).

(a) Lord Eldon, Lady Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 175; Alderson B. Smyth v. Foley, 3 Y. & Coll. 157, uses expressions to the same effect.

(b) As to the more comprehensive rules of construction of wills, v. supra, vol. i. p. 519-548; and Jarman on Wills, vol. ii. p. 737, et seq. et v. supra, vol. i. p. 530.

(c) Foster v. Smith, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 193; and see Bullock v. Thomas, 9 Sim. 634, referred to ibid. p. 198, where the testatrix having given a part of a fund, by which the Vice-Chancellor of England considered a plain blunder in language had so given the remainder as apparently to trench upon what she had before given. Farnham v. Wiggins, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 3 June, 1847.

(d) 8 Beavan, 193. In this case the estates to be settled to the use that the annuitants should receive their annuities "out of the same premises," with powers of distress and entry. Foster v. Smith was not cited; and see the cases cited in the note (p), 198.

(e) Murray v. Jones, 2 Ves. & B. 313; 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 198; Jones v. Westcombe, 1 Eq. Abr. 245.

Technical rules have been introduced as regards such questions as the following, namely, whether the personal estate is as between the legatees and devisees to be considered as exonerated from the payment of debts and legacies, also in regard to presumptions to be acted upon in the interpretation of written instruments, as in the instance of the satisfaction of debts, and portions, and other provisions, by legacies, each of which subjects will be considered hereafter; and as to legacies being held to be cumulative, or the converse. In all these cases precedents must be resorted to; and in these instances also the interpretation fixed by judicial decisions and the artificial rules so established, must be adhered to if not displaced by the application of the rules of construction upon the whole context, or by evidence where it can legitimately be introduced. So that, anxious as the judges have been to conform to the intention, it will be found that, being bound by the force of precedent and the established rules of construction, they have, in numerous cases, been compelled to give to instruments a construction which they were morally convinced would defeat the testator's intention (a); acting in this respect upon the principle that, for the purpose of securing property and the due administration of justice, judges ought constantly to abide by established principles, and such beneficial rules as may afford some reasonable judgment, without applying to a superior tribunal (b). There is also a leaning, as it is called, in favour of a particular construction, in certain cases, as in regard to the vesting of legacies; the extent to which this leaning may be relied upon, of course, can only be learned from precedents.

Considering the variety of the forms of expression that must necessarily be used, particularly in wills and other voluntary instruments even where the persons using them may have had in their minds a definite intention which they meant to express, some varieties of decision must occur in the application of established principles to particular cases, but it will be found that the principles of construction have been for the most part kept entire. The differences which may be observable in regard to the construction of the same, or similar words, in a will, and in a deed or writing between parties, arises from this, that in a deed between parties both are supposed to speak; in a will one person only speaks, and his will serves as law (c).

(a) V. int. al. Baines v. Dixon, 1 Ves. 42; Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 148, 151, 154-5. That was the case of a legacy by will and a subsequent gift to a natural child; it was held, according to the technical rules of the court, that the advance to the child (she being a stranger) was not a satisfaction, though Lord Eldon was satisfied that he was disappointing the actual intention; and see Lady Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 170; and in later times, Crockett v. Crockett, 11 Jur. 98, Vice-Chancellor Wigram, and Hall v. Hill, supra, vol. i. p. 569, 570.

(b) Lord Thurlow, 1 Bro. 465.

(c) See 1 Fonb. 488.

30 Trusts on Words importing to be Executory only—Future Property.

It must be observed, that though words spoken in futuro are not sufficient to raise an use at law, and future property, generally speaking, cannot be assigned at law, yet it is an established rule in equity, that whenever parties agree concerning any particular subject, such agreement—provided there be a valuable consideration, as against the party himself, and any claiming under him, voluntarily or with notice—is sufficient to raise a trust (a); and this result will follow, though the subject be a chose in action, or other interest, not assignable at the common law (b).

(a) Legard v. Hodges, 1 Ves. J. 477; 2 Fonbl. 38. cases cited, 2 Fonbl. 215; and Wethered v. Wethered, 2 Sim. 183; Lyde v. Mynn, 1 My.

(b) See Goring v. Bickerstaff, 1 Ca. Ch. 8; & K. 693-5; Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Phillips, 348; Metcalf v. Archbishop of York, 1 My. & Cr. 556. and see Duke of Chandos v. Talbot, 2 P. W. 608; Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. 411, and the ## Office of Trustee.

SECTION III.—General View of the Doctrines of the Court of Chancery, as to the Office of Trustee—his Estate in the Trust Property—his Rights and Duties—with some incidental Subjects.

Who may and may not be Trustees.

The King may be a Trustee.

Stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88, § 12, as to Forfeiture ; 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, § 2, as to Trustee or Mortgagee dying without heir.

Equities between the Crown and a Subject may be adjusted by the Court of Chancery.

Corporations may be Trustees of Personal Estate, and of Real Estate for Charitable Trusts.

Court supplies Trustee where Real Estate devised to Corporation in Trust.

General Jurisdiction over Funds vested in Corporations for Public Purposes.

Breach of Trust visited.

Alterations effected by Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76.

Effect of 92nd Section.

Members of Governing Body considered as Agents of the Corporation.

Inherent Control of the Court over all Persons in the position of Trustees.

Enactments of the modern Statute of Wills as to the Estate of Trustees.

Trustee may call for Legal Estate, when.

Devise of Trust Estate.

Appointment of New Trustees.

Trustee derives his Authority solely from the Instrument by which he is appointed.

Trust can only be transmitted to Representatives or Assigns by the Directions of the Creator of the Trust.

Devise of Trust Estate.

Distinction between Power and Trust where Exigence is not complied with.

The Trust Property protected from Claims of Creditors of Trustee.

The Trust Property made liable to Claims of Creditors of Cestui que Trust.

Extended Rights given to Creditors by Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

Court will exercise its Powers to prevent the Conduct of the Trustee, whether actively or passively, from prejudicing his Cestuis que Trust.

General Rules established as to the Period at which outstanding Property shall be considered as converted.

Tenant for Life and Remainderman of Property so circumstanced.

Main Intent will be performed where, if particular Directions were followed, the Trust might become abortive.

Trustee allowed the full Exercise of such Powers and Authorities as are essential to the Execution of his Trust.

Possession of the Estate.

Custody of Title Deeds.

Trustee bound to render Accounts and entitled to have his Accounts wound up.

Mere Agent of Trustees not liable to account to Cestuis que Trust.

When Trusts at an end, Trustee must convey the Legal Estate at the peril of Costs in case of capricious or obstinate Refusal.

But may require Indemnity in doubtful case.

Stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, for the Indemnity of Trustees.

ALL persons, among whom are included femes covert and infants, may primâ facie be considered as capable of confidence, and may therefore be trustees. The exceptions are aliens who can only be trustees of personal estate, and persons attainted (a).

The character of Sovereign is not, it seems, incompatible with that of being a trustee (b); but as to the means by which the trust could be enforced there was necessarily considerable difficulty according to the ordinary forms of law. In Reeve v. The Attorney-General, 1751, where lands which were directed by will to be sold had come to the Crown, the testator having died without an heir, Lord Hardwicke refused to make a decree for a conveyance, as was asked, and dismissed the bill, saying this court had no jurisdiction, though the Court of Exchequer might have, and the parties must proceed by petition of right (c). The legislature has now removed all difficulty on the subject of forfeitures and escheats as regards trust property. The stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 88, § 12, had authorized the King to make grants by sign manual to trustees for the purpose of executing the trusts affecting estates that had become forfeited to the Crown; now by the stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, § 2, if a trustee or mortgagee die without an heir, the Court of Chancery may appoint some person to convey, in the same manner as is provided by the 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 60, in cases where there is an heir but it is not known who the heir is; and by the third section it is enacted that no land, chattels, or stock vested in any person upon any trust, or by way of mortgage, shall escheat to the King, or any lord of the manor or other person, by reason of the attainder or conviction of any such trustee; but it shall remain, survive, or descend as if no such attainder or conviction had taken place (d).

It may be well here to observe, as regards the general jurisdiction against the Crown at law and in equity, that it is now settled that the Crown can only take the property of its debtor, subject to such (a) See 2 Fonb. 139-40, note; and Lewin, p. 73.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Pennv. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 453, Dict. Lord Mansfield, Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 229.

(c) 1 Ves. 445-6; 2 Atk. 223; and see

Pawlett v. Attorney-Gen. Hard. 467.

(d) See further as to the exposition of this act, Lewin, p. 225. By the statute 13 Eliz. c. 4, the trust estate of a cestui que trust debtor to the Crown, was made liable for Crown debts.

liabilities as the debtor has legally created (a). Where there are equities only, as between the Crown and a subject, the court may by its decree adjust those equities. An equitable mortgage was established against the Crown and ordered to be paid out of the proceeds of the Crown debtors' estate, sold under an extent, the Lord C. Baron saying, that in so doing he took nothing from the Crown; though if the legal estate had been in the Crown his lordship seemed to think the difficulty would have been insuperable (b); and a decree for a sale may be made against the Crown in the administration of assets of an illegitimate person who has died intestate (c).

It has been already observed (d), that Corporations have long since been recognised as being capable of being constituted trustees of personal estate; there are numerous cases in which the court has exercised jurisdiction over them as such trustees. Under the equity of the stat. 43 Eliz. corporations may be constituted trustees of real estate upon charitable trusts; but real estate cannot be devised to trustees upon trust for private purposes, by reason of the Statutes of Mortmain: the Court of Chancery, however, will not permit the trust to fail on this account; the trust is fastened on the estate, and the heir to whom the estate descends by reason of the legal invalidity of the devise, is held by the Court of Chancery as bound in conscience to perform the trust (e); and on the same principle the Court of Chancery has always decreed the execution of a trust when no trustee is named (f). Although a limitation to a parish is void as an use, it is good as a trust (g).

Before the passing of the Municipal Corporation Act, which will be presently adverted to (h), the Court of Chancery did not entertain jurisdiction to compel the application of property belonging to a corporation to corporate purposes, from the difficulty, as it would seem, which would have attended the attempt to carry out such a jurisdiction (i); nor even now would the court interfere, unless under (a) See the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Patteson, Giles v. Grover, 6 Bli., N. S., p. 292, 1 Phill., 733.

(b) Casberd v. Attorney-Gen. 6 Price, 411, 478. This decree was by the L. C. B. sitting in equity; and see Smith v. Tyler, 1 Jur. 470.

(c) Rogers v. Maule, 3 Y. & Coll. 74.

(d) Supra, vol. i. p. 501.

(e) Sonley v. Clockmakers' Company, 1 Bro. 81.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Gilbert on Uses, 44; Saunders on Uses, 90, 91.

(h) 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76, intituled, "An Act to provide for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales."

(i) Mayor and Corporation of Colchester v. Lowton, 1 Ves. & B. 226, 244; Attorney-Gen. v. Corporation of Carmarthen, Sir Geo. Coop. R. 30, 31; where Lord Eldon notices and repudiates Mr. Justice Buller's doctrine, King v. Watson, 2 T. R. 200, that the court had such a jurisdiction.

special circumstances, in regard to the alienation of property belonging to a corporation, and not affected by any public trust (a). But where there is any fund created for the purpose of being applied to some public purpose, which fund is vested in a corporation, the Court of Chancery has, by its original inherent jurisdiction, a right to see to the due application of the fund (b). The Court of Chancery would always lay hold of any breach of trust in relation to the administration of property, let the party guilty of it be either in a public or private capacity (c); and a corporation, being a trustee, is in this court the same as an individual (d).

Funds supplied from the gift of the Crown, or from the gift of the Legislature, or from private gift to a corporation, for any legal public, or general purpose, are charitable funds to be administered by the Court of Chancery under its general jurisdiction; it is not material that the particular public or general purpose is not expressed in the statute of Elizabeth, all other legal public, or general purposes being within the equity of the statute (e). When, after the fire of London, the Legislature imposed a duty to be levied on all coal imported into the city or the river, amongst other purposes for rebuilding St. Paul's church, that was held to constitute a charitable use (f). However, according to Sir J. Leach, the source from which the funds are derived must be looked to, and not the mere purpose to which they are dedicated, in order to determine whether the use be charitable. Therefore, where an act of parliament passes for paving, lighting, cleaning, or improving a town, to be paid for wholly by rates or assessments to be levied upon the inhabitants of that town, the funds so raised, being in no sense derived from bounty or charity in the most extensive sense of the word, are not charitable funds to be administered by the Court of Chancery (g).

By the Municipal Corporation Act, the right of property in the

(a) See Attorney-Gen. v. Mayor of Liverpool, 1 My. & Cr. 201, Dict. Sir C. Pepys, M. R.

(b) Attorney-Gen. v. Corporation of Dublin, 1 Bli. N. S. 337; Attorney-Gen. v. Mayor of Carlisle, 2 Sim. 449; Attorney-Gen. v. Mayor of Exeter, 2 Russ. 45, 3 Russ. 395.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Charitable Corporation v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 406.

(d) Attorney-Gen. v. Governors of Foundling Hospital, 2 Ves. J. 45; Mayor of Coventry v. Attorney-Gen. 7 Bro. P. C. 235.

(e) Attorney-Gen. v. Heelis, 2 Sim. and St. 76; Attorney-Gen. v. Mayor of Carlisle,

2 Sim. 449-50; Attorney-Gen. v. Brown, 1 Swanst. 297.

(f) See Attorney-Gen. v. Brown, 1 Swanst. 297; and on the same principle Lord Eldon decided, Attorney-Gen. v. Brown, see 1 Swanst. 300, 301, 307-8. Lord Eldon considered that the duties which the commissioners were allowed to levy were to aid the inhabitants in protecting the town, they being too poor to do it themselves. The case was ultimately compromised.

(g) Sir J. Leach, Attorney-Gen. v. Heelis, 2 Sim. & St. 77.

corporations within its operation, is entirely altered; that which might have theretofore constituted their own property, and which they may have held as owners, they now hold in virtue of the act, subject to certain duties (a), and there is no doubt whatever of the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to interfere to prevent anything from being done which is clearly against the object, principle, and provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act (b).

The 92nd section of that act (c) directs that the funds are to be received by the treasurer and carried to the "borough fund," and that out of that fund shall be paid debts due, salaries of officers, &c., and that the surplus shall be applied for the public benefit of the inhabitants, and the improvement of the borough—that is, for what are considered as charitable purposes; that clause, taken by itself, and considered as if it stood alone, gives the Court of Chancery jurisdiction to interfere to see that the property is duly administered and applied to the purposes for which it is directed to be applied (d).

The members of the governing body of a corporation may be considered as its agents, bound to exercise its functions for the purposes for which they were given, and to protect its interests and property; and if such agents exercise those functions for the purpose of injuring its interests, and alienating its property, the corporation will not be estopped in this court from complaining, because the act was ostensibly an act of the corporation (e).

The Court of Chancery having an inherent control over all persons

(a) Attorney-Gen. v. Mayor of Liverpool, 1 My. and Cr. 201-2; Attorney-Gen. v. Aspinall, 2 My. and Cr. 613, on original hearing, 1 Keen, 513; Attorney-Gen. v. Wilson, 9 Sim. 526, on appeal, 1 Cr. & P. 1.

(b) Attorney-Gen. v. Mayor of Liverpool, 1 My. and Cr. 200. The 97th section of the Municipal Corporation Act does not deprive the Court of Chancery of its general jurisdiction, 2 My. & Cr. 627-8, 632-3, 9 Simons, 49; though the Vice-Chan. of England said it might be right that in future the Attorney-General should sue in conjunction with the corporation in suits against trustees, ibid. 49, and see 1 Cr. & Phill. 23. The 7 Will. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 78, was afterwards passed to amend the original act, and to make provisions as to the mode of transferring, &c., stock in the funds belonging to corporations, as trustees for charities or otherwise, and the payment and application of the dividends; sects. 45, 46, 47, 48. The Court of Exchequer held, that under the 5 & 6 Will. IV. it was not competent to the court to order the principal money arising from the sale of lands belonging to a corporation to be applied in payment of its debts, and that the dividends only could be applied for that purpose; Ex parte Corp. of Hythe, 4 Y. & Coll. 55. The statute 1 Vict. 78, was not cited, but probably it would not have altered the judgment. The Municipal Corporation Act, it is to be observed, has not destroyed the identity of the old corporations; it has continued the existence of the old corporations, varying, however, the mode in which certain corporate officers are to be chosen, Vice-Chan. of England, 9 Simons, 48.

(c) See 1 My. & Cr. 200; 2 My. & Cr. 619. By this section, no power is given to touch the principal of any part of the corporate property, Lord Cottenham, 2 My. & Cr. 619; the income alone forms the borough fund, ibid.

(d) Attorney-Gen. v. Aspinall, 2 My. & Cr. 618-19, 620, 623.

(e) Lord Cottenham, Attorney-Gen. v. Wilson, 1 Cr. & P. 24, 27; Charitable Corporation Case, 2 Atk. 405.

in the position of trustees; though by the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 117, s. 4, it is directed that in certain cases the court shall order the money deposited in court to be paid out, yet the Vice-Chancellor of England was of opinion that it was not imperative on the court to order the money to be paid out without seeing that it really ought to be done, and ascertaining whether the circumstances would justify the court in making the order that was prayed (a).

As regards the estate of the trustees under a devise in trust; it had been decided before the late Statute of Wills, that the word "heirs" was not necessary to give an estate of inheritance to the trustees if a less estate would not be sufficient to answer the purposes of the trust (b); and that every devisee in trust must necessarily have as large an estate and as large powers as were essential for the execution of the trusts arising out of it (c). But the modern decisions having involved questions of construction as to the quantity and quality of the estate taken by trustees and executors under an indefinite gift (d), the following enactments on the subject were introduced in the Statute of Wills, 1 Vict. c. 26.

By § 30 it is enacted, That where any real estate (other than or not being a presentation to a church) shall be devised to any trustee or executor, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee simple or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, unless a definite term of years, absolute or determinable, or an estate of freehold, shall thereby be given to him expressly or by implication. And by § 32, That where any real estate shall be devised to a trustee, without any express limitation of the estate to be taken by such trustee, and the beneficial interest in such real estate, or in the surplus rents and profits thereof, shall not be given to any person for life, or such beneficial interest shall be given to any person for life, but the purposes of the trust may continue beyond the life of such person, such devise shall be construed to vest in such trustee the fee simple, or other the whole legal estate which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, and not an estate determinable when the purposes of the trust shall be satisfied.

The general result of these two consecutive propositions, says

(a) Goodman v. De Beauvoir, 10 Jurist, 939-10, V.C. Eng., on motion to dissolve injunction against committee of railway company, from obtaining deposits made under that act out of court.

(b) Shaw v. Weigh, 1 Equity Ca. Abr. 185, 8 Mod. 253, Ambl. 95.

(c) Strange, 799, 803, agreed; Chapman v. Blisset, Forrest, 150.

(d) Hayes's Elem. vol. i. 352-3; and see Jarman on Wills, ii. 229.

Mr. Hayes, appears to be this; first, that a devise to a person upon any trust, or to an executor as such, either indefinitely, or for any estate (except an estate of freehold, express or implied, or a definite term), will give the fee, or other the whole interest, notwithstanding any indication of a contrary intention—and secondly, that a devise to a person, without such a limitation of his estate as would exclude all constructive modification, upon any trust or trusts, either not being, or not including a trust to continue for life (which ingredient, by letting in the implication of an estate for life, would bring the case within the previous provision), or being or including a trust to continue for life, but capable of outlasting the life, will likewise imperatively give the fee or other the whole estate. They leave the question open whether the trustees take an estate, or merely a power; for before the statute rule can apply, it must be ascertained that the land is devised to the trustees (a). When it is necessary for the execution of his trust that the trustee should have the legal estate, he is entitled to call upon the person in whom the legal estate may be outstanding, to convey it to him without the concurrence of his cestui que trust (b).

It may now be considered as settled that a general devise of real estate will pass an estate held by the deviser as trustee, unless a contrary intention can be collected from the words of the will, or from the purposes or objects of the testator as where the devise is in trust to sell (c). The words “to and for his and their absolute use and benefit, and to be disposed of as the devisee by deed or will, or otherwise, may see fit,” will not, it seems, of themselves be considered as evincing an intention to exclude trust estates (d); though a devise to a wife for her sole use and benefit will, as those words indicate an intention that the property devised shall be enjoyed beneficially (e).

In the case of a charitable trust, it seems that the court will direct a power to appoint new trustees prospectively to be inserted in a deed appointing new trustees of the charity estate (f); but not in the case of a private trust (g), unless it is authorised by the instrument constituting the trust (h).

(a) Hayes's Elem. i. 396-7; and see Lewin on Trusts, 202; and Sugden on Wills, p. 119.

(b) Poole v. Pass, 1 Beav. 600.

(c) Lindsell v. Thacker, 12 Sim. 182-3; Lord Braybroke v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 435; supra, vol. i. p. 517, d.

(d) Ex parte Shaw, 8 Sim. 159; but see Ex parte Brettell, 6 Ves. 578, which was not cited there; however, its being a devise to a natural son, so that the estate might go to the Crown on his intestacy, had some influence on the decision.

(e) Lindsell v. Thacker, 12 Sim. 184. The marginal note of this case requires to be corrected.

(f) In the matter of 52 Geo. III. c. 101; 12 Sim. 262.

(g) Bowles v. Weeks, 14 Sim. 591.

(h) White v. White, 5 Beav. 221. There the power was extended to subsequent trustees; and see the cases cited in the note, page 221.

As the only authority which a trustee has is derived from the instrument which appoints him as such, he can have neither more nor less of authority than is given to him by the instrument. It is contrary to the very nature of a trust that, unless specifically given, any right to defeat the trusts should exist in the party who is the depositary of the trust property (a). Where two or more persons are appointed trustees, and all of them excepting one renounce, the trust may be executed by that one (b). If a man appoint a trustee of real or of personal estate, or of both, simpliciter, adding nothing more, this does not make the heir or personal representative a trustee. The testator may select the heir or representatives, or may authorize the survivor of several trustees to commit the trust to any one whom he may name (c), but the testator only can do so; the property may vest in the representative, but that is another question from his being trustee (d). It has been held, that where an estate is conveyed to a person and his heirs upon trust, that he and they should as soon as to him and them should seem meet and at the request of a person named his executors or administrators make sale of the estate, the sale cannot be properly made by an assign of the original trustee or of his heir, on the request of the person named or his executors, notwithstanding that assigns are mentioned in the clause directing that the receipts of the trustee, his heirs, &c. shall be a sufficient discharge (e). When two or more persons, and the survivor, and the heirs of the survivor are appointed trustees to execute a temporary trust, such as a trust for sale, and to execute conveyances and the like in order to effect it, and the word "assigns" is not introduced as connected with the original trust, the sole or surviving trustee cannot by will devise the trust any more than he can delegate it by act inter vivos (f). If a trustee under

(a) Lord Cottenham, 2 My. & Cr. 629.

(b) The Vice-Chan. of England, Cooke v. Crawford, 13 Sim. 96 (after noticed), stated that this had been the admitted rule since Hawkins v. Kemp, 3 East, 410.

(c) Titley v. Wolstenholme, 7 Beav. 425.

(d) Mortimer v. Ireland, xi. Jur. 721; Lord C.

(e) Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264. There the question arose as to whether a good title could be made under a sale by the assignee of the heir of the original trustee. The Vice-Chan. of England considered that the doctrine held in Townsend v. Wilson 1 Barn. & A. 608, which, though disapproved by Lord Eldon in Hall v. Dewes, Jacob, 189, was never reversed, had settled the point, and was now the law, 2 Sim. 271. In that case it was held by the Court of King's Bench, that a power of sale given to three persons and their heirs, could not be exercised by two of them after the death of their co-trustee, although the purchase money was directed to be paid to the three donees of the power, or the survivors or survivor of them. And see Jones v. Price, 11 Sim. 563, et seq., where the Vice-Chan. of England has stated the effect of the cases upon this subject.

(f) Cook v. Crawford, 13 Sim. 97. The trustees and their "assigns" were directed to hold the purchase monies on the trusts stated, Bradford v. Belfield, 2 Sim. 264; see Hardwich v. Mynd, 1 Anst. 109, as to a delegation by act inter vivos; and see Ord v. Noel, 5 Mad. 438, as to the employment of an agent by trustees.

such circumstances devises the estate, the court, if it were urged to do so, would probably order the costs of obtaining the legal estate from his devisee, to be paid out of the assets of the trustee. He ought to permit it to descend, for, in so doing, he acts in accordance with the devise which is made to him (a).

There is a distinction, which should be noticed, between a power, whether it be a power operating under the common law, or by way of declaration of use under the Statute of Uses, and a trust, in regard to the consequences which result from the directions which may have been given, and the conditions imposed not being strictly complied with. When, for instance, a power to sell a settled estate is given to trustees or others, on a given event, or under circumstances or in a manner precisely marked out (b), of course if it be not executed according to the exigencies of the power the estate cannot pass; here there is no necessity for the intervention of the Court of Chancery. But it is different as regards a trust; thus where a trustee in whom the legal estate is vested, has a power to sell, and a sale is made and a conveyance executed, the legal estate will pass though the sale be made, not according to the trust, but in violation of its provisions; the power of the Court of Chancery must in such case be resorted to, in order to get back the legal estate. If a trustee of the fee, with a limited equitable power to grant leases or the like, execute a lease not warranted by the power, though the lease is void in equity, yet the legal estate passes by reason of the trustee having the legal estate; therefore here also the Court of Chancery must be resorted to (c).

When the Court of Chancery had assumed jurisdiction over trusts, and established that the equitable ownership might be in one person, and the legal ownership in another, the court necessarily interfered to protect the equitable ownership (d), which would have been liable to be destroyed if the legal ownership could have been affected by those having claims against the persons in whom the legal estate was vested merely upon trust; therefore a judgment against a trustee was not allowed to affect either real estate or personal chattels held in trust (e).

(a) Vice-Chancellor of England, ibid. 13 Sim. 98.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 486-7; and Sugden on Powers, i. p. 1, et seq. An ordinary power to sell and exchange may be seen, Bythewood, by Jarman, ix. 208.

(c) See Bowes v. E. L. W. W. Comp. 3 Mad. 375, 383; S. C. Jacob, 326, on Appeal. This is an important authority on the subject of acquiescence and confirmation, and compensation for improvements in such cases.

(d) See Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 560; V. C. Wigram.

(e) See Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. W. 278; Newlands v. Paynter, 4 My & Cr. 408; Lodge v. Lyseley, 4 Sim. 75; and Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Phill. 730.

It was necessary, also, that the court should take care that the estate of the trustee, and the powers vested in him in that character over the property, should be made subservient to the interests of the cestui que trust, and should, so far as that could be effected, without injury to third persons, be exercised for the benefit of the cestuis que trust only, according to the original nature of the office of trustee (a). It has become a rule of universal application, that trust property cannot, by any act of the trustee, be removed from the operation of the trust in the view of the Court of Chancery, excepting by a conveyance or assignment of the legal interest to a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of the trust (b); in all other cases, into whosoever hands the land may pass, the trust follows the land (c).

However, the negligence of the cestui que trust may cause personal property held in trust to pass to the assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent, under the provisions of the statutes in favour of creditors, which govern courts of equity as well as of law (d), though wherever the possession of a chattel is according to the equitable right, the statutes do not apply (e); a mortgage of lands, either freehold or leasehold, cannot be impeached on the ground of the mortgagor retaining the possession (f).

But as the legal estate was protected against the claims of the creditors of the trustee, it was equally just that the equitable or trust estate should be made available to the creditors of the person who was entitled to such equitable estate; therefore in those cases where the judgment creditor had no execution at law (g) against the equitable estate of his debtor, it was determined that he might come into the Court of Chancery, and claim there the same satisfaction as he would have been entitled to at law had the estate of his debtor been legal (h).

(a) See vol. i. p. 458-496.

(b) A mortgagee is a purchaser within this rule; Finch v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 P. W. 278.

(c) See Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271; Pye v. Gorge, 1 P. W. 129. There may, perhaps, be some special exceptions to this rule.

(d) See 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, s. 72; Ex parte Dale, Buck, 365.

(e) The property must be in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, with the assent of the true owner, and not independently of such assent; therefore, furniture left by the testator to trustees, to be enjoyed with the mansion house, by whomsoever should be entitled for the term to the freehold estate, will not pass to the assignees. See Lord Shaftesbury v. Russell, 1 Barn. & Cr. 666, 672-3; and see Joy v. Campbell, 1 Sch. & Lef. 328; and Simmonds v. Edwards, in the Exch. xi. Jurist, 592; and Pinket v. Wright, 2 Hare, 120, 128.

(f) Lattinestone's case, cited 2 Bullstrode, 236; Touchstone, 67, 4 Per. & D. 233; Jarman Convey. by Sweet, v. 248.

(g) By the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 10, trust estates in lands, tenements, rectories, tithes, rents, and hereditaments were made assets at law at the suit of creditors by judgment, statute, and recognizances, following up the analogy between legal and equitable estates, v. supra, vol. i. 504; and see Browne v. Blount, 2 Russ. & M. 83; and Lord Dillon v. Plaskett, 1 Dow. & Cl. 320, as to this enactment.

(h) Sir J. Leach, Forth v. Duke of Norfolk, 4 Mad. 506, et v. supra, vol. i. p. 502.

The rights and remedies of judgment creditors, as before noticed, have been materially altered and extended, so as to embrace every kind of equitable interest, by the late act for abolishing arrest on mesne process, an abstract of which is set out in the former volume (a); but a judgment creditor, when he comes to the Court of Chancery to affect the equitable interest of his debtor in freehold estate, must use the utmost diligence to perfect his title at law, and must, therefore, first sue out an elegit, and he must state in his bill that he has done so (b).

The Act is a remedial one, and therefore ought to receive a liberal construction. The whole object of the legislature was to give creditors a more effectual remedy against the property of their debtors than they had under the old law, in compensation for the remedy against the persons of their debtors which the act took away from them (c).

The Court of Chancery will exercise its powers to prevent the conduct of the trustee, whether actively or passively (d), from prejudicing the cestuis que trust, however reasonable their motive may have been. Thus, as may be observed, by way of illustration, in the common case of a devise to trustees in trust to sell real estate, "at such time and in such manner as they shall think fit," for payment of debts, the residue to be paid to certain persons named: though the trustees do not sell, the estate has been considered as money, so as to pass as money under the wills of any of the legatees of the residue: "else," as it has been said, "it would be in the power of the trustees to make it land or money, and so to give it to whom they should think fit" (e). An unnecessary delay on the part of a trustee in the execution of the trust, will not be permitted to afford a benefit to himself or to others (f). It is hardly necessary to add, that the court will not permit trustees to have such an election as to change the property, unless it is expressly given to them (g).

It has been necessary to introduce some general rules to avoid the inconvenience that might result from the rights of parties being made

(a) 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. Supra, vol. i. p. 505.

(b) Neate v. Duke of Marlbro, 3 M. & C. 407, 415, 417, affirming the judgment of the V. C. of England, 9 Sim. 63; and see Smith v. Hurst, 1 Coll. C. C. 531, 705.

(c) Harris v. Davison, 15 Sim. 133, where the V. C. of E. expounds the 13th sect. of the act.

(d) V. int. alia, Hawkins v. Chappel, 1 Alk. 623; Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520, 538, and the cases there cited.

(e) Collingwood v. Wallis, 1 Eq. Abr. 396; and see Davers v. Folkes, 2 Eq. Abr. 396; Elwin v. Elwin, 8 Ves. 554; Gibson v. Bott, 7 Ves. 94; Walker v. Shore, 19 Ves. 392.

(f) Dict. Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden. 238; Hawkins v. Chappell, ubi supra; Gastell v. Harman, 11 Ves. 507; Bernard v. Montague, 1 Meriv. 433.

(g) Earlom v. Saunders, Amb. 242; Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 341; and see Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 278, as to the property of infants and infra, title "Infants."

apparently to depend upon the greater or less amount of diligence that may be exercised by a trustee or executor, or the greater or less degree of convertibility of the fund. Thus, in the instance where a testator directs that his personal estate, or a portion of it to a certain amount, shall be got in as soon as conveniently may be, and when collected the mass shall be divided amongst a certain number of persons named, or such of them as shall be living at the time of the distribution, unless some rule had been adopted to apply to such cases, the greater or less diligence which the trustees might exercise, might have determined who should be entitled, and the vesting of the shares would have remained in suspense; to avoid this uncertainty the court, as a rule of convenience, has fixed twelve months as a reasonable time within which the testator's assets might be collected with reasonable diligence, and has taken that as the period at which, in such cases, the title of the legatees should be perfected (a).

As a general rule, where a testator subjects the residue of his personal estate to a series of limitations, directly or by way of trust, without any particular directions as to the investment or mode of enjoyment, it is clear that such part of the residue as may be wearing out, so that the corpus is becoming of less value, must be converted and put in such a state of investment as to be securely available for all persons interested in it; for instance, in government perpetual annuities, or upon mortgage of freehold estates. Another principle is, that if the residue comprises property of a reversionary nature that too must be converted. The one rule protects the remainder-man, the other protects the tenant for life (b). If, indeed, the testator has expressed an intention that the residue, though given in trust for or for the benefit of various persons in succession, or any part of it, and though by a gift in form residuary (c), should remain either absolutely or during a limited period in the state in which it was at the testator's death, that intention will of course be

(a) Brooke v. Lewis, 6 Mad. 359.

(b) The leading case on this subject is Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137. The rule, said the V. C. Wigram, in Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare, 35, does not proceed on the assumption that the testator intended his property to be sold; but upon this, that the testator has intended the enjoyment of perishable property by different persons in succession; and this the court can only accomplish by means of a sale: and see Caldecot v. Caldecot, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 322; Alcock v. Slopers, 2 My. & K. 699, 701-2; Johnson v. Johnson, x. Jur. 279; V. C. K. Bruce, Chambers v. Chambers, x.

Jur. 326; V. C. of E. James v. Gammon, 15 Law J. 217; V. C. K. Bruce, Preston v. Melville, 15 Sim. 35; cases as to Long Annuities; Bythewood by Jarman, vi. p. 307; and see Sutherland v. Cooke, 1 Coll. 502, as to investment. The stat. 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 29, puts Irish real estates for the purpose of investment of trust funds on the same footing as real estates in England; and see Stickney v. Sewell, 1 My. & Cr. 15; and Wyatt v. Sharratt, 3 Beav. 498, as to the nature of the real estate to be selected.

(c) Bethune v. Kennedy, 1 My. & C. 117.

carried out (a): the question on each particular is, whether there is sufficient to satisfy the mind of the judge that the property ought to be enjoyed in specie, if not the rule as to conversion must prevail (b). Where the residue is given in succession, with a direction for conversion express or implied, and no special intention as to the enjoyment of the interest till the conversion is to be collected from the will (c), an important question frequently arises between the tenant for life and remainder-men, as to the interest, or equivalent for interest, to be received by the former, and the time from which it is to commence, in respect of unconverted residuary property given to such different persons in succession. If the question were left to depend upon the event—that is if the tenant for life were to take the interest of such part as was converted from the time of actual conversion—or upon the convertibility of the property, great uncertainty would necessarily prevail; accordingly, the court has endeavoured to establish general rules, which shall do justice to each class of claimants. But no precise and definite rule on this subject can yet be considered as conclusively settled (d).

It would seem that where there is a direction for accumulation until the conversion shall take place, the accumulation will be limited to the end of one year, and the tenant for life will take from that time the interest which the fund would have produced had it been invested in Three per Cent. Consols at that time (e).

If there be a direction to convert, as opposed to an enjoyment in specie, and interest is given to the tenant for life out of the converted fund, all modern authority and experience is against the strict and literal interpretation of the will, which would exclude the tenant for

(a) See Caldecot v. Caldecot, ubi sup.; Daniel v. Warren, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 290; Sutherland v. Cooke, 1 Coll. 498. In this case the V. C. K. Bruce, after referring to the circumstance of some particulars being enumerated, which does not of itself prevent a bequest from being residuary, (et v. Pickup v. Atkinson, 4 Hare, 624, and xi. Jur. 922,) said, it may be an important consideration, tending to reconcile some of the cases, whether the gift of the residue precedes or follows the enumeration of the particulars, 1 Coll. 501. Bethune v. Kennedy, ubi sup.; Collins v. Collins, 2 My. & K. 703; Pickering v. Pickering, 4 My. & Cr. 289; S. C., 2 Beav. 31. Simpson v. Earles, xi. Jur. 992, V. C. Wigram; Vaughan v. Buck, 1 Phillips, 80; Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare, 33-4. "In modern cases, circumstances, apparently trifling, have been held sufficient to entitle a tenant for life to the enjoyment in specie of the residue for his life." Dict. 5 Hare, 77.

(b) Cafe v. Bent, 5 Hare, 33-34.

(c) See Mackie v. Mackie, 5 Hare, 76. If the testator uses words which express no more than the law would direct or imply without them they will not take a case out of the ordinary rule, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 322-3.

(d) See Sparling v. Parkes, x. Jurist, Rolls, p. 450 b. See also on this subject Seton on Decrees, 74, and 1 Jarman on Wills, 540, et seq.

(e) Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520. In Vickers v. Scott, 3 My. & K. 500, this principle was applied to a direction to convert real estate into money; and see 1 Hare, 168.

life from any interest until the actual conversion (a). There also the end of the year is to be taken for estimating the amount of capital upon which interest is to run (b). As regards the interval between the testator's death and this constructive conversion, according to some of the authorities, the tenant for life will be entitled to the income which has been actually made by the trust fund (c). According to others, he will be entitled to the income of such parts of the personal estate as were at the testator's death, and have remained in a state of investment which ought to be recognized and continued; and as regards those parts of the personal estate which neither were at the testator's death, nor have since been in a proper state of investment, the tenant for life will have interest at 4 per cent. on the value to be set on such property at the end of the year (d). But, according to other authorities, the tenant for life will be entitled only to interest from the testator's death, equivalent to the dividends which would have arisen on an investment of the whole of the residuary property in Three per Cent. Consols at the end of one year (e).

Where a testator dies leaving property and a family in a foreign country (as in India), it is not the duty of the executor or trustee to send it to this country, to be invested in the funds; the tenant for life is entitled to the amount of interest actually made, but when the parties come to this country, then the property must be brought here and invested, though to the prejudice of the widow or other tenant for life (f).

If there be an express trust created for a particular purpose, as for the erection of a mansion-house, or the like, according to a plan to be (a) See Taylor v. Clarke, 1 Hare, 167; Turner v. Newport, 2 Phillips, 16, 18; but there the interest was computed from the end of the year, not from the death.

(b) See int. al. Turner v. Newport, on appeal, 2 Phillips, 14, 18; Mehrten v. Andrews, 3 Beavan, 78.

(c) Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Keen, 428; Angerstein v. Martin, Lord Eldon, 1 Turn. & R. 232; 1 Keen, 427; but see 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 318, and 1 Hare, 172, as to this case. Sparling v. Parkes, x. Jur. 448, 450, M. R., was decided in the particular expressions.

(d) Caldecot v. Caldecot, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 324; Gibson v. Bott, 7 Ves. 89. In Sutherland v. Cooke, 2 Coll. 505, the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce said, a will may be so framed as to make it the duty of the court to consider the property as laid out in the Three per Cents.; but where there is no specific direction for conversion, and by innocent mistake the property has been left upon the original security, his Honour thought it competent to the court to allow interest at 4 per cent. on the value, at the end of one year from the death of the testator, computed from the testator's death.

(e) Dimes v. Scott, before Lord Gifford, and Lord Lyndhurst, on appeal, 4 Russell, 209; followed by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Taylor v. Clarke, 1 Hare, 175; Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501. The subsequent case of Mackie v. Mackie, 5 Hare, 70, was decided on its own circumstances. It will be observed that Dimes v. Scott, and Douglas v. Congreve, cannot stand together, 1 Hare, 172. See the result which the learned editor of the last edition of Roper on Legacies has deduced from these cases, p. 1335.

(f) Holland v. Hughes, 16 Ves. 114; 3 Mer. 685.

approved of by the trustees, with the assent of whoever may be tenant for life, such a trust, if left to be performed strictly according to the letter, might become indefinitely postponed, or even rendered abortive by reason of infancy or other circumstances not provided for, or a perverse refusal. In such cases, if the consent be refused, or for any reason cannot be obtained, the Court of Chancery will not allow the express, clear, declared intent from being carried into execution on that account, but will, as a matter of course, refer it to the Master to approve a plan, according to the directions of the will<sup>(a)</sup>: numerous similar instances might be produced where the court has caused the main intent, namely, the trust, to be performed where the qualifications intended to secure its due performance have in fact presented obstacles to its being performed at all.

It is obvious that however proper it may be to restrict the powers of the trustee where any acts on his part might prejudice the cestuis que trust, yet the trustee must be allowed the free exercise of all such powers and authorities as are essential to the execution of the trust reposed, in the manner in which that trust is to be performed. Whether in the case of a permanent trust the trustee is to have the Possession or Management of the estate, or whether the tenant for life or other person having a partial interest is to be let into Possession, must depend upon the wording of each particular will. There may be cases in which it may be plain, from the expressions of the will, that the testator did not intend the property to remain under the personal management of the trustees. There may be cases in which it may be plain, from the nature of the property, that the testator could not mean to exclude the cestui que trust for life from the personal possession of the property, as in the case of a family residence. There may be very special cases in which the Court of Chancery would deliver the possession of the property to the cestui que trust for life, although the testator may have so expressed himself that his intention appears to be that it should remain with the trustees; for instance, where the personal occupation of the trust property would be beneficial to the cestui que trust: there the court, in letting him into possession, at the same time taking means to secure the due protection of the property for the benefit of those in remainder, would in substance be performing the trust according to the intention of the testator. But if the testator, when there are no special circumstances, has thought fit to place his property in the hands of trustees and out of the management of the cestui que trust for life, the court has no authority to revoke the will; more especially when it is a feme covert who is entitled, as it is essential to her interest that the trustee should have the receipt of the rents and management of the estates (a). If the trustee be guilty of misconduct the court has it in its power to appoint a receiver or manager of its own.

(a) Lombe v. Stoughton, 12 Simons, 315.

As it is one of the primary duties of a trustee of a permanent subsisting trust to maintain and defend all such actions at law as are requisite for the assertion or protection of the title to the trust property (b), and to protect the rights and interests of all the parties beneficially interested, it is obvious that he ought to have the muniments of title in his possession (c). It will be a breach of his duty if, where there is a trust to perform, he willingly suffer the title deeds or muniments relating to the trust property to go out of his possession (d). He may even be answerable to third persons if he is instrumental directly, or by such culpable negligence as is equivalent to fraud, in a fraudulent use being made of the deeds to the detriment of such third persons (e).

But where the trustees have for a long time acquiesced in the title deeds remaining in the possession of the equitable tenant for life, and the trustees do not show any case requiring active interference on their part, the rule is not so positive as to the right of the trustees, that they will be permitted to proceed at law for their recovery (f). In cases where there is any difficulty or danger as regards the title deeds of a trust estate, or the securities of a trust fund, the court has it in its power to provide for every such emergency by ordering the deeds or the securities to be deposited in court (g).

A trustee of a trust fund is entitled to have his accounts examined and to have a settlement of them. He is bound to give accounts if demanded, but giving the accounts he is entitled, to use a familiar

(a) Sir J. Leach, Tidd v. Lister, 5 Mad. 432-3. In Naylor v. Arnitt, 1 R. & M. 503. Sir J. Leach sanctioned a letting for 10 years, by trustees who had active duties to perform in the application of the rents—a legal tenant for life, subject to a charge, on paying into court sufficient to answer the charges, may be let into possession; Blake v. Bunbury, 1 Ves. J. 194-5.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 448, 496-7.

(c) The general rule at law is, that the title deeds belong to the legal owner; Goode v. Burton, xi. Jurist (Excheq.), 851; the legal owner has to defend his possession himself; and see Hill on Trustees, p. 259, n. (f) & (g).

(d) See Meux v. Bell, 1 Hare, 95, 98.

(e) See Evans v. Becknell, 6 Ves. 174, 188, 190, 191-2.

(f) Denton v. Denton, viii. Jur. 388.

(g) See Denton v. Denton, ubi supra; Jones v. Jones, 3 Bro. 80.

phrase, to have them wound up. If the party to receive is satisfied upon the account sent in, that nothing more is coming to him, he ought to close the account and give an acknowledgment, which shall be equivalent to a release, though the trustee is not entitled to demand a release under seal (a): on the other hand, if the cestui que trust is dissatisfied with the accounts he ought to require to have the accounts taken; he is not at liberty to do neither, and keep a Chancery suit hanging for an indefinite time over the head of the trustee (b).

A person employed by trustees as a mere agent will not, as a general rule, be accountable to the cestuis que trust (c). His duty is to hand over the monies he receives to his principal, and, even if he is aware that the trustees are misapplying the fund, still he will not be responsible for paying to his principals monies placed in his hands for the purpose of being remitted to them (d); but if a person is substituted as trustee, and employs the trust monies for his own benefit, accounting to nobody, he is liable to account to the cestuis que trust.

When all the duties of a trustee as trustee are at an end, and he has no notice of any disposition or incumbrances made by the cestui que trust, he must, on demand and on its being clearly and satisfactorily shown to him (e) by the cestui que trust that the trusts are at an end, convey the legal estate to his cestuis que trust, at the peril in case of refusal in a plain case of being visited with the costs of any suit which may be instituted against him to compel him to convey, if he acts from caprice or obstinacy, or if his objections are captious, or he insists upon unfounded claims (f). However, where on his refusal he acts bonâ fide and under advice he will not be visited with costs (g). In cases of real doubt or difficulty, a trustee, before he parts with his estate, is fully justified in requiring an indemnity from his cestuis que trust (h), or in seeking the directions and indemnity of the court (i).

(a) Fulton v. Gilmore, Rolls, 15 Feb. 1845; Hill on Trustees, 605; Chadwick v. Heatley, 2 Collier, 137; it may be reasonable to ask for it, but he cannot compel his cestui que trust to give a release, ibid.

(b) Chadwick v. Heatley, 2 Coll. 137. The plaintiff in this case having elected to take the sum offered, the decree directed that it should be received in full of all demands, and that the defendant, the trustee, should have his full costs; he had required a release, the plaintiff had offered a simple receipt, so as to leave the account open.

(c) Keane v. Roberts, 4 Mad. 356; Davis v. Spurling, 1 Russ. & M. 64; and see Fyler v. Fyler, 3 Beav. 556.

(d) Myler v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Mad. 360.

(e) See Holford v. Phipps, 3 Beav. 440-1.

(f) Willis v. Hiscox, 4 My. & Cr. 202; Jones v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 199; Goodson v. Ellison, 3 Russ. 588-9; Taylor v. Glanville, 3 Mad. 178, Sir J. Leach; Hampshire v. Bradley, 2 Coll. 40, 41; Thorby v. Yeats, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 438; Penfold v. Bouch, 4 Hare, 272, rather a harsh decision.

(g) Angier v. Stannard, 3 My. & K. 566.

(h) Goodson v. Ellison, 3 Russ. 583.

(i) Formerly one great source of hazard to trustees for preserving contingent remainders, was their being required to join in destroying the contingent remainders; see Moody v. Walters, 16 Ves. 302-312; Biscoe v. Per-

In case of refusal by a trustee, without reason, to convey, the parties interested may apply by petition, under Sir E. Sugden's act, 1 Will. IV. c. 60, for the appointment of a person to convey in the place of the trustee (a).

As between the cestui que trust and trustee, unless the trustee be such by implication or construction of law only, the Statute of Limitations does not apply; the trustee can only discharge himself by accounting to his cestuis que trust in such a manner as the court shall consider that he ought to have done (b). It may be observed that, if a legacy is transferred to one of several executors as trustee, and he assents to it, it ceases to be a legacy and becomes a trust fund; and if the legacy turns out to be invested in an unauthorized security, the trustee or his estate is severally liable as for a breach of trust (c); and where a legacy is so set apart and appropriated to the payment of a legacy, whether it be held by all or one, and a breach of trust is committed, the Statute of Limitations (d) does not apply to such a case; it is an express trust within the exception in the statute (e).

The rules relating to the conduct of trustees in the execution of their trust, and their liabilities according to the doctrines of the Court of Chancery, will be the subject of a distinct section; but it may be here observed, that Lord Hardwicke declared that, if there is no mala fides, nothing wilful in the conduct of the trustee, the court will always favour him; for as a trust is an office necessary in the concerns between man and man, said that eminent judge, and which, if faithfully discharged, is attended with no small degree of trouble and anxiety, it is an act of great kindness in any one to accept it: to add hazard or risk to that trouble, and to subject a trustee to losses which he could not foresee, and consequently could not prevent, would be a manifest hardship, and would be deterring every one from accepting so necessary an office (f). How far this kindly feeling towards trustees has been acted upon will appear in the section above referred to.

kins, 1 Ves. & B. 485, 1 Ball & B. 59, et v. infra; Trustees to preserve contingent remainders. Of the assignment of the legal estate by the trustee see Hill on Trustees, 266-7, et seq., 307, et seq., where the authorities are collected.

(a) V. int. al. Prendergast v. Eyre, 1 Lloyd and G. 11; Robinson v. Wood, 5 Beav. 268; and Hill on Trustees, 268.

(b) Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 4 My. & Cr. 53; 2 Keen, 722; and see Townshend v. Townshend, 1 Bro. 554; Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. 100. As to the doctrine before the statute, see Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 175.

(c) Attorney-Gen. v. Higham, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 644.

(d) Supra, vol. i. p. 502-3.

(e) Philippo v. Munning, 2 My. & Cr. 309; Dinsdale v. Dudding, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 270; and see, on the subject of change of character, Bond v. Graham, 1 Hare, 485.

(f) Lord Hardwicke, Knight v. Earl of Plymouth, 1 Dick. 126; S. C. 3 Atk. 480.

It is impossible ever to pronounce that a trustee or executor, whatever precautions he may have taken, is safe from personal risk, unless he has acted in the execution of the trust under the directions of the Court of Chancery (a); but an act has lately been passed for the purpose of securing an indemnity to trustees in certain cases by a more simple and less expensive process than a bill. The act is entitled “An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees (b).”

By this act it is enacted, that all trustees, executors, administrators, or other persons, having in their hands any moneys belonging to any trust whatsoever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty, on filing an affidavit shortly describing the instrument creating the trust, according to the best of their knowledge and belief, to pay the same, with the privity of the accountant-general of the High Court of Chancery, into the Bank of England, to the account of such accountant-general in the matter of the particular trust (describing the same by the names of the parties, as accurately as may be, for the purpose of distinguishing it), in trust to attend the orders of the said court; and that all trustees or other persons having any annuities or stocks standing in their names in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the East India Company, or South Sea Company, or any government or parliamentary securities standing in their names, or in the names of any deceased persons of whom they shall be personal representatives, upon any trusts whatsoever, or the major part of them, shall be at liberty to transfer or deposit such stocks or securities into or in the name of the said accountant-general, with his privity, in the matter of the particular trust (describing the same as aforesaid), in trust to attend the orders of the said court; and in every such case the receipt of one of the cashiers of the said bank for the money so paid, or, in the case of stocks or securities, the certificate of the proper officer, of the transfer or deposit of such stock or securities, shall be a sufficient discharge to such trustees or other persons for the money so paid, or the stocks or securities so transferred or deposited.

And, that such orders as shall seem fit shall be from time to time made by the High Court of Chancery in respect of the trust moneys, stocks, or securities so paid in, transferred, and deposited as aforesaid, and for the investment and payment of any such moneys, or of any dividends or interest on any such stocks or securities, and for the transfer and delivery out of any such stocks and securities, and for the administration of any such trusts generally, upon a petition to be presented in a summary way to the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls, without bill, by such party or parties, as to the court shall appear to be competent and necessary in that behalf, and service of such petition shall be made upon such person or persons as the court shall see fit and direct; and every order made upon such petition shall have the same authority and effect, and shall be enforced and subject to rehearing and appeal, in the same manner as if the same had been made in a suit regularly instituted in the court; and if it shall appear that any such trust funds cannot be safely distributed without the institution of one or more suit or suits, the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls may direct any such suit or suits to be instituted.

Lord Hardwicke, in that case, applied the same doctrine to a receiver, who had remitted monies to a person who had failed: he was the substitute of the trustees.

(a) See particularly Knatchbull v. Fearnhead, 3 My. & Cr. 122.

(b) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 96.

This act, it will be seen, is confined to giving the trustee, executor, or other person a release for what he may pay or transfer into court. Where there is a definite trust fund, and the trustees find a difficulty in administering it with safety, owing to conflicting claims, the act will afford to the trustees a ready mode of ridding themselves of responsibility. No doubt it will often happen that the parties interested will be content to take the sum so paid into court without any judicial investigation as to the accuracy of the amount. But if there should be infants or married women concerned, or any parties should require that the trustees should pass their accounts, the trustees will still be liable to a suit, and by paying the money into court they will deprive themselves of the means of reimbursing themselves any expenses they may incur. If the fund be part of a testator's estate, there must still be the necessary inquiries as to debts and the like, which must be prosecuted in the usual course. Much yet remains to be done, particularly as regards proceedings in the Masters' offices, to prevent estates being exhausted in ascertaining how they are to be distributed: this act has, however, established this important principle, that notwithstanding what has been urged as to the impossibility of bringing the necessary parties before the court in cases of trust without a bill, it has been considered by the highest authority that there is at least one class of cases where such a proceeding may be dispensed with.

SECTION IV.—General View of the Rights and Interests of the Cestui que Trust—What Acts will constitute another Cestui que Trust of Property.

Every Cestui que Trust entitled to Aid of the Court to avail himself of the Trust.

The Court will execute the Trust, if by any possibility it can.

But to induce the Court to interfere, there must be a constituted Trust,

Or if it rest in fieri, a valuable, or at least meritorious Consideration.

What is a constituted Trust.

General Rule.

Irrevocable Trust of personal Chattels.

Owner may constitute himself or the Possessor Trustee, without any Transfer.

The Documents on which Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. was decided, note.

Thorpe v. Owen, 5 Beav.

Irrevocable Trust of Chose in Action.

Petre v. Espinasse,

Collinson v. Patrick,

Beatson v. Beatson,

Meek v. Kettlewell.

A clearly expressed Intention not always sufficient to create a Trust.

Rule that a defective Conveyance without valuable Consideration, will not be aided—

Locus Pœnitentiæ.

Apparent Exception to the Rule that a constituted Trust is binding, in the instance of voluntary Assignments for Creditors ;

Dependent to some extent on Doctrine as to Mandate.

Lord Cottenham's Exposition of the Doctrine.

Whether Notice being formally sent to the Creditor makes a Difference.

EVERY actual cestui que trust, whether a volunteer or not—that is, be the limitation under which he claims with or without consideration—has always been considered as entitled to the aid of the Court of Chancery in order to avail himself of the benefit of a constituted trust (a). If the trust can by any possibility be executed by the court, the non-execution by the trustees shall not prejudice the cestui que trust, even though the trust be to a great extent discretionary, depending from the nature of the trust upon the opinion of the trustees as to the merits of the persons who are the objects (b). Nor is it necessary that there should actually be a trustee. If there be plainly a trust created, and from any circumstance (as the trustee declining to act, or being incapable of acting, or any other cause) the exercise of the trust by the party intended to be intrusted with its execution becomes impracticable, the want or failure of a trustee will be supplied by the court (a); and the court will take upon itself to execute a trust, whatever difficulties or apparent impracticabilities may stand in the way (b), provided it can be ascertained what the intended trust is. But to induce the court so to interfere there must be a trust completely and effectually constituted; or if it rest in contract, or in fieri, that is, if it be imperfect, there must be a valuable or at least a meritorious consideration; nothing less will do (c). The consideration of marriage is one of the highest considerations in the view of the court, and has always been held to be sufficient to support any settlement; in a case before Sir William Grant, a stockbroker, greatly indebted, married his mistress and settled his property on her, falsely reciting that it was hers; the settlement was supported even against his creditors (d).

(a) Sir J. Jekyll, Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 222; Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 595; Austen v. Taylor, Amb. 376; Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 134.

(b) Richardson v. Chapman, 7 Bro. P. C. 318; Brown v. Higgs, 5 Ves. 505; Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 437.

To determine what is a Constituted Trust is often a matter of great difficulty. As a general rule, where there is a plain intention to create a definite trust of property, real or personal, legal or equitable, and every thing is done that can be required to complete the transaction (e) on the part of the donor, the trust, though voluntary, is constituted and is binding upon the donor and all claiming under him (f). The simplest case is where a person actually conveys, assigns, or transfers property of which he is the owner, and declares the trusts upon which the assignee is to hold the property; there an irrevocable trust is created, even without any communication to the donor (g).

(a) See vol. i. p. 501, 508; Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 663; Attorney-Gen. v. Stephens, 3 M. & K. 347. "If a man devise to his heir, upon condition to be sold, the condition to be void; it shall be a trust in the heir to sell."—Com. Dig. Chanc. 4 W. 2, p. 718. A devise to an heir is now effectual, 1 Vict. c. 26.

(b) Pierson v. Garnet, 2 Bro. 46, per Lord Kenyon; see Brown v. Higgs, 5 Ves. 505, above.

(c) Lord Thurlow, Colman v. Sarrel, 1 Ves. J. 55; and see Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 662; Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 84; 2 R. & M. 253, 2 M. & K. 453. In Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. 412, Lord Hardwicke speaks of a valuable consideration in the second degree—namely, a provision for younger children, which appears to be the same as that which Lord Thurlow designates a meritorious consideration.

(d) Campion v. Cottens, 17 Ves. 263, 271, 273.

(e) "If the act is completed, though voluntary, the court will act upon it;" Eldon, C. 18 Ves. 140; Wheatley v. Purr, 1 Keen, 558; and see Lord Cottenham's Observations in Fortescue v. Barnett, 1 My. & Cr. 239.

(f) Lord Eldon, Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 662; Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 98-9.

(g) In Bill v. Cureton, 2 My. & K. 503, a single woman, not immediately contemplating marriage, transferred a sum of stock to trustees and declared the trusts to be for herself for life, remainder to her children, if any, remainder to her next of kin; having afterwards, whilst yet single, become embarrassed, she sought to revoke it, but it was held to be binding upon her.

It may be well to observe that Lynn v. Ashton, 1 Russ. & M. 188, did not turn upon a power to revoke an executed trust,

As regards personal estate, where writing is not necessary, declarations made previously to the act of transfer, or contemporaneously with it and relating to it, are of the greatest value, and a trust once constituted by such declarations cannot be changed by the party, nor will it be affected by any declarations at subsequent periods (a). Indeed a trust which is once effectually created, whether by a formal instrument, or by parol where a parol declaration alone is sufficient, cannot be revoked (b).

It is not necessary that there should be any transfer of property accompanying the declaration of trust, whether the fund be in the possession of the donor or of another; the property may still remain as it was, and the donor may constitute himself or the possessor trustee of the fund (c); and in such case it is not necessary that the donor should expressly declare himself to be trustee; if he do any acts in relation to property to which he is legally entitled, though without reference to the creation of a trust, from which it clearly appears that he considered that the property, though legally vested in him, had ceased to be his and had become the property of another, those acts may amount to a sufficient declaration that the donor holds the property in trust so as to be binding upon him (d) but it was held, that the settlor had an interest and a power under the trust, in virtue of which she might dispose of the property: nor did the case of Godsal v. Webb, 2 Keen, 121, proceed on the ground of revocation; there, by one of the clauses of the marriage settlement, it was provided that the trustees should keep up an insurance on the life of the intended wife upon trust at her death to lay out the money insured when received, and pay the interest to the husband for life, if he should survive, then to such persons as the wife should appoint, and in default of appointment, to her next of kin; the husband having died, the wife and the surviving trustee assigned the policy to Mr. Godsall. The Master of the Rolls construed the settlement as being an agreement between the husband and wife, only for his benefit, and that the next of kin could not have compelled the wife or the trustees to keep up the insurance for their benefit, and the Master of the Rolls distinguished that case from Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 557, where it was held that the wife had only a life interest, with power of disposition by will (Sugd. Powers, ii. 237-8), for there the fund was in the hands of the trustees bound by the trust; here the next of kin would have had to compel the trustee, that is in effect the wife, to create the fund.

(a) Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 My. & K. 531; Sir

J. Leach; ib. 539, Lord Brougham. There was also a contemporaneous entry in that case.

(b) Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 My. & K. 531; Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 151.

(c) See the dict. of Lord Eldon, Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 139-40. In Stapilton v. Stapilton, 14 Sim. 197, the trust was created by the donor making entries in the books of the bank, of which he was a partner. In McFadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 558, 1 Phillips, 157-8, the trust was constituted by a creditor, verbally directing his debtor to hold the money due to him in trust for the claimants, which trust he accepted and acted upon, 1 Phill. 153, 157; but was it in the power of the debtor to prevent the trust from being effectual, by refusing to be a trustee? v. infra.

(d) Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 140. My friend, Mr. Francis Bailey, of the Chancery bar, has been kind enough to furnish me with the documents on which Lord Eldon, in that case (the first where the doctrine on the text was established), held that there was what was equivalent to a declaration of trust.

By an order, 28th January, 1811, it was ordered that the Master should inquire and certify whether the French annuity of 2,300 francs, purchased by Christopher Dubost, as the agent and on behalf of the testator, William Mowbray, in the testator's name, payable during the life of Marie Genevieve Garos, and after the death of the testator, alleged to have been assigned to the said M. G. Garos, by the said C. Dubost, under the said testator's power of attorney was or not to be considered as part of the said testator's personal estate.

The Master, by his report dated 27th February, 1811, certified that by a letter dated 25th November, 1807, the testator authorized the said C. Dubost to purchase in France an annuity of 100*l.*, for the benefit of the aforesaid M. G. Garos, for her life, and to draw on the testator for 1500*l.* on account of such purchase, when made.

The letter was, so far as was material, in these words:—"Sir, my intention being to make a settlement upon the head of Mrs. M. G. Garos, I authorize you to purchase, in France, in the most safe and eligible manner, an annuity of 100*l.* sterling, or 2400 livres tournois, its equivalent at par, to be paid by quarterly payments to Mrs. Garos during her life; and upon my approving of the arrangements that you will make to that effect, in order to reimburse you the amount of the purchase of the said annuity, as well as to indemnify you for your trouble in taking care of Mrs. Garos for the future, I promise to pay you the sum of 1500*l.* sterling, with interest at five per cent. from the time of the purchase of the annuity till the time of payment." (Dubost was admitted a creditor for this sum against the estate.)

In case Dubost should not be able to purchase an annuity, then the testator authorized him to buy French funds, to the amount of 2000*l.* sterling, so that Mrs. Garos should receive the dividends during her life, and so as to preclude the possibility of the husband of Mrs. Garos, or any other person or creditor, to seize upon them; and on the death of Mrs. Garos, the stock was to be sold and divided amongst the persons named in the letter.

On the 4th April, 1808, Dubost wrote to the testator, informing him that he (Dubost) had purchased an annuity from an individual, secured on a house in Paris. Mr. Dubost proceeds, "This annuity, which will be paid by quarterly payments, is settled upon the head of Mrs. Garos, and bought in your name, from the motives I am about to declare." He then states that Mrs. Garos would, by the law of France, have had to accept the annuity, and for that purpose, to have obtained the authority of her husband, or a certificate of his death, or a sentence of interdiction against him, as being incompetent to manage his affairs, not one of which she could procure, and her own state of mind would have been another objection to the validity of the deed being made in her name, therefore the annuity had been made payable to the testator. He proceeds, "What remains for you to do is to send me a power of attorney, agreeable to the one I annex at foot, by which, being authorized to receive the several payments of the annuity as they become due, I shall pay to Mrs. G. the amount. That same power authorizes me, besides, to transport to Mrs. Garos the annuity itself, appearing, at the same time, to receive the price; 2nd, to make the donation to her of the same annuity, without receiving any fine (in both cases she must accept), and lastly, to prosecute Mrs. Dangis. I have, therefore," he adds, "fulfilled your intentions, according to the best of my abilities, and in the most secure as well as eligible way that circumstances permitted me to do. I have settled upon the head of Mrs. Garos an annuity which, by the actual course of exchange, exceeds the 100*l.* you meant expressly to allow her, and which will be sufficient to pay her expenses. Your account is, in consequence, debited with 1500*l.*"

The power of attorney was to the effect stated in the above letter; the annuity was described as an annuity of 2300 francs, created on the head of Mrs. Duval, the wife of J. L. Garos, and constituted by the said Mrs. Dangis, for the benefit of the said Mr. Mowbray, the testator; there was a power, "even to assign to the said Mrs. Garos solely, but to no other person, as well the principal as the dividends of the annuity, without acquittance; and also to make a deed of gift, without any consideration for the same, of the said annuity unto the said Mrs. Garos, to be unalienable by her." It was signed by the said Mr. Mowbray, in due form, and registered.

On the 9th of June, 1808, Mr. Mowbray wrote to Mr. Dubost in answer, in which he said "I was favoured on Saturday last with yours of April the 4th. I am sorry you have had so much trouble with Mrs. G.; you have done the best you could for her; I hope she may recover her senses," &c. He then says he will credit Mr. Dubost's account for 1500*l.* and other sums. He then states he will get the power of attorney legalized as soon as possible, and concludes by saying, "Upon the whole, I am well pleased with your conduct in the management of our affairs; it is that of a man well acquainted with business." Mr. Mowbray died before the power of attorney was acted upon.

By the death of Mr. Mowbray, the power of attorney, being voluntary, by the English law was revoked. (See Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51; Watson v. King, 4 Campb. 272, Lord Ellenborough; though a power of attorney may operate as an appropriation or charge; see Spooner v. Sandilands, 1 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 390.) The validity of the transfer made under it was attempted to be supported by reference to the law of France, but Lord equally, as where the owner makes an express declaration of trust (a).

An irrevocable trust without consideration may even be created of property which is incapable of legal transfer, as of a chose in action (b), if every thing is done in the way of transfer that such a subject is capable of (c). Thus, if a married woman have a power of appointment over property held by trustees in trust for her, whether the legal interest be in the trustees or in some third person, if she execute an appointment, though voluntary, without reserving a power of revocation, that will operate to constitute her trustees to be trustees for the appointee, and the transaction will be binding on the appointor (d), but this subject will again be considered in a subsequent section.

Eldon passed over that point, and gave judgment in these words: "Upon the documents before me, it does appear that though in one sense this may be represented as the testator's personal estate, yet he has committed to writing what seems to me a sufficient declaration, that he held this part of the estate in trust for the annuitants," 18 Ves. 140. (The Lord Chancellor's order is in the office of the Secretary of Lunatics.)

The decision only applied to volunteers claiming under the donor, but it is obvious that Lord Eldon considered that the declaration was binding on the testator himself. The judgment was not founded on the effect of the law of France to give validity to the acts done under the power of attorney before the attorney knew of the revocation by the death of her principal, it not having been sufficiently established by evidence; that view of the case would, of course, have made the question of trust immaterial.

In Thorpe v. Owen, 5 Beav. 224, a testatrix had, by her will, given the residue of her personal estate to the six daughters of Henry Owen, and appointed him executor. Owen converted the residue into money, and, with 1000*l.* of his own, purchased 2550*l.* 3½ per cent. In 1830 one of the daughters came of age, when H. Owen paid her one-sixth of the whole fund, she giving a receipt for it as one-sixth of the estate of her grandmother, and of the addition made thereto by H. Owen, the father, amounting in the whole as above. In 1834 another daughter came of age, and received another one-sixth. In 1838 a third daughter married one Sadler, when her father (Owen) covenanted to settle "the contingent share" in the legacy given by the grandmother's will on certain trusts.

Sadler and wife having called for accounts of the grandmother's estate, on Owen having queries in writing sent to him, he stated the 1000*l.* was a voluntary gift, and that "he had hitherto made the 1000*l.* part of the testatrix's property, and could not alter it." There were subsequent acts of recognition. On the death of Owen, a suit was instituted to administer his estate, when the Master of the Rolls, after having allowed the suit to stand over, to see whether further evidence could be produced, held that there was a complete trust of the 1000*l.* in favour of the daughters.

(a) See Vice-Chancellor Wigram's judgment in Meek v. Kettlewell; 1 Hare, 473-4.

(b) See Fortescue v. Barnett, infra, title, "Assignment of Equitable Interests."

(c) Petre v. Espinasse, 2 My. & K. 496, is perhaps the strongest case. There the plaintiff being unmarried had assigned his share (unascertained) in his deceased brother's estate, which of course was incapable of legal transfer, to the defendant, Robert Espinasse, in trust, at his discretion and at the plaintiff's request and with consent of his elder brother, to pay all or any part of his debts, and to invest the residue in government or real securities in the name of the trustee, and to apply the interest and any part of the capital at his discretion, with the consent of the elder brother, for the benefit of the plaintiff for his life, then upon trust for his children, if any, if none for his executors, &c. with a power of revocation with the consent of the persons therein named; this was held to be an executed trust binding on the plaintiffs. See also Lord Langdale's judgment, Roberts v. Lloyd, 2 Beavan, 384; but the case itself turned upon the liability of the obligor in respect of his payments after notice of the voluntary settlement.

(d) In Rycroft v. Christy, 3 Beavan, 238, Ann Rycroft, a married woman, being entitled to the interest of 500*l.* then standing in the names of trustees, executed an instrument by which she directed the trustee, who was a party to the instrument, to pay 7s. a week out of the interest to Ann Elf for the maintenance of her child, and Ann Rycroft covenanted to indemnify the trustee in respect of such payments and to allow them out of the dividends; the trustee accepted the trusts of the deed and acted upon it. The M. R. considered that this was an executed trust binding upon Ann Rycroft. Her husband disclaimed all interest. In Collinson v. Patrick, 2 Keen, 123, though this case belongs to a subsequent chapter, a bond was settled for the separate use of a married woman, with a power of appointment. She appointed her interest in the debt to the plaintiffs to indemnify them in respect of a breach of trust committed by her husband. Lord Langdale considered that the transaction was binding on the married woman. "If what has been done is equivalent to a transfer of the legal interest, the parties in whose favour the trust is created are entitled to the benefit of it in this court, and I am of opinion that this deed gives an interest to the plaintiffs which does so entitle them," p. 134. This case shows that it is not necessary that the trustee should have the legal title, for the legal title was in the obligee.

If the alleged donor has only expressed an intention to make a declaration of trust in favour of some object that is clearly not suffi-

It is not easy to reconcile the case of Beatson v. Beatson, 12 Simons, 281, with the foregoing cases, but more especially with Petre v. Espinasse. The facts were shortly as follow:—A single woman had a power of appointment over considerable property under two wills. She being about to sail for India, and being under an engagement to marry some person there, executed a voluntary settlement by which she absolutely and irrevocably appointed that, from and after her marriage with any person whomsoever, the same should enure as to 1000*l.* in trust for the person with whom she should marry, and as to the remainder for her separate use for life, and after her death for any husband with whom she might have married for his life, and, subject thereto, for her children by any husband or husbands whomsoever; if she should leave no husband or child then in trust for her executors; if she should leave a husband, in trust for her next of kin exclusive of her husband. After her arrival in India she became dissatisfied with the settlement. She alleged, amongst other reasons, that she thought that it had been revocable (but which the trustees of that settlement, according to their belief, denied), and she executed a deed purporting to revoke the settlement, and after her actual marriage made a new settlement with the concurrence of her husband, by which a joint appointment over the whole was given to the husband and wife, and in default of appointment the whole was settled on the children of that marriage, and in default of children in trust as she and her husband or the survivor should appoint, and, subject thereto, in trust for the survivor absolutely.

On a bill being filed by the lady against her husband, and the trustees of the original settlement, and of the two wills under which she derived her title to the property, the Vice-Chancellor of England established the deed of revocation and the subsequent settlement; Bill v. Cureton; Petre v. Espinasse, and Sloane v. Cadogan, were cited. His Honour examined the case of Sloane v. Cadogan, for the purpose of showing that the opinion of Sir William Grant in that case was extrajudicial, as there was another point on which the case must clearly have been decided in favour of the parties claiming under Lord Cadogan, without its being necessary to establish the deed as a good assignment; but his Honour also disputed the authority of Sir William Grant's dicta, though he apparently, as noticed in the first volume, p. 508, mistook Sir William Grant's meaning, in supposing that in using the word it that learned judge intended to represent that Lord Cadogan had assigned his share of the fund itself, and not merely his equitable interest in it. As regards the merits, his Honour went fully into all the circumstances. He stated that the first settlement was made evidently without any contract with any human being, and was altogether voluntary, not to say grossly absurd. He held that Mrs. Beatson had clearly a right to revoke and annul all the trusts declared by that settlement, and she having done so, he pronounced it to be a nullity. This case must perhaps be considered as standing on its own peculiar circumstances.

In Meek v. Kettlewell, Lord Lyndhurst, Chancellor, 1 Phill. 347, confirming the decree of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, held, that a deed of assignment of a mere possibility, with a power of attorney to demand the money, if and when it should fall to the grantor, could not be considered as an assignment, or as a declaration of trust, so as to bind the grantors, on the authority of Edwards v. Jones, ubi infra, and Antrobus v. Smith, ubi infra; and see the same case on the original hearing before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 1 Hare, 474. The former may be an authority for this decision, but not the latter, for in that case the property (shares in a canal) was presently transferable, and therefore might have been actually transferred—a material circumstance, as will be cient, even as against volunteers (a), or if a person direct that a transfer be made upon certain specified trusts, which trusts are to be declared or recorded, and the property is actually transferred in pursuance of such directions, but, whether by accident or otherwise, no trust is declared upon the transfer being made, the donor himself may clearly assume the dominion of the property after such transfer, and if he do, then the transaction will be a nullity as between the intended donee and the donor's representatives (b); and probably it would be held that the intended gift was incomplete, and therefore not binding on his representatives, though the donor had died without having done any further act. It is an universal rule, unless the case of Ex parte Pye forms an exception (c), that a defective conveyance without valuable consideration, where the party means actually to vest the legal ownership in the donee (d), or in any person as trustee for him, will not be considered as a declaration of trust, even though, as it would appear, the property may not be capable of legal transfer (e). There observed hereafter; in Meek v. Kettlewell, the property could not have been transferred; all was done in the way of transfer, that from the nature of the property could have been done. For the same reason, Antrobus v. Smith is hardly an authority to support Edwards v. Jones; but this subject will be more fully considered under the title "Assignments of Equitable Estates and Interests."

(a) Bayley v. Boulcott, 4 Russ. 347. The testatrix there had given instructions to her solicitors to prepare a deed, but the particular terms of the trust were not definitively settled. In Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 231, a paper, purporting to be an assignment to a particular person, was pinned to a policy, but both were kept in the owner's possession.

(b) Smith v. Warde, 15 Law J., Chan. 105. This case has some of the ingredients of Ex parte Pye, supra. The testator had directed his bankers to invest 4000*l.* in the funds, in the names of himself and his wife, in trust for his son; but as the bank does not permit any trust to be entered in their books, this could not be done, and the fund was, in fact, invested in the name of the husband and wife simply, and so the testator was informed. The testator then directed the bankers to invest 800*l.* more "in the same manner, which they did; the settlor, however, always received the dividends on both sums, and dealt with them as his own property. On the settlor's death, it was held by the Vice-Chancellor of England, that there was no trust declared for the son, but that the whole formed part of the assets of the donor. It is plain that something was here wanting—namely, a declaration by the donor, after he was informed that the intended record of the trust could not be made; besides, he acted as actual owner of the fund.

(c) Supra. If the case had stood on the power of attorney alone, it would clearly have been an exception.

(d) V. supra, Vol. i. p. 449, et inf. Ch. x.

(e) Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & Cr. 226; (but see this case, which is stated infra, Ch. x.)

In Colman v. Sarrel, A. D. 1789, a deed was executed, purporting to be an assignment of 1000*l.* stock to trustees in trust for Joan Sarrel (a stranger), for life, in case she should survive the donor, and after her death for her children; the stock was never transferred to the trustees; the donor covenanted, in case he survived Joan Sarrel, to pay the dividends to her children, as she should appoint. It was insisted that the deed made the executors of the donor trustees for the donees, and if not, that such a gift ought to operate as being equivalent to a legacy given by will. Lord Thurlow said—If you can bring an action (that is, on the covenant), you may: where a deed is not sufficient to pass the estate out of the hands of the conveyor, but the party must come into equity, the court has never yet executed a voluntary agreement; to do this would be to make him who does not sufficiently convey, and his executors after his death, trustees for the person to whom he had so defectively conveyed; and there is no case where a court of equity has ever done that: "Whenever you come into equity, to raise an interest by way of trust, you must have a valuable, or at least a meritorious consideration" (such as pay-is no instance, said Lord Northington, where a court of equity has compelled a man to complete a mere act of volition (a); there is a locus pœnitentiæ till it is completed (b).

The distinction above adverted to between cases where the matter rests in fieri, and those where the instrument is executed and the relationship of trustee and cestui que trust is created, though admitted to be somewhat refined and obscure, has been considered by modern judges as being now settled by the uniform tenor of the decisions (c); it will be again adverted to in treating of the assignment of choses in action and the transfer of equitable estate and interests. But there is one instance, which is apparently an exception to what in ordinary cases is treated as a constituted trust, which must here be noticed, namely, a conveyance or assignment of real or personal property to trustees in trust to distribute the funds amongst the creditors of the donor (d). These cases have been determined in great part upon the analogy afforded by the doctrines of the common law in regard to a mandate.

At law, where property is remitted voluntarily by the owner to a third person, with a direction that it be applied for the benefit of another, or if such a direction is given in regard to property already in the agent's hands, it has been held that such third person receives it in the one case and still retains it in the other, not for the use of the person designated, even though he be a creditor, but of the original owner. Such a transaction is treated as a voluntary arrangement by the person who owes the money, which may be revoked at pleasure; at least before any engagement is entered into on the part of the mandatory with such third person to execute it for his benefit (e).

ment of debts, or making a provision for a wife or child, 3 Bro. 14); "nothing less will do;" Colman v. Sarrel, 1 Ves. J. 55, 3 Bro. 12; and see Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 661. A meritorious consideration, as above defined, was sufficient (subject to certain restrictions), to empower the court, prior to the statute 55 Geo. III. c. 192, to supply the want of a surrender of a copyhold, see the cases 1 Fonbl. 39; and is yet sufficient to induce the court to interfere in aid of a defective execution of a power, Sugden on Powers, ii. 100. Yet a meritorious consideration, in the sense above described, is not now considered sufficient to authorize the court, in any case, to make perfect an imperfect gift or contract, as against the donor himself, or his representatives; see Jefferies v. Jefferies, 1 Cr. & Phillips, 138, 141, notwithstanding Lord Chancellor Sugden's decision in Ellis v. Nimmo, Lloyd & Goo. temp. Sugden, which must be considered, I presume, as virtually overruled; as to which, v. infra, Chap. x. Sect. iii.

(a) Wycherley v. Wycherley, 2 Eden, 177; and see Lord Henley's note, 3 Bro. 14.

(b) Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 39, 46, 47.

(c) See Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 2 Russ. & M. 453-4, cited 2 M. & K. 511, 512.

(d) Constituted trusts, by assignments in trust for creditors, will be the subject of distinct consideration.

(e) Williams v. Everett, 14 East, 582. In Scott v. Perchor, 3 Meriv. 652, some pearls were sent by the owners at Madras to Messrs. Burney, in London, with directions to sell them, and pay the proceeds to Messrs. Perchor and Co., to whom the owners were indebted. Messrs Burney acknowledged the receipt of the pearls, and undertook to pay the proceeds as directed. The owners afterwards directed that the pearls should be sent for sale to America, pp. 654-5, and subse-

This principle has been acted upon in the Court of Chancery in regard to conveyances and assignments of real and personal property in trust, to be applied for the benefit of creditors(a); and à fortiori if the direction to apply the money be in favour of a volunteer(b). It has been held, correctly or not, said Lord Cottenham, as regards creditors, that from the nature of the transaction the character of trustee and cestui que trust never existed between the creditors and the trustees of the trust deeds; but that the settlor himself was the only cestui que trust. "A man," said his lordship, "who without any communication with his creditors puts property into the hands of trustees for the purpose of paying debts, purposes only a benefit to himself by the payment of his debts; his object is not to benefit his creditors; it would, therefore, be a result most remote from the contemplation of the debtor if it should be held that any creditor discovering the transaction should be able to fasten upon the property and invest himself with the character of a cestui que trust"(c). Where such a trust is created under a contract with the creditors, or it is accepted and acted upon by them, it is valid and binding at law and in equity(d).

In the case of Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, the Vice-Chancellor of England held, that though the solicitor of the trustees, who was also the solicitor of the Duke, the author of the deed, but without, as far as it appears, any express authority from him, sent a circular letter to the creditors, informing them of the nature of the trust deed quently assigned all their property for the benefit of their creditors. Sir W. Grant said—This amounts to no more than a mandate from a principal to his agent, which can give no right or interest to a third person in the subject of the mandate. It may be revoked at any time before it is executed, or at least before any engagement is entered into with the third person, to execute it for his benefit; and it will be revoked by any disposition of the property, inconsistent with the execution of it; the assignment was such a disposition; and see Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 51. The general doctrine, particularly as regards assent of the trustee or baillee, and of the creditors, will be further considered under the head of "Assignments in Trust for Creditors."

(a) Wallwyn v. Coutts, 3 Meriv. 707; more fully, 3 Sim. 14; Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, 3 Sim. 1; 2 Russ. & M. 454-6; and see Page v. Broom, 4 Russ. 24; that was a voluntary direction to a receiver by deed poll, to pay the interest of a particular mortgage.

(b) See Hughes v. Stubbs, 1 Hare, 476. That was the case of a cheque drawn in favour of a third person, with directions to him to apply it for the benefit of one Ellen Gitting, but no communication was made to her on the subject, and the directions were not acted upon, nor could they be, as there was only a credit for the money.

(c) Bill v. Cureton, 2 My. & K. 503. In the case of Gibbs v. Glamis, 11 Sim. 584, Lord Lyndhurst, reversing the decision of the Vice-Chancellor of England, applied the doctrine to a case where the interests of a creditor were incidentally provided for in an arrangement between the debtor and other parties.

(d) See Small v. Marwood, 9 Barn. & Cr. 300-306; Stephenson v. Hayward, Prec. Chan. 310; v. infra, "Trust and Composition," "Deeds for Creditors."

and of its execution (a); still, as it did not appear that the creditors ever submitted to take the benefit of the deed, or conformed to its terms, or abstained from suing the Duke, this did not convert the assignees into trustees for the creditors, and that it could not be enforced; that as the deed per se conferred no interest on the creditors, notice to them could not enlarge the effect of the deed (b). Sir John Leach, in Acton v. Woodgate, considered that this doctrine was questionable as a general proposition, because the creditors, being aware of such trust, might be thereby induced to a forbearance in respect of their claims, which they would not otherwise have exercised (c).

Negligence or delay in this, as in every other instance in which the Court of Chancery is called upon to interfere, may extinguish or defeat the best-founded claim (d); nothing can call forth this court into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence; where these are wanting the court is passive and does nothing (e).

In this respect the analogy of the rules of the common law has been followed not only as to the remedies to enforce and preserve equitable estates and interests, but also in regard to their extinction. Thus, although there cannot, strictly speaking, be a disseisin, abatement, or intrusion as to a trust estate, yet if an adverse claimant continue in receipt of the rents and profits (which is equivalent to seisin at law) this may amount to an equitable ouster of the rightful claimant (f).

(a) The letter to the plaintiff in the suit stated that he was a scheduled creditor to the amount of 191*l.* 3*s.*, and that the deeds directed that the debts under 50*l.* should be paid in full, and the dividend between the remaining debts, without preference or priority; and added, "If you are not paid in full, what you receive is only to be taken in part." The plaintiff had so far renounced the deed, that he had come in under the decree, 3 Sim. 2, 13.

(b) 3 Simons, 13.

(c) 2 My. & K. 495. The Vice-Chancellor Wigram has lately intimated a similar opinion; see Kirwan v. Daniel, xi. Jur. 237. However, there must be considerable difficulty in carrying out this qualification of the doctrine if the case as regards each creditor is to depend upon the circumstances as affecting his particular case; but if, where the deed is irrevocable as to one, it is to be considered irrevocable as to all, so that each should be at liberty to come in and take the benefit of it, which has yet to be decided, then the case will be brought within the ordinary doctrines applied to trust and composition deeds for creditors, which will presently be noticed.

Mr. Justice Story, on Equity, § 1045, considers the true test in these cases to be at whose risk the property is; if the trustees were to waste the property who would have to bear the loss?

(d) Hercy v. Dinwoody, 4 Bro. 269; Case of Creditors, 1 My. & K. 478; Haworth v. Bostock, 4 Y. & Coll. 16; Campbell v. Graham, 1 My. & K. 474, 483, an appeal from Leach, Master of the Rolls; East v. East, 5 Hare, 349-50.

(e) Smith v. Clay, Amb. 645; 3 Bro. 639, note; Grenfell v. Girdlestone, 2 Y. & Coll. 679.

(f) See sup. vol. i. 502, and see Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & Wal. 191, Lord Redesdale; Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Scho. & Lefr. 428-9; Hovenden v. Annesley, 2 Scho. & Lefr. 630, 636; as to what shall be considered an equitable ouster, see Sir Thomas Plumer's judgment, Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 166, et v. ib. 156, 157. If any thing is done or said directly or indirectly to recognize the title of the rightful owner by the adverse possessor, that it seems may take the case out of the general rule, ibid. 175; but the new statute has done away with most questions as to adverse possession.

The Court of Chancery prior to the passing of the late Statute (a) of Limitations, which is mentioned in the former volume, and which is binding on all courts (b), acted by analogy to the rules of law in cases of a corresponding nature, as well as on principles of its own founded on public policy (c), independently of the bar which in natural justice ought to be interposed in cases of acquiescence (d). As the court had no legislative authority, said Lord Camden, it could not properly define the time of bar by a positive rule to an hour, a minute, or a year; it was governed by circumstances; but as often as parliament had limited the time of actions and remedies to a certain period in legal proceedings, the Court of Chancery adopted that rule and applied it to similar cases in equity: for when the legislature had fixed the time at law it would have been preposterous for equity, which by its own proper authority always maintained a limitation, to countenance laches beyond the period that law had been confined to by parliament, and, therefore, in all cases where the legal right has been barred by parliament the equitable right to the same thing (e) has been concluded by the same bar (f). The true reason why suits and remedies are barred by length of time is because the party has acquiesced or neglected to pursue his remedy, and the public peace requiring an end of suits, he abandons this right by submission, or forfeits it by neglect: the Court of Chancery, therefore, will in many cases refuse to give its aid in favour of an equitable claim, though a less period than the corresponding statutory period shall have elapsed, if the length of time and circumstances of the case require the application of that principle, more especially if by reason of such neglect or delay rights have been acquired which it would be unjust to disturb (g). The discretion which the Court of Chancery had acted upon by analogy to the time limited in regard to proceedings at law is taken away by the statute above referred to (h); but the act does not interfere with any

(a) 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

(b) See vol. i. p. 503. Sir E. Sugden, V. & P. 635, et seq., has fully stated the effect of the act as regards suits in equity.

(c) 1 Jac. & W. 63. Expedit Reipublicæ ut sit finis litium, 2 Scho. & Lef. 630; et v. supra, vol. i. 503, n. (a).

(d) Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swanst. 64; and see Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 16, 32.

(e) But v. supra, vol. i. p. 503; Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 252.

(f) Smith v. Clay, 3 Bro. 639-40, note.

(g) In Bonny v. Ridgard, cited 4 Bro. 138; 17 Ves. 98, Lord Kenyon, on the ground of length of time alone, on rehearing, reversed a decree of Sir T. Sewell, by which he had set aside a purchase admitted to be fraudulent; and see the other cases cited 17 Ves. 99, by M. R. in Gregory v. Gregory, G. Coop. 201, though it was admitted that the transaction, if recent, could not have been permitted to stand; the lapse of eighteen years was held sufficient to prevent any relief being given; Champion v. Rigby, 1 Russ. & M. 539, to same effect. And see Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 Jac. & W. 59, a case of purchase by trustee, and the cases cited by Sir T. Plumer, ibid. 62-3; also Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen, 748.

(h) V. supra, vol. i. p. 503.

rule or jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in refusing relief on the ground of acquiescence or otherwise to any person whose right to bring a suit may not be barred by the statute(a). There are, however, some cases to which the Statute of Limitations does not apply. Thus, as regards a charge on an estate, the 40th clause in the act assumes that there is not only a person capable of giving a discharge or release, but also an assignable person by whom the charge is presently payable, or who is capable of paying the principal or interest of the charge, or of making an acknowledgment of the right thereto: it cannot, therefore, apply where there is no assignable person liable to pay the charge, or person who by the delay could be induced to suppose that the charge was abandoned or merged(b).

But though the Court of Chancery will prevent as far as it is able those mischiefs which would probably result from persons being allowed at an inconvenient distance of time to disturb the possession of another, or to bring forward stale demands, yet it will not encourage or in any manner protect unrighteous conduct, or the abuse of confidence; and, therefore, no length of time will bar a fraud(c), unless there be negligence and delay after the fraud is discovered, the party not being under pressure or undue influence(d); even before the late act(e) no length of time would affect a direct trust, for the possession of the trustee has always for the most part been considered as the possession of the cestui que trust; and the case must have been attended with some peculiar circumstances in order that time might operate as a bar between the trustee and the cestui que trust(f). It is to be observed that although the statute expressly limits the time within which a legacy may be recovered, yet where a sum of money is bequeathed to an executor upon trust to be laid out upon certain trusts, as soon as it is severed from the bulk of the estate it ceases to be a mere legacy, and the bar of the Statute of Limitations does not apply, for it is then a case of express trust which is specially excepted(g). However, as regards trusts by implication and con-

(a) Sugd. V. & P. 636.

(b) Burrell v. Lord Egremont, 7 Beav. 212, 235.

(c) Lord Talbot, Cotterill v. Purchase, Forrest, 63; Aldin v. Gregory, 2 Eden, 285; Purcel v. Macnamara, 14 Ves. 91, 121-2; Hovenden v. Lord Annesley, 2 Sch. & Lef. 607, 630.

(d) Weston v. Cartwright, Sel. Ca. Ch. 36; Whatton v. Toone, 5 Mad. 55; Roche v. O'Brien, 1 Ball & B. 338, 342.

(e) Supra, vol. i. p. 502, Stat. 3 & 4 Will.

IV. c. 27, § 25.

(f) Parker v. Ash, 1 Vern. 256; Lord Kingsland v. Lord Tyrconnell, 1 Vin. Ab. 186, pl. 10; Townshend v. Townshend, 1 Bro. 554; Milnes v. Lawley, 4 Pri. 103; Chalmer v. Bradley, 1 Jac. & W. 67; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen, 749; 4 My. & Cr. 41; supra, vol. i. p. 502. See Hill on Trustees, 249, et seq. 296; et v. infra, "Remedies against Trustees."

(g) Philippo v. Munnings, 2 My. & Cr. 314.

structive trusts, and indeed all other equitable rights, the Court of Chancery, on the principle on which the Statutes of Limitation are grounded, will not interfere unless the claim be prosecuted within reasonable time, or unless a very sufficient reason for the delay be given (a).

This may be sufficient to show what is the general nature of an equitable estate or interest created by way of trust, and the general rules which affect such equitable interests.

(a) Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. 96, 97-8; Hardwicke, and see Sir T. Plumer's judgment, Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 2 Jac. & W. 139, 152; S. C. 4 Bli. 1.
et v. Selsey v. Rhoades, 1 Bli. N. S. 1, 8;
Townshend v. Townshend, 1 Bro. 554; Llewellyn v. Mackworth, Barnard, 449; Lord

SECTION V.—Of Trusts created by Precatory and Recommendatory Words.

General Rule.

Latterly Judges not inclined to extend the Doctrine.

Precedents followed.

Cases proceed upon Intention.

Each Case to be considered on the whole Context—the Circumstances—the Consequences.

It is to be looked to to see whether the Act is to be matter of Discretion only.

Rule laid down by Lord Alvanley ; approved by Lord Cottenham.

Words of mere Wish or of Expectation do not create a Trust.

Where the Gift embraces an uncertain Amount of Property to be otherwise obtained.

Other Instances where no Trust created.

Effect of Words of Recommendation in regard to Appointment of Receivers, Managers, and the like.

Certainty requisite to create a Trust.

General Rules adopted to reduce to Certainty Indefinite Expressions.

Such as “Family.”

Relations.

How far the Statute of Distributions is to be taken as a guide.

Descendants.

Discretion vested in the Donee, how far it may be interfered with.

Estate or Interest which the Object of the Trust is to take.

Certainty required as to this point.

Difference in regard to Certainty where the Gift is for Charitable Purposes.

Difference as to the Person to whom the Property devolves in the case of a Direct and of a Recommendatory Trust, where the Trust fails.

Words of Direct Gift construed to import a Trust.

THE creation of trusts by words of recommendation, and the like, has been noticed in the former volume ; and the source from which the doctrine of the Court of Chancery on this subject may be supposed to have been derived has been pointed out (a).

It may be taken as a general rule (b), that when property is given

(a) Sup. vol. i. p. 436-40 ; p. 498-9.

(b) The language of many, I may say of most of the cases, (v. infra, and inter al. Wright v. Atkyns, Turn. & R. 157, Lord Eldon,) in which the doctrine of the certainty required in recommendatory or precatory trusts is mentioned or adverted to would seem to imply that there is something peculiar in regard to the certainty required in trusts of this description, as distinguished from trusts imposed by positive declaration. And trusts of this description are distinguished by writers whose opinions are entitled to the highest respect, as belonging to the class of implied (Lewin on Trusts, 66 ; Jeremy, p. 99 ; 2 Roper on Legacies, 380, et seq.) or constructive trusts, (Story on Equity, § 1074,) not of express trusts ; but absolutely to any person (a), and the same person is, by the person who has power to command, recommended (b), or intreated (c), or wished (d), to dispose of that property in favour of another, the recommendation, entreaty, or wish shall be held to create a trust—first, if the words are so used that upon the whole (e) they ought to be construed as imperative; secondly, if the subject of the recommendation or wish be certain; and thirdly, if the objects or persons intended to have the benefit of the recommendation or wish be also certain (f).

there does not appear to be any solid ground for making any distinction between the certainty required in trusts imposed by recommendatory words, and those imposed by express and positive direction or command. I believe it will be found, as one might expect on looking to the principles of construction applied to cases of trust generally, that the words indicating the subject and object and estate or interest, coupled with a gift to a person unequivocally, as a mere trustee, would receive exactly the same construction as that which they have received when coupled with a recommendatory trust: the principle, as regards each, is to ascertain the intention, by the ordinary rules of construction and interpretation, and carry it into effect; but in neither case can the intention be ascertained if certainty be wanting in any of the particulars above pointed out; and if the words are sufficiently indicative of the intention in the one case, they must be, one would suppose, in the other. It is to be remarked, that Sir Wm. Grant, in the case of Cruwys v. Colman (9 Ves. 322, after noticed), does not confine his statement as to the three requisites, to precatory trusts, though the subject of his decision was a trust of that description. In regard to the supposed distinction, made with respect to trusts of this description, by classing them as implied or constructive trusts—for which certainly there is the authority of incidental expressions of Judges of the highest authority, (int. al. Lord Hardwicke, 1 Atk. 619,)—if, as is laid down in numerous cases, (see particularly Cary v. Cary, infra, p. 66,) the court acts upon the desire as a command, I am unable to discover why a trust created by what the court construes to be a command should be distinguished from a trust created by a command or direction unequivocally expressed; and I have accordingly treated both as being equally express trusts: lest however I should be labouring under some misapprehension, I have introduced the doctrine as to certainty, as I have found it in the authorities, conceiving however that it is equally applicable to every gift upon trust, without exception, (vide supra, Vol. i. p. 499,) and the modern case of Morton v. Tewart, before V.-C. Knight Bruce, above cited, if authority be wanting, appears to me to warrant this conclusion.

(a) See Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. p. 172, Lord Langdale, affirmed in Dom. Proc., viii. Jur. 925, 11 Cl. & Finn. 548; and see Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 10 Ves. p. 536, Lord Eldon.

(b) Tibbitts v. Tibbitts, 19 Ves. 656, 663; S. C. Jacob, 319; that was the case of a devise of a freehold estate, with a recommendation to the devisee to continue his cousins in the occupation of their farms: Lord Cottenham (5 Cl. & Finn.) considered that case had carried the doctrine further than any that had preceded it. "Words of recommendation or desire are always expounded a devise," per Master of the Rolls, Eales v. England, Pr. Ch. 202; affirmed, 2 Vern. 407; Ford v. Fowler, 3 Beav. 146; Cholmondeley v. Cholmondeley, 14 Simons, p. 590; Johnson v. Rowlands, xii. Jur. 769.

(c) Prevost v. Clarke, 2 Mad. 458, case of a residue of personal estate.

(d) Hinxman v. Poynder, 5 Simons, 546; many other cases are cited, (and see 3 Beav. p. 161,) showing that the words "not doubting," (but see Flanders v. Clarke, 1 Ves. 9,) or expressing "hope," or "request," or "confidence," and the like, will have the same effect; and even "authorize and empower" are sufficient, Foley v. Parry, 2 My. & Keen, 145. The principal cases are collected 2 Roper on Legacies, 373, 389; 1 Jarman on Wills, 334-7; Lewin on Trusts, 67, et seq.; Hill on Trustees, p. 32, et seq. The words, though "very gentle," may be sufficient, if they have a distinct object, Lord Thurlow, Harland v. Trigg, 1 Bro. 142. The testator, as some judges have said, in the cases referred to, may have desired to be courteous or civil in his command.

(e) The Earl of Bute v. Stuart, 1 Bro. P. C. 481, is a striking case to show that words apparently giving the donee power to dispose of the property as he pleases, may be confined, on looking to the circumstances and context, to a power in the nature of a trust to dispose of it in favour of particular persons only, et v. infra, p. 81, 82.

(f) Lord Langdale, Knight v. Knight, ubi

Latterly the judges have been inclined not to extend the rule of construction which gives an imperative effect to precatory words; and in modern times the judges, no longer referring to the authority of the Corpus Juris, have confined themselves entirely to the principles established by the decisions of their predecessors (a); to these decisions, therefore, we have now to look.

sup.; Lord Eldon, Wright v. Atkyns, Turner & R. 157. Lord Redesdale expresses the rule thus: "When a testator, having in his power to dispose of property, expresses a desire as to the disposition of the property, and the objects to which he refers are certain, the desire so expressed amounts to a command; and if he shows his desire, he in fact expresses his intention, provided the objects to which he refers are so defined, that a court can act upon the desire so expressed." Cary v. Carey, 2 Scho. & Lef. 189. As to the certainty required, vide supra, p. 65, and Vol. i. 499.

(a) See 1 Simons, 552; Lawless v. Shaw, 1 L. & G. temp. Sugd. 164; Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 172; White v. Briggs, 15 Law J., N. S. 182; 15 Sim. p. 33; but which was reversed, on appeal, ibid. 34: this is also an important case on the construction of the word "family," 15 Sim. 33, 300, v. inf. p. 73, 74; and see Young v. Martin, Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, vii. Jur. p. 1147.

In Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. 531, (a case on the construction of words of recommendation, which were there held to create a trust,) on the doctrine of the Roman law, before adverted to, being cited as it had been in Pierson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. p. 38, and several other cases, Lord Rosslyn said, "There is really no fair analogy to the Roman law;" but his Lordship appears to have taken a confined view of that doctrine, as to which, v. supra, Vol. i. p. 439. There can be little doubt that if these cases had come before the Court of Chancery, unprejudiced by authority, where there was an absolute gift of property with a request or recommendation annexed to it, it would have been left to the honour and moral feeling of the party to comply with it or not. There is an early case on this subject, (Forth v. Gresley, 30 May, 1 Jac. I. Reg. L. A. 1602, fo. 617,) to this effect: "This court, having well advised and considered of the will of the said Mr. D. Forth, findeth that the devise of the said leases is absolute to the said lady, and no matter of trust is therein contained, but only a request of the said lady, that she would have regard of the said plaintiff, whereby this court conceiveth that she is left to her own conscience therein, and not to be pressed to perform the said request by suit;" the bill was accordingly dismissed; which case is also reported somewhat differently by Sir Geo. Cary, p. 30, ed. 1665. Lord Ellesmere's judgment seems to imply, though there was also a want of certainty as to the subject of the request, that that word was not, as now, (see Pierson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. 46; Foley v. Parry, 5 Sim. 145, "words of request are as much words of legation as a direct gift," per V.-C. affirmed 2 My. & K. 144, 145,) sufficient to create a trust. Sir A. Hart, in Sale v. Moore, 1 Sim. 540, and Lord Chief Baron Richards, in Meredith v. Heneage, 1 Sim. 551, 552, clearly considered that, independent of authority, a recommendation to a person to whom property was absolutely given would not constitute a trust. Sir A. Hart says that "the first case that construed words of recommendation into a command made a will for the testator—for every one knows the distinction between them," 1 Simons, 510, et v. ibid. 552; it is plain that Lord Eldon entertained the same opinion, see Dashwood v. Peyton, 18 Ves. 41, and Wright v. Atkyns, 1 Ves. & B. 315-16: so that the doctrine can hardly be accounted for without attributing it to the influence of the Roman law on the minds of those who first established it. Lord Alvanley, however, in Pierson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. 39, 40, desired that the case before him might not be considered with reference to the Roman law, but upon the principles laid down in former cases; and from that time, though the doctrines of the Roman law have been continually cited at the bar, (v. int. al. Knight v. Knight, (1840,) 3 Beav. 161,) the judges have evidently founded their decisions solely on the cases decided by their predecessors. Probably this doctrine (like that of election, which Lord Eldon considered to have been derived from the Roman law,) was originally applied to pecuniary legacies only, but for a long series of years, as will be seen by the authorities referred to, no distinction has been taken as to the nature of the property; see Tibbitts v. Tibbitts, supra: and though there is no case that I am aware of in which the question has arisen on a gift inter vivos, (unless the case of Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen, 260, can be so considered,) the general opinion appears to be that the doctrine as to recommendatory words would be equally applied in such a case, though in the former volume, p. 498, I had

These decisions, as will have been seen, have, to a considerable extent, bound the court in construing recommendatory trusts as regards the words which are to be considered, primâ facie at least, as imposing an obligation; yet all the cases proceed upon a consideration of what was the intention of the testator (a).

In the infinite variety of expressions which are employed, and of cases which thereupon arise, there is often the greatest difficulty in determining whether the act desired or recommended is an act which the testator intended to be executed as a trust, or which the Court of Chancery ought to deem fit to be or capable of being performed as such (b). The question never turns upon the grammatical import of words—they may be imperative, but not necessarily so; the subject-matter, the situation of the parties, and the probable intent must be considered (c); it is not every wish or expectation which a testator may express, nor every act that he may wish his successors to do that can or ought to be executed as a trust in this court (d). Each case must be considered upon the whole context and circumstances of the will (e), and the circumstances under which the testator stood as connected with the words used in his will; the consequences also that would result, or which might be deduced from interpreting the words as importing a trust to the extent insisted upon, particularly as affecting the positive devises in the will clearly importing beneficial enjoyment, may, or rather must, be looked to in order to ascertain what was the intention, whatever may be the weight attached to the words of recommendation standing by themselves (f).

As the circumstances and general scope of the will may have a material effect in repelling the presumed intention to create a trust, so they may also have the effect of confirming the construction of the words in a doubtful case in favour of the establishment of a trust. In one case the testator, after giving the interest of his property to his wife for life, and then the bulk of it to W. W. Foly, the son of a deceased nephew, added, "It is my particular wish and request that treated the doctrine as peculiar to wills (where greater latitude is allowed in searching for the intention); and this seems to have been the impression of Mr. Fonblanque, ii. p. 36, and of Mr. Justice Story, Comment. on Eq. Jur. § 1068.

(a) Lord Cottenham, Lawless v. Shaw, ubi infra, dictum of Lord Thurlow, Harland v. Trigg, 1 Bro. 143; and see Meredith v. Heneage, Dom. Proc. 1 Sim. 550, ibid. to the same effect.

(b) Lord Langdale, 3 Beav. 172.

(c) Lord Loughborough, Meggison v. Moore, 2 Ves. J. 632-3.

(d) Lord Langdale, Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 172; in which case the subject was very fully considered.

(e) Lord Cottenham, C., Foley v. Parry, 2 My. & K. 144-5.

(f) See Lawless v. Shaw, 5 Cl. & Finn. 147, 153-4; and Wright v. Atkyns, Turn. & R. 158; and Kerott v. Cottee, before Lord Cottenham, 13 Jan. 1847.

my dear wife and Walter Williams (who was the grandfather of the said W. W. Foley) will superintend and take care of his education, so as to fit him for any respectable profession or employment." Evidence was entered into to show the previous acts of the testator in relation to the claimant, and it was held upon the intention to be collected from the general scope of the will and the circumstances, that W. W. Foley was entitled to be maintained out of the life interest of the widow during his minority, regard being had, as to the amount, to the fortune given to him by the will (a).

One most important feature, as deduced from the authorities, even where there may be all the requisites in other respects, is, whether the testator has not intended, looking to the whole context (b), that the act shall be a matter of discretion only, to be exercised or not at the pleasure of the donee, or as it may or may not suit his own convenience or inclination (c). The rule as laid down by Lord Alvanley and approved by Lord Cottenham is, that if a testator shows a desire that a thing shall be done, unless there are plain express words or necessary implication that the testator does not mean to take away the discretion (d) but intends to leave it to be defeated, the party shall be considered as acting under a trust (e).

Where from the different parts of the instrument it appears that the words are expressive of a mere expectation or wish (f) no trust will arise; as where the words are, that the donee will be kind to, or remember certain objects or classes (g), or the like; or where the donor

(a) Foley v. Parry, 5 Sim. 146; affirmed in appeal, 2 My. & K. 139, 146; and see Broad v. Bevan, infra.

(b) See Meggison v. Moore, 2 Ves. J. 633.

(c) Knight v. Boughton, in Dom. Proc., viii. Jurist, 925-6, 1844.

(d) See Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 665.

(e) Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. J. 335, affirmed ib. 533; Knight v. Boughton, ubi sup. Another passage was cited by Lord Lyndhurst, C.: "Whenever any person gives property and points out the object, the property, and the way in which it shall go, that does create a trust, unless he shows clearly that his desire expressed is to be controlled by the party, and that he shall have an option to defeat it." Mr. Justice Story, referring to 1 Sim. 551, observes on this passage, "That it is open to some criticism;" indeed it is plain that the passage is defective.

(f) See 3 Beavan, 172.

(g) Bardswell v. Bardswell, 9 Sim. 319; Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 1; Curtis v. Rippon, 5 Mad. 434; other cases to this effect are cited, Lewin on Trusts, p. 69. The case of

Bardswell v. Bardswell was to the following effect:—Charles Bardswell, by will, gave all his estate and effects, both real and personal, to his son, Charles Bardswell, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to and for his and their own use and benefit, "well knowing" he will discharge the trust reposed in him by remembering his, the testator's, sons and daughters, William, Edmund, Martha, Eliza, and Maria; Charles Bardswell was also appointed executor. The Vice-Chancellor of England said the expressions, "well knowing," would have created a trust if it were pointed out who were the parties to take, and what they were to take; but the V. C. held that the testator had given the property to his son absolutely, and had given a recommendation only of his other children to the kindness of his son. He observed that the words of "gift" included executors, &c., and the words of "trust" related only to the son, p. 323. The manner in which the alleged trust was to be executed was left entirely to the son. His Honour disposed of the objection that a trust was impressed on the property and no trust uses such expressions as trusting to the justice of his successors, and it is to be collected that it is their own sense of justice on which he relies (a). When the testator recommends, but adds that he does not absolutely enjoin, it is clear that the expressions are to be taken as precatory only and not imperative (b).

If it appears from the context that the first taker was intended to have a discretionary power to withdraw the whole or any part of the subject from the object of the wish or request (c), or if there are any words by which it is expressed or from which it can be implied that the first taker may apply any part of the subject to his own use, it will not be held that a trust is created (d). In the case of Wynne v. Hawkins (e) the testator, after giving to his wife the whole of his property, which he considered was only sufficient for her decent maintenance, added, "not doubting but that she will dispose of what shall be left at her death to our two grand-children." The wife died, and what was left might, of course, have been ascertained; but as on the context it was uncertain what property was subject to the confidence, for she might in her lifetime have disposed of the whole, Lord Thurlow, therefore, held that no trust was created (f). So if the recommendation is so worded that it necessarily implies a discretion which must be governed by the exercise of the donee's own individual judgment (g), it will not be treated as a trust; and in precatory as well as direct trusts, there may be a discretion so given to a trustee, that in the event of there being no trustee to exercise it, that trust cannot be exercised by the court (h). Thus, where the intention expressed was that after the death of the testator's son his widow should dispose of his property to such of his relations as should then stand most in need of it, and the widow died in the lifetime of the son, Sir J. Leach held that the trust intended never vested in her, but entirely failed, and that the testator must be considered as having died intestate (i).

declared (so that it must go to the next of kin on the doctrine of resulting trust), saying the testator had himself declared what the trust was, and it was no trust.

(a) Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 154, 176-7.

(b) Young v. Martin, 2 Y. & Coll. N. S. 582, 590.

(c) Lechmere v. Lavie, 2 M. & K. 201; see Bland v. Bland, 2 Cox, 354; Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 5; Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 174, and cases there cited; White v. Briggs, Lord Lyndhurst, 15 Law J. Chanc. 182.

(d) Lord Langdale, Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 173.

(e) 1 Bro. 179.

(f) The cases of Pushman v. Filliter, 3 Ves. 7; Bland v. Bland, 2 Cox, 349, 354; Atty.-Genl. v. Hall, cited ib. 355; Sprange v. Barnard, 2 Bro. 585; Eade v. Eade, 5 Madd. 121; Horwood v. West, 1 Sim. & S. 389; and many other cases have been decided on the same principle.

(g) As a recommendation to a wife to give a certain sum to each of her daughters who shall behave dutifully, Otway v. Otway, quoted in Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. J. 530-1.

(h) See Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 663, Ld. Eldon.

(i) Ray v. Adams, 3 My. & K. 244.

If there are annexed to the gift any expressions that may embrace any uncertain amount of property which the donee may obtain otherwise than through the gift to which the words of expectation or the like are annexed, it has been held that the words of recommendation in such a case will not create a trust (a); though where a trust is clearly fixed upon a specific sum, being the donor's own property, it will not be defeated because the testator has attempted to fix the same trust upon other distinct property over which he has no control (b).

Where the testator in one part of the will gives the property unfettered, it may be taken as a general rule, that the legatee is not bound to comply with a subsequent recommendation (c). Where a person gave all his property to his wife to and for her own use and benefit and disposal absolutely, and in a subsequent part of the will earnestly conjured her, under the advice of his executors, to proceed forthwith to

(a) Lechmere v. Lavie, 2 My. & K. 201; here there was nothing to prevent the donees from disposing of the whole of the property given during their lives. In Flint v. Hughes, 6 Beav. 342, the words "whatever she can transfer" were considered as too vague and indefinite to create a trust. In Cunliffe v. Cunliffe, Ambl. 686, the testator gave his sugar houses, stock in trade there, and the appurtenances thereto belonging, to his son, Ellis Cunliffe; nevertheless, in case his son Ellis should happen to die without a son or sons, then, and in such case, he recommended it to him to devise the said sugar houses and joint stock in trade there to his brother Robert. Ellis died, leaving two daughters, but no son; the Lords Commissioners decided that no trust was attached, on the ground, as reported in Ambler, that the words were mere words of recommendation: if that was the ground the case is overruled by Pier-son v. Garnett, 2 Bro. 43. But according to Lord Rosslyn, in Malim v. Keighley, 2 Ves. J. 533, "it did not turn upon the interpretation of the words of recommendation, but upon the nature of the property over which Ellis had full power to spend or waste it." If so, the principle of the decision is supported by subsequent cases: Bland v. Bland, 2 Cox, 351, 354; and Attorney-Gen. v. Hall, cited 355 & 356; Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. 451, before noticed, and the other cases cited in Blunt's note; but the doubt is whether, as there was property of a permanent nature, namely, the sugar houses, &c., also property which was necessarily fluctuating, as was the stock in trade, and the recommendation applied to both as one entire subject, it was void altogether, because there was a part of the property to which the trust could not attach—to say that Ellis might have spent and wasted the sugar houses is assuming the question. It is not precisely the same question as where on the context it is clear that the donee was to be at liberty to dispose as he pleased of the whole or any part of the property; see Lemaitre v. Banister, 2 Bro. 40; Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 6; 3 Beav. 174; Tibbitts v. Tibbitts, 19 Ves. 664; et v. infra, p. 71. If a person recommends that his own property and that of some one else, over which he has no control, should be settled; that does not prevent the trust from attaching on his own property; Ford v. Fowler, 3 Beav. 147, cited above.

(b) Lord Langdale, Ford v. Fowler, 3 Beav. 147; there was a separate sum of 10,000*l.* on which the recommendatory trust was held clearly to attach.

(c) Meredith v. Heneage, 1 Simons, 542; and see Harland v. Trigge, 1 Bro. 142; and 3 Beav. 174. In a leading case relating to direct trusts, the testator gave some real estates to his sons in fee, and directed his personal estate to be laid out in lands by his wife, (who was executrix,) to be settled on his two sons; he proceeded in these words—"my wife shall receive the rents and profits of all my estate, until my children attain the age of 21 years, and to maintain my children as she thinks convenient, and when they do come of age, she shall not be liable to give them any account of the rents and profits by her received at that time."—Lord Mansfield held, and his decree was affirmed in the House of Lords, that the interest of the moneys to be laid out, as well as the rents of the real estate was, by the will, given absolutely to the mother, and that the sons had no interest in it. Thurston v. Essington, 1 Jac. 361, n.

make ample provision for their only child and granddaughter; this was held to amount to a mere wish (a).

Another exception is, where the motive assigned is beneficence towards the donee; thus—where a person gave an estate to his daughter as a reward for her affectionate, unwearied, and unexampled attention to the testator, superadded words of recommendation were held not to create a trust (b).

If a person is in express terms appointed receiver, or auditor, or manager of the testator's estates, with a salary or other remuneration, the court will act upon such direction, provided misconduct in the execution of his duties be not proved against the person so appointed (c). Questions have arisen as to recommendatory words as applied to such a subject. Lord C. Sugden held, chiefly on the authority of Tibbitts v. Tibbitts (d), that the words "it is also my particular desire that my executors, whilst acting in the management of all or any of my affairs under this my will, as also my friend, William Shaw, when he shall enter into the perception of my said rents of Kentstown, &c., shall continue the said B. E. Lawless in the receipt and management thereof, and likewise shall employ and retain him in the receipt, agency, and management of the rents and issues of such other lands and premises as shall and may be purchased and settled in pursuance of the directions hereinbefore contained, at the usual fees allowed to agents, he having acted for me since I became possessed of the said estate fully to my satisfaction;" but the House of Lords reversed the decision, holding that the court could recognize these expressions not as imposing an obligation or trust, but only as importing advice (e). In a later case, where the testator used these words, "and inasmuch as my estate and property will require more management than I can expect of my trustees personally to bestow, it is my wish and desire that the hereinbefore-named Thomas Finden, in whose judgment and integrity I place great confidence, be appointed for all the purposes for which they or he, my said trustees or trustee, may have occasion for an agent, receiver, and manager of my estate and property;" and in case Finden should die or desire not to act, power was given to his wife's nieces (who were entitled to the rents, subject to an annuity) to appoint some other person. The Vice-Chancellor of England was

(a) Winch v. Brutton, viii. Jurist, 1088; Vice-Chan. of England, 1844, v. supra, p. 23.
(b) Ex parte Payne, 2 Younge & Coll. 636.
(c) Hibbert v. Hibbert, 3 Meriv. 683; Williams v. Corbet, 8 Sim. 349.

(d) Supra, p. 70, n. (a).
(e) Lawless v. Shaw, 1 Llo. & G. temp. Sugd. 154, 170 (reversing Lord Plunket's decision); S. C. Dom. Proc. 5 Cl. & Finn. 129.

clearly of opinion that it was imperative on the trustees to employ Mr. Finden (a); and that the ultimate decision of Shaw v. Lawless, in the House of Lords, did not govern this case: Lord Cottenham was as clearly of opinion that it did, and he reversed the Vice-Chancellor's decision (b).

If a person wills and desires that his devisee shall sell the estate in a particular way, as to a college, such a devise does not sever the beneficial interest, but is only an injunction to the devisee to enjoy the property in a particular manner; there is no resulting trust of the price for the testator's representative (c).

These illustrations may suffice to show the nature of the rules of construction and interpretation which have been applied, in order to ascertain the intention with which the words of recommendation, and the like, are used, and to give a general view as to when such words will be treated as imperative, and therefore as creating a trust.

But there are other requisites necessary for creating a recommendatory as well as a direct trust, of which the chief is certainty (d). If the objects are not such as can be ascertained with sufficient certainty,—if the giver uses a vague description of the object,—that is, a description by which the giver neither clearly defines the object himself nor names a distinct class out of which the first taker is to select (e), the gift will fail for want of certainty. It was observed by Lord Eldon, that wherever the subject to be administered is trust property, and the objects for whose benefit it is to be administered are to be found in a will not expressly creating a trust, the indefinite nature of the objects is always used by the court as evidence that the mind of the testator was not to create a trust, and the difficulty that would be imposed upon the court to say what should be so applied, or to what objects, has been the foundation of the argument that no trust was intended (f).

The Court of Chancery, with a view to prevent bequests of this description from being defeated, has established certain rules of interpretation for limiting, where it is practicable, general expressions as (a) Finden v. Stephens, x. Jurist, 997 b.

(b) S. C. before Ld. Cottenham, x. Jurist, 1019. It was considered by the Lord Chancellor that the powers previously given to the trustees, for letting &c., were inconsistent with an independent manager being forced upon them, ibid. The Lord Chancellor adverted to another ground, namely, that it was only when the trustees had occasion for an agent, that Mr. Finden claimed a right to be employed, and a person cannot file a bill on the probability of a future title upon an event which may never happen. Lord Redesdale, p. 156-7.

(c) Lord Hardw., Hill v. Bishop of London, on re-hearing, 1 Atk. 619; approved by Lord Cottenham, Wood v. Cox, 2 My. & Cr. 694.

(d) Supra, vol. i. p. 499.

(e) 3 Beav. 174.

(f) Lord Eldon, 10 Ves. 536; and Turn. & Russ. 159, to the same effect; and see Harding v. Glynn, 1 Atk. 470, infra.

to the objects, so as to confine them within such limits as will enable the court to carry into effect the intention of the testator as far as it can be reasonably accomplished.

The words "family" and "relations" are the expressions which are most common in devises of this description, and the court as to each has at length established certain rules of interpretation, which may be applied in most cases so as to give to those expressions a reasonable and sensible effect; not that these rules are peculiar to precatory or indeed to trusts of any description, inasmuch as the courts of law, as will be seen by some of the references which follow, in those instances in which they have had to construe words of this description in wills, have adopted the same principle of interpretation. The courts in this, as in every other instance, with the exceptions before alluded to (a), adhering to the rule that there should be uniformity of construction in all the courts.

It is evident, said Lord Langdale, that the word "family" is capable of so many applications, that if any one particular construction were attributed to it in wills, the intention of testators would be more frequently defeated than carried into effect. Under different circumstances it may mean a man's household, consisting of himself, his wife and children, and servants; it may mean his children, excluding the wife; or in the absence of wife and children it may mean brothers and sister, or his next of kin; or it may mean the genealogical stock from which he may have sprung. All these applications of the word, and some others, are found in common parlance; and in the case of a will we must endeavour to ascertain the meaning in which the testator employed the word, by considering (b) the circumstances and situation in which he was placed, the object he had in view, and the context of the will (c). This word, therefore, has had different meanings given to it in different wills, and according as it is directed to real or to personal estate, or to a fund in which both are mixed up (d). In fact, by the settled rules of construction, the same word may have

(a) Vide supra, vol. i. p. 525.

(b) According to the settled rules of construction, see vol. i. p. 755, and Wright v. Atkyns, Turn. & R. 162-3.

(c) Lord Langdale, Blackwell v. Bull, 1 Keen, 181. Thus applying the above principles, the wife, on the intention, was declared entitled to share with the children in the real and personal estate devised; and see Woods v. Woods, 1 M. & C. 408; the words were "the overflush," (i. e. of the proceeds of the sale, which was directed in a given event,) "to my wife towards her support and her family," p. 402.

(d) Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 323; M'Le- roth v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 159; Wright v. Atkyns, Turn. & R. 154; Morton v. Tewart, 2 Y. & Coll. N. S. 81; Doe dem. Chatteway v. Smith, 5 Maule & S. 126-130, where the prior cases are observed upon particularly; Pyot v. Pyot, 1 Ves. 335.

different meanings in the same will, or even on the same clause, especially in reference to different subjects (a).

It was held by the courts of law, in the time of Dyer, that the words, “or else to remain to the house” (scilicet familie, as it was construed), must be intended in a devise of real estate to mean the chief and eldest and most worthy of the family, that is, the heir according to the course of the common law; and the Court of Chancery has adopted the same rule of interpretation in parallel cases (b); but when the proceeds of the sale of real estate is to go to the family, it will not be confined to the heir (c).

The objects to which the testator intended to apply the word “family” may sometimes be collected from the will itself; in such case his interpretation will of course be followed. Where a person devised his real estate to trustees in trust to receive the rents and make certain annual payments, and to distribute the remainder, if any, amongst certain “families,” according to their circumstances, &c., adding, “whose names are hereinafter mentioned, viz., William Copley, &c.” the Vice-Chancellor Wigram strongly inclined to think that upon this will the testator had put his own construction—that the persons named were the objects. He added, but if that were not so the cases of Barnes v. Patch (d), Cruwys v. Colman (e), and Grant v. Lynam, (f) were authorities that the court can and will put a construction on the word “family,” when it can reasonably be done, rather than that a devise should be void (g).

In some cases the rule laid down by the Statute of Distributions, 1 Ja. II. c. 17, has been called in aid as the best measure for setting bounds to such general words (h).

Where personal estate was given by will to a female for life, and with the testator’s absolute desire that she should bequeath the same to those of her own family who should behave well (thus giving

(a) Doe v. Smith, 5 Maule & S. 131-2; Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. W. 663; Sheffield v. Lord Orrery, 3 Atk. 288; Stafford, Lord, v. Buckley, 2 Ves. 180.

(b) Dyer, 333, No. (29), 2 Vern. 381, approved by Sir T. Clarke, Crossly v. Clare, Amb. 397; recognized by Lord Eldon, Wright v. Atkyns, Turn. & R. 156; Lord Ellenborough, Doe v. Smith, 5 M. & S. 129, 132. In Doe v. Over, 1 Taunt. 263, a devise of real estate, to relations, was held to mean those who would take according to the statute.

(c) Woods v. Woods, 1 My. & Cr. 408. See the note to Lewin on Trusts, p. 581-2, as to the construction, where the words “poor,” or “necessitous,” or the like, are added, et infra.

(d) 8 Ves. 604, 606; there held that family meant children, and that they took per capita, the Statute of Distributions did not come in question.

(e) 9 Ves. 319.

(f) 4 Russ. 292.

(g) Liley v. Hey, 1 Hare, 583. Inquiries were directed to ascertain the state of the families of the several persons named. Family may extend to grandchildren as well as children. Robinson v. Waddilow, V. C. Eng. 8 Sim. 137.

(h) Roach v. Hammond, Prec. Ch. 402.

the donee a power coupled with a trust), and the donee made no disposition, the word family, on the circumstances and context, was held to mean kindred, and a trust was declared to exist for the benefit of the next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions (a).

Where a testator directed the remainder of his estate "to be equally divided between brother Lancelot's and sister Esther's families," Sir W. Grant held, that the children were to take exclusive of the parents, and per capita, not per stirpes (b). Indeed, generally speaking, neither the husband (c) nor the wife (d) will be considered as included under the word family. But the husband has been included on the intention to be collected from the context, and of course the wife may be included in the same manner (e).

There is, however, as Lord Eldon observed, still great difficulty in giving a definite meaning to the word "family," except in those cases in which decision has affixed a definite meaning to the word (f). A gift of an estate to a person absolutely, hoping he will continue it in the family, has been held not to be sufficiently specific to enable the court to declare who were the objects (g).

The term "relations" is still more indefinite than the word family; but the court, upon grounds of convenience and to prevent the devise being void for uncertainty where the execution of a trust in favour of relations has fallen to the court, and where the context left the word undefined, has, in this instance also, adopted the rule of the Statute of Distributions and given the property, when personal, to the next of kin, according to the statute, with the same exclusion of the husband and wife (h). The statute, however, is only taken as limiting the

(a) Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 319, et v. 3 Swanst. 321.

(b) See Barnes v. Patch, 8 Ves. 606; and see Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 325; and Wood v. Wood, 3 Hare, 65; and 1 My. & K. 408.

(c) See Brandon v. Brandon, 3 Swanst. 321.

(d) "The wife cannot claim, the statute providing for her by the name of wife." Lord Thurlow, Green v. Howard, 1 Bro. 33.

(e) M. R., M'Lerott v. Bacon, 5 Ves. 166-7, 8; and see 5 Maule & S. 130; and 4 Russ. 297; in Wood v. Wood, 3 Hare, 65, there was the additional reason for excluding the wife on the intention.

(f) Wright v. Atkyns, Turn. & R. 156, et seq.; and see Liley v. Hey, 1 Hare, 582.

(g) Harland v. Trigg, 1 Bro. 144. A devise of a moiety of a residuary estate "to my brothers and sister's family" was, though unwillingly, held to be void, (Doe v. Joinville, 3 East, 172,) on the ground that there was not any certain means of defining what persons should take.

(h) Cruwys v. Colman, 9 Ves. 325; Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27, 19 Ves. 400; Pope v. Whitcombe, 3 Meriv. 689; Brandon v. Brandon, 3 Swanst. 319-20; Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397. In Edge v. Salisbury, Ambl. 70, v. infra, "nearest relations" received the same construction. In the following, amongst other cases also, legacies of personalty and proceeds of real estate given to relations were held, according to the general rule, to go to the next of kin, not including the wife or husband, where the gift was to all the relations: Carr v. Bedford, 2 Chanc. Rep. 77; Roach v. Hammond, Prec. Chan. 402; Thomas v. Hole, Forrest, 251; Anon. 1 P. Wms. 326 (rule admitted); Green v. Howard, 1 Bro. 32; range of objects; there being no indication in the will as to the proportions, it is considered that the directions of the testator are best observed by making the division amongst the objects let in per capita; thus, where there have been brothers and brother's sons, these last have been allowed to take, not by representation, but per capita (a).

And where the donee is intrusted with the selection, if he should think fit to execute the trust he may, in making his selection amongst the relations, go beyond the limit of the Statute of Distributions (b). Accordingly, where the testator gave to his wife 500*l.*, adding that it was his will and desire that his said wife might dispose of the same amongst her relations as she by will might think proper, a gift by the wife by will to her sisters for life, towards the maintenance of her children, and after her death to those children was supported (c). So where a person devised 15*l.* a-piece to each of his relations of the father's and mother's sides, the executors paid 15*l.* to Dorothy Smith, one of the next of kin, and four sums of 15*l.* to each of her children, and the payments to the children were held to be good (d).

Where there was a bequest to the nearest relation (e), and another to the nearest and next of kin (f); it was held to carry the money to a surviving brother in exclusion of the children of a deceased brother; but any deviation from the rule of taking the next of kin within the statute has depended on circumstances (g); extrinsic evidence as to

Rayner v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. 234; and see Spring dem. Fitcher v. Biles, in the note to 1 T. R. 118.

(a) Lord Thurlow, Green v. Howard, 1 Bro. 32. In Blackler v. Webb, 2 P. Wms. 383, where money was bequeathed to sons and daughters and grandchildren, it was held that they should all take per capita. It is to be observed, it is now settled that where the gift is to the "next of kin," those words are to be construed the nearest of blood, excluding those who would take by representation under the Statute of Distributions. Elmsley v. Young, infra.

(b) Supple v. Lowson, Ambl. 729; Bennett v. Honeywood, ibid. 708. Dict. Sir W. Grant, 9 Ves. 324; Mahon v. Savage, 1 Sch. & Lef. 111, which was a gift, with a power to distribute amongst "poor relations," Grant v. Lynam, 4 Russ. 292. In Pope v. Whitcombe, ubi sup. it was held, that the power of selection only extended to such as were next of kin; (but see Turn. & R. 161;) the same construction was given in Edge v. Salisbury, Ambl. 70, which was a trust to distribute amongst nearest relations, who might be objects of charity. Mr. Blunt has collected the cases on this subject in his notes to Edge v.

Salisbury; and see Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 87; and the note to Lewin on Trusts, p. 581.

(c) Forbes v. Ball, 3 Meriv. 437.

(d) Jones v. Beale, 2 Vern. 381; this case was decided on previous precedents produced, particularly one of Arnold v. Bedford.

(e) Marsh v. Marsh, 1 Bro. 293; Smith v. Campbell, Geo. Coop. 275; 19 Ves. 400.

(f) Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Wilson, C. C. 14; 3 Swanst. 312. Mr. Justice Buller's decision in Phillips v. Garth, 3 Bro. 64, by which he let in surviving brothers, together with nephews and nieces, as representing deceased brothers and sisters, per capita, under a gift to "next of kin, share and share alike," is stated to be over-ruled by Sir T. Plumer, Brandon v. Brandon, ubi sup.; and by Sir W. Grant, Smith v. Campbell, 19 Ves. 400; see Elmsley v. Young, 2 My. & K. 87. In the last-cited case, Sir J. Leach held, that "next of kin" must be taken to mean next of kin according to the Statute of Distributions. Vide ibid. p. 88; and see, on this subject, Lewin on Trusts, 589-90.

(g) Sir W. Grant, Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 47; S. C. on appeal, 19 Ves. 425-6, "where the words are to relations, according to their who the testator intended to embrace under the word relations cannot be admitted.

The word descendants includes all the issue of children as well as children (a), this word being construed on a different principle from the word relations or family (b). This difference in construction also applies to the nature of the interest given; a gift to descendants or issue not being governed by the Statute of Distributions, as is, as we have seen, a gift to relations or family, the individuals answering the description will take as joint tenants, and not as tenants in common, unless there be words of severance, as equally to be divided or the like (c).

The sense of the words as fixed by legal authority, said Lord Thurlow, is not to be altered by [evidence of] the language held on any occasion by the testator, or by his behaviour (d).

Where a discretion is vested in the donee of the property, or to whatever extent the family or relations may have an interest in the property, the court will not deprive the person to whom it is given of the exercise of such discretion (e); and so where there is an express trust to apply the interest of a trust fund for the benefit of children, in such shares and proportions and in such manner as the trustees or the survivor, his executors, &c., may think proper or advisable. This gives to the trustees a discretionary power as to the distribution, though it does not revoke or in any manner abridge the previous gift, therefore the surplus undistributed will belong to the children (f).

Where in such or any similar cases there is a trust or power, or a mixture of both, whether arising on a legal estate (g) or reserved greater need, or ‘according to their necessity,’ the court has shown greater favour to one.” Lord Thurlow, 1 Bro. 33; v. 2 Ves. 110. In Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Vern. 421, Com. Dig. Chanc. 4 W. 11, a double share was given to the heir, he having a smaller provision, or, as the report states, “as looking upon him as standing most in need thereof.”

(a) Pearson v. Garnett, 2 Bro. 226; Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397; more correctly reported 3 Swanst. 320, note; Parsons v. Baker, 18 Ves. 476; et v. 1 Turn. & R. 162.

(b) Lord Thurlow, Butler v. Strutton, 3 Bro. 368; Crossly v. Clare, Ambl. 397; and Blunt’s note; and see 1 Rep. on Leg. 122, et seq.

(c) Davenport v. Hanbury, 3 Ves. 259; 1 Rep. Leg. 138.

(d) Lord Thurlow, Green v. Howard, 1 Bro. 33. It was proved, in that case, that the testator knew that the word “relations” meant more than next of kin; but Lord Thurlow held that there was no peculiarity in that will to alter the sense of the word relations; and he confined it, according to the general rule, to next of kin, within the statute; vide supra, p. 74. “Friends” may be so used as to mean relations, Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 88, 89.

(e) See Raikes v. Ward, 1 Hare, 450; and Bennett v. Honeywood, Ambl. 710.

(f) Beevor v. Partridge, 11 Sim. 233-4.

(g) Lord Hardw. Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 89; et v. S. C. 110; v. infra, p. 81; but in that case the Lord Chancellor held that a rule was laid down in the will, and the court could make the judgment as well as the trustees. In Walker v. Walker, 5 Mad. 426, Sir J. Leach held that where the discretion of trustees is to be exercised upon matter of opinion, the court cannot substitute the master for the trustees, but that it can, where the

to be exercised by trustees solely according to their discretion, the court, as will be noticed more fully hereafter, cannot put itself in the place of those trustees to exercise that discretion; and where the trustees have a power to distribute generally, according to their discretion, without any object pointed out or rule laid down, the court, in cases relating to private persons, does not interpose; and in the case of an absolute precatory gift to which such a discretion is annexed, the donee, according to the ordinary rule (a), would take absolutely; and if he exercise the discretion it is his own gift.

But where the act is necessary and proper to be done in the execution of the trust, the discretion vested in the trustees as to the mode and the like, will not be suffered to alter or affect the rights of the parties (b). It may be observed, that a discretionary trust cannot be delegated even to a co-executor or co-trustee (c).

If the giver leaves it uncertain as to what interest the object or class of objects is to take, in such case also there is such a want of certainty that a trust cannot arise (d).

As regards the subject as well as the objects, general expressions will be sufficient, if, from the context, with the aid of the ordinary rules of interpretation and construction, the particular subject intended can be ascertained. If a testator gives the residue of his estate, after certain purposes are answered, to a particular person by way of recommendatory trust, it has been considered that the residue of the property, though a subject to be ascertained, is nevertheless so clearly and certainly ascertainable, so capable of being made certain, that the rule is applicable to such cases (e). A power of selection in the donee or trustee may well be given so as not to make the gift objectionable as uncertain (f); and if a testator desires his executor to give to a particular person a certain sum of money, it will be treated by the court as a legacy, though the will should leave it to the executor's own free will when, how, and in what manner it shall be paid (g).

In those cases where a trust is raised by recommendation to discretion is to be exercised on matter of fact, as to which distinction, see Hill on Trustees, 501.

(a) Vide infra, p. 70.

(b) Crewe v. Dicken, 4 Ves. 97; Lewin, 236.

(c) Woods v. Woods, 1 My. & Cr. 410.

(d) See 3 Beav. 174.

(e) Lord Langdale, Knight v. Knight, 3 Beav. 173.

(f) See Brown v. Higgs, 4 Ves. 716, corrected from Reg. Lib. 4 Russ. 296-7; affirmed,

8 Ves. 561, by Lord Eldon and by the House of Lords; Burrough v. Philcox, 5 My. & Cr. 73, where a person intreated the legatee to leave the property to the children or the grandchildren. Prevost v. Clarke, 2 Mad. 458 (in the statement the word and is used, but the case was argued as if it had been or). This was held to give a power of selection, not to render the gift void for uncertainty, and see Jones v. Torin, 6 Simons, 255, et v. infra.

(g) Brest v. Offley, 1 Rep. Ch. 246.

leave the property, after the first taker's death, to certain persons, that—equally as where the trust is direct and explicit—does not prevent the interest from vesting at the death of the testator (a); and those persons take a vested interest, subject to be divested by appointment; where the children of a particular person are the objects, if there be no appointment, children born after the death of the testator, and the representatives of those who may have died in the lifetime of the first taker, are entitled together with the survivors (b). Where, however, the testator expressed his will and desire to be that one-third of the principal of his estate and effects should be left entirely at the disposal of his wife, amongst such of her relations as she might think fit after the death of her sisters; this was held (she having made no disposition) to be a trust for her next of kin at the time of her death (c).

There is a material difference in respect of certainty of objects between a gift for charitable purposes and one for the benefit of private persons.

If a trust be created directly or by precatory words in favour of charity or for charitable purposes, the court will give effect to it, though the particular objects be not specified (d), or be left to the discretion of the donee. The court in these cases exercising a discretion, as having the general government and regulation of charity (e): if the subject be uncertain, a trust for a charity, it is presumed, can no more be carried into effect than one for individuals.

It cannot be presumed that a legacy intended to be given to a corporation, for certain purposes not ascertainable, is in trust for charitable purposes, so as to save the legacy from being void for uncertainty, though there is the strongest probability that such a legacy would not be given for any private purpose (f). The general subject of charitable gifts will be more fully considered hereafter.

The circumstance that in trusts arising purely from recommendatory

(a) Lord Thurlow, Rayner v. Mowbray, 3 Bro. 235, et v. infra.

(b) Malin v. Keighley, on further directions, 3 Ves. 150; S. C. 2 Ves. J., 333, on original hearing; and ibid. 529, on appeal.

(c) Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198; and see Harding v. Glynn, 1 Atk. 469; 8 Ves. 571-2, from Mr. Joddrell's note; and 2 Sugd. on Pow. 160.

(d) See Lord Eldon's judgment in the leading case of Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. 69, 78, 83, 86, affirmed in the House of Lords, 13 Ves. 416; Baker v. Sutton, 1 Keen, 224; and see Townsend v. Carns, 13 Law J., N. S. Chanc. 169; see Hill on Trustees, p. 41, 42; et v. infra, "Charities."

(e) Lord Hardw. Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 89; infra; and the cases in the last note.

(f) Corporation of Gloucester v. Wood, 3 Hare, 131.

words, the property is absolutely and primâ facie beneficially given (a) to the person sought to be affected by the alleged trust (and unless it be so the doctrine does not apply (b)), has caused a material distinction to be taken between trusts of this description and trusts created by positive words of command or direction, in cases where the intended trust fails in the whole or in part. In recommendatory trusts, if the words for any reason do not amount to a trust, or the intended trust fails in the whole or in part, the absolute interest remains in the donee; or if the trust established does not exhaust the property given, the donee retains, in virtue of the gift, so much of the property as is not affected with the trust, as has been adverted to in the former volume (c); whereas if property is given to a person as trustee, and only as trustee (d), if no trust be declared, or the trust declared or purporting to be declared should fail, then there is a resulting trust for the donor or those claiming under him; the donee can claim nothing beneficially, nothing being given to him but as trustee.

But words importing direct and absolute gifts may be so explained by the context as to show that these terms were only used in order that the donee might have absolute power to effect some purpose of trust ineffectually pointed out by the testator; thus, where a sum of money due on note was bequeathed to a married woman for her sole use and benefit, independent of her husband, for the express purpose of enabling her to present any part of it to either branch of the testatrix's family, as she might consider most prudent,—the testatrix adding, that in the event of the donee's death she should be empowered by deed or will to dispose of the money and the interest to either branch of the family she might consider most deserving,—it was held by Lord Langdale, and afterwards in appeal by Lord Cottenham, that the donee was merely the donee of a discretionary power in favour of others; that the bequest was not a gift subject to a charge, but an actual gift upon trust, and that as the trust failed from being indefinite, there was a resulting trust for the testatrix, and that the property formed part of her residuary estate (e).

(a) Wood v. Cox, 2 My. & Cr. 684.

(b) See Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. J. 270.

(c) Vol. i. p. 499.

(d) See the judgment of Sir W. Grant, Ommaney v. Butcher, Turn. & R. 270-1.

(e) Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen, 597, on appeal; 3 My. & Cr. 514; Fowler v. Garlick, 1 Russ. & M., which was a gift of a residue to the executors, upon an indefinite trust, proceeded upon a similar principle; the executors were held to be trustees for the next of kin. Lord Eldon.

SECTION VI.—Powers in the Nature of Trusts.

Distinction between Trusts and Powers.

Power may partake of the Nature of a Trust.

What Circumstances will give to a Power the Character of a Trust.

General Intention in favour of a Class, with Power to select the Individuals.

Instances where Powers have been held to be coupled with a Trust, and the contrary.

Discretionary Power given to secure an Act being done under the prudent Superintendence of another.

Hewett v. Hewett.

In what Cases the Court may exercise Discretion given to Trustee.

Gower v. Mainwaring.

Warburton v. Warburton.

Where the Court acts, the Maxim that "Equality is Equity" is followed.

Doctrine as to Illusory Appointments abolished.

Discretion controlled when fraudulently exercised.

SOMETIMES, as has been already noticed, a trust is imposed where at first sight a mere power (a), or a mere authority to exercise a discretion as to the disposal of property, would seem to be given. This most frequently occurs in wills.

Trusts and powers are in themselves of a perfectly distinct character. Simple powers are not imperative, they leave the act to be done at the will of the party to whom they are given; and as regards such powers, those at least which are purely discretionary and depend on opinion and judgment, the court, unless in cases of fraud, has no jurisdiction to interfere (b). Trusts are always imperative and are obligatory on the conscience of the party intrusted (c). A power given to a grantee for life to appoint to such one of a class of objects answering to a particular description as the donee may select, is not a trust, but a mere power, and may be extinguished by a recovery (d). But a power may partake of the nature of, or be coupled with a trust, and the Court of Chancery will enforce the execution of such a power even in

(a) As to what a power is, see vol. i. p. 486.

(b) French v. Davidson, 3 Mad. 402; Walker v. Walker, 5 Mad. 427, and cases there cited.

(c) Lord C. J. Wilmot, Wilmot's Reports, 23. Godolphin v. Godolphin, 1 Ves. 21; see 2 Sugd. Pow. 158, 7th ed.; Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. 569, 570, 574; Pushman v. Filliter, 3 Ves. 7; Morice v. Bishop of London, 10 Ves. 536, et v. 1 Eden, 415, 419.

(d) Smith v. Death, 5 Mad. 371, 373-4. The son, who was tenant in tail in default of appointment, joined in the recovery. The reason given by the Vice-Chancellor was that such a grantee or devisee could deal with the estate in respect of his freehold interest, and his dealing with the estate, so as to create interests inconsistent with the exercise of his power, must extinguish his power, upon the general principle that a person is not permitted to defeat his own grant.

favour of volunteers (a), and though the power should be extinguished at law by the death of the donee of the power or otherwise (b).

It may be stated in general that where, in case of a will or other instrument, the donor of the power shows a general intention in favour of a class, and a particular intention in favour of individuals of that class, and the particular intention fails by reason of no appointment being made by the donee of the power, the court will treat it as a trust (c), and carry into effect the general intention in favour of the class (d). The scope and object of the disposition taken together will necessarily influence the construction in each particular case (e); but though the power may extend to the selection of the objects as well as the distribution, that alone will not prevent a trust or an implied gift attaching in favour of the class in the event of the discretion not being exercised; as where the power is to appoint to "such" of a class as the donee of the power may select, more especially if children or relations are the objects (f): "such" may be introduced, in order to give a power of exclusive appointment (g). Lord Hardwicke's decision in the Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, which has been the subject of much discussion, does not appear to controvert the rule as above laid down; for it was upon the intention to be collected from the scope and object of the will and the codicil, that his lordship held that no one was intended by the testator to take but those to whom there should be a gift by the Countess as well as himself; he considered that the power was introduced to secure the respect of the children for the Countess, to whom the testator had originally given the property absolutely (h).

(a) Tollett v. Tollett, 2 P. W. 490; 2 Sugd. Powers, p. 158; Earl of Bute v. Stuart, sup. p. 65.

(b) Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. 570, 574; Richardson v. Chapman, 5 Bro. P. C. 318.

(c) Sir E. Sugden observes, ii. 161, that there is a class of cases which it is difficult to distinguish, where the power is not treated as in the nature of a trust, nor is there an express gift to the objects, but the gift is so framed as to contain in itself both a power, and a gift by implication to the objects in default of appointment; but see 1 Chance, p. 74.

(d) Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. 561; 5 My. & Cr. 92; Cruwys v. Coleman, 9 Ves. 323; Burroughs v. Philcox, 5 My. & Cr. 73, 92; Griffith v. Evan, 5 Beavan, 241; et v. Witts v. Boddington, 3 Bro. 95; 5 Ves. 503; Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198; and Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 J. & W. 434.

(e) Lord Eldon reconciles Lord Hardwicke's decision, in Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 61, with Harding v. Glynn, 1 Atk. 469, (from Reg. Lib. 5 Ves. 501,) on the application of this rule of construction, 8 Ves. J. 576, et v. 5 Ves. 506.

(f) See Lord Eldon's observations in Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. 576; Harding v. Glynn, 1 Atk. 469; 1 Ves. 10; 2 Ves. 66; Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198; Casterton v. Sutherland, 9 Ves. 446, case of real estate; and Witts v. Boddington, 3 Bro. 95; the words were "to some one or more" of the children of the testator's only child. In Brown v. Higgs, ubi sup. the testator empowered his nephew to "employ the remainder of the rent for such children of my nephew B. as my nephew A. shall think most deserving, and that will make the best use of it, or to the children of my nephew C. if any;" 4 Ves. 709; and see Burroughs v. Philcox, ubi sup., and 2 Sugd. Pow. 163-4.

(g) 1 Chance, 89, § 233; Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. 857, Lord Alvanley. "Amongst" raises a trust for all, ibid. p. 858.

(h) Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. 61, 74, 83; 5 Ves. Jun. 506. See 2 Sugd. Pow. 162-3; Lewin, 586; and 5 My. & Cr. 90, 91.

If a fund be given to certain objects, in such proportions as a third person shall appoint, it is clear that if no appointment be made, the objects named will take equally. And if a power be given to a person to leave property given to him for life to certain persons named, in such manner as he shall by will give and bequeath the same, and he makes no will, the same result will follow (a); and even it seems where the power does not necessarily imply an appointment of the whole fund (b). The case of Harding v. Glynn (before cited), which is a leading authority, was in effect this: Nicholas Harding, by will, gave to his wife certain property, "but did desire her, at or before her death, to give such property" (words stronger than those in the Duke of Marlborough v. Godolphin) "unto and amongst such of his own relations as she should think most deserving and approve of." The Master of the Rolls held, that this was a trust for the testator's relations, confining them, according to the general rule before mentioned, to next of kin, and in this case, living at her death (c). The principle of Harding v. Glynn, and of Richardson v. Chapman (d), and all these cases, said Lord Eldon, is, that if the power is a power which it is the duty of the party to execute,—made his duty by the requisition of the will,—put upon him as such by the testator, who has given him an interest extensive enough to enable him to discharge it, he is a trustee for the exercise of the power, and not as having a discretion whether he will exercise it or not; and the court in such cases adopts the principle as to trusts, and will not permit his negligence, accident, or other circumstances to disappoint the interests of those for whose benefit he is called upon to execute it (e).

A distinction has been taken, to which Lord Eldon appears to advert in the last-cited passage, between those cases where the absolute interest, or an interest sufficient for the power to act upon, is given to the donee of the power, and where consequently the exercise of the power can take place only out of that interest; and where the person

(a) See Burrell v. Burrell, Ambl. 660.

(b) Davy v. Hooper, 2 Vern. 665; Supple v. Lawson, Ambl. 729. In Jones v. Torin, 6 Sim. 255, the gift was to the children or the descendants of the aforesaid T. F. and N. S. his wife, in such proportions to each as my daughter may by will, &c. during her life direct: she made no appointment, the children alone were held to be entitled; it being held that descendants were intended to take substitutionally only. In Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 128, the children and their parents were held to take per capita; so in Tomlin v.

Hatfield, 12 Sim. 167, et v. 2 Bro. 588; 5 Ves. 503; see Brown v. Pocock, infra, p. 84, note (e), and note (b).

(c) Harding v. Glynn, 1 Atk. 468; stated from Reg. Lib. in Brown v. Higgs, 5 Ves. 501; Birch v. Wade, 3 Ves. & B. 198.

(d) 7 Bro. P. C. 318, cited 5 Ves. 504-5.

(e) Brown v. Higgs, 8 Ves. 574; Lewin, 578, 587; 1 Chance, p. 77. See Lancashire v. Lancashire, xii. Jur. 363; and 3 Hare, 86; 4 Hare, 398, 540; 9 Beavan, 477; and 1 Coll. 111; Whitcher v. Penley.

by whom the power is to be exercised takes only a previous estate for life to which the power is only collateral. A testator by his will devised a freehold estate to his wife for her life: then followed these words, "and she shall dispose of the same amongst my children by her at her decease as she shall think proper." The wife not having made any disposition of the estate, it was held, upon this distinction, that there was no trust for the children, but that the heir at law was entitled to retain the estate (a). But this distinction appears to be exploded (b); the question to be looked to, says Lord Cottenham, is, whether there be found in the will a sufficient declaration of who, in the events which have happened, are to be the cestuis que trusts; and if that be sufficiently expressed, it is immaterial whether the donee of the power be also a trustee, or whether the trust be vested in others (c). If a person merely empowers another to give property, making no gift himself, the gift must be made or no person can claim, though the persons to whom the intended gift was to be confined are named (d), particularly where no property in the thing to be given is conferred upon the person so empowered to give (e). Or if the person be empowered to appoint to one only of a class, as it is evident that the

(a) Crossling v. Crossling, 2 Cox, 396; and see Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, 2 Ves. 74.

(b) Lord Chief Baron Eyre, in Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. J. 271 (1791), seems to have assumed that the cases had established that a devise to one for life or absolutely, with directions that he shall dispose of it to another at his death, would operate as an immediate devise, though no such disposition should be made. Sir E. Sugden thinks that the words, in Crossling v. Crossling, might properly have been considered as a power which it was imperative on the wife to execute, 2 Sugd. on Powers, 180. In the case of Croft v. Adam, 12 Sim. 639, Jane Thomson, a widow, on her intended second marriage, assigned a fund to trustees, securing to herself a life estate, and it was declared that the same, subject to her life estate, should, as and when she the said Jane Thomson should be advised or think fit, be settled for the benefit of Amelia Thomson, her daughter by her first marriage, for such rights and interests as should be agreed upon; there were other provisions indicating favour to Amelia Thomson, as respected this property; the Vice-Chancellor of England held on the general scope of the will that this was a trust. And in Brown v. Pocock, 6 Sim. 257, where a testatrix directed 8000*l.* to be set apart and the dividends to be paid to A. and B. during their lives, and by a codicil she gave to A. the power of leaving a moiety of the fund to his wife and children, this was held by the same eminent judge to be a trust. In Grieverson v. Kirsop there was a power in the wife who had a life interest in real estate, to sell it, the testator adding, "she shall and may divide the proceeds amongst my children as she shall think fit;" this was held to be a gift in the nature of a trust for the children, 2 Keen, 657; and see the instances where the objects of a power have been held to take in default of appointment, collected by Sir E. Sugden, On Powers, ii. 165, et seq.

(c) Burroughs v. Philcox, 5 My. & Cr. 95; and see 2 Sugden on Powers, 164.

(d) Bull v. Vardy, 1 Ves. J. 270-1; Eyre, C. B., and three barons: the words were, "I further empower my wife to give away at her death 1000*l.*; 100*l.* of it to Eliz. Turner, 100*l.* to Mrs. Bennet, the other 800*l.* to be disposed of by her by will." The wife made no gift of the two sums of 100*l.*, and the bill filed by Elizabeth was dismissed; the testator devised some houses to his wife, but gave her no interest in the funds out of which the 1000*l.* was to come; so that she could not derive any benefit by non-appointment. Lewis v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 163; Madison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 59. Even in charity cases, Down v. Worrall, 1 My. & K. 563. See 2 Sugd. on Pow. 161, et v. supra, p. 81-82; and Civil v. Rich, inf. p. 87.

(e) As to which see Cruwys v. Coleman, 9 Ves. 319, and Whitmore v. Trelawney, 6 Ves. 129.

whole are not intended to be benefited, and the donor has made no selection, and it is impossible to say which the donee would have selected, no one can claim if no actual selection be made (a); though it has been held, that on a bill filed during the life of the donee of the power in such a case, the court will give a day to the donee to make the nomination, and in default will itself make the selection, treating such a power as an imperative trust (b).

A power to sell for payment of debts and legacies, which may imply a power to mortgage (c), is generally in the nature of a trust (d).

Where a discretionary power is given to a trustee or other person, merely to secure that an act to be done for the benefit of another should be done under the prudent superintendence of such trustee or third person; his non-exercise of the authority so conferred, whether by design or accident, will not defeat the intended benefit. Power was given by a testator to successive tenants for life to cut such trees and wood growing upon the premises as the three trustees named in the will, or the survivors or survivor of them should assign, allow or direct by any writing under their hand: all the trustees died, and the difficulty was whether the power to cut timber had not thus become extinguished. Lord Northington in giving judgment said, "The trustees were interposed as supervisors only: it is absurd to suppose the testator meant his trustees should have an arbitrary volition whether the several tenants for life should have any benefit of the fall of timber. If a bill had been brought against the trustees to assign, allow, or direct timber mature and fit to be cut, would it have been an answer to say, We do not think fit to allow it—stet pro ratione voluntas? I think the court would not have been satisfied with such an answer. It is the duty of this court, and of all courts, to give devises, as far as their respective jurisdictions admit, their full and specific execution. The office of these trustees is not confined to any personal qualification, but such as is general, and may be substituted, viz., to see what is fit and proper to be cut." His lordship, therefore, directed a reference, to ascertain what timber and wood was mature and fit, and ordered that such should be felled with the approbation of the Master (e).

Though the court, as before observed, now at least, never exercises a mere discretionary power (f), yet the court has considered itself justi-

(a) 2 Sugden on Pow. 181; 1 Chance, 88, sup. p. 81.

(b) Com. Dig., Chan. (4 W 11,) citing Ch. R. 56, but I cannot find the case; and see Moseley v. Moseley, Finch, R. 33; Piper v. Piper, 3 My. & K. 159; 2 Sug. on P. 174; but see Kemp v. Kemp, ubi sup.

(c) Ball v. Harris, 4 My. & Cr. 264; Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 7. See 2 Sugd. P. 513.

(d) Sugden on Pow.; 1 Chance on Pow. p. 90.

(e) Hewett v. Hewett, 2 Eden, 332; and see Maberly v. Turton, 14 Ves. 499.

(f) Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. 849; 1 Ves. 60;

fied in exercising the discretion in some cases where a guide has been afforded by the donor. This is done in cases of maintenance (a) and advancement (b). Indeed it has been said generally that where the discretion is to be exercised on matter of fact, the court will refer it to the Master (c). In Gower v. Mainwaring, which has been referred to in a former page (d), John Mainwaring had executed a trust deed by which the trustees were to give the residue of his real and personal estate amongst his relations, "where they should see some necessity, and as they should think most equitable and just." Two of the trustees had died, and the third refusing to act, it became a question how far the discretion of the trustees could be vicariously exercised by the court. Lord Hardwicke said, "What differs it from the cases mentioned is this, that here is a rule laid down for the trust. Wherever there is a trust (sic) or power, for this is a mixture of both, I do not know the court can put itself in the place of those trustees and exercise that discretion. Where the trustees have power to distribute generally, according to their discretion, without any object pointed out or rule laid down, the court interposes not, unless in a case of charity, which is different, the court exercising a discretion, as having the general government and regulation of charity (e). But here is a rule laid down; the trustees are to judge on the necessity and occasions of the family; the court can judge of such necessity: that is a judgment to be made of facts existing, so that the court can make the judgment as well as the trustees, and when informed by evidence of the necessity, can judge what is equitable and just in this necessity." And in that case Lord Hardwicke decreed a division amongst the relations (such relations to be restricted to those within the Statute of Distributions), according to their necessities and circumstances, which the Master was to inquire into, and he was to consider how the trust fund could be most equitably and justly divided (f). But in modern times the court has shown itself averse to the exercising any discretion in such cases (g); and when the execution of the trust has devolved on the court, the next of kin, according to the Statute of Distributions, have usually been declared to be entitled.

Lord Hardwicke; 2 Ves. 643, Sir T. Clarke; 2 Sugd. on Powers, 174; and see Lancashire v. Lancashire, ubi sup., et v. sup. p. 78.

(a) V. int. al. Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 60.

(b) V. int. al. Robinson v. Cleater, 15 Ves. 528.

(c) Sir J. Leach, Walker v. Walker, 5 Mad. 426; and see Lewis v. Lewis, 1 Cox, 102.

(d) Sup. p. 79.

(e) Et v. Attorney-Gen. v. Glegg, Ambl.

584; and Attorney-Gen. v. Harrow School, 2 Ves. 552.

(f) Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 87; and see Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Vern. 420 (Amb. 100), confirmed on re-hearing in the House of Lords, though Lord Alvanley considered this case no longer of authority, 5 Ves. 859; and see Flower v. Martin, 2 My. & Cr. 474; et v. 2 Chance, 564.

(g) Supra, p. 85, note (c); Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 129.

Sir Charles Booth by his will (in effect) gave the residue of his real and personal estate amongst such of his relations and kindred in such proportions, manner, and form as his executors should think proper, recommending that the greatest share should be given to those who should appear to be his nearest relations and most deserving. Sir William Grant said, "A disposition of this kind contains a mixture of trust and power. The trust must be exercised for relations and kindred of some description or other; the power of selection belongs to those to whom the testator has thought fit to confide it. Whether there is any person now entitled to exercise this power is the principal question; but a trust exists equally in whichever way that question may be determined. If there is any person entitled to exercise that power, the trust will be for those of the relations or kindred whom such person shall select. If the power is extinct the trust is for those who answer the description of relations and kindred according to the construction this court may put upon these words; there is no intestacy nor any resulting trust:" and the construction put on the words was that the next of kin were entitled, according to the ordinary rule before referred to (a). In all these cases, generally speaking, the court proceeds upon the maxim that "equality is equity" (b).

Where there is a gift over in default of appointment that precludes the raising any trust or implied gift to the objects of the intended appointment, unless under special circumstances (c).

Where a trustee has a power at his discretion, and he honestly exercises it, the Court of Chancery will not control his judgment; as where a man devises his lands, goods, and chattels to A. upon trust, to give his children and grandchildren, or his nephews and nieces, according to their merits (not creating a trust for all), and the trustee gives all to one, it has been held that the others shall not be relieved, for the testator submitted the whole to his judgment (d); but if it should appear that the donee has exercised no discretion or judgment in the selection, and has moreover acted from improper motives, the Court of

(a) Sir Wm. Grant, Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 43, 47, sup. p. 75. The principal cases where powers of "selection" have been given are collected in the last edition of Roper on Leg. 1422 et seq.

(b) Doyley v. Attorney-General, 2 Eq. Ab. 194, Sir J. Strange; Jones v. Clough, 2 Ves. 367, Sir W. Grant; Longmore v. Broom, 7 Ves. 129; and see 8 Ves. 859; Lewin, 582-3; Hill, p. 31. As to when the objects take as tenants in common and when as joint-tenants, see 2 Jarm. 168.

(c) Pritchard v. Quinchant, 5 Ves. 596, note; Kennedy v. Kingston, 2 Jac. & W. 431; 2 Sugd. on P. 167; 1 Chance, § 230.

(d) Civil v. Rich, 1 Ca. Ch. 309; Com. Dig. Chanc. (4 W 11); and see Lewin, 430-1. In Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. 857, Lord Alvanley has examined the cases, and stated the doctrine of the Court as to when the distribution must be made amongst all, and when some one or more may be selected.

Chancery is not precluded from interfering (a); and the court will, in such cases, avoid the appointment, and, according to its general rule, divide the property amongst all the objects equally, as was formerly the case where appointments were held void as illusory (b). But the statute 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 46, has abolished the doctrine of the Court of Chancery, which prevailed down to that time (c), that when the distribution must be amongst all, each should have a substantial share, which is, I believe, the only instance of any portion of the equitable doctrines established by the Court of Chancery having been extinguished by the legislature.

(a) See 1 Hare, 450, Costobadie v. Costobadie, V. C. Wigram, 1847, xi. Jurist, 346; Cafe v. Bent, 3 Hare, 245; and see Potter v. Chapman, Amb. 99, 1 Dick. 146; Maddison v. Andrew, 1 Ves. 59; French v. Davidson, 3 Mad. 402; and Longmore v. Elcum, 2 Yo. & Coll., C. C., 370. The fact of a wife intrusted with such a power having married again and having possibly been influenced by her second husband, would probably have some influence in these cases; see the note Wall v. Thurborne, 1 Vern. 414.

(b) See Gibson v. Kinven, 1 Vern. 66, and p. 414; and 2 Sugd. on Powers, 175. In the late case of Lancashire v. Lancashire, before cited, the V. C. K. Bruce, and the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, xi. Jur. 1031, and xii. Jur. 365, treated a discretionary power improperly exercised as a nullity, and gave effect to the gift, which might have been intercepted by a proper exercise of the power; both those learned judges holding that under the circumstances there was no trust in favour of the objects of the power. As regards the non-exercise of an authority required to vest or preserve the title to property, Lord Eldon observed, "The court has said that where a trustee has withheld his consent to a marriage for a vicious or unreasonable cause, that should not be permitted to affect the consent given by the majority, where it was reasonable they should consent." Clarke v. Parker, 19 Ves. 15, 18, 19; et v. Mesgreth v. Mesgreth, 2 Vern. 580; Daley v. Disbouverie, 2 Atk. 261; and 2 P. W. 628.

(c) See 1 Sugd. on Powers, 543, 544.

SECTION VII.—Of Restraints on Alienation, and Gifts over, and Clauses of Forfeiture, particularly as regards Bankruptcy and Insolvency.

It is to be observed that, under the Statutes relating to Bankrupts and Insolvents, the equitable as well as legal estate and interest of the bankrupt or insolvent will pass to his assignees. Any restriction against alienation annexed to what is in effect an absolute gift of the entire property, is by the general law repugnant and void (a). As regards a life interest given to a man who becomes bankrupt, although there may be positive words that he alone shall have the benefit of the trust, and it be declared that he shall not have power to sell or anticipate the rents, dividends, or interest, and that his receipts alone shall be a sufficient discharge; if in fact the trust be really for the benefit of a bankrupt or an insolvent, and there be no clause of forfeiture, no clause of cesser, no limitation over in the event of alienation or of bankruptcy or insolvency, any attempt to preserve it against assignees is void: if not aliened by voluntary act it will be subject to alienation by act of law, and will pass to assignees: the policy of the law does not permit of property being so limited that it shall continue in the enjoyment of a bankrupt, notwithstanding his bankruptcy (b). But a testator or other person may, if he shall think fit, make an annuity or other life interest so conferred determinable by bankruptcy, or insolvency, or alienation, or may expressly give it over on any one of those events, or on an attempt to alien (c): but

(a) See Ross v. Ross, 1 Jac. & W. 158; Bradley v. Peixoto, 3 Ves. 325; and Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 432; and see Piercy v. Roberts, 1 My. & K. 7; there a legacy was directed to be paid in portions, at the discretion of the executors, any part unapplied was to go into the residue: it was held that the discretion terminated with the insolvency.

(b) Graves v. Dolphin, 1 Sim. 67; Brandon v. Robinson, 1 Rose, 197; 18 Ves. 429, 432, 433; Green v. Spicer, 1 Russ. & M. 395, 397; Black v. Leicester, V. C. Wig. 9 Mar. 1847; and see 3 Swanst. 522-3; Younghusband v. Gisborne, 1 Col. 402; Snowden v. Dales, 6 Sim. 524, et v. 1 Eden, 415; but see Two-penny v. Paton, 10 Sim. 488, noticed 1 Col. 402, infra, p. 89.

(c) Ibid.; and Churchill v. Marks, 1 Col. 441; and see Lewes v. Lewes, 6 Sim. 304, affirmed on appeal (2 Keen, 784); a case of an assignment for the benefit of creditors. "Why a provision" (said the V. C. K. Bruce, in Churchill v. Marks, ix. Jurist. 157,) "that a man having a life estate shall not alienate that life estate, is more according to principle than a provision that a man having an estate in fee simple should not during his own life alienate, I have never been able to understand; but a long course of decisions seems to have settled the point." As to the distinction between a voluntary assignment and a transfer by act of law, as affecting a clause of forfeiture or a gift over, in the event of the donee mortgaging, assigning or encumbering, &c., see Lear v. Leggatt, 2 Sim. 479; S. C. 1 R. & My. 690; and Dommett v. Bedford, 6 T. R. 684; 3 Ves. 149; Shee v. Hale, 13 Ves. 404; and Cooper v. Wyatt, 5 Mad. 482, there referred to; Lewes v. Lewes, ubi sup.; Brandon v. Aston, 2 Y. & Col. 211; Whitfield v. Prickett, 2 Keen, 609; Doe v. Carter, 8 T. R. 61; King v. Robinson, Wightw. 387, et inf. p. 90, note (d).

it is not sufficient that the grantor may intend to exclude the assigns or assignees of the grantee; there must be a proviso for actual cesser, or a gift over to some one else (a). A trust simply prohibiting alienation annexed to a gift in favour of a married woman, for her separate use, stands on a different footing, and is effectual to prevent alienation; the reason is that, as it is the Court which makes her the owner of the property, and enables her as a married woman to alien, the court may equally afford the means of limiting the power so given over the property; but the case of a disposition to a man, who, if he have the property, has, as a necessary incident, the power of aliening, is essentially different (b): when the woman becomes single, and so long as she remains so, then she is in the same condition, in respect of such property, as a man.

Where the trust is that the trustees shall receive the income, and pay and apply the same unto and for the maintenance and support of a person, his wife and children, if any, or otherwise as they shall think proper; on the bankruptcy of such person, the assignees will take so much only of the income as shall not be required for the proper maintenance of the wife and children (c). In Godden v. Crowhurst (d), the Vice Chancellor of England held that a proviso, giving over the property, on the son, who was the first taker (e), committing any act by which the interest given to him might be forfeited or become vested in any other person, to trustees to be applied for the maintenance and support of the son and any wife and child or children he might have, and for the education of such issue or any of them, as his trustees in their discretion should think fit, was good, as against the son's assignees. His Honour considered that the benefit was given to the whole of the objects collectively, and that it did not follow that any thing of necessity should be paid; the property might be applied without their receiving any money at all, and he decided that the assignees had no interest under the trust (f). In Twopenny v. Peyton the same learned judge held, that where there was a trust to apply the interest of a trust fund in the maintenance and support

(a) See Snowdon v. Dales, 6 Sim. 527, and 18 Ves. 435.

(b) Lord Eldon, 18 Ves. 434-5; Ross v. Ross, 1 Jac. & W. 157-8; and see Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 My. & Cr. 405; Baggett v. Meux, 1 Col. 138; and sup. vol. i. p. 597.

(c) Page v. Way, 3 Beav. 20; and Kearsley v. Woodcock, 3 Hare, 189; the one arising on a settlement, the other on a will; in the latter case other material cases on this subject are cited.

(d) 10 Sim. 655; a case arising on a settlement.

(e) It is to be observed, that the V. C. held that the son did not, under the words, take an absolute interest for life, p. 655.

(f) If a trader voluntarily settles his own estate with such a proviso it is clearly void, 10 Sim. 652; and see 1 Swanst. 481, n., where the cases are collected; and see Lewin, 102.

of an uncertificated bankrupt who was insane, at such times and in such proportions, &c. as the executors of the testator should in their discretion think most expedient, the trust was created for the mere special purpose of maintaining and supporting the bankrupt, and under such a trust the assignee could take no interest (a); but the authority of these cases has been impeached (b). If an estate for life be given to a person, and there be a proviso that, in the event of his bankruptcy, insolvency, &c., the rents and profits shall be applied for the maintenance of such person, his wife and children, or any of them, as the trustees may think proper; the right of those who take in substitution for the husband's life estate, on his becoming an insolvent, arises on the actual discharge of the person under the Insolvent Act; in such case the insolvency does not take away the discretionary powers from the trustees (c): but any benefit which may be given to the insolvent under such a settlement will belong to the assignees (d).

(a) 10 Sim. 489.

(b) See Piercy v. Roberts, supra, and Younghusband v. Gisborne, 2 R. Prop. Cases, 316; 1 Col. 401, 402; where the V. C. Knight Bruce stated that he dissented from the two last cited decisions of the V. C. of England.

(c) Vide sup. Piercy v. Roberts, 1 My. & K. 7; and see Wetherell v. Wilson, 1 Keen, 80, as to the effect of an assignment for benefit of creditors, on property given by way of trust to the father for the maintenance of his children; and Kearsley v. Wocock, ubi sup.; and on the general question of the right of children to maintenance on gifts of this description, see Rippon v. Norton, 2 Beav. 63; and Leach v. Leach, 13 Sim. 308; et v. Sheppard v. Wilson, ix. Jurist. 920.

(d) Lord v. Bunn, 2 Y. & Col. C. C. 103-4. Of the effect of presenting a petition under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. 110, by a person who is restrained from any attempt at alienation, see Pym v. Lockyer, 12 Sim. 394; Brandon Aston, 2 Yo. & Col. C. C. 24; Churchill v. Marks, 1 Col. 441; and Martin v. Maugham, 14 Sim. 234.

CHAPTER II.

THE DOCTRINE IN REGARD TO REMOTENESS.

This Doctrine is intimately connected with Trust Estates, particularly Trusts for Accumulation, though a Rule of Law equally as of Equity.

The Rule stated.

Important to distinguish between Words which defer Possession and those which defer Vesting.

Vesting a Question of Intention.

Rule as to Vesting in a Devise of Real Estate and Bequest of Personal Estate different.

Lord Mansfield's Statement of the Effect of Matthew Manning's Case, and of Boraston's Case.

Effect of Postponement in order to secure antecedent Benefits.

Devise of Real Estate "when" or "at" a particular Age.

Effect of the word "if."

Bromfield v. Crowder.

Newman v. Newman, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Mr. Jarman's Opinion as to Effect of the word "if."

Even in Gift of a Legacy "if" may be controlled.

Terms of Gift over, if any, always of more or less Importance.

Estate given to Trustees to pay Debts, and then to Person designated.

Where Attainment of particular Age is part of the Character the Donee must sustain.

How far Gift of Intermediate Interest for Maintenance affects the Question of Vesting in these Cases.

Bull v. Pritchard, 1 Russell, 5 Hare.

Frequent Occasion for the Application of the Doctrine to Cases of Powers.

Where the Power authorizes Appointment to Objects within the Limits—Appointment to some Objects without the Limits.

Question whether General Powers can be modelled.

Lord Eldon's Observations in Ware v. Polhill.

Term for Years may be limited so as to be Expectant on Estate Tail.

Estate for Life may be limited to unborn Child, but not to his Children.

Life Estate to a Person not in existence may be made to cease before its natural Termination.

Gift to a Class, some capable, others incapable, void in toto.

Leake v. Robinson, Sir W. Grant.

Subsequent Events not regarded.

Application of Rule to Bequests of Personalty to be enjoyed in Succession by several Persons who shall sustain a particular Character.

Lord Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Albans, Sir J. Leach.

Tollemache v. Earl of Coventry, in Dom Proc.

Mackworth v. Hinxman, Lord Langdale.

Ibbetson v. Ibbetson (1840), before Vice-Chancellor of England and Lord Cottenham.

Ferrand v. Wilson (1845), Vice-Chancellor Wigram.

Ker v. Lord Dungannon, in Dom. Proc.

Argument of Mr. Baron Rolfe.

Mr. Justice Patteson.

Mr. Baron Parke.

Judgment—Lord Chancellor Lyndhurst—Lord Brougham—Lord Campbell.

Observations on this Case.

How far in a Series of Limitations those only may be avoided which are not conformable to Law.

Mr. Baron Alderson's Opinion.

General Rule as to Gift to take effect after or on Failure of prior Limitation which is too remote.

When Contingency on which void Limitation is to take effect never happens.

Doctrine of Cypres.

Absolute Gift and attempt to restrict it by Limitations that are void.

THE rule against Perpetuities, or as it is sometimes and much more appropriately called, the Doctrine of Remoteness (a), is so intimately connected with the subject of Trust Estates and Interests, and more especially with Trusts for Accumulation, which will be the subject of a succeeding Chapter, and is of such constant reference in questions as to the validity of executory devises and bequests, which form a large proportion of the business of the Court of Chancery, that I have thought it right, although the rule is one of general policy, equally binding on the Courts of Common Law as on the Court of Chancery, to devote a separate Chapter to the consideration of this subject, but more especially of some of the later authorities, referring the reader to Mr. Lewis's able and ample work for the general doctrine and its modifications.

The true rule is this—not that a man must take under the gift within the time limited by law, but that he must take within that time if he take at all (b). Thus, a devise or bequest to the first person who shall climb up the cross of St. Paul's within twenty-one years from the testator's death, will certainly be good, though of course it must be wholly uncertain whether the event will ever take place; but a gift to the first person who shall do so, without that limit of time, will be bad. In the first case, the devise or bequest will necessarily (a) V. supra, vol. i. 487-8, 472, 503, 422, et v. infra, chap. iii. For the reason of the rule see 1 Eden, 416, Lord Northington.

(b) Lord Chancellor Sugden, Ker v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Con. & L. 349. Where there is a gift over on an alternative contingency, the validity may be determined by the event; Minter v. Wraith, 13 Sim. 52; Longhead v. Phelps, 2 Sir W. Blackst. 704, et v. infra, in this chapter.

take effect within the limit if it take effect at all; in the second, it will not necessarily so take effect (a).

It is obviously of the first importance to distinguish between words which defer the possession to a period beyond the legal limits, and those which defer the vesting; in the former case, that is, where there is a vested gift, it falls within the ordinary rule: an illicit restriction, or an illicit qualification, cannot affect the gift; the gift remains as if the restriction or qualification, to the extent in which it exceeds the legal limits, were expunged.

The question as to when an estate devised or a chattel bequeathed vests in the donee, is one of intention, to be collected from the whole will, and all the collateral matter connected with the gift must be looked to to ascertain what is the correct meaning (b). The rule of construction, in regard to the vesting in a devise of real estate, and in a bequest of personal estate, differs in some respects. Amongst the other rules in regard to legacies, borrowed by the Ecclesiastical Courts from the civil law, and thence transmitted to the Court of Chancery (c), is this, that when a legacy is given to a person simply "at" 21, or any other age, or "if" or "when" the legatee shall attain that age, the gift is conditional, and if the legatee die before that time, the legacy lapses (d); and so it is, as after mentioned, in all cases where the time of payment is annexed to the legacy itself, that is, where the time appears to have been fixed by the testator as absolutely necessary to have arrived before any part of his bounty can attach to the legatee: but the former rule does not obtain as regards devises of real estate, to the extent to which it prevails in legatory matters; in the construction of devises, the words "when" and "at" have not the same conditional force as they have when applied to a legacy.

As regards devises of real estate—Matthew Manning's case (e), according to Lord Mansfield, establishes this proposition, that wherever the whole property is devised, with a particular interest given out of it, it operates by way of exception out of the absolute property.

(a) Baron Parke's argument in the House of Lords, Lord Dungannon v. Smith, p. 19.

(b) Vice-Chancellor of England, Hunter v. Judd, 4 Sim. 461; V. C. Wigram, 2 Hare, 18.

(c) V. sup. vol. i. p. 523.

(d) Sir W. Grant, Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 243-4; Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 17, 18; May v. Wood, 3 Bro. 473, "a case unimpeached in principle;" 2 Hare, 19; but see 6 Ves. 246. The distinction adopted from the civil law, between the effect of giving a legacy at twenty-one and payable at twenty-one, is that the legacy is vested in the latter case, the payment only being deferred, 6 Ves. 245; see 1 Jarm. 761. In Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 576-7, the Vice-Chancellor Wigram construed the words, "to be divided," as equivalent to "to be paid." The general rules as to the vesting of legacies will be again noticed hereafter.

(e) 8 Co. 95; but this case related to chattel interests, v. infra.

Boraston's case (a), according to the same high authority, establishes that, where an absolute property is given, and a particular interest is given in the mean time, as until the devisee shall come of age, &c., and when he shall come of age, &c., then to him, &c., the rule is that that shall not operate as a condition precedent, but as a description of the time when the remainderman is to take in possession (b). When the interest given to the devisee is plainly postponed for the purpose of securing to him or to another some antecedent benefit commensurate with the interval of postponement, this offers a satisfactory reason for holding the gift to be vested (c), whether the subject be real or personal.

It has been held, in subsequent cases, that where there is a devise of real estate to a person "when" he shall attain a particular age, or "at" a particular age, and there is a gift over in the event of his not attaining that age, the estate vests immediately, subject to be divested, and that there is no substantial distinction whether the devise be in remainder (d), or by immediate devise (e); nor, in later cases, has it been considered that a gift over is necessary (f). Then, as regards the word "if." In Edwards v. Hammond (g), a surrender was made to the use of the surrenderor for life, and after his decease to the use of John Hammond the younger, his eldest son, his heirs and assigns, "if" it should happen that the said John Hammond, the younger, should live to attain 21; and if he should die before that age, then over: it was held that this was a vested remainder. In Bromfield v. Crowder (h), the testator devised his estates to his wife, E. Davenport, for life, then to Joshua Rose for life, if he should survive his wife, "and at the decease of the said E. Davenport and Joshua Rose, or the

(a) 3 Co. 19; 1 Jarm. 734; 9 Cl. & Fin. 591.

(b) Goodtitle v. Whitby, 1 Burr. 233, where the principle was applied to a devise of real estate. Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 246; et v. 9 Cl. & Fin. 583, 591. In Comyn's Dig. Assignment, (C 1,) it is stated, If there be a devise to trustees till A. attain his age of 25 years, and then in trust for A., a mortgage by A. before the 25 years will be void; but I find no such case in Eq. Ca. Abr.

(c) See Sir Wm. Grant's observations on Mansfield v. Dugard, 1 Eq. Abr. 195, Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 247; and 9 Cl. & F. 591.

(d) As in Boraston's case, 3 Co. Rep. before referred to; see 6 Ves. 246, and see 12 Sim. 99; inf. p. 97, note.

(e) Lord Ellenborough's judgment, Doe v. Nowell, 1 Maule & S. 334; Randoll v. Doe dem. Roake. Dom. Proc. 5 Dow. 202; Doe v. Moore, 14 East, 601; see 9 Cl. & F. 595.

(f) "The rest of my property to be invested in land and given to my grandson T. F. Snow, when of age, to have a commission in the army, regulars, at 21, to remain in the army seven years, and not to be of age to receive this until he attains his 25th year, and to be entailed to him and his heirs male," was held by Lord Langdale to confer a vested estate tail, subject to be divested if he should not attain 25; there was no gift over; Snow v. Poulden, 1 Keen, 186, 189: qu. if "no" ought not to be inserted, p. 182, 12th line; and see the cases cited in the argument, ibid., and Jarman on Wills, i. 742. The property upon which the devise was to operate was personal only, but it was to be invested in land; therefore it was argued as depending on the rule as to real estate; see 12 Sim. 193-99, inf. p. 104, and Dunk v. Fenner, 2 Russ. & M. 567.

(g) 1 New. Rep. C. P. 324, note; see Green v. Potter, vii. Jur. 737.

(h) 1 New. Rep. 313.

longest liver of them, I give all my real estate, of what nature or kind soever, to my godson, John Davenport Bromfield, son of Charles Bromfield, of St. Ann's-street, Liverpool, 'if' the said John D. Bromfield shall live to attain the age of 21 years;" in the event of his dying under 21, the testator gave his estates to his brother, Charles, if he should survive and attain 21; and in the event of both dying under 21, the testator gave his real estate to his godson, John Vale. Sir James Mansfield, in delivering the judgment of the court, said, "In fact, this is an immediate devise, to the plaintiff, J. D. Bromfield (then an infant), to take place on the death of the two preceding devisees. There is nothing in the will to prove that the testator meant the plaintiff not to take a vested estate unless he survived 21. Indeed the true sense of the thing is that the deviser meant him to take it as an immediate devise in himself, but that it was to go over, in the event of his dying under 21." "No precise words are necessary to make a precedent condition in wills; they must be construed according to the intention of the parties; and it would be absurd, considering the various circumstances under which wills are made, to require particular words to express particular meanings; the apparent intention, as collected from the whole will, must always control particular expressions." "No doubt," continued his lordship, "the general meaning of the word 'if' implies a condition precedent, unless controlled by other words; but in this case there is a variance between the expression and the meaning;" and all the judges certified that the plaintiff took a vested estate in fee simple in the freehold and copyhold estates, determinable on the contingency of his dying under 21 (a). The Vice-Chancellor of England lately observed, that the effect of these cases is, that where there is, in the first place, a gift to the party intended to take, and then follow the words "at," "if," or "when" that party shall attain a particular age, it is held that these words are used merely for the purpose of pointing out the time at which the devisee is to take in possession (b); but where there is no gift but to

(a) Bromfield v. Crowder, 1 New. Rep. 324, affirmed 9 Adol. & Ell. 605; and see Doe dem. Cadogan v. Ewart, 7 Ad. & E. 663-5, and 9 Cl. & F. 591. Lord Mansfield mentions from Cicero de Oratore and Orat. pro Cecina, a remarkable case which was much agitated before one of the Roman tribunals: a man thinking his wife was with child, devised his estate to the child his wife was enceinte of, and "if" such child died under age, then he devised it over; his wife was not with child, and the question was whether the devise over could take effect; it was decided that it could: and on a similar devise the same decision was come to in the Court of King's Bench, 3 Burr. 1623-4; "if" was construed as a word of limitation, not of condition.

(b) Newman v. Newman, 10 Sim. 58; and see Jackson v. Majoribanks, 12 Sim. 93, 99; and Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 48, but which was determined on the particular expressions, see p. 54; and see Fearne, Cont. Rem. 241, et seq. Mr. Jarman however states it as clear that a devise to a such as shall attain the specified age, no one can take who does not answer this description (a); and if a contingent remainder be limited so that no one can take but a person who has attained the prescribed age, and there is no one who has attained the age at the time of the determination of the particular estate, the remainder necessarily fails (b). But any form of expression, though apparently importing contingency, may be controlled by the context.

Even in the case of a legacy, though the word “if” generally imports a condition precedent (c); yet it has been laid down that, in every case, the strict construction of the word will yield to an intention appearing upon the will, and requiring a different construction (d).

The terms of the gift over, if any, have always been considered as an indicium for ascertaining the intention, more or less valuable, according to the context and the accompanying circumstances (e), where the direct gift is, in its terms equivocal, and does not expressly limit the quantity of estate given (f): it may be presumed that the party, in person, “if” he shall attain any particular age standing alone, that is, without being followed by any limitation over, is clearly contingent; et v. 9 Cl. & Fin. 591, C. J. Tindal, Lister v. Bradley, v. Jur. 1034: it is a stretch of indulgence towards testators to allow a simple gift over on the devisee not attaining the age specified to control the effect of so plain a word, but there seems no ground for controlling it where it is found without any such adjunct. As regards personal estate, it seems clear that such a gift is contingent, see Butcher v. Leach, vii. Jurist, 74; and Taylor v. Bacon, 8 Sim. 100. The V. C., in Newman v. Newman, 10 Sim. 57, said he thought that Doe v. Ward, 9 Adolph. & Ellis, 582, was within the terms of Boraston's case, 3 Co. 21: the case was this; the testator gave his freehold and leasehold estates, after the death of his daughter, to such of her children as she then had or might have, if a son or sons, at his or their age or ages of 23. In Boraston's case the term or chattel interest given to the executors was so given that (as it was held) it must have endured until the period when Hugh Boraston attained or would have attained 21 (3 Co. 20 b), if he should die in the interval; so that there was a prior interest given which filled up the entire interval between the death of the testator and Hugh Boraston attaining 21: it was therefore held, that the two estates being consecutive, the estate of Hugh Boraston vested at the death of the testator, to begin in possession at the end of the term (ib. 21a); but, in Doe v. Ward, whether there would be a son to take in possession immediately on the death of the daughter, was altogether contingent; the daughter might have died leaving a son under 23, in which case the estate, for the interval between the death of the daughter and the son attaining 23, would have been undisposed of, at least in terms, so that in Doe v. Ward there was greater reason for saying that the attainment of the age was personal to the devisee; Goodtitle v. Whitby, 1 Burr. 228, and Tomkins v. Tomkins, in Ch. 17 Geo. I., cited ibid. 243, appear to be exactly Boraston's case. Lord Ellenborough, in the case cited, considered that, according to these authorities, whether the gift is in remainder or direct makes no difference, sup. p. 95.

(a) Newman v. Newman, ubi sup.; and see Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Dow. N. S. 260, 328, 333-4; et infra, p. 102: but see Marq. of Bute v. Harman, 9 Beav. 320, infra, p. 103, S. C.

(b) See Festing v. Allen, 12 Mee. & W. 301; which was very elaborately argued; the contest was whether the infants took vested estates liable to be divested on their not attaining 21. Such cases are not helped by the stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 8, sup. vol. i. 292, though they appear equally to require it.

(c) And see 1 New Rep. 326.

(d) Vice-Chancellor Wigram; Lister v. Bradley, 1 Hare, 12, 13, (1841).

(e) See Bland v. Williams, 3 My. & K. 417; Boughton v. James, Vice-Chancellor Bruce, 1 Coll. 44; Jarman on Wills. 734, et seq.; and see, on this subject, Smith's Original View, p. 174 et seq.

(f) As to which see Fry v. Bromfield, before the Vice-Chancellor of England, 9 Sim. 538; and the subsequent certificate of the Court of Exchequer, 10 Sim. 94; in a case sent to that court, afterwards sent to the making the gift over, takes a retrospect of what he has actually given ; what he is about to do is to give the property to some one else, if the previous gift shall not take effect in the manner and to the extent in which he intended it to operate. A gift over upon a contingency may be called in aid to show that no present interest was intended to pass (a), but it will not alone prevent the vesting of a gift (b); it may, as we have seen as regards real estate, have the opposite effect. Lord Mansfield, on delivering judgment in Frogmorton v. Holyday, said, if the first taker was barely to take an estate for life, the time of his death must be immaterial to the devise over ; but limiting it over only upon the contingency of his dying in his minority, shows that the testatrix intended to give him an absolute estate in fee, which he might dispose of if he came of age ; and unless he lived to be of that age (when he might dispose of it), she meant it should go to her daughters (c). A gift over which is too remote cannot defeat the vested interests previously given (d).

Where an estate is given to trustees to pay debts, and then to a person designated and his heirs, &c., such person takes at once, subject to the debts (e), so that no objection, on the ground of remoteness, can arise on such a gift.

Where there is no gift to any donee but such as shall sustain the character of attaining the age of 22, or some other age, the attainment of that age is, as is noticed above, part of the constitution of the character of the original taker (f), unless there be something in the will to control that construction. In these cases, that is, where the given age is part of the description, the court has held the devise contingent, upon the ground that no one can claim who cannot predicate of himself that he is of the age required—that otherwise he does not answer the entire description (g).

Where a life estate in a fund is given directly, and on the death of the tenant for life the fund is given to trustees to divide and pay amongst the members of a class so that the only gift to them is in the Court of Queen's Bench, ib. 224, and see Murray v. Addenbrooke, 4 Russ. 420; and 1 Mad. 481.

(a) Sir Wm. Grant, 3 Meriv. 341; et v. Amb. 450.

(b) However, in Hunter v. Judd, 4 Sim., the gifts over turned vested legacies into contingent ones; see pp. 456 to 461.

(c) 3 Burr. 1623; and see Doe v. Cundell, 9 East, 403; and Taylor v. Wharton, cited 2 Mod. 291; Dyer, 124 a, et v. sup. p. 95; infra, p. 99, n. (d).

(d) Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 226.

(e) Graham, B., sitting for M. R.; Bacon v. Procter, Turn. & R. 40; et v. Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow, 194; 1 Col. Jurid. 214; 1 Jarman, 743.

(f) Newman v. Newman, 10 Sim. 58, sup. p. 97; Ring v. Hardwicke, iv. Jur. 242; Butcher v. Leach, vii. Jur. 74; Taylor v. Bacon, 8 Sim. 100; Boughton v. James, 1 Col. 42.

(g) Festing v. Allen, 12 Mees. & W. 279; 5 Hare, 571; Batsford v. Kebble, 3 Ves. 363, et v. 2 Meriv. 385, 387; 3 Meriv. 342; 3 Sim. 532, et v. sup. p. 94.

direction to divide and pay, those only who survive the tenant for life acquire vested interests (a); but where there is a gift for life and a direction that after the death of the tenant for life the fund shall be divided amongst certain persons named, then it is considered that there is an immediate gift, and the legatees take vested interests in remainder (b): and in all cases where the raising the payment or distribution appears to have been postponed, not from considerations personal to the legatee, but only in reference to the interests of other persons, or for the convenience of the estate or the fund, the vesting of the legacy will not be postponed, even though there be no gift but in the direction to pay or distribute at a future time (c).

Where there is a devise to a child, at 21 or any other specified age, and the property is given over if the devisee should die under that age, the court has discovered an intention, expressed in the will, that the first devisee shall take all that the testator has to give, except what he has given to the devisee over; and in order to give effect to that intention, has held, by force of the language of the will, that the first devise was not contingent, but vested, subject to be divested upon the happening of the event upon which the property is given over (d).

As regards personal estate, it has been held that where there is an immediate gift of a fund—a sum of stock for instance—which is to be separated from the bulk of the estate and vested in trustees, and the trust is to accumulate the income till a person named attain 25, and then to transfer and pay the stock and accumulated interest to him his executors, &c., and there is no gift over in the event of his not attaining the prescribed age, the trustees are trustees for such person from the first; he takes a vested interest at once, the enjoyment only is postponed (e), and at 21 he may claim payment of the legacy (f); but the mere necessity of making a severance from some cause not connected with the legacy itself will not vest the legacy (g). These instances may suffice to give a general view as to the vesting of gifts in futuro.

(a) Beck v. Burn, 7 Beav. 495, 13 Law J., N. S. Chanc. 319; and see Chevaux v. Aislaby, 13 Sim. 71, 74; and Ford v. Rawlins, 1 Sim. & S. 328.

(b) Cockrane v. Wiltshire, 16 Law J., Ch. 366; and see Farmer v. Francis, 2 Bing. 151; and 2 Sim. & S. 505.

(c) See Murkin v. Phillipson, 3 My. & K. 257; and Butterworth v. Harvey, 9 Beav. 130; and 1 Jarm. 756-7, 763; et v. infra, chapter on Portions.

(d) 5 Hare, 571; Phipps v. Ackers, 9 Cl. & Fin. 583; 4 Man. & G. 1107; 9 Bli. N. S. 430; 3 Cl. & Fin. 703; reversing S. C., 5 Sim.

44; and see 1 Jarm. 738 and note, 740, 774, 775, note; v. sup. p. 98.

(e) Saunders v. Vautier, 1 Cr. & P. 248. The decision proceeded on the direction for an immediate separation of the legacy from the estate, and the gift of the intermediate interest, as to which v. infra, p. 100: the immediate gift of the legacy to the executors was also an important feature, ibid. p. 249; and see 2 Hare, 20; and Massey v. Kemp, before V. C. Wigram, 16th July, 1845.

(f) Ib. and 2 Hare, 20.

(g) Festing v. Allen, 5 Hare, 240. An express direction will supersede all general

There is some uncertainty as to what effect is to be given to a direction to apply the interest of an expectant share, which on the words of gift taken by themselves would not become vested until some period beyond the legal limits, in the maintenance of the legatee during the whole interval, or during minority (a). In the case of Newman v. Newman (b), before cited, the words were, "in trust for all and every my grandchildren, children of my son Charles, &c. respectively lawfully begotten who shall attain the age of 24 years, equally to be divided amongst my said grandchildren attaining that age as tenants in common;" 2,000*l.* was given to all and every the children of his daughter, Eliz. Slutter, who should attain 24, equally to be divided as above: the testator directed that the trustees "do and shall pay and apply the dividends, interest and annual produce of the respective portions or shares of and in the aforesaid trust funds, to which my said grandchildren shall respectively be entitled in expectancy or contingency, for and towards the maintenance, education, and benefit of my said respective children, until they respectively attain the age at which the said portions or shares in the said respective trust-funds will become absolutely vested:" notwithstanding that the whole interest might have been applied for maintenance, this was not considered as sufficient to vest the legacies before the time when the legatees should attain the age pointed out; the shares were expressly described as contingent (c).

In another case (d) there was (int. al.) a bequest of 3,000*l.* for all the children of T. Fry (except four named), equally to be divided between them, their shares to become vested interests and to be paid to them respectively as and when they should attain 25; if any died before their shares were vested leaving issue their shares were to go to such issue; if without issue, then the share of such one was to go to and vest rules, Russell v. Buchanan, 7 Sim. 633; 4 Tyrw. 384.

(a) See 1 Jarman on Wills, 776-7.

(b) 10 Simons, 52. The general rule is (see 1 Jarman, 764-6-7), that where the whole of the intermediate interest is given to the legatee, or directed to be applied for his maintenance, and there is no gift over, it is to be presumed that the testator intended that the legacy should vest in the legatee, though he may in the original gift have used words which of themselves would not vest it; Watson v. Hayes, 5 My. & Cr. 133; Hammond v. Maule, 1 Col. 284; Vawdry v. Geddes, 1 Russ. & M. 203, "because for the purpose of interest the particular legacy is to be immediately separated from the bulk of the property," ibid. p. 208; but not if the contingency extends to the interest; Knight v. Knight, 2 Sim. & St. 490.

A direction to maintain the legatee out of the interest does not afford such, or at least so strong, a presumption, 2 Meriv. 387, et v. 3 Bli. N. S. 293, and 4 Sim. 460; and a gift over simply on death before the prescribed age repels it, 1 Russ. & M. 208, 3 Russ. & M. 417, Sir J. Leach; but on this point see Davies v. Fisher, and Marquis of Bute v. Harman, infra. A distinct gift of maintenance has no effect upon the question of vesting, 5 My. & Cr. 134; Batsford v. Kebble, 3 Ves. 363; and see 3 Bro. 419; Butcher v. Leach, 5 Beav. 392; and Roper on Leg. p. 573, et seq.

(c) But see Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 55, a special case.

(d) Compert v. Austen, 12 Sim. 222-3, July, 1841, (not cited in Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beavan, infra, p. 102.)

in the survivors or others, and be paid and assigned in like manner as their original shares; and the trustees were directed in the mean time and until the shares became payable to the children, to apply the income for their maintenance, and under certain circumstances to apply part of the capital for advancement (a). There was also a bequest of 6,000*l.* (b), in trust, for all the children of J. Fry born, or thereafter to be born, equally to be divided, and to be paid and transferred to them at their respective ages of 25, with a like benefit of survivorship and provision as to the issue of any one of such children who might die and for maintenance out of their shares; there was a reference to a bequest of 12,000*l.* in the same will, which had some influence on the decision (c): by a codicil, the testator revoked the power to apply the principal of the legacies for the advancement of the children, adding “and I do declare and direct that the said legacies shall vest and be payable, assignable and transferable to the said legatees respectively, as if no such power were therein contained.” The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the gifts of both the legacies were void: he considered, upon the whole will and the codicil, that the testator had blended together, as constituting the same fact, the vesting, the paying, the assigning and the transferring, and that he had done that with respect to every thing which those children might take by way of legacy; that, although he had not used the word vested in the legacy of 6,000*l.* given amongst all the children, yet that he intended the words pay, assign, and transfer, which are found in the bequest of the 6,000*l.*, should be taken to denote the time of vesting; that these legacies fell precisely within the scope of Sir Wm. Grant’s decision in Leake v. Robinson (d).

In Bull v. Pritchard, the testator, after giving a life estate to his daughter Mary Bull, for her separate use, directed that his trustees should convey his freehold estates unto and equally amongst all and every the child and children of his said daughter, who should live to attain 23, his, her and their heirs, &c., as tenants in common; if no child should attain 23, then there was gift over. The testator bequeathed some leasehold estates to trustees, upon the same trusts. This bequest was declared to be void (e), but the court (Lord Gifford, M. R.), declined then to give any opinion on the devise of the real

(a) P. 224.

(b) P. 227.

(c) P. 249.

(d) 12 Sim. 250. His Honour did not particularly advert to the clause authorizing the trustees to apply the interest for maintenance.

(e) Bull v. Pritchard, 1 Russ. 213. In Bland v. Williams, 3 Myl. & K. 417, Sir J. Leach appears not to have approved the decision in this case; and as to this case, see Mr. Jarman’s remarks, vol. i. pp. 772, 776.

estate : this question now came on before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram. There was a clause, enabling the trustees to apply the interest of the child's shares, or so much as they might think necessary, to their maintenance. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the description of the devisee, in this case, was such as to make the given age part of that description, and unless the clause directing maintenance would alter the case, he was of opinion the devise was void. With respect to the clause of maintenance, the Vice-Chancellor said, he could not allow that clause to have any effect upon the description of the devisee, which description, without that provision, included as part of it the age of 23 years. "The devise," said his Honour, "is not to the children, 'at' or 'when' or 'if,' but in effect to such only as attain the age of 23 years; and the interim gift has no legitimate bearing on the question (a)," and this seems to be a sound conclusion (b). However, in Davies v. Fisher, the testatrix directed her trustees to stand possessed of her residuary personal estate, upon trust, to pay the income to Wm. Davies the younger; and after his death, in trust for the children of the said Wm. Davies the younger, as they severally attained the age of 25 years, equally to be divided, if more than one; the income to be applied, during their respective minorities, by the guardian for the time being of the children, for their respective support, maintenance, and education, with a gift over, in case no child should attain 25: the children claimed to have vested interests, insisting that the payment only was deferred. Lord Langdale, agreeing that the effect of the direction to divide amongst the children as they severally attained 25 by itself would make the gift invalid, held upon the direction for maintenance, though limited to the minority of the children, that they took vested interests (c); and Lord Langdale, not agreeing in the general doctrine of Sir John Leach's dicta in Vawdry v. Geddes (d), and Bland v. Williams (e),—namely, that when the testator has expressly given the legacy over on the legatee not attaining the prescribed age, the presumption in favour of the vesting of the legacy from the gift of the intermediate interest entirely fails,—was of opinion that the gift over, in the event of no child attaining 25, could not affect the vesting, which his lordship, on the construction which he put upon

(a) Sir J. Wigram, Bull v. Pritchard, 5 Hare, 572.

(b) "None of these clauses make any new gift to the grandchildren, nor can they alter the terms or conditions of that which is already made."—Sir W. Grant, Leake v. Robinson, 2 Meriv. 388; and see Vawdry v. Geddes, and Bland v. Williams, ubi infra.

(c) See 5 Beav. 212. In p. 210 and 211, Lord Langdale examines all the cases in which the gifts have been treated as vested by reason of the gift of interest. Minority may mean until 25, Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 15.

(d) 1 Russ. & M. 208, sup. p. 100, note; and see as to this case, 1 Jarman, 773-4.

(e) 3 Myl & K. 417; see 1 Jarm. 776.

the will, considered to have taken place (a). Here it will be observed there was a direct gift in trust for the children generally "as" they should attain the prescribed age, not to such as should attain the specified age, or even "when" or "if" they should attain that age (b). But in the Marquis of Bute v. Harman, the testator bequeathed to trustees 50,000*l.*, in trust for Lady Pole for life, and after her decease upon trust, to assign and make over the same securities unto and equally amongst such child or children of the testator's said niece, Lady Pole (being a son), as should attain the age of 25 years, or, being a daughter, should marry under that age with consent, the right or share of such child or children respectively to be a vested interest, and transmissible to his, her, or their personal representatives, notwithstanding his, her, or their subsequent death in the lifetime of his said niece (c); and the testator gave to his trustees full power during the minority of the children, or until marriage of the daughters, with such consent as aforesaid (i. e. of their parents or the survivor), to apply and dispose of all or any part of the income of his, her, or their expectant (d) shares of and in the said securities, for or towards their respective maintenance and education, and as to any surplus, to invest the same in like securities, together with the interest of the accumulations, and to stand possessed of all such accumulated securities, in trust, for the person or persons who should be ultimately entitled to the principal; if there should be no son who should attain 25, or daughter who should attain that age or marry with consent, then the trustees were to stand possessed of the said securities and all accumulations, in trust for his said niece, Lady Pole. Lady Pole had three children, and the question was whether the gift was void for remoteness. Davies v. Fisher (e), and Newman v. Newman (f), were the only cases cited. Lord Langdale said, "he could not doubt the validity of the gift." His lordship's opinion was no doubt influenced by the clause giving the interest by way of maintenance, as it was in Davies v. Fisher; but, looking to the language of this will in reference to the preceding cases, and Sir James Wigram's reasoning in Bull v. Pritchard, it is impossible not to entertain considerable doubts as to the propriety of this decision.

(a) Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beavan, 214; 6 Jur. 249; see 3 Bli. N. S. 312. It is stated that there is an appeal pending in the House of Lords.

(b) See Cockrane v. Wiltshire, supra, p. 99; Sir W. Grant, in Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 384, 386, also takes the distinction where there is no direct gift but in the direction to pay; and see Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 48, and May v. Wood, 3 Bro. 471.

(c) That is, as it is presumed, after having attained 25, or marriage.

(d) V. supra, p. 100, and note (b), and Lord Eldon's observation on the word "presumptively," 3 Bli. N. S. 293.

(e) Sup. p. 102.

(f) Sup. p. 96.

It has been held that not only must the gift vest within the time limited by the rule against perpetuities, but the interests of the respective parties in the property must be capable of ascertainment within that period, or the gift will be void (a).

When land and personalty are devised together, with a direction to invest the personalty in the purchase of land, the rules which govern devises of land will be applicable also to the personalty which is to be invested in the purchase of land (b).

There is frequent occasion for the application of the doctrine as to remoteness to cases of Powers (c). It will be remembered that a person who takes under an appointment made under a power given under any instrument, takes exactly in the same manner as if the gift conferred through the appointment had been inserted in the instrument by which the power is given (d): this is the key to the decisions on powers; what a person cannot effect by limitation, he cannot effect through the means of any authority or directions given to others or by proviso or condition (e). If a power in terms authorizes an appointment to such issue as are born within due limits as regards remoteness, an appointment to a more extensive range of issue will be good as respects those who are within the limits; and the converse will hold, namely, where the power is so extensive as to embrace issue generally, that is those within and those without the limits, but the appointment itself is confined to those within the limits, the appointment will be good. But if the power and the appointment both embrace objects not within the prescribed limits, the appointment being made to issue, or others as a class, it will, according to the general principle deduced from the authorities by Sir Wm. Grant, to be presently mentioned, be void in toto (f).

The question whether general powers, which taken in their unrestricted form would be clearly void, could be so modelled as to be good in part, though void for the remainder, was at one time a matter of question. The observations of Lord Eldon, in Ware v. Polhill, had thrown a doubt as to whether a power of sale, introduced into a deed or a will, containing limitations in strict settlement, and which was not

(a) Curtis v. Lukin, 15 Beav. 147, 155-6.

(b) Jackson v. Majoribanks, 12 Sim. 98; Snow v. Poulden, 1 Keen, 186.

(c) See Lord Rosslyn's able and comprehensive judgment in the Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, 1 Eden, 417 et seq.

(d) V. supra, vol. i. p. 486-7; 1 Jarm. 248.

(e) See Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, 1 Eden, 415, 417, 420-3. "You shall not give a legal estate, and divest it of legal incidents," is another principle that comes into operation in such cases, ibid. 417, 423; King v. Burchell, ibid. 424.

(f) 1 Jarman on Wills, 250; Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. Jun. 362-3; the words there were "amongst all and every," ibid. p. 358, and see 2 Meriv. 391.

in terms restricted as to its exercise to the limits allowed by law, was valid; but it has been decided that such a power, where it is co-extensive with an estate tail, is good, inasmuch as, like the estate tail, it may be barred (a): it may therefore be exercised at least during the tenancies for life; but it may still be a question during what period beyond this the power is capable of being exercised (b).

A term for years may be limited, so as to be expectant on an estate tail, that is, on failure of the issue in tail, for then it may be defeated by the execution by any tenant in tail of a disentailing deed, which takes the case out of the mischief which the rule against remoteness was intended to provide against (c). But if the term be precedent to the estate tail, and the trusts are such that they can only come into operation on failure of the issue who are to take under an entail, then the trusts are wholly void, as they may not come into operation within the legal limits, and they cannot be barred (d). So, if a power be given, which is only to take effect on a general failure of the issue, and the estate is so limited that there might be issue of the marriage not inheritable under the settlement, as no tenant in tail could bar the power, such a power is void (e).

It was laid down by Sir John Leach, that "you cannot limit to an unborn person for life, unless the remainder vests in interest at the same time (f).” But it is now settled that there is no restriction on the

(a) Waring v. Coventry, 1 My. & K. 252-3; Powis v. Capron, 4 Sim. 138, note, both before Sir J. Leach. Biddle v. Perkins, 4 Sim. 135, appears to have been decided on the same ground (1 My. & K. 252), though no reasons are given. It may be noticed that Mr. Preston, in the argument of Waring v. Coventry, stated that these decisions were not inconsistent with Lord Eldon's decision in Ware v. Polhill, for there the estates in question were leasehold and had vested in the first quasi tenant in tail, which was equivalent to the estate and the power being barred; so that if the power had been held good in that case, it would have been equivalent, as Sir E. Sugden remarks (on Powers, ii. 493-4,) to giving one man a power over another man's estate, and for no purpose in which any other person was interested: and see Boyce v. Hanning, 2 Crompt. & J. 334; Wood v. White, 4 My. & Cr. 460; Nelson v. Callow, 15 Sim. 354; 1 Jarm. on Wills, 250; 2 Sugd. on Powers, 494-5-6. As to the case of Ware v. Polhill, see also Ferrand v. Wilson, infra.

(b) Sir E. Sugd. on Powers, ii. 470.

(c) See Jarman on Wills, i. 223, 224, referring to Gulliver v. Ashby, 4 Burr. 1929; and by consequence, though there might be infant tenants in tail, no one of whom of course could bar the entail for 100 years and more, yet the term, if not exhausted, would subsist.

(d) Carr v. Drosier, 2 Keen, 774; affirmed 5 My. & Cr. 249; and see Roper v. Hallifax, 8 Taunt. 869. That the term would not be affected by a disentailing deed, see Eales v. Conn, 4 Sim. 65, affirmed 9 May, 1831.

(e) Bristow v. Boothby, 2 Sim. & S. 469. There could be no doubt, said Sir J. Leach, that if it had been pointed out to the parties that the estate was not limited to all the issue of the marriage, and the power expressed was therefore void as too remote, the deed would have been altered, but how no one could say; he was therefore compelled to construe the deed as he found it, ibid. But failure of issue may be confined to those who take under the limitations upon the context of the instrument, Malcolm v. Taylor, 2 Russ. & M. 442.

(f) Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Russ. 316; Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Albans, ubi inf., and Mr. Jarman's note, i. 236, et 239-40.

giving a life estate to an unborn person either in real or personal estate, provided it vest within the legal limits. "As estates in fee," says the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, "may be well given, so life interests may be well given by will to the children of a living person, who is a bachelor at the testator's death. But as an estate in fee, to be devised validly, must be so devised as to vest within the compass of lives in being at the death of the testator, and twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of them, so must a life interest; that the latter is limited in its duration can make no difference" (a): and an estate for life in personal estate may equally be limited to an unborn child (b). But a limitation to the children or issue of an unborn person to whom such life estate is given, is bad, for the children of such person might not come in esse until more than twenty-one years after a life in being (c); though a remainder on such a gift may be limited to competent persons (d).

There is no objection to a life estate, devised to a person not in existence at the testator's death, being made to cease before its natural termination, at any time, or upon any event; but a provision in a will as to such life estate, that the property so given for life shall shift from the tenant for life, and, the estate for the life not ceasing, be enjoyed during the residue of his life in some other manner upon the happening of a contingent event beyond the compass of lives in being and more than twenty-one years after the death of the surviving life, cannot be good (e).

It was decided by Sir W. Grant, after a full consideration of all the previous authorities, that where a gift is to a class, including, in one description, persons capable and persons who may be (f) incapable

(a) Boughton v. James, 1 Col. 46 (1844), and see Beard v. Westcott, 5 Taunt. 393; 5 Barn. & Ald. 801; and Mr. Russell's note, 4 Russ. 316. Mr. Lee intimated that Sir J. Leach was himself dissatisfied with his decision in Hayes v. Hayes; and see 2 Ves. Jun. 366.

(b) Beard v. Westcott, ubi sup.

(c) See Duke of Marlborough v. Lord Godolphin, 1 Eden, 415, and Jarman on Wills, i. 240.

(d) Ibid. 241-2. See Mr. Jarman's remarks on Cooke v. Bowler, 2 Keen, 54, ibid.

(e) Boughton v. James, 1 Col. 46; Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce. There is a strong decision of Sir John Leach, Arnold v. Congreve, 1 R. & M. 215, by which, where a testatrix by her will had given absolute interests to her grandchildren, and by a codicil confined them to life interests, limiting the property to their children on their deaths, which could not be done, he, to effectuate the general intention, rejected the codicil altogether. This case, which has never been disputed, was followed by the same judge in Carver v. Bowles, 2 R. & M. 307; but there absolute interests were actually given, and the testatrix used the words "so far as she lawfully could," ibid. p. 308; that case arose under a power. This case has since been acted upon in Ring v. Hardwicke, Rolls, iv. Jur. 242; and Kampf v. Jones, 2 Keen, 756, which carries it a little further, as the words "so far as she lawfully could" were supplied in that case. In Church v. Kemble, 5 Sim. 529, the appointor only meant that the disposition should take effect if she had the power to make it.

(f) V. int. al. Holford v. Palmer, 4 Russ. 407.

by reason of remoteness, that is who may happen not to be born at all within the legal limits, or who may not attain the age appointed for the vesting within the legal limits, the entire gift is void. The court cannot, in such case, so remodel the will as to support the bequests in favour of those who are capable, rejecting the rest, for that would be to make a new will for the testator; and to wait to see what number of objects will come into existence, and give proportionate shares to the proper objects, would introduce the mischief intended to be provided against, by tying up the property in the interval (a): it cannot be said, with certainty, that the testator would merely have excluded those who were not within the legal limits; he might also have given less to those who are within the limits (b). The same reason, and therefore the rule, applies, where there is an appointment to a class, some members of which are not proper objects; those who are capable of taking cannot be treated as the sole objects (c): the appointment is void altogether. Subsequent events cannot be regarded, possible events are what are to be looked to, excepting as will hereafter be mentioned in the case of devises over, to arise on one of several alternative events; therefore the rule applies, even though it may happen that all the possible objects actually become capable within the legal limits (d).

One very important instance of the application of the rule against

(a) Et v. sup. p. 104; Bristow v. Boothby, 2 Sim. & St. 469.

(b) Leake v. Robinson, which was a case of a gift of a residue, 2 Mer. 363, 388, 390; Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox, 324; 1 Dr. & War. 533; and Porter v. Fox, 6 Sim. 485. There the gift was to a nephew by name and the testator's grandchildren, to be distributed as they should attain 25. This decree was appealed from, and on the hearing of the appeal by Lord Lyndhurst a case was directed to the Common Pleas, but before it was argued the suit was compromised; and see Powell v. Squire, Rolls, 13 July, 1841; and the arguments of Mr. Justice Patteson, Lord Dungannon v. Smith, in Dom. Proc. p. 15, of the printed arguments; and that of Mr. Baron Rolfe in the same case, infra.

(c) Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. Jun. 363, 366.

(d) See Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Albans, and Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, infra; Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox, 324; Proctor v. Bishop of Bath and Wells, 2 H. Blackst. 358; Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russel, 403; but see the note 1 Jarm. 231 as to this case; see also 1 Jarm. 232, 233, and Lewis on Perpetuities, p. 659, et seq., where also the cases to which the general rule does not apply are stated. Mr. Jarman had entertained an opinion that, in deciding on the validity of gifts to a class, the state of events at the death of the testator might be looked to; but he seems since to have convinced himself that the rule will apply, if it be shewn that events might possibly have occurred subsequently to the date of the will which would have let in objects beyond the legal limits; see his observations, i. 227, 242, 243, note, on Dodd v. Wake, 8 Sim. 616; but v. infra, p. 125-6, as to gifts on alternative events, and infra, Mr. Baron Parke's opinion in Ker v. Lord Dungannon. As to the destination as between the heir at law and devisee of particular estates which are void in their creation, and especially in the case of a term carved out of a devised estate the trusts of which are void in their creation or in event; see 1 Jarman, 513 et seq., and the judgments of Lord Redesdale and Lord Eldon in the important case of Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow, 194, et v. infra, p. 121, note.

perpetuities, has arisen upon bequests of personalty, to be enjoyed in succession by several persons who shall sustain a particular character. Mr. Jarman observes, "that there is no principle of law which prevents a testator from so framing or moulding his disposition as to make its validity depend upon subsequent events: thus, he may give prospectively, estates to persons in succession who shall sustain a particular character, of one quantity if the person taking should be alive at his death, of another quantity if he should not be alive at his death; and the same observation applies to prospective limitations by way of trust: but this is difficult to be accomplished by direct devise, or by executed trust, so as to sustain the more limited interest to any one not specifically named" (a).

The case of Lord Deerhurst v. The Duke of St. Albans is one of the most important cases on this subject. It first came before Sir J. Leach in 1820(b). At the time of the death of the first Lord Vere, the testator, in 1781, he had a son (Aubrey Beauclerk, afterwards second Lord Vere and Duke of St. Albans), and two grandsons living; each of them became Lord Vere: the elder, Aubrey, third Lord Vere, died in 1815, leaving a son Aubrey, fourth Lord Vere, who was born in 1815, and died in 1816. On his death, William, the second son of the second Lord Vere, became fifth Lord Vere and Duke, and was such at the institution of the suit. The testator, by his will, bequeathed certain chattels to trustees, in trust, for his wife for life, then to his son Aubrey the second Lord Vere for life, and after the decease of the survivor, the testator directed that his trustees should stand possessed of the same, in trust, for such person as should from time to time be Lord Vere; it being his will and intention that the same should, after the death of his wife, go and be held with the title of the family, "as far as the rules of law and equity would permit" (a). There were three claimants of these chattels—the personal representatives of Aubrey, the third Lord Vere; the representatives of the fourth Lord Vere; and William the fifth Lord Vere. It was held by Sir J. Leach, and that has not been disputed, that this was an executed trust. "By the rules of law and equity," said his Honour, "every person who was living at the death of the testator might be limited to the use and enjoyment only; the son and grandson were living at his death, and were both therefore limited to the use and enjoyment only; but," said Sir J. Leach, "the child who succeeded the grandson, as Lord Vere and Duke (the fourth Lord Vere), was not living at the death of the testator, and could not be limited to the use and enjoyment only" (b); he therefore, as Sir J. Leach held, took an absolute interest, which was then vested in his personal representative. From this decree there was an appeal to Lord Lyndhurst, who affirmed the decree, and then to the House of Lords (1834) (c), where the decree was reversed; and it was held, that the chattels vested in the eldest grandson, that is, the third Lord Vere, who, as before mentioned, was living at the testator's death. Lord Brougham, in moving the judgment of the House, stated, that he considered that this kind of limitation was a novelty unauthorized by law; a construction could not be put upon the instrument to meet that which had accidentally happened after the date of the instrument (d); there might have been an abeyance or corruption of blood: what was to become of the chattels during the abeyance? a Lord Vere might come into existence many years afterwards; and as to the words "as far as the rules of law will permit," the law will not permit a limitation if there be any possibility of the period of vesting absolutely exceeding twenty-one years after a life in being: the "limitation," said his lordship, "is absolutely void, not for the excess only (e). As to the third Lord Vere being in esse, on the determination of whose life estate the fourth Lord Vere was to take, the man was in esse, not the peer; there was not a Lord Vere (who was to take) in esse (f). To argue from the fact that the person was in esse at the date of the will who became Lord Vere, was to rely upon an accident; the event might have been otherwise; he

(a) 1 Jarm. 234.

(b) Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Albans; Tollemache v. Coventry, 5 Mad. 235; 2 Cl. & Fin. 611; 8 Bli. N. S. 547.

(a) Lord Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Albans, 5 Mad. 235; see Jarman on Wills, i. 235. & Fin. 611; 8 Bli. 547.
 (b) But v. supra, p. 106. (d) 2 Cl. & Fin. p. 626, 630, 633.
 (c) Tollemache v. Earl of Coventry, 2 Cl. (e) Ibid. 628, 630.
 (f) Ibid. 630-31.

would not ex necessitate answer the description within the allowed period. A limitation to be supported, must be definite and certain to the man or to the peer as an individual. It is not allowable to contend that at one time, and for one purpose, it is to the man, and for another time and purpose to the peer. The estate must be certain, so as within the time to vest in the person described, either in his natural or his politic capacity. In the politic capacity there was no such Lord Vere in esse in whom the estate would within that time certainly vest" (a).

Lord Brougham acknowledged that some of the arguments he had used, particularly respecting attainder and abeyance, would apply to the case of the third Lord Vere as well as the fourth; but he said he was bound by decision and authority in the one case, and could not deny the right of the third Lord Vere, who was living at the date of the will, without reasoning in the face of authority, and accordingly the third Lord Vere, the eldest grandson, was declared to be absolutely entitled (b).

The principle of this decision appears to be, that if life estates with remainders over are intended to be given to a person sustaining a particular character, being a peer for instance, the individual so to take being left to be determined by the event, any person who claims a life estate, or any interest whatever in the property, must show that it must have fallen to him if at all within the legal limits; if a person claims a remainder on such life estate, he must show that not only the life estate but the remainder must have taken effect within the legal limits: if at the time of the death of the testator, or at the date of the instrument, if it be a deed, there be a person in existence who is in the line of the peerage, the gift will be good as to him if he become the peer, for though it is uncertain whether he will become the peer or not, yet if he ever does, it must be within the permitted limits (c).

(a) 2 Cl. & Fin. pp. 630-31.

(b) Ibid. 633. Sir E. Sugden, Lord-Chancellor of Ireland, though acknowledging the binding force of the decision, seems to have thought that, as the arguments for the reversal would equally apply to the 3rd Lord Vere, who, though in esse, was not in esse as Lord Vere at the testator's death, therefore his claim should also have been rejected. 1 Drury & W. 536-7. Mr. Justice Cresswell entertaining the same view, in Lord Duncannon v. Smith, before the House of Lords, after mentioned, said the decision must be taken only as a declaration, not that the bequest was good as to the 3rd Lord Vere, but that it was bad as to the 4th. Mr. Justice Patteson and Mr. Baron Parke, taking it as a decision that it was good as to the 3rd Lord Vere, rely upon it as an authority for their opinions, pp. 16 and 22, Printed Opinions of the Judges; and see 10 Simons, 508. There is this difference in the cases: the 3rd Lord Vere was living at the date of the will and at the testator's death, though not as Lord Vere; in Duncannon v. Smith, as to which v. infra, the claimant was not living at the date of the will, or at the testator's death.

(c) In Mackworth v. Hinxman, 2 Keen, 662, A.D. 1838, which however is not reported in a very satisfactory manner (see Sir E. Sugden's remarks on this case, 1 Conn & L. 355), personal property was given to a trustee in trust to pay the interest, dividends, and profits to the testator's nephew, Sir Gilbert

In Ibbetson v. Ibbetson (1840) (a), the testator devised the reversion in fee of his mansion-house, to the use of his brother, who afterwards became Sir Charles Ibbetson, for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons of his brother, Sir Charles, in tail male, with remainder to the use of J. W. Ibbetson, and his issue male in like manner in strict settlement, with remainder to the use of his own daughters successively in tail male, with remainders over. The testator then gave to trustees all his plate, &c. in and about his house at Denton Park, upon trust, "to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the person or persons who, for the time being, should be entitled to the possession of his mansion-house, under or by virtue of the settlement made upon his marriage (b), or of the limitations contained in his will, until a tenant in tail of the age of 21 years should be in possession of his mansion-house; and then the plate, &c. were to go and belong to such tenant in tail." The testator then gave the residue of his personal estate, after payment of debts and legacies, to the person who at his death should be beneficially entitled to his mansion-house: there

Affleck, for life, and after his death to the eldest son of Sir G. Affleck for the time being; but in case Sir Gilbert Affleck should die leaving no son, then in trust to pay the interest and dividends unto the person on whom the baronetcy (which was originally granted in tail male) should devolve, it being the testator's will that the said interest, &c. should never be alienated from the title, but that each succeeding baronet should enjoy the said interest, &c. for his natural life, and after the extinction of the baronetcy, if that should happen, then the property was to fall into the residue of his estate.

In 1799 the testator died. Sir Gilbert and his two younger brothers, James and Robert, were then living. In 1808 Sir Gilbert died without issue, and the baronetcy devolved on his brother, Sir James. In 1833, he died without issue, and the baronetcy devolved upon his brother, Sir Robert. The representative of Sir James Affleck, the elder brother of Sir Robert, claimed the property absolutely, and it was decreed that he was entitled. Lord Langdale seems to have thought that to carry life estates further than him was not possible; it is obvious that he might have had a son, who might have died in his father's lifetime, leaving a son who might have been the next baronet; but a life estate could not be limited to him. Sir James himself, it is to be remarked, was in no wise pointed out as a donee, otherwise than as he was in the line to succeed to the baronetcy; but he was within the rule in this respect, that if he was to take at all, he must have taken within the legal period; this decision therefore appears to be in accordance with Lord Brougham's doctrine.

(a) 10 Simons, 495, confirmed on appeal, 5 My. & Cr. 26.

(b) As the testator had no issue, the limitations in this settlement became abortive, and he was in fact seized in fee.

were no words to qualify the tying up, "so long as the rules of law and equity will permit." Upon the testator's death, in 1825, Sir C. Ibbetson took possession of the plate, &c.: he died in 1839, leaving two sons—the eldest of whom, afterwards Sir Charles H. Ibbetson, (who was the first tenant in tail, and who attained 21,) was born in the testator's lifetime—and a daughter. It was contended that the limitation of the plate, &c. was void for remoteness; the tenant in tail, spoken of in the will, was not of necessity to be a child either of the testator or of the tenant for life under the will, but might be any tenant in tail, however remote from the testator, or from the tenant for life under the will; and that the trust, after the estate for life to Sir Charles, was therefore void. It was contended, in answer, that, although a gift to a class of persons to take concurrently, if bad as to some is bad as to all, that objection did not apply to a case like the present, where the class of persons were not to take concurrently but successively; it might be bad as to the remoter links, but good as to the nearer ones, like the case of heirlooms: it was not a case where there was a suspension of the enjoyment of the property until a period that was too remote; but the property here was to be enjoyed by the persons in possession of the estate, in the mean time, and until there should be a tenant in tail in possession of the age of 21 (a).

The Vice-Chancellor of England said, "Under this will, the suspension of the vesting of the chattels might have continued for ages. The fact that a tenant in tail, of the age of 21 years, had become possessed of the mansion-house within twenty-one years from the death of the testator, was immaterial; unless the gift were such as that if it ever took effect at all it must of necessity have vested the absolute property in some one within the period allowed by law, it would be bad when the testator died, and must be so then:" and his Honour held, that so far as the gift was framed to take effect after the death of Sir Charles Ibbetson, it was void, and that the plate, &c., after the death of Sir Charles Ibbetson, fell into the residue of the testator's estate (b). Lord Cottenham affirmed this decision (c). In regard to the argument raised on the direction for possession, his lordship observed, "that the son, Sir Charles H. Ibbetson, the appellant, never, under this direction, had any interest in the property, for, at the moment of his father's death, he being tenant in tail in possession, of the age of 21, the event happened which determined the application of the rents under the former direction, nor would the case have been different if the appellant had at the time been tenant in tail in possession under 21, for the special words excluded the title of any one as mere tenant in tail" (a). "It may be said," added his lordship, "that if the gift to the first tenant in tail in possession at 21, is too remote, so must be the direction for the application of the rents till that event should happen: if there be that objection to the direction which the testator has made in his will, it will afford no reason for introducing into the will a gift of an estate tail, which he not only has not directed, but was evidently anxious to avoid; the gift to a tenant in tail in possession at 21, negatives any intention of benefitting any one who should not answer to the whole description" (b). It is to be observed that Sir Charles H. Ibbetson was alive and in the line of succession, as tenant in tail, at the time of the testator's death; but it could not be said that he was in the line of succession of tenants in tail who should attain 21; it was not only, as in the cases just stated, uncertain whether he would become tenant in tail in possession, but there was the additional uncertainty whether he or indeed any tenant in tail would attain 21, and the person to take must answer the whole of the description.

(a) P. 505.

(b) Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 10 Sim. 515-6.(c) S. C., 5 My. & Cr. 26.

The next case on this subject, which is material for the observations which were thrown out by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in his judgment, is the case of Ferrand v. Wilson (1845). The testator, Benjamin Ferrand, by his will, after creating a term of twenty-one years, for payment of debts and legacies, and other specific purposes, so far as his personal estate should be deficient, and devising the estate in strict settlement, empowered his executors, during and after the term until some person who should be entitled to the estates devised by him for an estate tail or for some greater estate should have attained 21, to enter and cut timber of mature growth for sale, and to apply the proceeds in payment of his funeral expenses, debts, and legacies until the trusts of the term should be satisfied (c); and then, with the consent of the devisees in possession, to invest the surplus in the purchase of other lands in fee, to be settled to the same uses. A considerable quantity of timber was cut by the first tenant for life and the trustees; it was not wanted for the purpose of payment of debts and legacies, as they were all satisfied (d): the plaintiff, who had become (a) S. C., 5 My. & Cr. 28.

(b) Ibid. p. 29.

(c) 4 Hare, 344; see the terms of the power, 351-2-3, and ib. 371. There were no words such as "so far as the rules of law will allow."

(d) There were annuities still payable during the first tenancy for life, but the tenant for life, as the Vice-Chancellor held, was entitled to the beneficial enjoyment during the remainder of the term, keeping down the interest, the annuitants being entitled to the benefit of the term to enforce the payment of arrears, if necessary, ib. 368-9.

tenant in tail under the settlement, insisted that the proceeds ought to have been laid out in the purchase of other lands: the great question was, whether the power was void in toto, or whether it might be construed to be good, so far as the rules in regard to perpetuities and accumulation of rents and profits would allow, or, in other words, could it be modelled or apportioned (a).

The Vice-Chancellor was clearly of opinion, if the power was to be treated as imperative, that it was void to the extent in which it was given; the event of a tenant in tail attaining 21, might not occur for ages; and his Honour held, that the timber must, for the purposes then under consideration, be considered in the same sense as rents and profits; "timber upon parts of an estate must, for the present purpose, be considered and treated in the same way as it would be in the case of a timber estate" (b). If the power were permissive only, and not imperative, it was at least concurrent with the right of the infant tenant in tail, and to the extent to which it derogated from that right was liable to objection as creating a perpetuity (c). The question then was, whether the power, bad as a whole, could be modelled, so that it might be sustained, as far as the rules of law and equity would allow, or to any extent.

In discussing this question, the Vice-Chancellor took this important distinction. If the will of the testator resolves itself into a single intention that a particular act shall be done, or a particular limitation shall take effect, at a period which possibly may be more remote than the law allows in favour of a party designated, it is obvious that the court may not be able to model the power, and at the same time give effect even in part to the actual intention of the testator, and the limitation may necessarily be void in toto. "But," said his Honour, "I cannot see why such cases are to furnish a rule for other cases in which, at the death of the testator, the state of parties is such that some at least of the estates given by the will may be supported,

(a) 4 Hare, 372-3, 376.

(b) P. 373. His Honour further observed that even if the timber was not to be considered in that light, the power in its terms could not be sustained, for to sustain this timber trust to the full extent would be to allow a party by his own act to make that inalienable for ages which by law is alienable notwithstanding infancy; for though by force of a strict settlement, which the law allows, the corpus of an estate may be rendered inalienable for an indefinite time, the rents and profits are in a course of uninterrupted enjoyment and distribution as part of the personal estate of the tenant in tail, though an infant; and this observation applies as well to the timber as to the other profits.—Tenant in tail cannot be restrained from committing waste, Duke of Marlborough v. Earl Godolphin, 1 Eden, 404.

(c) 4 Hare, 376. It will be observed this was not a power limited upon an estate tail but accompanying it, and to be exercised under circumstances that prevented its being barred, v. sup. p. 105; and it was not, like a general power, capable of being apportioned, v. sup. p. 104-105.

though others may be too remote (a). Thus, in the case of Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, (supra), an attempt was made to accumulate the rents and profits of an estate, for the benefit of a party who, by possibility, might not have come into existence for ages; now it is admitted, on all hands, that the validity of the limitations in a will must be determined at the death of the testator, and not by events; and upon that principle the power in that case could not be sustained to the extent to which it was given. It was therefore void, unless it could be modelled; but could it be modelled so as to preserve even partially the intention of the testator? If the court had sustained the accumulation for a period allowed by law, for what purpose could it have done so? The trust of this limited accumulation would have been void, on the ground that it was given to a person who by possibility might not be born for ages. The same observations applied to Marshall v. Holloway. "The case of Ware v. Polhill," his Honour observed, "requires more explanation; but as the first tenant for life was dead before the question arose, the case is not, upon the facts, a decision against the validity of the power during such first life estate. If the effect of Lord Eldon's language might be reduced within the exigencies of the case before him, and if that language had not commonly received (in the case of Powers) a construction co-extensive with the full meaning of Lord Eldon's words abstracted from the facts of the case, I should have thought that an apportionment of the power in this case would not conflict with Ware v. Polhill." His Honour, after some further comments on Ware v. Polhill, observed, "that Lord Eldon's decision must have been the same, whether the power was void from the beginning, or void only so far as it extended beyond Nathaniel, the first tenant for life." "Ibbetson v. Ibbetson," his Honour proceeded, "falls within the like observation. Sir Charles Ibbetson, the first tenant for life, was dead. The Vice-Chancellor of England expressly saved the question, whether the bequest might not have been good during the life of Sir Charles Ibbetson; and there is nothing in Lord Cottenham's judgment on the appeal, inconsistent with the validity of the limitation for the life of Sir Charles. I cannot but think that, consistently with those cases, a trust like that in question in the present case—a trust to be carried out by successive acts, to be done from day to day, each of which as far as it goes is an exact fulfilment of the testator's intention, both as to the thing done and the party to be benefited, is a trust which may perhaps be executed within the limits of a life estate, commencing at the death of the testator, though void as to the excess. The principle involved in the cases I have referred to, appears to me only to have decided that a power shall not be modelled, when by so doing the intention cannot even partially be effected." His Honour thought the cases he had suggested would be more properly assimilated to the cases under the Thellusson Act, or to devises of estates, the earlier of which are good at the death of the testator and the more remote only void for remoteness, than to the cases above cited. "Why," said he, "should not courts of justice apply the general directions of a will to the circumstances of the case as they exist at the death of the testator, in the same manner as he might have himself specifically applied them to the same circumstances, sustaining those directions which he might have lawfully given?" However, his Honour did not think that, sitting in that place, he ought to do otherwise than follow the language of Lord Eldon, in the concluding passage of Ware v. Polhill, leaving it to a higher tribunal to correct the law as regards the application of that decision, if it should be thought to require correction; and his Honour accordingly decreed that the tenant in tail was not entitled to an account of the timber felled during the life of the first tenant for life, nor to an account of the produce of the timber, up to the period to which the power might have lawfully extended, the will itself not having apportioned the power, and the authorities, as they stood, not, as his Honour conceived, justifying him in making such an apportionment by construction (a).

(a) And his Honour, to a certain extent, relied upon this in Liley v. Hay, 1 Hare, 580, which was a trust to distribute the rents of certain estates every St. Thomas's Day. His Honour held that there was no reason for holding the will void as to those objects to whom an interest not extending beyond their own lives was given immediately on the testator's death.

These observations of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram were pointedly referred to in the late important case of Ker v. Lord Dungannon (1846). The question turned on the devise of a term in the will of Lord Dungannon, which was in the following words—"in trust to permit my grandson, Arthur Trevor, and his assigns, to take the profits, &c. for and during his natural life, and from and after his decease to permit such person who for the time being would take by descent as heir (b) male of the body (c) of the said Arthur Trevor my grandson, to take the profits thereof until some such person shall attain the age of 21 years, and then to convey the same unto such person so attaining the age of 21 years, his executors, administrators and assigns; but if no such person shall

(a) Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare, 377-380.

(b) Sic.

(c) Not sons of the body, as in Stephens v.

Stephens, Ca. Temp. Talb. 232. See Lord C. J. Tindal's argument, x. Jur. 723 b.

live to attain the age of 21 years, then in trust to permit such person or persons successively, who for the time being shall take by descent as heir male of the body of Arthur Trevor, my son (father of the grandson), to take the profits of the same leaseholds until one of them shall attain 21, and then to convey the same to such heir male first attaining that age, his executors, administrators and assigns (a).

Arthur Trevor, the grandson, survived the testator; he attained 21 in 1784, in the lifetime of the testator, and died in 1837, leaving a son, Lord Dungannon, who was not born at the death of the testator, but who attained 21 before the death of the testator's grandson, Arthur Trevor. The great question was whether he was entitled to the term under the devise contained in the will of his great grandfather. When the case came before Sir E. Sugden, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, though the decision turned on another point, his lordship expressed an opinion that this was a general gift until some person answered the full description, and was quite as much a gift to a class, though the persons within the class were to take successively, and finally only one of them absolutely, and not jointly and together, as in the case of Leake v. Robinson; and though at the death of the testator, Lord Dungannon, who was the heir male of Arthur Trevor, had attained 21, the Lord Chancellor intimated an opinion that he was not entitled. "I must, I fear," said his lordship, "hold the whole limitation to be void, for I have not power to take out of the clause, so as to effectuate the intention, a separate limitation to support Lord Dungannon's title" (b).

On this opinion a bill was filed, in which the question was distinctly raised. Sir W. Blackburne, M. R. in Ireland, decided in conformity

(a) Ker v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Dru. & W. 510, 530. It is to be observed that a devise of land in the same terms as this executory bequest would clearly have been good as a contingent remainder, for if it vested at all, it must have vested at the instant of the termination of the previous estate for life, v. infra in this chapter.

(b) 1 Dru. & W. 533.

Earl of Donegal, testator, died 1771;
will 19 June, 1770.

Arthur Trevor, died in life of testator.

Arthur Trevor, the younger (Lord Dungannon), the grandson, and tenant for life, living at death of testator, born 1763, attained 21, 1784,
died 1837.

Arthur Trevor (Lord Dungannon), the defendant, on whose title the question arose, born 1797, after the testator's death, attained 21 in 1818.

with Sir E. Sugden's opinion, from which there was an appeal to the House of Lords.

Questions were put to the judges with a view to obtain their opinions as to the validity of the bequest; and there being a difference of opinion amongst them—nine, including Lord C. Justice Tindal (a), being of opinion that the bequest was invalid; two, namely Mr. Baron Parke and Mr. Justice Patteson, that the bequest was valid—the judges gave their opinions seriatim.

Most of the judges adopted the view which was taken by Sir E. Sugden, that this was a bequest to a class; they contended that the testator gave no preference to any one over the others simply as heir male of the body, but preferred him who should first attain the age of 21, it being quite uncertain who that one would be, or when he would be ascertained.

Mr. Baron Rolfe, in the opinion which he delivered, which was particularly referred to by Lord Brougham, so ably and clearly exhibits the points on which the question turned, that I have thought it would be advantageous to give some full extracts from it.

“Though a devise of rents and profits, no doubt,” said the learned Baron, “is generally the same thing as a devise of the corpus, yet it is competent to the testator to make, within certain limits, a temporary severance of the rents and profits from the corpus, and that has clearly been done in the present case. What may have been the disposition of the rents and profits in the mean time appears to me quite unimportant. Even though the same person should, under the limitations of the will, take first the rents and profits during minority, and afterwards the corpus on attaining 21, yet he will take them as distinct bequests. It may be that the same person may first fill the character which entitles him to the rents, and afterwards that which entitles him to the corpus; but this is an accident, it is not the result of any necessary connection between the two gifts: and I am therefore of opinion that the will must be construed in the same way as if the rents and profits accruing between the testator's decease and the time when some one shall be entitled to call for an assignment of the corpus, had been given to strangers, or had been undisposed of” (b).

The rule applied, he thought, to the person who should be the first heir male equally as to all others.

(a) His lordship's argument may be seen x. Jur. 722, et seq. Mr. Baron Parke's is also set forth at length, ibid. p. 724, et seq. I have quoted from a printed copy of all the arguments, lent to me by my friend Mr. Lee, Q.C.

(b) Lord Chief Justice Tindal's argument was to same effect, see x. Jur. 723 a.

“ There is no gift to him in terms different from the gift to all others who may be able to bring themselves within the terms of the gift. The person who shall be heir male at the death of the tenant for life was intended by the testator to take at 21, not because he would stand in any category different from that in which succeeding heirs male would stand, but because he would stand in the same. The testator intended that the first heir male who should attain 21 should take, whether he should be the heir male at the time of the death of the tenant for life or not : and where a testator has made a general bequest, embracing a great number of possible objects, there is no authority for holding that a court can so mould it as to say that it is divisible into two classes, the one embracing the lawful and the other the unlawful objects of his bounty.”

“ The general language used by the testator necessarily includes that which, if it had stood as a distinct gift, would have been good, yet including, as his language certainly does, gifts too remote as well as those not too remote, the whole is bad, for the gift is an entire gift, and it is impossible to say of it in all its different contingencies that it must have effect within the prescribed time.”

“ The reason why a gift to a class, as children or the like, is void when it may embrace some objects too remote is this : There is no intention to give to any number short of the whole class ; and therefore if the prescribed limit may be transgressed before the class is filled up, the whole gift fails, because it does not necessarily take effect within the prescribed period. In the case of a gift to a class, just as in the present case, there will be many events in which the bequest might be upheld if the courts might do what is here proposed, namely, separate the gift into two or more parts, on the ground that such parts are necessarily included in the general words used by the testator.”

The learned judge, after stating the case of Jee v. Audley (a), said : “ If in any case the court could be warranted in dividing a general bequest into its necessarily component parts it would have been that case, where it is quite clear from the age of the parties that the testator never had in his contemplation any daughters, except the four already born. But no one ever suggested that the court could mould the words of the bequest so as to divide it, as it were, into what was and was not lawful ; though, by such a course, it would have introduced nothing into the gift which was not necessarily included in the words used by the testator.”

“ Where a testator has made one entire gift, under which no one can claim, except by showing that he fills a particular character, which character it may be possible that no one will fill within the prescribed period, then the whole is void; and it is not material that the testator might have attained his object, as to some of those he meant to benefit, by splitting his gift into different parts. If the testator had so done, those who would take, would take not because they fill the character designated in the general bequest, but because they fill some other character, or fill the general character with some other super-added qualification or restriction necessarily confining the period of vesting to a life in being and twenty-one years afterwards."

(a) 1 Cox, 324.

Mr. Justice Patteson was of a contrary opinion. After noticing that the case was one of construction, he said, "At the death of Arthur Trevor one person only would answer the description in the will, whether he were son, grandson, or great grandson of Arthur Trevor; this person seemed to him therefore to be the individual intended, the person designated by the words of this bequest, just as much as if the will had been drawn in more extended terms, making a distinct gift to each individual who should take by descent as heir male: the direction to convey did not, as he thought, stand alone; in this case the bequest of the enjoyment of the chattels by an heir male, during his minority, could not be separated from the other bequest (a), so that the bequest, under one alternative or the other, must come into immediate operation on the death of the grandson (b); he saw no reason to doubt that the court must, in the event of the person who was heir male of the body of the grandson being a minor, have given him the profits of the leaseholds during his minority (c). "The bequest," said the learned judge, "construed as it fairly and even necessarily must be, requires no modelling nor alteration; it is a bequest first to the individual who fills the character of heir male of the body at the death of Arthur Trevor the grandson; and that individual, be he what descendant he may of the grandson, must, if he live to be twenty-one at all, attain that age within the legal limits."

The argument of Mr. Baron Parke corresponded in most particulars with that of Mr. Justice Patteson, though the learned Baron made larger concessions. "In order to determine the question," said the

(a) Distinguishing it from Lord Southampton v. Marq. of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 61, which was an attempt to sever the surplus rents from the legal estate, for a period which might exceed the legal limits; p. 15 and 16 of the argument.

(b) See Baron Parke's argument to same effect, p. 20.

(c) See Baron Alderson's argument, p. 17; Baron Parke's, p. 19, 20; Justice Cresswell's, p. 2; each of whom seems to have thought that the bequest of the profits during minorities, standing alone, was open to the same objection as the bequest of the corpus.

learned Baron, “there is no doubt of the course to be pursued. We must first ascertain the intention of the testator, or more properly the meaning of his words in the clause in question, and then endeavour to give effect to them, as far as the rules of law will permit; our first duty is to construe the will, and this we must do exactly in the same way as if the rule of perpetuity had never been established.” When the words are construed, the rule of law against perpetuity is to be applied, and there is no doubt what the rule is; the limitation is to be construed as it would be read at the opening of the will, and is not to be governed by subsequent events: the difficulty arises upon the interpretation of the clause in question, rather than the application of the rule of law to it.

“It must be admitted,” said the learned Baron, “that if the bequest of the estate itself and of the profits had been two distinct bequests, each in a separate instrument unconnected with each other, each of them would have been bad. A bequest to the first heir male of the body of B., who should attain 21, supposing that the heir male was not of age at the time of the testator’s death, would be clearly bad, as it might be a century before any heir male might attain that age. In like manner, supposing the heir male were not a minor at the time of the testator’s death, the direction to permit the heir male of the body, for the time being, being a minor, to take the profits till his minority, if it stood alone, would be void, because it would be uncertain, at the death of the testator, whether any heir male of the body would answer the description within the prescribed limits.” Neither of these limitations, taken by itself, could be correctly expanded into a series of bequests, in the manner which had been suggested in the argument.

“In the first of the above cases, I have supposed,” said the learned judge, “that the heir male of the body was not of age at the testator’s death; if he was of age, then as the will speaks quoad the person to take as at the time of the testator’s death, the bequest to that heir male would, I apprehend, be good; and, in like manner, in the second case, if the heir male of the body were a minor at testator’s death, the bequest to him would also be good.” The question put by the Lords to the judges, as he considered, related to a person not living at the testator’s death (a).

“But in this case,” said the learned Baron, “the bequest of the rents and profits and of the corpus is in the same instrument, and it might, he thought, be expanded into a series of bequests, of which the first was unobjectionable.” “It is clear,” said he, “that according to the true construction of the words of this conjoint bequest of both rents and profits and corpus, reading them at the testator’s death, some benefit would belong to the person who should be, at the death of B., Arthur Trevor, heir male of the body, in whatever degree of descent he might be such, and would necessarily take effect within the limits, for that heir must have either the rents and profits or the estate at the death of B. Immediately on the death of the tenant for life, the trustees must do something with the profits or estate; if the heir be a minor, they must give the profits, if a major convey the corpus. There is a trust for the person who should fill that character at that time, under all possible circumstances (a). The case is the same as if the testator had directed the trustees, at the death of B., to give the profits to the heir male then in being, if a minor, and the estate if he should be a major; and if he should die under 21, then to the next, and so on in a series of consecutive limitations.”

(a) That was, of course, the fact; see judgment, Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow. 194, and sup. pp. 110, 111, 112. the pedigree. See on this point, Lord Eldon’s

“As to the first number of the series, nothing is wanting to enable him to take the bequest, except that he should be heir male in existence at the death of B.; and that condition must be fulfilled, if ever it is fulfilled, at the death of B., and in that respect he differs from any subsequent member of the series; with respect to them the bequest may or may not take effect within the limits, and is therefore void.”

“The distinction is clear between a bequest to a class who are to take concurrently (as in Jee v. Audley, and Leake v. Robinson) and where the title depends upon a contingency common to all, that is, being in existence and filling a particular character at a particular time, and a gift to a series of persons who are to take successively, and the title of the first of whom is different from the rest, and depends upon a contingency not common to the others.”

The learned Baron thought that this case might be distinguished from Ibbetson v. Ibbetson; nothing that was said by either of the judges interfered with the validity of the gift to Sir Charles Ibbetson for life.

Lord Chief Justice Tindal concluded the argument, by giving a decided opinion in favour of the judgment pronounced by the court below.

(a) But the first heir male being a minor might have died during his minority, and he might have left a son who must have been a minor; it is difficult to say what was to become of the profits in that case, supposing the first would have been so entitled.

The Lord Chancellor (Lyndhurst) concurred in thinking that the direction relative to the rents, was clearly a separate disposition from the bequest of the leaseholds. The testator, he thought, had only one object in view, to benefit one individual, answering a particular description, not to create a succession of events; he had no such idea in contemplation: he thought that if the House were to do it in this case, it might have been done in almost every case where a gift has been held void for remoteness, for instance, in Jee v. Audley. Ibbetson v. Ibbetson he thought was not distinguishable from the present. Lord Cottenham concurred in affirming the decision. "It was attempted," his lordship said, "to make the gift good by accident, (the party answering the description having in fact attained 21, within the prescribed limits,) the possibility was the other way." Lord Brougham and Lord Campbell also concurred (a).

The judgment in this case determined that no heir male of the body, not even the first, though he had attained 21, could take under this limitation; but it seems to follow that any heir male of the body who had not attained 21 would have been exactly in the same condition: the words "for the time being" apply to both; and it was equally uncertain whether there would be an heir male under 21 as that there should be one who had attained 21 (b). The decision in this view amounts to this, that although the testator had so given the rents until an heir male of the body should attain 21, and the corpus in that event, that if the gift to an heir of the body of the grandson should ever vest at all, it should vest, as regards the first at least, within the legal limits, (for such heir of the body, if any such there ever were, must have been a minor, or of age at the death of his father); yet the limitation was void as regards the profits and the corpus: what then takes the case out of the protection which, in ordinary cases, would be extended to such a provision? it is, it would seem, the use of the words "for the time being." This expression appears to have been considered as showing that the testator had no intention to benefit the first heir male of his grandson, as distinguished from the others; he was but one of a class, no preference being given to any one, no one indeed being the particular object of bounty; the first was therefore put upon the same footing as the others (c).

It is obvious that in coming to this decision, if this be the correct view of it, the spirit and object of the rule was entirely disregarded; whether the clause in question is to be considered as two separate devises, one of the rents, the other of the corpus, or as one single devise, it must have vested in possession, if it vested at all, within the legal limits; the rule against perpetuities therefore could not be infringed in fact, if there ever was an heir male of the grandson living at his death: as a contingent remainder it would clearly have been good (a). In the event that happened, there was a person to take the corpus; that event was excluded from consideration, according to the general rule that the event shall not determine that to be good which in another event would have been considered void; here no event could possibly have happened that would have suspended the vesting, in an heir of the body of the grandson on one or other of the alternations, beyond the legal limits (b). Looking to the second alternative, namely, that the heir male of the grandson had been under 21, he would then have been entitled to the receipt of the rents, subject to a gift over, in the event of his not attaining 21, which alone would have given him the estate in the event of his attaining 21 (c): if, as was assumed by more than one of the learned judges, he might have taken the rents during his minority if he had been under 21 (d), it is not obvious why, having attained 21, he should have been excluded; both alternatives were uncertain.

(a) x. Jurist, 728.

(b) See Mr. Baron Parke's argument, p. 19.

(c) See 1 Dru. & W. 534.

Assuming that the above is a correct view of the reasons of the judgment, if the trust had been in such terms as that each heir male of the body of the grandson had been separately an object of bounty, the decision no doubt would have been different. Mr. Baron Alderson, in his argument, admitted there was no doubt that where a testator has, by his will, made a series of successive limitations, some of which fall within, whilst others exceed the period limited by the rule, the courts who construe such wills, have, in various cases, carried that intention into effect, as far as relates to the limitations conformable to law, and avoided those only which are unlawful; and even if the testator has used general expressions, which in their generality would include both classes but with some express qualification clearly showing his intention, the courts, availing themselves of such qualification, may perhaps separate the lawful from the unlawful limitations, accord-

(a) Fearne, p. 4; Jarman, i. 230.

(b) V. supra, p. 122, et v. infra, p. 126, in this chapter, as to alternative events.

(c) Tomkins v. Tomkins, cited and approved by Lord Mansfield, 1 Burr. 134; and by Lord Ellenborough, Doe v. Cundall, 9 East, 404; and in other cases, et v. 9 Cl. & Finell. 601; see also Newland v. Sheppard, 2 P. W. 193. For these authorities I am indebted to my friend Mr. Lee.

(d) See Mr. Baron Maule's argument, p. 9. Mr. Justice Patteson, p. 15, said he saw no reason to doubt that the court must have given the profits to the claimant had he been a minor, though, as before mentioned, he was not living at the testator's death; but see Mr. Baron Parke's argument, cited above.

ing to the testator's express desire, and give effect to the former class alone (a).

It is to be observed that the question whether or not, in case Lord Dungannon (the son of the testator's grandson) had been living at the testator's death, the limitation would have been good, is untouched by the decision. Mr. Baron Parke was of opinion that the limitation in such case would have been valid (b); but the decision, looking to the grounds on which it was given, throws some doubt upon this position.

It not unfrequently happens that there is a limitation over to a person capable of taking, if the limitation were made to him directly which is expectant upon the failure of a limitation, which is void, as made to embrace objects not capable of taking. The general rule is, that all gifts to take effect after or on the failure or determination of a prior limitation which is too remote, are affected by such invalidity, and are likewise void; and that although the object of the prior devise should never come into existence; and though the subsequent limitation is made to a person in esse at the time of the creation of the gift, and therefore per se capable of taking (c). The same principle will of course hold if a limitation made under a power is such as to be void for remoteness; the remainders dependent upon it will not be accelerated, they are prevented from taking effect. If it were shown that no objects could come into existence, to take under the void limitation, there might be some show of reason for contending that the void limitation ought to be considered as out of the will, but authority has precluded such an argument being used; of course it could not be contended that though the property was appointed to the remainder-man on failure of the existence of persons incapable of taking, yet notwithstanding they exist he should take as if it was well appointed to them, and they had failed (d). But where the bequest over is to arise on an alternative event, one branch of which is within, and the other is not within the prescribed limits, if in such case the event

(a) Baron Alderson's argument, p. 17.

(b) V. sup. p. 121, et v. 110, 111, 112.

(c) Proctor v. Bishop of Bath and Wells, 2 H. Blackst. 258; Lord Chatham v. Tothill, 7 Bro. P. C. 453; Ker v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Con. & Laws. 358; and the other cases cited, 1 Jarman on Wills, 242, et seq., who remarks, on the above-cited case of Proctor v. Bishop of Bath, there was only a possibility of the rule of law being transgressed, as Thomas Proctor might have had a son who had taken orders in his lifetime, or even in the lifetime of the testator, ib. p. 243, note; Fearne, 508, and Butler's note; and see on this subject, Lewis on Perpetuities, 466, 660 et seq., who, p. 661, points out an exception to the rule, referring to Beard v. Westcott, 5 Taunt. 393.

(d) Routledge v. Dorrell, 2 Ves. J. 364-5; Brudenell v. Elwes, 1 East, 442; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 508, and Butler's note; Smith's Orig. View, p. 411.

should bring the former alternative into operation, the gift over will take effect (a). Thus, if before the late Statute of Wills there had been a limitation over in the event of there being no son, or if there should be a son and such son should die without issue; if the contingency had happened that there were no son, the remainder over would have been good (b): and it may be observed as regards the influence of events, that, according to Mr. Fearne, it is now settled, that whatever number of limitations there may be after the first executory devise of the whole interest, any one of them which is so limited that it must take effect, if at all, within twenty-one years after the period of a life then in being, may be good in event, if no one of the preceding executory limitations which would carry the whole interest happens to vest (c).

It has already been mentioned (d) that the doctrine of cypres cannot be applied to personal estate, so as to give effect to a void limitation as it may in regard to real estate. In the case of real estate, where there is a limitation for life to a person unborn, (upon which no limitation to children or issue can be engrafted (e)), with remainders in tail to the first and other sons; as they cannot take as purchasers, but may as heirs of the body, and as the estate is clearly meant to go in a course of descent, the express gift for life to the parent is, by construction, turned into an estate tail, in the person to whom the life estate is given; the person thus made tenant in tail may indeed, by a disentailing deed, intercept the descent, but if he do not, then the estate goes to his issue, and the intention is thus effected as far as the rules of law will allow (f). But as regards personal estate; all that could be done in such case would be to give the property to the parent absolutely, and then it would not go in a course of descent to the children, but would go to the executors of the parent, and be liable for his debts (g). However, it may be observed, that though in such a case the tenant for life cannot obtain the absolute interest by this rule of construction, it seems he may, in some cases at least, by another; for, according to Mr. Fearne, wherever a term is given to one for a day or an hour, it is held to be a gift of the whole term, if the gift over be void and it appear to be the intention of the testator to dispose

(a) Jarman on Wills, i. 244-7.

(b) Lord Hardw., Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Mad. 344; Longhead v. Phelps, 2 Sir W. Bla. Rep. 705, et v. infra.

(c) Fearne, 517, 521; and see Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Mad. 345-6, Barnardist. 59-60.

(d) Supra, vol. i. pp. 533, 534.

(e) V. supra.

(f) See on this subject Lewis on Perpetuities, p. 426 et seq.

(g) Routledge v. Dorrell, 2 Ves. J. 365; Lewis on Perpetuities, 435, sup. vol. i. 534; but, in conjoint dispositions of real and personal estate, it seems the rule may be applied, Prior on Issue, 66, 174; the cases are cited p. 66.

of the whole from his executors (a); and from the illustration he gives, in the same page, it would appear that the intention to give it away will be inferred from any gift which purports to dispose of the whole interest (b), though Sir E. Sugden has expressed his decided disapprobation of that doctrine (c). Where there is an absolute gift, and an attempt to restrict such gift by limitations which are void or which become of no effect, it is clear that the gift remains absolute and unaffected (d).

(a) Executory Dev. 488, referring to the dictum of Lord Macclesfield, Forth v. Chapman, which does not seem to support the proposition.

(b) And see Doe v. Cooke, 7 East, 296; Tollemache v. Lord Coventry, 2 Cl. & Fin. 612, 633; and Mackworth v. Hinxman, 2 Keen, 658, 662.

(c) Ker v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Dru. & W. 528-9.

(d) Whittel v. Dudin, 2 Jac. & W. 279;

Ring v. Hardwick, 2 Beav. 353; and see Kampf v. Jones, 2 Keen, 756, 761, a case arising upon an appointment; and see Carver v. Bowles, 2 R. & M. 201, there cited. Campbell v. Brownrigg, on appeal, 1 Phil. 301, was decided on a similar principle; there was a gift to a daughter to go to her children, if she had any; she had none, and it was held she took the absolute property; et v. int. al. Blease v. Burgh, sup. p. 98.

CHAPTER III.

OF EXECUTORY TRUSTS.

SECTION I.—Introduction.

Executory Trusts those which are not Complete in themselves.

Marriage Articles afford an instance—Usually contemplate a formal Deed—Often to be found in Wills.

May arise not only where Testator expressly directs the Execution of a formal Instrument, but where he leaves such a Direction to necessary Implication.

When Trust imposed by Will, whether executed or executory, no Necessity for inquiring into Consideration.

Rule that Court will not execute a Trust in fieri, for Volunteers, does not apply.

THE trusts which will now be considered, are those which are not complete in themselves, but contain heads or minutes for the disposition of property which are to be carried into effect in a more formal manner, according to the intention to be collected from the instrument (a). The general doctrines have been stated in the former volume (b); but they require, from their frequent occurrence, a more minute consideration. Marriage articles, which must constantly be prepared under circumstances which preclude much deliberation, very frequently are of this description: these instruments are almost always drawn in contemplation of a formal deed being prepared to carry out and complete the provisions which they contain, which are merely set down by way of minutes, to be perfected by a more formal instrument, under proper advice.

In wills also it frequently happens that the trusts upon which a testator desires to settle his property, and the powers and privileges that are to be enjoyed by the successive takers, are designedly, or from the inability of the testator fully to carry out his meaning, left, in the way of heads or instructions, rather than of complete and perfect devises or bequests; hence the court is frequently called upon to expound a meaning and execute a purpose, which the testator himself has not fully explained in their detail; and the court is then driven to the necessity of giving such directions as it conceives to be nearest to a probable and rational purpose in the testator's mind (a). Trusts of this description may arise not only where the testator expressly directs the execution of a formal settlement, but also where he leaves such a direction to necessary implication (b).

(a) V. supra, vol. i. p. 525; and see Gower v. Grosvenor, before Lord Hardw. 5 Mad. 349.

(b) Pp. 525-6.

Where a trust is imposed by a will, whether executed or executory, any inquiry as to consideration is out of place, and though it is said that all persons who claim under a will are volunteers, yet where a trust, though executory, is declared in favour of any specified objects, it is a constituted trust, the objects are cestuis que trust: the general rule, that the court will not enforce a trust in fieri for volunteers (c), does not apply; the paramount rule, that the will of the testator is to be performed, supersedes it; the objects of the devise or bequest are, as cestuis que trust, entitled to the aid of the court in having the trust carried into effect (d): how far, and in favour of what objects, the consideration will extend in a trust created by contract or articles, will be considered in a subsequent chapter.

(a) Vice-Chancellor of England, Woolmore v. Burrows, 1 Sim. 525. The testator there had directed his money to be laid out in land, "to be closely entailed," &c.; and see 5 Simons, 268.

(b) "I say where there is an executory trust—where the testator has directed something to be done, and has not himself, according to the sense in which the court uses these words, completed the devise in question, the court has been in the habit of looking to see what was his intention, and if what he has done amounts to an imperfection with respect to the execution of that intention, the court inquires what it is itself would do, and it will mould what remains to be done so as to carry that intention into execution." Lord Eldon, 1 Jac. & W. 570.

(c) Supra, chap. i. sect. 4, p. 52, et v. inf.

(d) Forrest. 19; and see Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 222; Austin v. Taylor, Ambl. 376, sup. chapter i. sect. 4, p. 51.

SECTION II.—Construction of Executory or Directory Trusts of Real Estate, particularly as regards Issue, in reference to the Rule in Shelley's Case.

Rule attaches on an Executed Trust, without reference to Intention.

In Executory Trust Intention may be referred to.

Not all Executory Trusts to which this Observation applicable; "Directory," therefore, will be used to designate this Description of Trust.

Whether a Trust is Executed or Directory a question of Intention.

Forms of Expression which have been considered as not making the Trust Directory.

Instances where the Trust will be considered as Directory, and where not.

Distinction established by—

Leonard v. Earl of Sussex.

Earl of Stamford v. Hobarts.

Papillon v. Voice.

Glenorchy v. Bosville.

Where there is a Direction in a Will that a Conveyance be executed, and the Estates to be given are pointed out, that must be followed.

As regards Personal as well as Real Estates.

True Guide according to Lord Northington.

So in case of a Voluntary Deed containing a Directory Trust.

Stoner v. Curwen, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Distinction between Articles and Will—In the former the plain Object of Consideration in them is the Issue.

What Expressions in a Will will confine Estate to Tenancy for Life.

When Intention ascertained no Distinction between Articles and Wills.

Rochfort v. Fitzmaurice.

General Rule where Issue take Real Estate by Purchase.

Trevor v. Trevor, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Estate of Wife controlled.

Court takes care of Interests of Daughters as well as Sons.

Where the Parties have shown that they know the Distinction, the Court will not vary the Limitation.

Where Articles and Settlement both executed before Marriage.

Rule in Boraston's Case, as applicable to Estate devised to Trustees in Trust to Settle.

Where Trust as to Real Estate in a Will to a line of Issue would create a Perpetuity, the Estate may be tied up as far as the Rules of Law will allow.

Humberstone v. Humberstone.

IN the case of Articles under which real estates are contracted to be settled on the husband and wife, and the issue of the marriage, and in Devises of estates by will, in which a settlement on particular persons and their issue is directed to be made, the respective estates which are to be enjoyed by the Parents and the Issue are frequently left in so much doubt that they can only be settled by the Court of Chancery. There are forms of expression, as was noticed in the former volume (a), which, whether in a deed or in a will, will, under the rule in Shelley's case, give to the parent an estate tail, quite independent of intention, and even though the intention, without reference to legal construction, may appear to have been only to give to the parent an estate for life. In executed trusts, whether by deed or by will, that is, where the estates are actually given, the rule of law must prevail; the apparent intention must give way to those fundamental rules which for ages have served as landmarks in the disposition of property (b); the legislature alone can now interfere to alter the rule of law, whether it affects a trust estate or a legal estate; though, as will presently be mentioned, the testator in a will, or the parties in a settlement may, in this as in all other cases (c), by apt words give an interpretation to the terms they have used differing from that which the law would affix on such terms standing by themselves. Where, either in articles or in wills, the intention is that the estates should be conferred by some instrument to be afterwards executed, and the limitations are not specifically pointed out, the rule of law does not necessarily attach itself upon the expressions used in a trust so created; but the general rule of the Court of Chancery, applicable to the construction of all trusts, namely, what is the intention, is then the governing rule, not only as to whether the trust is to be considered as executed or executory, but, in the latter case, as to what estates or interests are to be given.

Some confusion has been produced by the word "executory" having been in this instance used in reference to this particular description of trust. There are, as will be observed in the following pages, many trusts that are executory, to which the distinction above adverted to can have no application; as where, on the original limitation or by subsequent events, an estate is vested in a trustee, and the only trust to be performed is to convey it to his cestui que trust: also where an estate is conveyed to a trustee, in trust, for sale to pay debts and the like, the trust is executory, but the rule above adverted to can have no application to it. It may be convenient therefore to take the word

(a) Vol. i. pp. 142, 503.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 142, and int. al. Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 206, 222; Jervoise v. Duke of Northumberland, 1 Jac. & Walk. 571, and the cases there cited; Kinch v.

Ward, 2 Sim. & S. 416, 418, and the other cases after cited in this chapter.

(c) See int. al. Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. 401; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, sup. vol. i. pp. 552-3.

“directory” (a), which is often applied to designate such trusts, rather than executory, not as in itself more appropriate, but only for the sake of perspicuity.

It is obvious, from what has been said, that it is often of the greatest importance, in reference to the interests of the issue, to ascertain, in the first place, whether a trust is an executed or a directory trust; and this is a question of intention which is not always very easy to determine: some general rules may be collected from the decisions in regard to wills (b). A gift upon trust for any person is a direct gift, and not an executory trust, even though it be uncertain who is to take under it (c). Where a testator authorizes his trustees to correct any defect or incorrect expression, that does not make the trust executory, or authorize the trustees or the court to model or new mould the limitations, if they are in themselves explicit (d). Where there is a direct devise to a person for life, with remainder to the heirs of the body, adding the words “in tail,” with remainder over, with a declaration that all the aforesaid limitations are intended by the testator to be in strict settlement, that will not, it seems, alone make the gift executory, nor will it justify the court in giving a construction to the limitations, different to that which it would have received without the addition of those words (e).

Where lands are directed to be conveyed or to be purchased and settled (f) upon certain trusts not clearly and specifically pointed out, it may be stated, as an universal rule, that the court will treat every such case as a case of directory trust, and model the limitations accordingly, in conformity with the presumed intention in favour of the issue, where issue are objects of the trust (g). Some of the cases would seem to imply that, in the opinion of the learned judges who decided them, it is sufficient to make a trust directory, if a conveyance is to be executed; but it is conceived, as will be noticed more particularly hereafter, that such is not the rule of the court.

(a) This is Lord Hardwicke's expression, see 5 Mad. 349.

(b) Mr. Lewin has (p. 60) pointed out the forms of expression which have been considered as creating a trust of the one description or the other in wills of personal estate, and see Append. II. Mr. Jarman has a chapter on this subject, vol. ii. p. 252, et seq. to which the reader will do well to refer.

(c) Sir J. Leach, 5 Mad. 277.

(d) Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 511.

(e) Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Beav. 71.

(f) “Certainly the word ‘settled’ does sound something like executory;” Lord Eldon, Burrell v. Crutchley, 15 Ves. 552; Trevor v. Trevor, 13 Sim. 139, was decided on the legal import of the words.

(g) See Papillon v. Voice, 2 P. W. 478; Bastard v. Proby, 2 Cox, 6; Meure v. Meure, 2 Atk. 265; Harrison v. Naylor, 2 Cox, 247; 2 Jarm. on Wills, 257-8; but see Austen v. Taylor, 1 Eden, 361; Amb. 376, infra. In White v. Carter, 2 Eden, 368, there were words indicating an intention that the estates purchased should be settled in strict settlement; in Leonard v. Countess of

The distinction above adverted to, in the construction of directory, as distinguished from executed trusts, was established by the cases of Leonard v. Earl of Sussex (a), and Earl of Stamford v. Hobart (b), before Lord Cowper; Papillon v. Voice (c), before Lord King; and Glenorchy v. Bosville (d), before Lord Talbot. In the case of Papillon v. Voice, the distinction is particularly observable, for Lord King allowed the legal rule to prevail as to that limitation in the will, which gave a direct interest, and was therefore executed; but he allowed the intent to control the legal rule as to that part of the same will which was executory or directory, though the words of the will were, except as to this difference, almost identical (e).

Lord Talbot, in Lord Glenorchy v. Bosville (f), laid down the rule thus: "But there is another question, namely, how far, in cases of trusts executory, as this is, the testator's intent is to prevail over the strength and legal signification of the words; I repeat, I think, in cases of trusts executed, or immediate devises, the construction of the courts of law and equity ought to be the same (g); for there the testator does not suppose any other conveyance will be made; but in executory trusts," added his lordship, "he leaves somewhat to be done; the trusts to be executed in a more careful and accurate manner" (h).

"The true criterion," said Lord Northington, "is this: where the assistance of trustees, which is ultimately the assistance of this court, is necessary to complete a limitation, in that case the limitation in the will not being complete, that is sufficient evidence of the testator's intention that the court should model the limitations: but where the

Sussex, 2 Vern. 526, there were also some special words shewing the same intention. In Lord Glenorchy v. Bosville, Forrest. 3, Lord King seems to have thought the circumstance that there was a direction to convey was sufficient, pp. 5-8; but he considered that case as very like that of marriage articles, p. 9: Lord Talbot seems to have founded his decree simply on the direction to convey, as making it a case of a directory (executory) trust, p. 19. The other principal authorities will be noticed in the following pages. Mr. Jarman has collected and examined these cases, 253, et seq.; according to his text, p. 253, a direction to convey, without more, would appear in his opinion to be sufficient to make a trust a directory trust; but see the Summary, p. 263. Et v. Allanson v. Clitherow, 1 Ves. 24; 1 Atk. 608; 1 Ves. 103; 19 Ves. 366.

(a) 2 Vern. 526; et v. 1 Ves. 149; 2 Atk. 281.

(b) 3 Bro. P. C. 31.

(c) 2 P. W. 478.

(d) Forrest. 3; 1 Atk. 608; that case turned upon the construction to be given to the word "issue," p. 19.

(e) See 1 Jac. & W. 571-2.

(f) Forrest. 19.

(g) V. sup. vol. i. pp. 520, 524. It is a maxim that "in the case of a voluntary devise the court must take it as they find it, and not lessen the estate, or benefit the legatee, although upon like words in marriage articles it might be otherwise." Lord Cowp. 2 Vern. 537, Sweetapple v. Bindon; there money was directed to be laid out and settled.

(h) See 1 Fonbl. 409-10. Mr. Fonblanque has there treated of this subject in an elaborate note, and he has there discussed Lord Hardwicke's apparent denial of the distinction in the case of Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 583, (see Fearne's Conting. Remain. 124, et seq.) which seems to amount merely to this, that Lord Hardwicke objected to the use of the word executory, as peculiarly applicable to trusts of this description; as did Lord Northington, 1 Eden, 366.

trusts and limitations are expressly declared, and nothing is left for the trustees to do but to buy the land, or to convey it only upon the trusts declared, the court has no authority to interfere, and make them different from what they would be at law" (a).

Where there is a direction in a will that a conveyance shall be made, and the estates to be given are pointed out in explicit terms, the authorities establish that, though the trust is clearly, in one sense, directory, the conveyance must be made so as to give such estates as are specifically pointed out in the will (b); and the same construction will be put upon a gift of personal estate (c); it certainly would appear to be difficult to find a principle on which to say, that where a testator has expressed his will, it shall be carried into effect in a different manner than that in which he has expressed it (d).

In Papillon v. Voice (e), before referred to, Lord King declared, (reversing the decision of the Master of the Rolls, as to that part of the case,) that where lands were devised to B. for life, though without impeachment of waste, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the heirs of the body of B., this remainder was within the rule in Shelley's case, and must operate as words of limitation, and consequently create a vested estate tail in B. (f). The reason was, that in the case of a direct devise the particular intent

(a) V. supra, vol. i. p. 525, n. (d); Lord Keeper Henley, Austen v. Taylor, Ambl. 378; S. C., 1 Eden, p. 368. Lord Eldon, 1 Jac. & W. 570, uses similar expressions, and see Wright v. Pierson, 1 Eden, 125. The propriety of the decision in Austen v. Taylor has been doubted, and Lord Eldon is supposed to have disapproved of it; (2 Powell on Devises, by Jarman, p. 445; 2 Jarman on Wills, 256, 261;) but Lord Eldon does not appear to have objected to the principle there laid down. If an intention can plainly be collected, as in Papillon v. Voice, that the first taker should take for life only, Lord Northampton did not deny (1 Ed. 365) that such intention is to be followed, (see 17 Ves. 76.) As regards the direct devise; though the direction to insert trustees to preserve contingent remainders did not prevent the operation of the rule of law, which has nothing to do with intention, see 1 P. W. 478, and 2 Ves. & B. 370; still such a direction is a mark of intention which may be followed in a trust to settle, 2 Ves. & B. 371, v. infra. Lord Northampton, it is to be observed, according to Mr. Eden's Report, did not use the words which Lord Eldon objected to, see 1 Eden, 369, note.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 525, n. (e); and see Seal v. Seal, Prec. Ch. 421; S. C. 1 P. W.

290; Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536; Blackburne v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 370; Synge v. Hales, 2 Ball & B. 508; Britton v. Twining, 3 Mer. 176, a case relating to personal estate, a very important decision; Marshall v. Bousfield, 2 Mad. 166; which, as Mr. Jarman has observed, (Powell on Devises, ii. 450—on Wills, ii. 261,) is a strong case; and he refers to Lord Eldon's subsequent decision, in Jervoise v. Duke of Northumberland, as materially affecting this case, and Blackburne v. Stables, p. 455; 2 Jarm. on Wills, 261; Lord Deerehurst v. Duke of St. Alban's, 5 Mad. 260, Dict. Sir J. Leach; Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 1 Connor & L. 171; 2 Dru. & W.; Franks v. Price, 3 Beav. 211; and see Lewin on Trusts, 56, et seq.; Hill, p. 321-9.

(c) Samuel v. Samuel, ix. Jurist, 222. The words were "to be settled on them for the sole use of themselves and their lawful issue;" the parents were held by the Vice-Chancellor of England to be absolutely entitled.

(d) See 2 Ves. & B. 370, Sir W. Grant's judgment.

(e) 2 P. W. 471.

(f) 2 P. W. 477, supra, p. 131; and see Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. ubi infra, and the other cases in Smith's Original View, p. 224-5, and the cases cited 1 Eden, 364, 365.

is disregarded; it was immaterial that the testator meant the first estate to be an estate for life; I take it, said Lord Thurlow, in a case of this description, that in all cases the testator means so; "I rest," said his lordship, "on what he meant afterwards (a), his paramount intent, which brings into operation the rule of law." But, as has been mentioned before, as to that part of the will where the trust was executory, the same words—with the addition only of a power to jointure (b), which does not necessarily imply an estate for life, as such provisions may be introduced only to prevent delay or the necessity of actually barring the entail (c)—were construed as proper to be executed by limitations in strict settlement; here, no estate being directly given, the Court might look to the words, to see what estate was intended to be given.

In the case also of a voluntary deed containing a directory trust, if the terms are clear and explicit, it would seem that they must be followed: though the trust may be so far executory as to leave something to be done, yet the party may afterwards have become, as it is styled, "his own conveyancer;" that is, he may have so clearly defined his intention as to the limitations to be introduced into the settlement, as to leave no room for ambiguity or doubt (d), which is equally applicable to a will as to a deed. "There is nothing irrational," said Lord Chancellor Sugden, "in the limitation to the son of the settlor in tail: we must suppose that those who use technical words, use them in a technical sense, unless something to the contrary appears" (e). Lord Hardwicke says, generally, that if the words in voluntary settlements lean more strongly to the one construction than the other, it must prevail (f). In a recent case, the Vice-Chancellor of England stated the doctrine thus:—"And, although I apprehend the law to be that, whether the trust be executed or executory, the same construction must be put on the words; yet that means only in those cases where the words which declare the executory trust are so clear in themselves, as to point out what the trust is to be." If the words are doubtful, and the estate is not given, but intended to be given, by some instrument to be prepared, that is, if the trust is directory in the sense as above explained, then the court will look to the general intention, and mould the limitations accordingly (g).

(a) See Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 220; Roe v. Bedford, 4 Maule & S. 364-5, a remarkable case; and see Hargr. note, Co. Lit. 376 b, note (1); Fearne, Cont. Rem. 8th ed. 187.

(b) See 1 P. W. 472.

(c) See 1 Jac. & W. 575.

(d) Lord-Chancellor Sugden, 2 Dru. & W.

21; Lord Eldon, 12 Ves. 238; 19 Ves. 366.

(e) Rochford v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dru. & W. 20, 22, 23: the Lord-Chancellor is there treating the deed as voluntary.

(f) Hodgeson v. Bussey, 2 Atk. 91.

(g) Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Simons, 268; and see Banks v. Le Despencer, 10 Sim. 592, 594, a

It has already been noticed that there is a material ingredient in arriving at the intention in the construction of trusts created by articles which are the result of contract, as regards limitations to parents and their issue in reference to the rule in Shelley's case; namely, as to when the parent shall take an estate tail, or, as regards personal estate, its equivalent, with all its incidents, and when an estate for life only, which does not exist as regards trusts created by will or voluntary conveyance (a). The reason of the distinction is clearly pointed out by Sir John Leach. "You are guided," said he, "to the meaning of the articles by the plain object of consideration in them—the issue of the marriage; but you know nothing of the motive and object of the will but what you can collect from its language (b);" and the same observation will apply to a merely voluntary deed. Conformably to this it has been held, that in a will, a mere direction to settle an estate on one for life, to be followed by a remainder to the heirs male of his body, is not sufficient to make the trust directory only or to induce the court to direct a conveyance in strict settlement (c); there must be some expression of intention that the estate shall be confined to a tenancy for life only (d), as that trustees to preserve contingent remainders shall be interposed or that the estate of the first taker shall be without impeachment of waste or the like (e). But if articles express in plain words that the estate is to be settled on the husband for life, with remainder to the heirs of his body, though nothing can case on a directory clause in a deed for settling estates to go with a title, (p. 578,) before the same judge. "The books are full of instances in which the court has interfered to carry into effect the general intention of the parties of having a settlement made where only general words are used," ibid.; and see Cholmondeley v. Clinton, 4 Bli. N. S. 115; Dict. Lord Redesdale; Brown v. De Laet, 4 Bro. 527.

(a) Vol. i. pp. 525, 526, and the notes. Mr. Jarman has examined the cases in which estates given by will have been directed, contrary to the legal import of the words, to be settled in strict settlement; Powell on Devises, ii. 441, 445: on Wills, ii. 258-66; to which I would refer.

(b) Lord Deerhurst v. Duke of St. Alban's, 5 Mad. 260; but the decision was reversed, 2 Cl. & Finell, 611; and see 1 Ball & B. 25; 2 Ves. & B. 369; and 1 Jac. & W. 574; Macquire v. Scully, 2 Hog. 113; Lewin, p. 49.

(c) But in a direct devise, if there be a limitation for life, followed by a remainder to trustees to preserve, &c., and a remainder to the heirs of the body, still the union will take place, so as to create an estate tail, Colson v.

Colson, 2 Atk. 246-7; 2 Strange, 1125; 1 Jac. & W. 573; 2 Dru. & W. 17; et v. 1 Inst. 22 b, 319 b; and sup. p. 134, n. (a).

(d) See Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 607.

(e) See Bagshaw v. Spencer, 1 Ves. 153; White v. Carter, before Lord Northington and Lord Camden, Ambl. 671; S. C. 2 Eden, 366-8; Bastard v. Proby, 2 Cox, 6, a naked case, there was nothing whatever in the will, except the expression, "as counsel should advise," to warrant the court to interfere to model the settlement; Lord Eldon, then Mr. Scott, conceded the point: and see 2 Dru. & W. 18, 23 to 28 (Rochfort v. Fitzmaurice), and the cases there cited; Stonor v. Curwen, 5 Sim. 269; Thomas v. Bennett, 2 P. W. 342; Honor v. Honor, 1 P. W. 124; West v. Erissey, 2 P. W. 349; Trevor v. Trevor, 1 P. W. 623, 631; S. C. 1 Eq. Abr. 390, more full; Glanville v. Payne, 2 Atk. 39; S. C. Barnardist. 18; Cordwell v. Mackrell, Amb. 515; S. C. 2 Eden, 344. It cannot be inferred from a power of leasing, more beneficial than that which the law would give, that no estate tail was intended, at least where the trust is executed; Lord Harcourt, Bale v. Coleman, 1 be less ambiguous, yet this court, by reason of the implied consideration for the issue in a marriage settlement, would construe the articles as giving an estate for life only; à fortiori when any such expressions as above are inserted: a direction to settle on one and his heirs, as counsel shall advise, or as the executor shall think fit, is a strong collateral circumstance to show that a simple estate tail was not intended (a).

It seems, however, to be a settled rule, that when the court has, in the case of a will, arrived at the conclusion that the trust is to be considered as directory only, there is no difference in regard to the construction as respects the issue, between the case of a directory trust created by will, and of such a trust created by articles or a settlement; in both the general intention will be followed, and the estate will be preserved to the issue, as being, equally with the parents, the objects of consideration (b).

Where lands are devised to a man and his issue, there is no doubt that it is an estate tail (c). But where lands are directed by will to be settled on the parent for life, and after his death on his issue, there the issue will take by purchase; and such a limitation will be modelled so as to give to the parent an estate for life (d), in the same manner as in marriage articles (e); and unless some words can be found in the instrument to confine the estates of the children to estates for life, limitations will be directed to be made, giving the eldest son, and so in succession to the next, and so on to the daughters, estates tail (f).

Lord Viscount Hampden (inter alia) devised his Bedfordshire estates to certain persons, upon trust, that they should settle and convey the

P. W. 145, reversing Lord Cowper's decree; or of jointuring, v. ibid. 143, inf. p. 137.

(a) Bastard v. Proby, ubi sup., 1 Jac. & W. 573; and see Lewin on Trusts, 57, 58, and the cases there cited.

(b) See Sir E. Sugden's judgment, in Rochfort v. Fitzmaurice, 2 Dru. & W. 30; and Lord Eldon's judgment, in Jervoise v. Duke of Northumberland, 1 Jac. & W. 574, in which he refers to his previous expressions in Countess of Lincoln v. Duke of Newcastle, 12 Ves. 218, 227, which had been the subject of much comment, and had been supposed (v. sup. vol. i. p. 526) to amount to a denial that there was any distinction between articles and wills in ascertaining the intention, but which appear only to have meant what is stated in the text; et v. Blackburne v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 369, Sir W. Grant.

(c) Forrest. 11, though there be a proviso for jointuring, unless there be ingrafted words, ibid. et v. infra.

(d) Per Sir Jos. Jekyll, M. R., Meure v. Meure, 2 Atk. 266; and see 5 Sim. 272, and 2 Dru. & W. 18, 23. "The expression 'issue male,' I can mould without difficulty to mean 'first and other sons,'" Lord-Chancellor Sugden, ibid., et v. infra, as to the flexibility of "issue." But see Marshall v. Bousfield, 2 Mad. 166, and Mr. Jarman's remarks on that case, On Wills, ii. 261-2.

(e) Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 373, and in the same manner as where heirs of the body are used as words of purchase; Lord Glenorchy v. Bosville, Forrest. 9; Dod v. Dod, Ambl. 275; the younger children there insisted that they were entitled equally with the eldest son.

(f) Dodson v. Hay, 3 Bro. 408-9.; of the influence of the practice of conveyancing in these cases, see 1 Atk. 608; 2 Atk. 281, 4 Bro. 535.

same to the use of or in trust for George Rice for life, sans waste, with remainder to his issue in tail male, "in strict settlement," upon condition that all persons who should come into possession of the settled estates, should take the name and bear the arms of Trevor. The Vice-Chancellor of England observed "that the words, 'in strict settlement,' were to be referred to the mode in which the first taker was to take, and that they had no effect whatever on the limitations which were to be made to those who were to take after him; the settlement would be equally a strict settlement, whatever might be the form of limitation to the issue of the first taker. Those words," continued his Honour, "mean merely that the limitation of the estate to the first taker shall not be such as to enable him to disappoint the obvious intention of the settlor or devisor, that the children of the first taker should take after him" (a). And his Honour held the words "in tail male" were not descriptive of the persons who were to take, but of the interest which was to be taken; that the issue to take were not the issue male but the issue, and that the estates they were to take were in tail male (b); and his Honour declared that the persons who were to take in remainder after George Rice Trevor, as issue, were his children, both sons and daughters; the mode in which they were to take was to be the subject of further consideration (c).

In a gift of personal estate, and as it appears also of real estate, where, upon the construction of the will or other instrument, the individuals comprised under the description of issue are to take the property as personæ designatæ; then, as is more particularly noticed hereafter, each individual, whether child, grandchild, great grandchild, or more remote descendant, will take individually a share in the property (d).

As the object might be equally defeated by allowing the wife to take an estate tail in her own lands, as by allowing the husband to take an

(a) Trevor v. Trevor, 13 Sim. 138-9.

(b) Ibid. 139.

(c) By the order made (which was on exceptions to the Master's report approving a settlement) his Honour declared that immediately after the limitation to the first and other sons of G. R. Trevor, there ought to be inserted in the draught settlement a limitation to all the daughters as tenants in common in tail with cross remainders between them in tail, ibid. p. 150. This is also an important case, ibid. p. 137, on the subject of in what terms a power to jointure to the extent of a fractional part of the ordinary annual rental is to be carried into effect, as to which see Sugd. on Powers, ii. p. 315-18, 6th ed., p. 296, 7th ed.; and as to the meaning to be given to the words in a shifting clause, that the estates shall go over to the person next entitled, on the person possessed for the time being succeeding to a barony (on this point the case is under appeal to the House of Lords), and see the references in Mr. Simons' note, p. 152; and as to how far and to whom a default in taking the name and arms is to be made to extend, p. 150.

(d) See 2 Jarman, 34-5, et v. infra.

estate tail, the articles in such case will, in the same manner, be controlled by the end and consideration of the settlement (a).

It was formerly held, that where the wife took an estate tail by the articles ex provisione viri, the court would not interpose to settle it otherwise, because, in such case, the wife by 11 Hen. VII. c. 20, was restrained from aliening after the death of her husband, and could not in his lifetime alien without his concurrence (b); and it has been determined that as the power of aliening the estate by the husband and wife jointly is not unreasonable, the Court of Chancery will not control a settlement made in pursuance of articles giving such a power where the articles warrant it (c). The statute of the 11 Hen. VII., as to estates ex provisione viri, has been repealed by the statute 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 92, so that this exception has ceased to be part of the law (d).

In directory trusts in favour of issue generally—where there are no words which restrict the meaning of the term—the court, as is stated above, will take care of the interests, not only of the sons, by proper limitations, but likewise of the daughters (e); but this must be understood, where there is no other provision for the issue female; for if, by the articles, portions are to be raised for the daughters, the court, in ordinary cases, will consider such portions to be the whole extent of the benefit intended for them, and will not interfere to give them a further benefit (f). The court cannot interpolate a limitation to daughters, even in favour of an only child, if the articles only provide for the issue male (g).

If there be a provision in articles that the estate shall go to the issue, in such sort, manner and form, subject to such charges for younger children as the husband shall, by deed or will, direct or appoint; this gives to him the power to divide the estate amongst the children, giving some part amongst the sons, if he pleases, and another part by way of provision for the daughters; still the whole must be divided amongst them, though in what proportions is left to the husband (h).

(a) Jones v. Laughton, 1 Eq. Abr. 392.

(b) Honor v. Honor, 1 P. W. 123; Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 473, 477; Whateley v. Kempt, cited Howel v. Howel, 2 Ves. 358; 2 Fonb. 405.

(c) Highway v. Banner, 1 Bro. 587.

(d) See 2 Dru. & W. 19.

(e) Lord Hardwicke, Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 373, supra, p. 137; and see Oddie v. Woodford, 3 My. & Cr. 600, 610.

(f) This, says Mr. Fonblanque, i. 406, seems to be the principal distinction between the case of Honor v. Honor, 1 P. W. 123, West v. Erissey, 2 P. W. 349, and Powell v. Price, 2 P. W. 535.

(g) Sir A. Hart, McGuire v. Scully, Beatty, 830.

(h) Lord Hardwicke, Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 374.

The intention appearing upon the instrument, or the terms of the contract, may overcome the effect of the general rule in favour of the issue. Where, by articles, part of an estate was limited to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, with remainder to the first and other sons and daughters in tail; and another part was limited to the husband for life, and to the heirs male of his body by that wife; Lord Macclesfield said (a), if this had been the sole limitation, he should have decreed a strict settlement, according to the common rule; but, where the parties have shown they knew the distinction, when to put it out of the power of the father and when to leave it in his power, he would not vary the last limitation, and decreed to the father in tail as to the last, though not as to the first; and Lord Hardwicke approved, and acted on this decision (b). The court, generally speaking, will not, in favour of the issue, extend the provisions of the articles, if the articles make some provision for the issue, though such provision may not affect the whole of the settled estate; for it is not unreasonable for the parents to reserve some power to themselves (c).

If the lands be gavelkind, yet in a directory trust, the court will direct that the limitations shall be to the first and other sons, &c., according to the course of the common law (d).

In all cases where it was necessary, the court would have inserted a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, though not directed by the will (e); now, the necessity for such a limitation is superseded, as has already been mentioned.

If there be articles and a settlement, and both are executed before marriage, as a general rule, the settlement alone can be looked to: if it should differ from the articles, it must be taken as a new agreement; the trust is not executory but executed, excepting so far as the settlement itself may contain any directory or executory trust (f).

But if the settlement, though executed before marriage, purport to be executed in pursuance of the articles, and in all cases where there are articles before marriage and a settlement after marriage, the articles are in effect the binding instrument; and if the settlement

(a) The words in the articles are not precisely those in the text which are used by Lord Hardwicke; see 2 Ves. 358. The case is not well reported.

(b) See Howell v. Howell, 2 Ves. 359.

(c) Chambers v. Chambers, 2 Eq. Ab. 35, § 4; Fitzgibbon, 127; Howell v. Howell, 2 Ves. 358; 2 Fonbl. 406.

(d) Roberts v. Dixwell, 1 Atk. 610.

(e) Humberstone v. Humberstone, as cited 1 Atk. 593; Gower v. Grosvenor, Barnard. 63; Dict. of Lord Hardwicke.

(f) Legg v. Goldwire, Forrest. 20; Partyn v. Roberts, Ambl. 315; and see Marquis of Breadalbane v. Chandos, 2 My. & Cr. 735-6-8-9, 741-2, and Page v. Horne, 9 Beav. 570.

give estates or interests different from those which the court would give on the construction of the articles, the settlement will be reformed (a), not only in favour of sons but of daughters, unless they are provided for by portions or otherwise, independently of the limitations sought to be reformed (b). But this is between parties to the articles and settlement, and their representatives and mere volunteers, and has not, said Lord Hardwicke, "been carried into execution against a purchaser" (c).

It may be here observed, that the rule which was established in Boraston's case, and other subsequent cases,—that where an estate is devised to a person when he shall attain 21, with a gift over in the event of his not attaining that age, there being a gift of the profits during the interval for some purpose, the estate shall vest in the donee subject to the prior chattel interest (d),—is at least equally applicable where an estate is devised to trustees, upon trust to settle the estate in the same terms (e).

Where a testator has directed his trustees to convey an estate, upon trust for whole lines of issue, in such manner that, taken altogether, the trust would create a perpetuity; but the purpose is to a certain extent consistent with the rules of law, it will be so far complied with, that the estate will be settled so as to tie it up to the intended objects, so far as the rules of law will allow; the case of Humberstone v. Humberstone, before referred to (f), affords an instance (g): but, as will be seen on reference to the former volume, the estates directed to be given in the case of Humberstone v. Humberstone would have been modelled in the same way in case it had been an executed trust (h).

(a) Honor v. Honor, 1 P. W. 123, 125; S. C. 2 Vern. 658; Trevor v. Trevor, 1 Eq. Abr. 387; S. C. 5 Bro. P. C. 122; West v. Erissey, in the House of Lords, 2 P. Williams, 349, 355-6; S. C. 1 Bro. P. C. 225, and the notes in Mr. Cox's and in the last edition of P. W. p. 356; Streatfield v. Streatfield, Forrest. 181; Roberts v. Kinsley, 1 Ves. 239; Cusack v. Cusack, 5 Bro. P. C. 116, 120, 121; Randall v. Willis, 5 Ves. 262; and see Barston v. Kelvington, 5 Ves. 603, where a settlement was reformed on the footing of a letter of instructions.

(b) Burton v. Hastings, Gilbert's Eq. Rep. 113; West v. Erissey, ubi sup.; Hart v. Middlehurst, 3 Atk. 371. See the observations of the editors (2 P. W. 356) on Powell v. Price, 2 P. W. 535, and Fearne's Conting. Rem. 103, 6th ed., there referred to, v. sup. p. 139.

(c) Warwick v. Warwick, 3 Atk. 293.

(d) Boraston's case, 3 Co. 16, sup. chap. ii. p. 95; Jarman on Wills, i. pp. 734-740.

(e) Stanley v. Stanley, 16 Ves. 506-8. (It is to be observed that in this case Sir William Grant said (p. 506), "the event upon which an estate is given over cannot determine what is the event on which it is to vest;" ) Phipps v. Williams, 5 Sim. 47, 62; S. C., Phipps v. Ackers, in Dom. Proc. on appeal; as to the residue the decision was different, because there was a condition precedent to be performed. The Vice-Chancellor, 5 Sim. p. 63, does not appear to have approved of Chambers v. Brailsford, 18 Ves. 368.

(f) Humberstone v. Humberstone, 2 Vern. 737, sup. vol. i. p. 531-4; et supra, chap. ii. p. 126.

(g) See Mortimer v. West, 2 Simons, 274, 282.

(h) And see Prior on Issue, p. 60, et seq.

SECTION III.—Some other Matters relating to Executory Trusts,— Usual Powers.

General Rule as to "Usual Powers" laid down by Vice-Chancellor of England, in Hill v. Hill, 6 Sim.

Power for Tenant for Life to appoint new Trustees.

Power to grant Leases.

Precedents for carrying out a Directory Trust, for settling Estates to go along with a Title.

Lord Dorchester v. Lord Effingham.

Banks v. Lord Le Despenser.

Tenancy in Common more favoured in the Court of Chancery than Joint Tenancy.

AN important question frequently arises upon articles, which provide that "all usual and proper powers" shall be introduced (a). The general rule applicable to such cases has been laid down by the Vice-Chancellor of England (b). In the case before his Honour express powers were given, and then followed the direction that all usual and proper powers should be introduced. The question was whether these words authorized the introduction of a power of sale and exchange. "There is a palpable distinction," said his Honour, "between inserting in a settlement powers for the management and enjoyment of the settled estates, which are beneficial to all parties, and powers which confer personal privileges on particular parties, such as powers to jointure, to raise money for any particular purpose, &c. But powers of leasing, of sale and exchange, and where there is joint property, or there are any mines, or any land fit for building purposes, powers of partition, of leasing mines, and of granting building leases, are powers for the general management and better enjoyment of the estates; and such powers are beneficial to all parties:" and his Honour directed that a power of sale and exchange should be introduced (c).

(a) The cases on this subject are stated and examined by Sir E. Sugden on Powers, ii. 484, et seq.; Hill on Trustees, p. 483, et seq.; and Lewin on Trusts, p. 61, et seq.

(b) Hill v. Hill, 6 Simons, 144-5. It is to be remarked that in the case of Trafford v. Trafford, 3 Atk. 347, the question of remoteness, as Lord Eldon remarks, 12 Ves. 233, was overlooked, or at least not noticed, as to which, v. supra.

(c) And see Williams v. Carter, Sugd. on Powers, Append. No. 23, p. 635. In Lindon v. Fleetwood, 6 Sim. 152, a power to appoint new trustees was directed to be inserted under a distinct clause not connected with that by which the specific powers were given. The cases of Wheate v. Hall, 17 Ves. 80, Brewster v. Angell, 1 Jac. & W. 625, have rendered it doubtful whether a power of sale and exchange is to be introduced as a matter of

A power for a tenant for life to appoint new trustees is certainly an usual power (a). It has been held that where the articles expressly specify that there shall be a power to grant leases for twenty-one years, the general words will not authorize the insertion of a power to grant building leases, however beneficial it might be from the situation of the property in reference to circumstances which may have subsequently occurred (b).

The cases of Lord Dorchester v. Lord Effingham (c) and Banks v. Lord Le Despencer (d) afford precedents for the mode in which directory trusts for settling estates to go along with a title are to be executed; but this subject will be noticed hereafter. I shall conclude this branch of the subject by observing, that in a directory trust, words importing joint tenancy may be construed so as to give estates in common, the latter kind of estate being most favoured in the Court of Chancery (e): but it may now be considered as the settled general rule of the Court of Chancery, that in a direct gift, what would confer an estate in joint tenancy at common law will also, in the case of a legacy as well as in other cases, give an estate or interest in joint tenancy; this court in such cases having abandoned the rule of the civil law, which does not allow of survivorship in legacies (f), and the Ecclesiastical Courts would no doubt adopt the same construction.

course in every case where articles are to be carried into execution and the will is silent on the subject; Sir E. Sugden on Powers, ii. 484, considers that the effect of those cases is that such a power cannot be implied.

(a) Lord Eldon, Brewster v. Angell, 1 Jac. & W. 628.

(b) Pearce v. Baron, Jac. 158. Waterloo Bridge has since been built in the vicinity.

(c) 3 Beavan, 180, in note.

(d) 10 Simons, 576; 11 Simons, 508. On the latter hearing, a question was raised whether a protector of the settlement should be introduced in the settlement made according to the directions of the court: the Vice-Chancellor, after discussing the provisions of the act as to protectors, declared that in that case, the trustees not desiring it, a protector was neither necessary nor proper, 527; and see Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 346.

(e) Heathe v. Heathe, 2 Atk. 122; Synge v. Hales, 2 Ball & B. 506-8; and see 9 Ves. 596-7; and Marryatt v. Townley, 1 Ves. 103.

(f) Sir Joseph Jekyll thought that there was nothing unreasonable in joint tenancy, as it might be severed (though not of course by an infant); and in the case before him, which has been uniformly followed, he refused to be bound by the civil law doctrine, and he held the legatees to be joint tenants, as they would have been by the same words at law. Cray v. Willis, 2 P. W. 530-1; et v. int. al. 9 Ves. 598; 15 Ves. 371; and Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 206; Withy v. Mangles, 4 Beav. 368, there the father, mother and child took under a limitation in a settlement to "next of kin," as joint tenants. Persons who take at different times cannot take as joint tenants, so that where the gift is to one for life, and after his decease to his children when they arrive at 21, the children take as tenants in common, Woodgate v. Unwin, 4 Sim. 129. In Vaughan v. Marquis of Headfort, the words of the bequest were 40,000*l.* in the Three per Cent. Reduced, to the Marquis of Headfort and his children, to be secured for their use; the Vice-Chancellor of England held, that under the first words the marquis and his children, of whom he had six (infants) at the death of the testatrix, would be joint tenants; but the latter words, as securing could not apply to the father, gave a life interest to the marquis, and that all his children, born and to be born, would take the corpus after his death, and according to the above rule they would take as tenants in common.

CHAPTER IV.

LIMITATIONS OF PERSONAL ESTATE IN RESPECT OF THE CLAIMS OF CHILDREN AND OTHER DESCENDANTS, AND THE INCIDENTAL DOCTRINES RELATING TO SUCH LIMITATIONS.

SECTION I.—Limitations of Personal Estate to Parents and their Issue, which confer an Absolute Interest on the Parent, and those on which Issue take as Purchasers, and of Limitations over for default of Issue, and the like.

General Rule—Words which would give Estate Tail in Real Estate give absolute Interest in Personal Estate.

Gift to a Person and his Issue, or with Remainder to his Issue, and other Instances.

Knight v. Ellis, Lord Thurlow.

Attorney-General v. Bright, Lord Langdale.

Any Gift over on Failure of Issue not limited to some Period within due Limits void.

Gift to Issue living at the Death of Tenant for Life.

Whether a Devise of a Term to a Man for Life, and afterwards to his Issue, forms an Exception to the General Rule.

General Rule may be controlled by Intention clearly and properly expressed in the Instrument.

Legal Acceptation of the word "Issue" (in note).

Conflicting Cases on the Subject of Limitations of Personal Estate in Remainder (in note).

Peacock v. Spooner, before Lord Chancellor Jefferies.

Webb v. Webb, before Lord Hardwicke.

Bartlett v. Green, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Stat. 1 Victoria, c. 26, sect. 28 and 29, set out.

The Effect of these Clauses on Gifts over in default of Issue as regards Real Estate and Personal Estate.

Observations of Mr. Jarman on this subject ;

And of Mr. Hayes.

Who will take under a Gift of Personal Estate to Issue as Purchasers.

When Issue is a word of Purchase it is synonymous with Descendants.

General Rule that Children, Grandchildren, &c., when Purchasers, take per capita as Joint Tenants.

Where Issue will take as Tenants in Common.

IN connexion with the subject of the interests of children and other descendants, as regards the carrying out of executory trusts, it may be convenient here to introduce a little more at large the doctrines as to trusts of personal estate, so far as regards the rights of children and other descendants, and the incidental doctrines in regard to limitations of personal estate, which have been occasionally adverted to in the preceding Chapters (a).

The general rule is, that where in a gift of personal estate the words would raise an estate tail in real estate expressly or by implication, they will, as no recovery can be suffered, give the absolute property in personalty, unless the donor expresses a clear intention to the contrary (b); if there be no distinct unequivocal expressions to restrain the received construction of the words the consequence must prevail, whatever may be the apparent intention (c).

Where there is a devise of real estate simply to a person and his issue (d), or to a person for life with remainder to his issue or issue male (e), it now seems to be pretty well settled by authority that such a gift will, in each case, confer an estate tail. The key to these decisions, and which must always be looked to in their application to any particular case, is, as has already been adverted to, because there is no other mode by which the testator's bounty can be made to flow to and embrace the whole range of the intended objects (f): a particular expressed intent that the first taker should take for life only, is therefore in these cases, where necessary, sacrificed to the general intent that all the issue should take (g). In like manner, according to the doctrine established in Wild's case, a devise to a man and his chil-

(a) For the particular doctrines on this subject and the cases illustrating them, I beg to refer to the learned works of Mr. Prior and Mr. Jarman, which will be repeatedly quoted. The cases on this subject are not always easily to be reconciled.

(b) Fordyce v. Ford, 2 Ves. J. 539; Lyon v. Mitchell, 1 Mad. 475; Fearne, Ex. Dev. 461, 463, 478, 480, 490, there cited; and see Houston v. Hughes, 5 Russ. 140.

(c) Bigge v. Bensley, 1 Bro. 190; Chandless v. Price, 3 Ves. 101, 102, Lord Rosslyn: et v. int. alia, Richards v. Lady Bergavenny, 2 Vern. 324; Lord Ellenborough, 12 Ves. 224, in Dom. Proc.; Gower v. Grosvenor, Barnardist. 56, 58, 59; S. C. 5 Mad. 338, 340; Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 202; Britton v. Twining, 3 Meriv. 183: see as to the exceptions, Prior on Issue, pp. 174-5; and 2 Jarman on Wills, 362.

It is to be remembered that things which are consumed in their use, as wine, &c., belong to the first taker, however given, sup. vol. i. p. 196; Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 691; so that if the first taker dies in the life of the testator, the legacy lapses though the things are given over. See analogous case, addit. note ii.

(d) See Jarman on Wills, ii. 329; Lampley v. Blower, 3 Atk. 398, Lord Hardwicke.

(e) King v. Melling, 2 Lev. 58; Shaw v. Weigh, 1 Eq. Ab. 184, § 28; Ward v. Bevil, 1 Y. & J. 512; Lees v. Mosley, 1 Y. & Coll. 610; admitted arg., 13 Simons, 134. See Prior on Issue, p. 95; and Smith's Original View, annexed to his edition of Fearne, p. 248, et seq.

(f) Int. al., Hodgeson v. Bussey, 2 Atk. 91; "for the words cannot take effect in any other way," Lord Hardw., Buffar v. Bradford, 2 Atk. 222; et v. Dunk v. Fenner, 2 Russ. & M. 556, where Sir J. Leach says, following Lord Eldon in Jesson v. Wright, ubi sup., that the direction that the heirs shall take as tenants in common does not manifest an intention to exclude any heirs of the body, ib. p. 566. It is to be borne in mind that the union under the rule in Shelley's case only takes place where the estate for life and the remainder to the heirs of the body or issue are both legal or both equitable, Fearne, Cont. R. 52, 58-9; and see Roe v. Grew, 2 Wils. 322; S. C. Wilm. R. 272; Jarm. ii. 336.

(g) See Roe v. Grew, ubi sup., a leading authority; Jarm. ii. 337.

dren will, if he have none at the death of the testator (a circumstance that is immaterial where the gift is to him and his issue) (a), confer upon him an estate tail (b). Gifts in these terms, unless there be something to control them, will also, according to the preponderance of authority, (for, as will be seen, there are conflicting cases as regards some of these forms of expression,) confer the absolute interest in personal estate: indeed as regards personal estate (as Mr. Jarman has observed) the latter form of gift does not require the aid of the rule in Wild's case to give the property absolutely to the parent, he not having children (c). So where personal estate has been given by direct gift, or to trustees in trust for another, in such manner that it was to go to or be enjoyed by a person and the heirs of his body,—to him for life and after his decease to the heirs of his body or to the heirs male of his body, and with a gift over if he should have no such heirs not confined to the time of his death (d),—to the children of a person and their issue share and share alike, and with the addition to take per stirpes,—to the children of a person and their children after them,—to a person and his issue male or to his issue male and female,—to a person to be secured to her and the heirs of her body (e); each of these forms of expression in wills has been held in the particular cases to amount to a gift of the absolute interest in personal estate (f). “Heirs of the body,” said Lord Cowper, “must not, as to land, be construed to be words of limitation and made an estate tail; and as to goods, be only words of designation of the persons entitled to take the goods” (g).

(a) 2 Jarm. ubi sup.; see however Prior on Issue, 36. Under special circumstances the gift to the issue may be in substitution for that to the ancestor, as to which see Prior, ii. p. 54, et seq.; Hedges v. Harpur, 9 Beav. 479.

(b) Wild's case, 6 Rep. 17; Forrest. 9; Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545, (where all the previous authorities relating to devises to children are observed upon,) and the cases collected 1 Jac. & W. 91, note (a) to Ex parte Williams. If land be devised to husband and wife, remainder to their children, in that case, although they have no child at the time, every after-born child as it is born will take by way of remainder, for the intent is that their children should not take immediately, which distinguishes the case from a devise to a man and his children, &c. Wild's case, 17 b, v. 2 Jarm. 330. As to limitations to “Children,” &c. generally, see 2 Jarm. 307, et seq.

(c) And see Fearne, 488, supra, 126; 1 P. W. 666; and Read v. Willis, 1 Coll. 86.

(d) Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 202.

(e) Crawford v. Trotter, 4 Mad. 362.

(f) I have taken most of these latter instances from the last edition of Roper on Legacies, p. 1522, where the authorities down to Dick v. Lacey, 8 Beav. 214; Hedges v. Harper, x. Jur. 578, (also 9 Beav. 483,) are collected; et v. Samuel v. Samuel, ix. Jur. 222, supra: Butter v. Ommaney, 4 Russ. 70, is a leading authority on the subject, see 2 Dow. & Cl. 340. It is to be observed, that in some of the instances the construction was given expressly upon the construction of the whole will: see Snowball v. Proctor, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 483: it is not to be taken that in every case, without reference to the context and circumstances, the effect above stated will be given to these expressions.

(g) Richards v. Lady Bergavenny, ubi sup.; and see Webb v. Webb, 1 P. Wms. 132; Theobridge v. Kilburn, 2 Ves. 236; and the note to Hodgeson v. Bussey, 2 Atk. 89, where the other cases are collected; and Bartlett v. Green, 13 Simons, 218, 226.

There are two cases on this subject which require particular notice. In Jacobs v. Amyatt, before Lord Rosslyn, (A. D. 1794,) where a testatrix gave the residue of her real and personal property (she having no real estate) to A., to be placed at interest until her age of 21 or day of marriage, and then the whole thereof with the accumulations, to be paid to her during her life, and after her death unto the heirs of her body, equally to be divided between them, share and share alike; and for default of such issue, or on the death of A. before her age of 21 or day of marriage, she gave such residue to her, the testatrix's, brother and his heirs for ever; Lord Rosslyn, in giving judgment (a), said, "It would be extravagant to extend the rule to cases where against the common import of the words an estate tail is raised in real estate, by an ingenious construction to effectuate the general intention," (viz. that the property should go in a course of descent to all the issue.) "That," said his lordship, "is not the intention here;" and he decided that A. took a life interest only. This case, which has been considered as overruled, can only perhaps be supported on the distinction taken by Lord Rosslyn as to the rejection of words of distribution as applied to real and to personal estate; "here," said his lordship, "the rejection would cross the intention, not support it": the distinction between an express and an implied estate tail, as Lord Rosslyn himself in another case admitted, had been exploded (b).

In Knight v. Ellis, the testator directed that his trustees should receive the rents of his estates till his grandnephew should attain 21, and place them out at interest, and should permit his grandnephew, when he attained 21, to receive the interest of the moneys to arise from such rents during his life, and after his death he gave such moneys to the issue male of his grandnephew, and in default of such issue (not if there should be no such issue) he gave the moneys to his three nieces, who, or their representatives, were the plaintiffs in the suit; the grandnephew had attained 21 and died without issue. Lord Thurlow said, if it is to go by limitation, then it vested in the ancestor, if by purchase

(a) Jacobs v. Amyatt, 4 Bro. 542. The judgment is more fully stated in the note to 13 Ves. 480, and the facts in 1 Mad. 376. Lord Alvanley had made the same decree at the Rolls; and see Clare v. Clare, infra.

(b) Mr. Jarman, presuming that it did not proceed on any such distinction, (which is not so pointedly noticed in Brown's report,) considers it to have been overruled, Powell on Dev. by Jarman, ii. 634, and Jarman on Dev. ii. 491-2; (as to the import of the words equally to be divided, &c., as regards real estate, see Dunk v. Fenner, supra;) in many instances (v. int. al. infra, p. 148, 150) different rules are applied to personal estate; see, on this subject, Mr. Jarman's own statement, On Wills, ii. 497. Lord Rosslyn, in Chandless v. Price, 3 Ves. J. 102, (decided two years after, 1796,) considered the distinction between an express estate tail and an estate tail by implication as exploded; his decision in Jacobs v. Amyatt was not cited, but the decision in the latter case is not incompatible with the judgment in Chandless v. Price.

all the sons must take; he did not remember a case in which the first taker took for life only, and the subsequent takers took by limitation (a); his lordship held that the issue in this case would have taken as purchasers, and that in the event that had happened, namely, there being no issue to take, the plaintiffs were entitled under the gift over. Lord Langdale, in a late case, (without however expressing any opinion as to the authority of this or any other of the cases cited,) on the general principle adverted to in this section,—namely, that the words would have created an estate tail in land,—virtually overruled the case of Knight v. Ellis, so far as it decided that the first taker took only a life interest (b).

If the gift be to a person for life, with remainder to his issue living at his death, there all the individuals may be ascertained by reference to the particular period, and they may accordingly take by purchase, the parent therefore will take an estate for life, and the issue will take per capita, as personæ designatæ (c); and, according to Mr. Jarman, a gift of personal estate to a man and his issue living at his death, which as to real estate, according to the authorities, confers an estate tail, would now be construed to give an estate for life to the parent, and a contingent interest to his issue living at his death (d).

Mr. Fearne notices an exception to the general rule above stated, in regard to a term. If there be a devise of a term to a man for his life, and afterwards to his issue, “it seems,” says Mr. Fearne, “this does not enlarge the estate to A., but after his death the whole will vest in the issue” (e). In modern times, though there has been an

(a) 2 Bro. 575-7; et v. supra, Jacobs v. Amyatt, 4 Bro. 542.

(b) Attorney-General v. Bright, 2 Keen, 59. Mr. Jarman approves of this decision, ii. 496; probably it was his strictures on the case of Knight v. Ellis, in his edition of Powel on Devises, ii. p. 636, et seq. that produced it: Mr. Prior (p. 172, et seq.) has endeavoured to support Knight v. Ellis, on reason and authority; and, but for modern authority, his reasons perhaps would be unanswerable.

(c) As to who will take under the word issue, v. infra, in this chapter.

(d) Jarman on Wills, ii. 330, referring to Letheullier v. Tracy, Ambl. 208; 3 Atk. 774, 784, 1 Hanmer's Cases, 56, S. C.; and see note (k).

(e) Fearne, Ex. Dev. 495, citing Warman v. Seaman, Finch, 280; Clare v. Clare, Forrest. p. 25. In that case the trust was for the testator's son, Thomas Clare, for his life, and after his death in trust for the issue male of his son Thomas, lawfully begotten, for so many years as such issue male should live; and when the issue male of Thomas should be extinct then in trust for the testator's second son William, for his life, with remainder in like manner to his issue: it was held that Thomas the son took for life only, and though he never had any child, the limitation to the second son was void as too remote. Lord Talbot there says, as this is a leasehold which, without a particular provision, can never descend; as here is an express estate for life, it shall not be enlarged by any subsequent words; which is in effect Lord Rosslyn's and Lord Thurlow's doctrine in Jacobs v. Amyatt and Knight v. Ellis, supra: and see Lord Hardwicke's observations in his judgment in Williams v. Jekyl, 2 Ves. 684. But these observations do not seem to be peculiarly applicable to an estate for lives or to a term, inclination, as regards all cases of bequests of personal estate, not to follow in all its rigour the construction which makes, in particular cases, 'issue' and more particularly 'children,' in devises of real estate, words of limitation (a), I do not find that this distinction has been recognized; indeed it may be doubted whether there is any solid foundation for such a distinction (b); the reason given for making the issue purchasers in the limitation of a term, seems to apply to every description of property not strictly capable of descent (c).

Nothing can be clearer than that where there is a remainder of personal estate limited to one, after what would be an estate tail in real estate vested in another, that remainder will be void, as it would tend to a perpetuity (d), and besides it is, in effect, a remainder after a gift of the entire property. However, there may be a gift over in event following such a gift, in the way of executory devise (e); but it must be confined to a dying without issue, at the death of the parent, (as to which the late Statute of Wills has introduced, as will presently be seen, a material alteration in the rules of construction,) or the happening of some event which must happen, if at all, within the prescribed limit, else it will be void (f). A gift by will of personal estate after as distinguished from any other personal estate. Clare v. Clare has, as after mentioned, been impugned as regards the gift over.

(a) See 2 Jarman, 316, 308, n. (e), 498: Gawler v. Cadby, Jac. R. 346, and Wilkinson v. South, 7 T. R. 555, were decided on a liberal construction of the gifts over; Heron v. Stokes, 2 Dr. & W. 107. In Stone v. Maule, 2 Sim. 490, the gift over was supported on the plain intention; and see Lord Hardwicke's dict. in Elliot v. Jekyl, 2 Ves. 683, and 2 Atk. 222. In Crawford v. Trotter, 4 Mad. 361, but which does not appear to have been argued, Sir John Leach applied a different rule as to a gift of personal estate (stock) to a parent and her children, to what would have applied to the same devise of real estate; Morse v. Morse, 2 Sim. 485, was a special case.

(b) The case of Warman v. Seaman, supra, Finch, R. p. 280, and 2 Ch. Ca. 209, arose upon a voluntary deed with a directory trust, not a devise, though the same principle perhaps would apply to both, (v. ib. 210): the decision only established that a devise over after a vested quasi estate tail in personalty could not take effect. The decision in the case of Clare v. Clare, supra, has been impugned by subsequent authorities, see Phipps v. Lord Mulgrave, 3 Ves. 616, Lyon v. Mitchell, 1 Mad. 486, and the authorities cited in the note, Forrest. p. 27, et v. supra, note (e). Sir Thomas Plumer evidently did not consider that there was any such distinction as above adverted to, see 1 Mad. 475, and the additional note i. to this chapter; and see Bartlett v. Green, 13 Simons, infra, p. 152. Lord Hardwicke, in Hodgeson v. Bussey, ubi sup. said the reason the words "heirs of the body" vest an estate tail in the first taker, either on the limitation of a freehold or upon a term, is that they include "issue" in infinitum; the reason would of course also apply to the word "issue."

(c) See 1 P. W. 667, and supra, p. 148, note (e), inf. 150 (c).

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Mad. 340; Salkeld v. Vernon, 1 Eden, 71; Lepine v. Ferrard, 2 R. & M. 387; Tothill v. Pitt, in Dom. Proc., 7 Bro. P. C. 453, affirming Sir T. Sewell's decision, reversing that of the Lords Commissioners, 1 Mad. 511.

(e) See Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. W. 686, and see the additional notes to this chapter.

(f) V. int. al. Donn v. Penny, 1 Meriv. 20; Attorney-Gen. v. Bright, 2 Keen, 59; Lepine v. Ferrard, 2 R. & M. 388; et v. Hodson v. Ball, 14 Sim. 558; Garratt v. Cockerell, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 501, et seq. See Elliot v. Jekyl, Fearne, 499, 2 Ves. 681, a case of a limitation over of a lease for lives, in default of issue, in a purchase deed.

a contingent limitation in tail which does not vest, will be supported (a). And as regards personal estate, words denoting a failure of issue following a gift to children, have been generally construed to refer to the objects of that gift, so that the gift over on such a limitation was good before the late statute. But where the plain intention is that the real and personal estate should go together, the words must receive the same construction as to both estates (b).

The general rule that the words "heirs of the body" and "issue" are to be taken as words of limitation, may upon the circumstances and the intention of the parties, to be clearly collected from the instrument, be construed as words of purchase, even as regards real estate(c). Thus,

(a) Phipps v. Lord Mulgrave, 3 Ves. 613, 616; Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. W. 686, (see this case in the additional note to this chapter, p. 162); Salkeld v. Vernon, 1 Eden, 70, 71. "It is like the limitation of two fees simple to start at the same time upon different events, as in the case of Luddington v. Kime, 1 Salk. 224, Lord Raymond, 203;" Lord Northington, ibid. Lord Hardwicke, in Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Mad. p. 341, took the distinction between a vested gift to a person in esse in tail, in which case he admitted there could be no remainder, and a contingent gift on which there might be an effectual remainder, if in the event there should be no person to take under the first gift; and see Target v. Gaunt, 1 P. W. 432; Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 3 P. W. 261; Pinbury v. Elkin, 1 P. W. 563; and 13 Ves. 484, Lord Eldon; and Fearne, Cont. R. 7.

(b) 2 Jarm. 362; 2 Russ. & My. 567, Sir J. Leach.

(c) Although by all the cases, where the estate is so given in a will, that after the first taker it is to go to every person who can claim as heir to the first taker, the words "heirs of the body," must be construed to be words of limitation, (see Prior on Issue, 24, 25; Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 282; Seaward v. Willock, 5 East, 205-7; and Jesson v. Wright, 2 Bli. 1;) in many cases the courts of law and of equity, upon the construction of wills, have construed the words "heirs of the body" to mean children, so as to preclude the operation of the rule in Shelly's case, where that construction has appeared upon the whole will to be the meaning attached to those words by the testator. Doe v. Laming, 2 Burr. 1100; Doe v. Ironmonger, 3 East, 533; Grattan v. Howard, 6 Taunt. 94; Doe v. Jesson, 5 Maule & S. 95; and Lees v. Mosley, 1 Yo. & Col. 606.

In Jesson v. Wright, 2 Bli. 1, (where the decision in Doe v. Goff, 11 East, 668, was overruled, and Doe v. Jesson, 5 Maule & S. 95, was reversed, on the ground that the general or paramount intention must prevail over the particular intent, 2 Bli. p. 51, "thus enabling the first taker to destroy both the general and the particular intent," ibid. p. 55;) it was admitted by Lord Eldon that the words heirs of the body, which must generally be construed according to their legal meaning, will yield to a clear particular intent that the estate should only be for life, and that may be from the effect of superadded words or any expression shewing a particular intent of the testator; but that expression must be clearly intelligible and unequivocal, ib. p. 53; Lord Redesdale, p. 57, to same effect; Jones v. Morgan, 1 Bro. 21, et v. 91; Right v. Creber, 5 Barn. & C. 866, 872; Dodson v. Hay, 3 Bro. 408; Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 371; North v. Martin, 6 Sim. 266; Dunk v. Fenner, 2 R. & M. 566.

The word "issue," one of the most vexed words in the books, (Clive, J., Roe v. Grew, 2 Wils. 324,) which in a deed is a word of purchase, and gives an estate for life only, though generally used in a will as a word of limitation, Sir T. Plumer, 1 Mad. 473, Tate v. Clarke, 1 Beav. 105, is not so fully a word of limitation as heirs of the body (but see Hockley v. Mawbey, 1 Ves. J., 149; Lord Thurlow, Roe v. Grew, ubi sup. Gould, J., and 2 Jarm. 329); it may be a word of limitation or of purchase in a will, according to the context; (see Prior on Issue, pp. 26, 36, et seq. 1 Mad. 473; Ryan v. Cowley, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 7; and see Smith's Orig. View, 249, et seq., et v. supra, vol. i. p. 543.) "There is no technical word in a will," said Lord Northington, "if the testator's intention be plain the court will modify and effectuate his expressions," King v. Burchell, 1 Ed. 431. As to where "their lawful heirs" may mean heirs of the body or issue, see Harris v. Davis, 1 Col. 423. "Issue" is more strongly a word of limitation than "child," Prior, ubi sup. The word "issue" may have a different construction in distinct in the case of North v. Martin, by the settlement an estate was settled to the use of the heirs of the body of the husband by his wife, and to their heirs, and “if more children than one equally to be divided amongst them.” The Vice-Chancellor of England said, there were all the elements of a case which would call upon the court to decide that the first taker took an estate in tail special, notwithstanding the super-added words (a); but then the words “and if more children than one” must be taken as interpretative of the words “heirs of the body,” and confine them to children, so that they would take in remainder in fee as tenants in common, and a gift over in default of such issue would have been effectual. The children were declared to be absolutely entitled in remainder to the leaseholds which were settled in the like manner (b). Lord Hardwicke remarked, “that as words of limitation are not properly used in terms for years, or other personal estate, it was not to be wondered at that such construction should have been found in so many cases as regards personal estate” (c).

clauses in the same will, according to the context; Hedges v. Harpur, 9 Beav. 479; Head v. Randall, vii. Jur. 299; though the general rule is to give the same words the same meaning, Ridgeway v. Munkettrick, 1 Dru. & W. 84.

(a) And see on this point, Franklyn v. Lay, 2 Bli. 59, note; King v. Burchell, Ambl. 379; S. C. 1 Ed. 432. Lord Northington there says, there is not a case in the books where “issue” or “heirs” has been used in the plural number, and words of limitation added that they have been taken as words of purchase; (but see the observations on this case, 13 Ves. 481, note;) Kinch v. Ward, 2 Sim. & S. 409, 418; Doe v. Harvey, 4 Barn. & Cr. 610.

(b) North v. Martin, 6 Sim. 270.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Hodgson v. Bussey, 2 Atk. 89. That was a case of a voluntary settlement; the case was decided upon the words “their executors,” &c. being added to the words heirs of the body, which turned them into words of purchase; and see Jeffery v. Honeywood, 4 Mad. 398, a devise of real estate (see Prior, pp. 42-3); North v. Martin, 6 Simons, 270, settlement of real and personal estate; Ryan v. Cowley, Lloyd & G. Temp. Sugd. 7, case of a will of personal estate, where the effect of the word issue was controlled from the context; and see Fearne, Ex. Dev. 490 n., 492 et seq. Peacock v. Spooner, 2 Vern. 43, 195; 2 Freem. 114, was the leading case on this subject; by marriage settlement a term of 900 years was assigned to trustees, in trust to permit and suffer the husband and wife, and the survivor of them, to receive the profits for so many years of the term as they or the survivor should happen to live, and after their decease to the use of the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband to be begotten. It was decided by Lord Chancellor Jefferies that the words heirs of the body were words of limitation; the Lords Commissioners, in 1690, held, apparently on the ground that it was a case of a marriage settlement which would let in the presumed intention in favour of the children, that they were words of purchase; and their decree was affirmed by the House of Lords, see 2 Vernon, 196. This case was followed in Dafforne v. Dafforne, ibid. p. 362, 2 Freem. 231, where, as reported in Freeman, the words were the same; but those cases have since been departed from in so many instances, see Butterfield v. Butterfield, 1 Ves. 135; Garth v. Baldwin, 2 Ves. 660; Theebridge v. Kilburne, 2 Ves. 233; Webb v. Webb, 1 P. W. 132, 135, that they can hardly be considered as governing any but precisely similar cases; see Lyon v. Mitchell, 1 Mad. 484, in the additional note to this chapter, where Sir Thomas Plumer has minutely examined the cases; and see Fearne, Cont. Rem. 493.

In Webb v. Webb, now the leading authority as to the general rule in cases of this kind (1 Mad. 485), by a marriage settlement the father of the husband assigned a term of 1000 years to trustees, upon trust to permit the son to enjoy it so long as he should live; on his death to permit the heirs of the bodies of the husband and the intended wife to hold the premises for the remainder of the term; and for want of such issue to be enjoyed by the right heirs of the husband. Lord K. Har-

By the law as it stood before the late Statute of Wills, where real estate was given to a man for life, and if he should die without heirs of his body or without issue general or special then over to some other person, and there were no words from which, "upon fair demonstration," an intention could be collected to limit the generality of the expressions (a), the donee would have taken an estate tail by implication (b), and under the same limitations of personal estate, as before observed, the donee was held to be entitled to an absolute interest in the property (c); and though it has been held that no estate could be raised by implication on these words, so as to destroy an express estate given (d), yet that even has been done to effectuate the general intention (e).

court, reversing the decree of the Master of the Rolls, held, taking various not very material distinctions between that case and Peacock v. Spooner, that the term vested absolutely in the husband.

The authority of Webb v. Webb has been supported, and indeed extended, in a very late case before the Vice-Chancellor of England; Bartlett v. Green, 13 Simons, 218; there a settlement was executed, which was recited to be in pursuance of an agreement that the remainder of a lease of 1000 years should be settled on John Cossens for life, and after his decease on his intended wife for her jointure, and after their several deceases on the issue of the marriage, and in default of such issue on William Cossens and his heirs, &c. during the remainder of the term. By the settlement the term was limited in trust to permit John Cossens to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the premises for so many years of the term as should expire in his lifetime, then in trust for Margaret Crofts the intended wife, in like manner, and after their several deceases to permit the heirs of the body of John Cossens on the body of said Margaret, for so many years of the term as should expire in the life or lives of him, her, or them respectively, to receive the rents, &c. for so many years of the term as should expire in the life or lives of him, her, or them respectively; and in default of issue of John Cossens and Margaret, his intended wife as before limited, in trust for John Cossens, his heirs, executors, and administrators. There were three children of the marriage. It was contended that, this being a settlement, the words heirs of the body were words of purchase; but the Vice-Chancellor considering that there was no difference between this case and Webb v. Webb, he held that the term vested in the husband absolutely.

In Roper on Legacies, 1523-6, last ed., most of the cases are collected in which the decisions have turned upon superadded words and particular expressions, as against the ordinary construction of "heirs of the body," and the like; and as to what superadded words will not vary the construction of a devise, see Prior on Issue, pp. 34, 127, 130, 131; Smith's Orig. View, 252, and the references; and see Prior, 53, 192-5; 2 Jarman, 331, et seq. 338, 345; Tate v. Clarke, 1 Beav. 100: as to what words will have that effect, see 2 Jarman, 351; and int. al. Backhouse v. Wells, 1 Eq. Ab. 184 (Fearne, 152); Britton v. Twining, 3 Meriv. 182; the cases cited in Jeffery v. Honywood, 4 Mad. 399, and ib. 402, (Prior, p. 43); Merest v. James, 1 Brod. & B. 484, (Jarm. ii. 347); Lees v. Mosley, 1 Y. & Coll. 589, (Jarm. 350); Dick v. Lacy, 8 Beav. 220. As to the distinction between the effect of superadded words on the mode of devolution to "heirs of the body" and to "issue," see 2 Jarm. 331 et seq.; and Prior on Issue, p. 26 et seq., 42, 192.

(a) V. int. al., Jesson v. Wright, 2 Bli. 56, 57; and Lord Thurlow, 1 Bro. 190; Sir W. Grant, 19 Ves. 548.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 530.

(c) V. int. al. Bigge v. Bensley, 1 Bro. 190; and see Knight v. Ellis, 2 Bro. 578, where the reason on which the rule was founded is given by Lord Thurlow; (the decision was against the general rule in the particular case, but, as noticed elsewhere, that decision is considered as overruled by Attorney-Gen. v. Bright, supra, 2 Jarm. 496;) Barlow v. Salter, 17 Ves. 482; Elton v. Eason, 19 Ves. 78, &c.

(d) Bamfield v. Popham, 1 P. W. 54.

(e) See 2 Fonbl. pp. 57-8, and cases there cited; Robinson v. Robinson, 3 Atk. 736-9. The gift was to Lancelot Hicks for the term of his life and no longer, remainder to such son as he should have taking the name of Robinson, with a gift over in default of such issue; it was decided, against Lord Hardwicke's opinion, on the certificate of the judges of the King's Bench; University of Oxford v. Clifton, 1 Eden, 473.

As regards limitations of this description of personal estate that would give an estate tail by implication, considerable license had been taken by the courts, to give effect to the intention where the property was given over: dying "without leaving issue," as regards personal estate, was construed to mean dying without leaving issue at the death; and the court went to the extent even of adopting different readings of the words "dying without leaving issue," when applied indiscriminately to real and personal estate blended in the same gift (a). This state of the law was not considered to be satisfactory, and an important provision on the subject was introduced (b) into the new Statute of Wills (c), which has made a very material alteration in the law, as regards those limitations which, under the old law, gave estates tail by implication in real estate and the absolute interest in personal estate. The clause is so material, and it may so often be necessary to refer to it in practice, that it is better to set it out at length, together with the clause which dispenses with words of inheritance, which also has an important influence as regards the subject now under consideration: they are as follow:

§ 28. "And be it further enacted, That where any real estate shall be devised to any person without any words of limitation, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee simple, or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will."

§ 29. "And be it further enacted, That in any devise or bequest of real or personal estate the words 'die without issue,' or 'die without leaving issue,' or 'have no issue,' or any other words which may import either a want or failure of issue of any person in his lifetime or at the time of his death, or an indefinite failure of his issue, shall be construed to mean a want or failure of issue in the lifetime or at the time of the death of such person, and not an indefinite failure of his issue, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, by reason of such person having a prior estate tail, or of a preceding gift being, without any implication arising from such words, a limitation of an estate tail to such person or issue or otherwise: Provided, that this act shall not extend to cases where such words as aforesaid import if no issue described in a preceding gift shall be born, or if there shall be no issue who shall live to attain the age or otherwise answer the description required for obtaining a vested estate by a preceding gift to such issue." The 32nd and 33rd as to lapse are also material.

(a) Forth v. Chapman, 1 P. W. 663; Lord Eldon, Crooke v. De Vandes, 9 Ves. 203; and the other cases cited in the note to Atkinson v. Hutchinson, 3 P. W. 261, last ed.; and See Hayes, Introd. to Conv. i. 399.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 475.

(c) 1 Vict. c. 26 (1837), supra, vol. i. p. 473.

“Under the 29th section,” says Mr. Jarman, “coupled with the preceding section, which makes a devise confer an estate in fee without words of inheritance, it will generally happen, in cases in which according to the old law the prior devisee would have been tenant in tail by the effect of words devising over the property on the failure of his issue, that he will, under the new rule of construction, take an estate in fee simple, subject to an executory devise in the event of his dying without leaving issue at his death; and this no doubt was the effect contemplated and designed by the legislature” (a).

Where the gift is expressly to the parent for life, and if he shall die without issue, or without children (which must now be construed living at his death,) then over, this will not it seems give to the children, if any living at the death, an estate by implication, inasmuch as such a gift in express terms, as to the dying without issue, before the passing of the act, would not have raised such a gift to the issue as purchasers by implication (b); nor can the gift over take effect as there are issue living; so that the property, after the life estate, is undisposed of, contrary perhaps to the intention of the legislature, as well as of the testator: but the court will, no doubt, endeavour to raise an implied gift to the children upon any circumstances showing such an intention (c).

As to personal estate, the new rule will change a bequest to A. and if he shall die without issue over to B., from an absolute interest in A. into a bequest to A. of the whole interest, defeasible by an executory bequest over to B., to take effect in the event of A.'s death without issue then living (d).

As regards the exceptions in the 29th section, I beg to refer the reader to the third book of Mr. Prior's able Treatise, which has been so often quoted (e).

When issue is used as a word of purchase in a bequest of personal estate directly or in trust, it has always been considered as synonymous to, and the same as descendants, and whoever can make himself out a descendant of the person to whose issue the bequest is made at the period of distribution, has a right to be considered as a persona designata in that bequest; and if the words “equally to be divided” or

(a) Jarman on Wills, i. 496-7; and see pp. 498-9, as to the advantages and disadvantages of the new enactments.

(b) Greene v. Ward, 1 Russ. 264-5; Bodens v. Lord Galway, 2 Ed. 298; and see Carter v. Bentall, 2 Beav. 558.

(c) Ex parte Rogers, 2 Mad. 449, 454-5-6; Ferard v. Griffin, 2 Keen, 621; and see Hayes, Introduct. to Convey. 401; though it is said “every implied intent must be free from doubt,” 1 Bro. 284.

(d) Hayes, Introduction to Convey. i. 401; the student should carefully read this chapter; sup. vol. i. p. 475.

(e) P. 190 et seq., and see 2 Jarm. 414.

some equivalent expressions be not added, all will take per capita as joint tenants (a): intention is required for limiting the sense of the word "issue" to children (b). Where there is a gift to a person amounting to a gift for life only, and after his death to the issue of his body begotten or to be begotten, these words will include all descendants, and they will take vested interests on their birth, and all will take per capita (c); it may be however that on the words of the will, children, or issue substituted for them, must be living at a particular time in order to take (d).

In a devise of real estate to the issue of a person in the same terms as those which have been held to constitute them purchasers subject to the prior life estate in gifts of personal estate, the word "issue" would probably receive the same construction as in the case of a like bequest of personal estate, that is, the issue would take per capita; if there are words constituting the issue purchasers, as tenants in common, they will clearly take as such, though following a limitation for life in the parent (e). It is true, as Mr. Jarman observes, that the word "issue," when preceded by an estate for life in the ancestor, is frequently, as we have seen in this chapter, construed as synonymous with "heirs of the body," and as such conferring an estate tail, on the ground that this is the only mode in which the testator's bounty can be made to reach the whole class of descendants, born and unborn; and the same reasoning applies, to a certain extent, in the case now under consideration; but the case of Cook v. Cook (f)—where it was held that, under a devise to the issue of J. S., who had a daughter then living and afterwards a son, the children and grandchildren, if any, would take concurrently an estate for life—is a direct adjudication in favour of the same construction being applied in gifts of real as well as personal estate (g).

(a) Lord Alvanley, Davenport v. Hanbury, 3 Ves. 258-9; Butler v. Stratton, 3 Bro. 367; and see Dalzell v. Welch, 2 Sim. 319, case of a power coupled with a trust; and Lyon v. Coward, ubi infra.

(b) Leigh v. Norbury, 13 Ves. 340; Cook v. Cook, 2 Vern. 545; see Garratt v. Cockerell, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 500; Pruen v. Osborne, 11 Sim. 137; Lyon v. Coward, 15 Sim. 287; and 2 Jarman, 36-7.

(c) Evans v. Jones, 2 Coll. 524; Head v. Randall, vii. Jur. 299.

As to where children take together with their parents, per capita, and where in a gift to a person and his children, he having children, the children have been held to take in remainder, see inter al. 8 Beavan, 218: where he has no children, see Read v. Willis, 1 Coll. 87.

(d) See Macgregor v. Macgregor, 2 Coll. 199.

(e) Mogg v. Mogg, 1 Mer. 658, 689. The words "without survivorship" were there added; and see Ashley v. Ashley, 6 Sim. 358, case of a devise to children; the words "for want of such issue" were held to create cross remainders by implication, ib. 363.

(f) 2 Vern. 545. Under the law as it then stood they took for life only; now, under the 28th sect. of the New Wills Act (v. supra), they would take in fee.

(g) Jarman on Wills, ii. 34-5.

SECTION II.—As to the common Direction in Wills and Marriage Articles, that Personal Chattels shall go according to the Limitations of Real Estate.

Strict Construction of such a Direction in general Terms will generally defeat the Intention.

Gower v. Grosvenor, before Lord Hardwicke.

Vaughan v. Burslem, before Lord Thurlow.

Lord Eldon's Observations on Gower v. Grosvenor, in Duke of Newcastle v. Countess of Lincoln.

Carr v. Lord Errol, before Sir W. Grant.

Present State of the Law upon the Authorities.

It often happens that personal chattels are directed by wills and articles to go in the same manner as the real estate, or as "heir looms" (the meaning of which is that they are to go with the family estate), so far as the rules of law and equity will permit.

In accurately penned wills and settlements clauses are introduced to keep the property in trustees for such a period as shall not infringe the rule against perpetuities (a), so that no tenant in tail shall be entitled to it until he shall have attained 21; but many devises still continue to be made, through ignorance or haste, in general terms. A strict construction of a clause so penned will, in most cases, defeat the intention, by giving an absolute interest in the personalty before an absolute interest in the realty or the right to acquire such absolute interest is obtained; and accordingly attempts have been made to induce the court to treat such directions as executory, and to mould them according to the supposed intention, keeping the real and personal estate together as long as the rules of law will allow and the different natures of the two kinds of property will permit, and controlling what would be the effect of the legal operation of the words (b), as regards the right which the tenant in tail would, without such control, acquire at his birth (c).

(a) As to which see Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257; Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54, 63-64; Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 10 Sim. 495, 4 My. & Cr. infra, and see Butler's note (1), x. Co. Litt. 290 b.

(b) Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Mad. 338: Trafford v. Trafford, 3 Atk. 347, was decided on the testator's express directions, (see 12 Ves. 235).

(c) Foley v. Burnell, 1 Bro. 279; Taylor v. Biddall, 2 Mod. 289, and Trafford v. Trafford, ubi sup., are considered not to be authorities in regard to the rule of perpetuities as affecting such limitations, as the point was overlooked, or not noticed in either of those cases. See, as to the last, Lord Eldon's Observations, 12 Ves. 233.

In Gower v. Grosvenor, the testator devised his real estates in strict settlement, and then stated his will to be that his books, plate, &c. “should go as heir-looms as far as they could by law,” to the heirs male of his family successively, as his real estate was before settled. Lord Hardwicke, though, according to Lord Eldon, it was not a decision (a), expressed a strong opinion that these words were directory only (b), and that, by the known forms of conveyancing, the personal property might have been given to the parent for life, then to the first son and the heirs of his body, and if he should die without issue before 21, (thus avoiding an infringement of the rule against perpetuities,) with remainder over. “There are,” said his lordship, “no express words of devise; it was only said ‘my mind and will is that my library,’ &c. ‘shall go,’ &c. ‘as far as,’ &c.; it is the most reasonable, natural and satisfactory course, to understand this clause, where no express gift is made, as a directory clause to the executors: when a man makes use of words of this kind, he does not make the limitation himself, but leaves it to the law to do it for him” (c).

In the case of Vaughan v. Burslem (d), Lord Thurlow evidently did not agree in thinking that such words were directory, so as to constitute a directory trust; and it would, he said, “be ‘pedantic’ to say that Gower v. Grosvenor turned on the words ‘as far as the law allows’ (e); for they are explained by the different natures of real and personal estate” (f); and his lordship decided, in that case, where the devise was that the plate, &c. “should go as heir-looms with his real estate, and be held and enjoyed by the person or persons who should for the time being, by virtue of his will, be entitled to his real estate, as far as the rules of law and equity would permit;” that the plate, &c. so given vested in the first tenant in tail at his birth: however, he did not expressly decide against Lord Hardwicke’s opinion in Gower v. Grosvenor, for he relied upon the particular words “to go to the person entitled,” &c. as constituting a direct gift to the tenant in tail when his title accrued (g).

(a) See 12 Ves. 231.

(b) 5 Mad. 349; and see Duke of Bridgewater v. Egerton, 2 Ves. 121; 12 Ves. 231.

(c) Gower v. Grosvenor, 5 Mad. 347-9, 350; S. C. Barnardist. 54; and see 12 Ves. 225; and his lordship referred to Serjeant Maynard’s case, where he wrote in the margin valeat quantum valere potest, and the Lord Chancellor inserted trustees to preserve contingent remainders. Lord Hardwicke said in such sort of cases the court must take notice of the known and common course of conveyancing, as part of the law, Barnardist. 63;

Sir Jos. Jekyll, (Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. W. 689,) and subsequent judges have used expressions to the same effect.

(d) 3 Bro. 101; and see 3 Ves. 396.

(e) These words, as the Vice-Chancellor of England remarked in Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 10 Simons, 514, are very important as regards the application of the doctrine of perpetuities to such a bequest, v. infra.

(f) 3 Bro. 106.

(g) Ibid. p. 106. Lord Cowper decided Richards v. Lady Bergavenny, 2 Vernon, 324, and Sir W. Grant the case of Brownker

The case of Gower v. Grosvenor was afterwards pointedly relied upon in the case of the Duke of Newcastle v. Countess of Lincoln (a), after mentioned. Lord Eldon appears to have approved of and adopted Lord Hardwicke's construction, that these words were directory only, and he approved of the principle laid down by Lord Hardwicke (b), but he intimated, referring to the cases before Lord Thurlow, above adverted to, that it had not been abided by (c); and he added, "that though the case before the House arose upon articles and not a will, he should have decided the case upon the authority of Vaughan v. Burslem" (d); treating that case therefore as one of a directory trust.

In Carr v. Lord Errol, Sir W. Carr, by will, directed that all his plate, &c. at his mansion-house at Edal should remain there as heirlooms, and devised the same to trustees, in trust, to permit the same to go, together with the mansion-house, to such person or persons as should from time to time, under his will, become entitled to it, "for so long time as the rules of law and equity would permit;" and he desired that an inventory should be taken by his executors. Sir Wm. Grant considered that this case was governed by Foley v. Burnell and Vaughan v. Burslem (e); the only difference was the interposition of trustees, which he thought made no difference; and being of opinion, contrary to the opinion of Lord Hardwicke in Gower v. Grosvenor, that even in the case before him there was nothing executory, he held that the first tenant in tail took the property at his birth (f). It is remarkable that

v. Bagot, 19 Ves. 581, partly on a similar ground. In the case of Foley v. Burnell, 1 Bro. 274, originally decided by Lord Thurlow, which was re-heard before Lord Rosslyn and the other Lords Commissioners, ib. p. 283, and was affirmed in the House of Lords, the bequest was held not to be directory merely, (ib. 285, but see 12 Ves. 225, 234); the special words relied upon by Lord Hardwicke were not introduced, which, however, Lord Thurlow, in Vaughan v. Burslem, considered to be immaterial; it was held in that case that the personal estate vested in the first tenant in tail at his birth.

(a) 12 Ves. 223, v. infra, p. 159.

(b) Ibid. 230-1.

(c) Ibid. 231.

(d) Ibid. p. 236. From this it would appear that his lordship considered that case equally as the one before the House as a case of directory trust; and holding as he did, and as it is presumed it must now be held (v. supra, p. 137) that there ought to be no difference in the execution of a directory trust created by will and of a covenant in marriage articles in such a case (v. 12 Ves. 227-30 et

v. 1 Jac. & W. 574), and professing to proceed upon authority only, it was so far consistent that his lordship should have held that the case before the House should be decided in the same manner as Vaughan v. Burslem, (that being treated also as a case of directory trust,) and consequently that the decree should have been in favour of the appellants; but if this is a correct view of Lord Eldon's judgment, it is difficult to understand why he should have followed Lord Thurlow's decision, which proceeded on the absence of any thing directory, rather than Lord Hardwicke's and Lord Rosslyn's.

It is to be observed that the question here does not arise between the parents and the issue, in respect of which in articles the distinction between the construction of wills and articles is settled (v. supra, pp. 136-7), but virtually between the issue themselves, where the distinction would not apply, unless indirectly; see 3 Ves. 394.

(e) Lord Manners also followed these cases in Stratford v. Powell, 1 Ball & B. 26.

(f) 14 Ves. 486-7; and in Brownker v. Bagot, 19 Ves. 580, Sir W. Grant said it although Lord Hardwicke's observations in Gower v. Grosvenor must have been present to the minds of the counsel and the judge, being so pointedly referred to in Vaughan v. Burslem, they were not in any way adverted to in that case in the argument or judgment.

A similar provision in marriage articles afterwards came for decision before Lord Rosslyn. In that case the first tenant in tail had died in his infancy; his personal representatives claimed the property. Lord Rosslyn had decided Foley v. Burnell (mentioned above), on the re-hearing, and he would evidently have decided the case before him in conformity with Lord Thurlow's decision in Vaughan v. Burslem, had it been the case of a will (a); but as it was a case which arose upon articles, which therefore let in the rule of construction applied to directory trusts, but which he thought would not have been let in on the same words in a will, he decided that the first tenant in tail, who had died in his infancy, had not become entitled to the property; and he declared that the settlement should be so framed as that no tenant in tail should become entitled to the absolute property unless he should attain 21, or die under that age leaving issue (b). An appeal from this decree was presented by the personal representatives of the first tenant in tail, to the House of Lords, and the subject was much discussed, as has already been mentioned: Lord Eldon, in a subsequent case, intimated that the decision of the House did not affect the general question; but as the Lords declared that the second tenant in tail, who was then living and had attained 21, was entitled to the property, Lord Rosslyn's decree seems to have been affirmed in effect (c).

In this state of the authorities it may perhaps be considered as settled that a provision in the words of Gower v. Grosvenor will, in the case of a will, be considered, contrary to Lord Hardwicke's opinion countenanced by Lord Eldon, as an executed trust; and consequently that the first tenant in tail will become absolutely entitled to the personal estate on his birth, so that it will pass on his death, even the hour of his birth, to his personal representatives, away from the estate: but that in the case of a gift by will with a clear direction to settle the property so that it may go with the real estate so far as the rules of law will permit; and in the case of articles containing similar provisions; the absolute interest will be construed to vest in the first tenant in tail who attains 21, or who dies under 21, leaving issue inhe-made no difference as to the right of the tenant in tail, whether he was so constituted by express words or by implication.

(a) 3 Ves. 394.

(b) Duke of Newcastle v. Countess of Lincoln, 3 Ves. 394, 397-8.

(c) 15 Ves. 553. et v. 2 Jarm. 508, sed qu.

ritable to the entail; in which latter case also of course the two descriptions of property will be severed: the court is not, it has been said, to do for a testator all that can be done by law, but no more than what he has intended to be done, and according to the common acceptation of the words (a).

(a) Lord Rosslyn, Duke of Newcastle v. Countess of Lincoln, 3 Ves. 394, recognized 5 My. & Cr. 28. Lord Thurlow said (1 Bro. 105) he knew no case where the conveyance had been carried to the utmost extent of what the law might do; however, in Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 280, Lord Eldon said, "Where any thing is left to the court to do, the court have said they will do more than the testator has directed." See in addition, Fordyce v. Ford, 2 Ves. J. 539. Of settling estates to go with a title, see the cases sup. p. 143.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, I.—Supra, pp. 145, 149, 150, 151.

The judgment of Sir Thomas Plumer, in the case of Lyon v. Mitchell (1 Mad. 467), is so important in reference to the subject of this Chapter, that I have set it out at some length. The case arose on a gift of residuary personal estate, mixed with proceeds of real estate, "to be divided equally amongst his sons, John, Edmund, Benjamin and George, and such son or sons as his wife should or might be enciente of at the time of his (the testator's) death, or at any time during his life (if born alive), share and share alike, as tenants in common, and to the issue of their several and respective bodies; but in case of the death of any or either of them without issue lawfully begotten, living at the time of his or their respective deaths, then the part or share of him or them so dying should go to the survivors and survivor equally, share and share alike, and to the issue of their several and respective bodies."

The testator left the four sons and two daughters surviving.

George died intestate and unmarried and without issue (the remainder over on his death, the Vice-Chancellor held to be good, pp. 470-2); the plaintiff, Benjamin, was his administrator.

John died, leaving a son, who died under age; E. P. Lynn was their representative.

Benjamin died intestate, leaving two sons, John and George—both dead; the plaintiff was their administratrix.

Edmund, the only one living, was a defendant.

The plaintiff (administratrix of George and Benjamin and their children) claimed one-third of the property, insisting the issue took as purchasers.

Two considerations, said his Honour, are to be adverted to:—

1. The effect of the will in favour of the four sons.
2. The effect of the gift over;

the duration and extent of the prior estate, supposing the contingency on which it is to go over does not take place, is a perfectly distinct question.

The words "share and share alike," &c., immediately follow the persons named to take, before the words relating to issue; the four sons are therefore to take as tenant in common, and all that follows is only to express by words of limitation the quantum of interest they are to take.

The four sons, when the will was made, had no issue; if therefore the bequest to the issue of the sons is by words of purchase, it is in favour of persons not existing;

if they were words of limitation, it is, in the natural order of things to give it in the manner stated, to regulate the quantum of interest intended to be given to the four sons.

The word "issue" is generally used in a will as a word of limitation; it may be used as a word of purchase if such appears to be the intention.

The Vice-Chancellor then points out the inconveniences that would result (owing to the comprehensive nature of the word "issue," usually including all descendants) from the issue taking in common with their parents, or by way of remainder by purchase, p. 474; (and see Gibbs v. Tait, 8 Sim. 134.)

The Vice-Chancellor then states the general rule, that what words will give an estate tail in realty, will give the absolute interest in personalty. The words in this will would, if applied to real property, have given an estate tail to the four sons. "Is there," he said, "any apparent intention in this testator that the words should not have the effect of passing absolute interests?"

This is not the case of a chattel real, if any distinction in that respect could arise; it is the case of mere personalty. It is not the case of giving the property to four persons for life: there are no words that import an intent that they should take it only for life: it is not an implied estate tail—it is an express estate tail. P. 475. It is not given by a settlement but by a will, and at a time when no issue of the sons was living.

The Vice-Chancellor then referred for the general doctrines to Fearne, Con. R. 463, and to Seale v. Seale, Prec. Chan. 421; Butterfield v. Butterfield, 1 Ves. 133, 154; Daw or Tothill v. Pitt, 1 Mad. 488, (where the dividends of personal estate were given to the testator's daughter for life, and after her death to the heirs male of her body, and for want of such issue over; and it was held that the whole vested absolutely in the daughter, confirmed by the House of Lords; a leading decision, p. 477); Chandless v. Price, 3 Ves. 99, more fully 13 Ves. 479; Brouncker v. Bagot, 1 Meriv. 271: the cases establish, said his Honour, that even in so unfavourable a case as an implied estate tail the rule will prevail.

It had been argued that because the executory bequest over was on death without issue living at the death, the bequest over was good, and had the effect of showing that "issue" was meant as a word of purchase; but his Honour did not concur in that, or see how it necessarily followed that, because the estate was to go over in the event of the party dying without children, supposing "issue" were to be so construed, if he had children he was not to have the absolute interest in it; the two propositions were separate and distinct: it is competent to a testator to say, If my sons leave children they shall have the absolute property; if any one of them has not, I give his share over: you must look at the words as applied to each event. Pp. 479-80.

It is material, continued the learned Judge, (p. 480,) to advert to the vital principle on which an executory devise depends; it is not to take effect like a remainder, expectant on the regular determination of the prior estate; if it were so, then certainly the remainder taking effect would regulate the quantum of the first estate; but the very principle of executory bequests is, that a contingency, if properly limited, is to arise, the effect of which is to defeat the prior estate—to raise a new use: the prior estate being absolute in one event, does not at all prevent its going over in another event. The validity and extent of the first estate is to be governed by the words that give it, and not by the words of limitation over, unless where they bear upon and unite with and tend to affect the construction of the prior words, and which in many cases may enable us to come to a conclusion respecting it, (as in Lampley v. Blower, 3 Atk. 398.) If the bequest had been to the son absolutely and for ever, it would not have signified if it were cut down by a contingency, (pp. 481-2.) It certainly has the effect of suspending the power of the parent to dispose of the property in his lifetime, (i. e. otherwise than subject to the contingency); but that is the effect of all executory devises, notwithstanding the estate is of a nature that would otherwise give the power of alienation.

The Vice-Chancellor then (p. 483, et seq.) examined the several cases relied upon by the plaintiff, particularly Peacock v. Spooner, and Dafforne v. Goodman, (vide supra, p. 151, note (c),) founded upon it;—he distinguished Lyde v. Lyde, 1 T. R. 593. Clare v. Clare, Forrest. 21, said his Honour, had been much shaken by later authorities, besides it went on the peculiar wording of the will; it was difficult to reconcile it with Stanley v. Leigh, 2 P. W. 686 (1), (see 12 Ves. 228); the Vice-Chancellor also distinguished Knight v. Ellis, 2 Bro. C. C. 570, (supra, p. 147,) but seemed to doubt its authority; Read v. Snell, 2 Atk. 642, was overruled by Garth v. Balwin, 2 Ves. 646; as to Jacobs v. Amyatt, 4 Bro. 542, and 1 Mad. 376, note, (supra, p. 147,) it was determined on the peculiar language of the will, and in Doe v. Applin, 4 T. R. 82, Lord Kenyon, on similar words, determined the direct contrary; Warman v. Seaman, Finch, 280, 2 Ch. Ca. 209, was not applicable. His Honour decided that the four sons took an absolute interest in the property.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, II.—Supra, p. 149.

In Harris v. Davis, 1 Coll. 424, the Vice-Chancellor, K. Bruce, said he always thought that if a testator possessed of a specific personal chattel, such as plate or a chattel real liable to the same considerations, bequeath it to A. and the heirs of his body, and in default of such issue to B., the death of A. in the testator's lifetime without issue does not enable B., though surviving the testator, to take under the will, but causes a lapse; nor, said his Honour, am I the only Judge of the Court of Chancery by whom that opinion is entertained; if Mackinnon v. Peach, 2 Keen, 555, is to be understood as showing the Master of the Rolls not to be of that opinion, I must with great deference respectfully differ from him. The bequest, said his Honour, in his view, excluded the notion that the testator meant that B. or his representatives should take only if A. should die without leaving issue, or that they should take in any other way than after the failure of A.'s issue whenever happening. The whole bequest supposed, is in truth merely a gift to A. absolutely, a gift therefore wholly failing by A.'s death without issue in the testator's lifetime, or by A.'s death in the testator's lifetime, and his Honour did not see that the absence of issue made any difference. The gift, it will be observed, is not upon the happening of one of two alternative events, but on the happening of one event only, the extinction of the heirs of the donee.—See Lewis on Perpet. 371-2.

(1) See the dict. p. 692: the point decided in that case was, that where there is a gift of a term to one for life, remainder to his first, &c. son (i. e. in contingency) in tail, with a limitation over in default of such issue to the daughters, and in default of daughters to a third person absolutely for the remainder of the term, the limitation over, in the event of the tenant for life never having a son or daughter, so that the estate never becomes vested, is good; Higgins v. Dowler, 1 P. W. 98, 2 Vern. 600, 2 P. W. 694; and Wood v. Sanders, ib. 698; and Sabbarton v. Sabbarton, Forrest. 245, are to the same effect; both were cited in Clare v. Clare; et v. Murray v. Addenbrook, 4 Russ. 419; and as to the point in Clare v. Clare, see Sir W. Backhurst's case and Burgess's case, cited 2 P. W. 692, ib. 694; but see 5 Mad. 343, as to these cases.

CHAPTER V.

OF TRUSTS FOR ACCUMULATION.—THE THELLUSSON ACT, ITS CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.—OF MAINTENANCE OUT OF RENTS OR INTEREST DIRECTED TO BE ACCUMULATED, AND INCIDENTALLY OF MAINTENANCE OUT OF DEFERRED AND CONTINGENT LEGACIES.—LIABILITIES OF TRUSTEES UNDER TRUST TO ACCUMULATE.

First Appearance of Trusts for Accumulation commensurate with Executory Devise.

Thellusson v. Woodford—Extent and Limits of Accumulation, as established by that Case—Limited by Thellusson Act, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98.

Mr. Hargrave's Observations on 3rd and 4th Clauses of 1st Section.

Testator only entitled to take one of the several Periods of Accumulation.

Some Uncertainty as to the 4th Description of Accumulation.

Haley v. Bannister, before Sir J. Leach.

Ellis v. Maxwell—Lord Langdale.

Observations on 4th Period of Accumulation.

Question whether the Operation of the Act is confined to Cases of express Direction to Accumulate.

General Rules of Court of Chancery in regard to the Devolution of Interest and Rents accruing on Deferred and Contingent Gifts.

As to Personal Estate.

Reasoning of Lord Talbot and Lord Hardwicke, in Strudholme v. Hodgson, in note.

As to Real Estate.

"When" Devisee shall attain 21, or the like, does not prevent Vesting.

Real and Personal Estate mixed up in same Clause.

Question whether Accumulation of Interest and Rents, directed by the Court rather than the Settlor, are within the Scope of the Act.

Shaw v. Rhodes—Case of Charge.

M'Donald v. Bryce, before Lord Langdale.

Authority of this Case disputed in Elborne v. Goode, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Eyre v. Marsden, before Lord Langdale.

Corporation of Bridgenorth v. Collins, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Observations on these Cases.

Of the Operation of the Statute to accelerate Possession.

Provision which transgresses or may transgress Boundary of Remoteness void altogether.

Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford—Example where Minorities are taken.

Trust for Accumulation only void for Excess.

Trusts void in Creation.

The Operation of the Act has been confined to its Purpose.

Difference in the Provisions of Mortmain Act and Thellusson Act.

Thellusson Act gives Statutable Title to Heir at Law or Residuary Devisees, &c.

Direction for Maintenance and Advancement good.

Where Donee takes the Property discharged of the Trust.

General Rule as between Tenant for Life and Remainder-man,—where there is a Direction to invest in Land, the intermediate Interest to be accumulated.

Legacy vested at 21, to accumulate till 24.

Doctrine of the Court of Chancery as to giving Maintenance out of the Fund directed to be accumulated, and out of Contingent Legacies generally.

Rule as to giving Maintenance out of a Legacy, though Contingent, given by a Parent or Person in loco parentis.

Presumption on which the Rule is founded.

Maintenance allowed when Legacy vested.

Leading Cases as to Maintenance out of Contingent Legacies, stated.

Fairman v. Green, before Sir W. Grant.

Errat v. Barlow, before Lord Eldon.

Greenwell v. Greenwell.

Where each of several Legatees has an equal Chance of taking by Survivorship, &c. et contra.

Ex parte Kehble, before Lord Eldon.

Marshall v. Holloway.

Haley v. Bannister, Sir J. Leach.

Kime v. Welfitt, Vice-Chancellor of England.

Turner v. Turner, ibid.

Canning v. Flower, ibid.

Liabilities of Trustee where there is an Express Trust to accumulate.

It was shortly before the end of the eighteenth century that avowed and express trusts for accumulation commensurate with executory devise made their appearance, though before Mr. Thellusson's experiment, no attempt appears to have been made to take more than one life, or at most two lives and a minority (a). That experiment was successful, and in the suit which it gave rise to (Thellusson v. Woodford) it was decided that accumulation might lawfully endure, by force of the testator's direction alone, during the life of the survivor out of nine (b) specified persons in esse at the death of the testator; and that the beneficial ownership of the accumulations, and of the estates out of which they had issued, might be postponed for the full period of a valid executory devise, viz. (c) so long as any one person, or the survivor out of any number of specified persons in esse at the execution of the deed, (if the trust was created by an instrument inter

(a) Hargrave on Accumulation, p. 57; Jarman on Wills, i. 265.

(b) Lord Thurlow, as Lord Eldon observed on the hearing of this cause in the House of Lords (11 Ves. 145), said, "A man may appoint one hundred or a thousand trustees, and that the survivor of them shall appoint a life estate; that would be within the line of a perpetuity." Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 Bro. 30; and see Low v. Burron; Lord Talbot, 3 P. W. 264.

(c) V. supra, vol. i. p. 487.

vivos,) or at the death of the testator (if created by will,) should continue alive, and for a further contingent period of gestation, in reference to the infancy of some person in ventre sa mere, followed by a term of twenty-one years (a): if the parent be, as he may be, in ventre sa mere at the death of the testator, a double period of gestation may be gained—one at the commencement, the other at the end; in fact, for the purposes of the rule, a child in ventre sa mere is considered as a living person (b).

Shortly after the original decree in Thellusson v. Woodford had been pronounced, namely, 28th July, 1800, the act of the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98, was passed, commonly called the “Thellusson Act.” That act, after reciting that it is expedient that all dispositions of real or personal estates, whereby the profits or produce thereof are directed to be accumulated, and the beneficial enjoyment thereof is postponed, shall be made subject to the restrictions thereafter contained, enacts, by Section I.; that no person or persons shall, after the passing of that act, by any deed, surrender, will, codicil, or otherwise howsoever, settle or dispose of any real or personal property so and in such manner that the rents, issues, profits or produce thereof shall be wholly or partially accumulated for any longer term than

1. The life or lives of any such grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors; or

2. The term of twenty-one years from the death of any such grantor, settlor, deviser or testator; or

3. During the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living or in ventre sa mere at the time of the death of such grantor, &c.; or

4. During the minority or respective minorities only, of any person or persons who under the uses or trusts of the deed, surrender, will or other assurance directing such accumulations, would, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues and profits, or the interest, dividends or annual produce so directed to be accumulated (c): and in every case where any accumulation shall be directed otherwise than as aforesaid, such directions shall be null and void; and the rents, &c., and produce of such property so directed to be accumulated, shall, so long as the same shall be directed to be accumulated contrary to the provisions of this act, go to and be

(a) Lord Eldon, Thellusson v. Woodford, 11 Ves. 150; Jarm. i. 223.

(b) See the case (A. D. 1799), 4 Ves. 313; Lawrence, J. 319; Buller, J. 331; Lord Alvanley; Lord Loughborough, 341. S. C. in the House of Lords (1805), 11 Ves. 133, 144, where the unanimous opinion of the judges is set out, p. 146, 150, Lord Eldon.

(c) See Jarman on Wills, i. 267-9, as to this clause.

received by such person or persons as would have been entitled thereto, if such accumulation had not been directed.

By Sect. II. it is provided that nothing in that act contained shall extend, 1st, to any provision for payment of debts (a) of any grantor, settlor or deviser, or other person or persons; or, 2nd, to any provision for raising (b) portions for any child or children of any grantor, settlor or deviser, or any child or children of any person taking any interest (c) under such conveyance, settlement or devise; or, 3rd, to any direction touching the produce of timber or wood (d) upon any lands or tenements; but that all such provisions and directions shall and may be made and given as if the act had not been passed. By Sect. III. it is provided that the act shall not extend to any disposition respecting heritable property in Scotland; and by Sect. IV. that the act shall not affect wills made before the passing of the act, unless the testator shall have been living and of sound mind for twelve months after the passing of the act (e); the recitals will be adverted to in a subsequent page of this chapter.

The fourth clause of the first section, as Mr. Hargrave has observed (f), differs from the third in this, that it does not require that the minor selected should be in existence at the death of the settlor or donor, while a minor to be selected under the third clause must, at the death of the settlor, be either born or in ventre sa mere: and the addition of the word “only” in this clause, as Mr. Smith (g) observes, would seem to indicate that it was intended to prevent an accumulation during a life or lives in being in addition to the period of the minority of an unborn person, for which time it was allowable to accumulate before the statute, and to restrict it to the minority of an unborn person; but, as will be presently mentioned, the decisions appear to have introduced a further restriction on the operation of this clause. The fourth clause also differs from the third in this, that the minor selected under the fourth clause must be a person who, if of full age, would be entitled, under the limitations in the same settle-

(a) See Bateman v. Hotchkin, xi. Jurist, 809.

(b) Not adding to; see Hargrave on Accum. p. 199, 200; Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, p. 564.

(c) As to what amount of interest is sufficient to satisfy this provision of the act, see the judgment in Shaw v. Rhodes, 5 Cl. & Finell. 121; Lord Lyndhurst and Lord Brougham seem to have thought, contrary to Mr. Justice Bosanquet's opinion, that the smallest interest was sufficient: all the authorities on the subject of these exceptions, are collected by Mr. Hargrave, 183-208.

(d) See Lord Dorchester v. Effingham, 3 Beav. 180, in note.

(e) I have had frequent recourse to the very clear and well arranged Treatise of Mr. Hargrave on this act; and to Jarman on Wills, vol. i. 264, et seq.; and Lewis on Perpetuities, chap. xxviii. p. 592.

(f) P. 119.

(g) View of Executory Interests, § 738 h.

ment contained, to the income so directed to be accumulated ; while a minor under the third clause is not required to have any beneficial interest whatever.

It is considered that the true construction of the act is, that the testator or settlor is only at liberty to take one of the several periods of accumulation (a). A direction simply to set apart the dividends, with a view to postponed enjoyment, is equally an accumulation as a direction that they shall be laid out so as to make compound interest ; and if it be in the form of a charge it will be equally within the act, if on the true construction it requires accumulation (b). If the direction to accumulate begins to take effect at a period subsequent to the testator's death, in ordinary cases the twenty-one years begins to run not from that period, but from the testator's death (c).

As to the construction of the fourth clause the decisions do not appear to be very satisfactory. In the case of Haley v. Bannister (d) the testator, by a codicil, had directed that two sums of stock should be purchased in the names of his executors, and that they should receive and invest the dividends, so as to accumulate until one of the children, born and to be born, of his daughter Amelia Haley, should attain 21 ; and upon that event the trustees were to transfer the stock and the accumulations to the grandchildren then living, and if but one to that one ; there was a residuary gift of the testator's personal estate. It was contended, on the authority of Griffiths v. Vere, and Longdon v. Simson, that the accumulations, directed by the will, were contrary to the statute, so far as it gave the accumulations to a child unborn at 21, in case of the deaths of all the elder children before attaining that age : what, if anything, was said to the contrary is not stated, so that whether the fourth clause was brought to the attention of the court does not appear. Sir John Leach laid down, broadly, "The statute prevents an accumulation during the minority of an unborn child, but as to the principal the law remains as before the statute. The excess of accumulation prohibited by the statute will form part of the residue" (e).

(a) See Jarman on Wills, i. 266-7 ; but see Hargr. 139-141.

(b) Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295, stated infra, in note ; Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 155-6-7, 160-1-2 ; S. C. nom. Evans v. Hillier, 5 Cl. & Fin. 128 ; and see Lewin, 113, as to the principles to be deduced from this case.

(c) Webb v. Webb, 2 Beav. 495-6 ; there the question was whether the case was within the 2nd clause of sect. 2 of the act, as to which see Bacon v. Proctor, T. & Russ. 31 ; Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 M. & Cr. 159.

(d) 4 Mad. 275 ; see Mr. Jarman's strictures on this case, i. p. 268.

(e) Sir J. Leach, Haley v. Bannister, 4 Mad. 278.

It will be observed that under the words of the will the grandchildren would have been entitled to the interest so directed to be accumulated, if the eldest had been of full age; so that, primâ facie, the case appears to have been within the fourth clause stated above. As to the cases cited, Griffiths v. Vere (a) was clearly not within the fourth clause; and though in Longdon v. Simson (b) the terms of the direction for accumulation and the gift of the corpus were in substance similar to those in Haley v. Bannister, the fourth clause was not adverted to in the argument or judgment; and all that was decided was, that the accumulation was good for twenty-one years from the testator's death.

This case was followed by Ellis v. Maxwell (c), before Lord Langdale. In that case there was a direction for accumulation of the surplus interest of a trust fund, until the youngest of all the children of the testator's son and daughter should attain 21; and the corpus and accumulations were given to such grandchildren, exclusive of an eldest son, to be vested at 21, or marriage, but payable and transmissible only on the death of the survivor of his two children, though maintenance was allowed for all the grandchildren out of their presumptive shares; the testator's widow was appointed residuary legatee. Neither of the testator's children in that case had any child at the testator's death, but the daughter was enciente of a son, afterwards born, who, as an eldest son, was not within the trust, except for maintenance; and the daughter had afterwards other children.

It was contended, on the part of the residuary legatee, that this was in effect a trust for accumulation during the lives of the son and daughter and the survivor, and not an accumulation within the fourth clause of the first section, and therefore the excess beyond 21 years, or the minority of the eldest son in ventre sa mere of the daughter, was void by the statute. It was contended, on the part of the grandchildren, that it was in effect a trust for accumulation, within the fourth clause. It was held by Lord Langdale that all the grandchildren took vested interests at 21, notwithstanding the deferred payment; so that in this case each grandchild on coming of full age, viz., at 21, would have been entitled to an equal share of the interest,

(a) 9 Ves. 127.

(b) 12 Ves. 295, 298. In this case legacies were given to unborn children (strangers) with a direction for investment till 21, the interest to be applied for the education of the children; on their attaining 21 the whole to be divided between them equally.

(c) Reported, Lewin on Trusts, p. 714, and 3 Beavan, 587; see p. 596 (the reports do not materially vary) stated by Mr. Hargrave, § 103.

liable to be diminished in amount by the birth of after-born children. On the question, as to the validity of the trust for accumulation, Lord Langdale held, that the accumulation from the time the eldest grandson attained 21 was void, and went to the residuary legatee. In regard to the construction of the fourth clause of the first section, his lordship (after observing upon the acknowledged difficulty of attributing a distinct and efficient meaning to all the words of the act,) said, "If the accumulation is permitted only during the minority of a person entitled under the uses of the will, and no time is to be allowed, either before the minority commences, or after it has ceased, it does not seem that anything is added to the permission to accumulate during the minority of a person living at the death of the testator; but taking the words as they are, they do not appear to permit accumulation during a minority, and any time to elapse between the death of the testator and the commencement of the minority, or in favour of any person who would not, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the annual produce of the fund; and accordingly in the case of Longdon v. Simson (a), where an accumulation was intended to be made until unborn children attained 21, Sir W. Grant decreed an accumulation for twenty-one years only; and in Haley v. Bannister, Sir J. Leach expressed his opinion to be, that the statute prevents an accumulation during the minority of an unborn child." Those cases, said his lordship, prevented him from considering, on the construction of the act, whether the accumulation would be lawful during the minority of any grand-children born after the death of the testator: so that this case seems to have been decided on the supposition that Sir J. Leach had conclusively put a construction on the fourth clause. These cases, as they have not yet been disturbed, must be considered as having settled the construction in cases where the direction is to accumulate during the minority of one or more of a class of unborn children, though that circumstance is not adverted to in any one of the cases; the dry simple case of a gift to an unborn child of a person in esse, with a direction for accumulation of the interest of the property so given, to commence from the birth of such child, and to continue during his minority, and then a gift of such accumulations to the legatee or to some one else, has, it seems, yet to be decided upon. Mr. Jarman, I would observe, considers (b) that the effect of Sir John Leach's decision, above

(a) Supra, p. 168, n. (b). In Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swanst. 432, and the other similar cases, the fourth clause could not be adverted to.

(b) See this subject discussed, Hargrave, pp. 124-134. In Eyre v. Marsden, as Mr. Hargrave observes, the accumulation was referred to, is to make the clause of the act allowing the fourth period for accumulation to amount only to a mere saving of the rule of law, which accumulates the income of minors, or rather of the surplus income, after providing for maintenance.

Possibly a question may arise as to the power of the donor to dispose of the accumulations which are permitted by the fourth clause, away from the person during whose minority the accumulation is ostensibly (for that is all that can be said, looking to the decisions above referred to) permitted. According to the language of the act, the accumulation may be made during the minority of any person who would for the time being, if of full age, be entitled to the rents or interest; the meaning probably was, that the rents or interest should be accumulated for the benefit of such individual, or, at least, that they should not be given away from him, but there is no direction to that effect; so that, as I presume, such accumulations may be given away: if so, that impresses upon them a very different character to the accumulations which are made by the rules of the court, which will presently be mentioned. As to the accumulations from timber, made under the proviso which exempts such provisions from the restrictions of the act (a), the donor may clearly, as I presume, dispose of them as he pleases.

Another question of construction has lately arisen, namely, as to whether the operation of the act is confined to cases where there is an express direction for accumulation; or whether it extends to those cases also where the accumulation arises, by construction of law, only from the nature of the gift.

In order to have a clear understanding of this point of construction, the general rules of the Court of Chancery, in regard to the devolution of the interest and rents and profits accruing upon deferred and contingent gifts, must be referred to.

And first, as to bequests of personal estate.

The general rule is, that where a legacy is given on happening of a future contingent event (b), or where a legacy is given payable at a future day, and nothing is said as to interest (c), if the legatee is a expressly directed to continue until the death of the survivor of the testator's three children, so that after the youngest grandchild attained 21 it was no longer an accumulation during minority.

(a) Sect. 2, 3rd clause, sup. p. 6.

(b) Pett v. Fellows, ubi inf. Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Schol. & Lef. 6; Harris v. Lloyd, Turn. &

R. 314. "Where," says Lord Eldon, "there is an interval in which the interest is not disposed of expressly by the will before the persons come into existence who are to take the capital, the interest falls into the residue;" and see Roper, c. xx. § 9.

(c) There may in such a case, as in every other, be a gift of the intermediate interest stranger, it does not carry interest, in the one case till the happening of the contingency, in the other till the day of payment arrives, though the capital of the legacy, in the latter case, is vested from the testator's death; for interest can only be due in default of payment; no interest can commence where payment is not delayed (a): in such cases no accumulation takes place; the intermediate interest passes to the residuary legatee, or if none, as the law now stands, to the next of kin at the death of the testator.

There is an exception to the rule above stated where the subject of the gift is a Residue payable at a future day; in that case, the residue being vested, subject to be divested, the legatee will be entitled to the intermediate interest down to the time of his death, though he die before the day (b), for otherwise there would be a partial intestacy, which it is presumed the testator, he having disposed of the residue of his estate, could not have intended (c): so where a specific fund or a residue is given by immediate bequest, with a condition subsequent, which is to divest it in a certain event, and to pass it to some one else, unless the intermediate interest is given over, expressly or by implication, it belongs to the legatee, and it will pass to his representatives (d), so that here also no accumulation takes place.

Where a residue is given upon a contingency (not exceeding the legal limits), so that it is uncertain in whom it may vest; the intermediate dividends and interest must be accumulated; differing in this respect from an executory devise of land, which descends to the heir in the mean time, and he is therefore entitled to receive the inter-by implication; thus, in Boddy v. Dawes, 1 Keen, 368, where in the event of all the children (legatees) dying under 21, the interest "arising," not which had arisen, was given to a particular person for his life; this, with other circumstances, was held to entitle the legatees to the intermediate interest; and see Acherley v. Wheeler, 1 P. W. 788; and the cases cited by the V. C. 5 Hare, 577.

(a) Haughton v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 330; Cricket v. Dolby, 3 Ves. J. 13, 16; Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, 4 Ves. 1, 5, 6. I do not here notice the exceptions, as where the legacy is given by a parent to a child, Cricket v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 10, &c., or by a person in loco parentis (Roper, 1246, &c.), or where an intention to give interest can be collected, Pett v. Fellows, 1 Swanst. 561; Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, ubi sup.; 2 P. W. 22, last ed. note (y). If the words of the bequest are sufficient to pass a present interest, though there be a gift over, not including the interest, upon a contingency, that does not prevent the vesting in the mean time so as to entitle the legatee to the interest, especially in the case of a residue, Skey v. Barnes, 3 Meriv. 340-1.

(b) It is different if the gift does not confer a vested interest, Murray v. Tancred, infra.

(c) Atkinson v. Turner, Barnardist. 76; Nicholls v. Osborn, 2 P. W. 419; Cricket v. Dolby; and Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, ubi sup.; Wadley v. North, 3 Ves. 367; Booth v. Booth, 4 Ves. 405, 407. "Every intendment is to be made against holding a man to die intestate who sits down to dispose of the residue of his property," ibid.; Bolger v. Mackell, 5 Ves. 513; Skey v. Barnes, 3 Meriv. 346-7; and see Bird v. Hunsdon, 2 Swanst. 345-6, where a gift of interest on a residue for an intermediate space not provided for was implied; and see Barber v. Barber, 3 My. & Cr. 695: if the interest is given over of course it will go as directed, ibid.

(d) Tissen v. Tissen, 1 P. W. 500, 503; Taylor v. Johnson, 2 P. W. 504, and the cases in the note, p. 506: as to residue, see Nicholls v. Osborn, 2 P. W. 419; and see Shepherd v. Ingram, Amb. 448.

mediate rents; and (a) where the intermediate interest of a legacy or residue given, or such part as may not be applied for maintenance and the like (if there be a provision for that purpose) is directed, expressly or by necessary implication, to go over with the capital on the happening or non-happening of some given event (b); in such cases, also, according to the rules of the Court of Chancery, the interest and dividends must be laid out and accumulated until the residue or legacy becomes definitively vested (c); and a bill by the person who has an interest in contingency will be sustained, in respect of his possibility, to enforce such an accumulation being made (d).

(a) Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. W. 305-6; Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 476; Butler v. Butler, 3 Atk. 59; Trevanion v. Vivian, 2 Ves. 430; Bullock v. Stones, 2 Ves. 522; Glanvill v. Glanvill, 2 Meriv. 39, 40; Murray v. Tancred, 10 Sim. 469. See Fearne, Cont. Rem. 545, and Hargr. 44 and 51, where the case of Rogers v. Gibson, 1 Ves. 485, is stated, in which the rents and profits of the realty as well as the interest of the personalty were directed to be accumulated; and see Ambl. 96.

(b) Mackell v. Winter, 3 Ves. 536; 3 Mer. 345-6; Sisson v. Shaw, 9 Ves. 291; Harvey v. Cooke, 4 Russ. 34, 37, 51.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. W. 304. It was at one time contended, that in case of a contingent bequest of a residue of personal estate, the corpus of the residue was all that the contingent legatee was entitled to, and that the intermediate interest should go to the next of kin, in like manner as where a real estate is given upon a contingency the intermediate rents, if not devised to some one else, belong to the heir at law, Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 474: by the same analogy, in Studholme v. Hodgson, 3 P. W. 305, the mother of the infant claimed the intermediate interest, insisting that there was an implied gift to her for life; but Lord Talbot, and after him Lord Hardwicke, were clearly of opinion that the interest must follow the corpus of the residue. Their reasoning affords some useful general principles. "A man," said Lord Hardwicke, "may die partly testate and partly intestate in this court, though not at law; but there is a great difference between a particular distinct part of the personal estate (of which, as above observed, a man may die intestate) and the whole residue of it; for when the whole is given it is a contradiction in terms to say that any part of the estate is undisposed of; the residue is nothing fixed, but a fluctuating interest, and if the personal estate is increased by any event after the death of the testator, it is part of the residue and will pass as such, why then not the interest of that residue, for that interest is assets and part of the estate, and in all distributions the time of death vests the interests?" (Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 475.) The only plausible argument to the contrary, said Lord Hardwicke, is that drawn from real estates; but, said his lordship, there are many material differences between real and personal estate; (and see Cro. Jac. 75;) for in the case of real estate the thing itself is not disposed of, but descends in the mean time, and the heir has the interest till the contingency happens, and that carries the profits with it; (and see Atkinson v. Turner, Barnardist. 76; Studholme v. Hodgson, ubi sup.;) but personal estate does not descend or go to the next of kin, but is vested in the executor; and, said Lord Hardwicke, this is a question as to a trust of it, where the intent of the testator must prevail: another difference between them is, that in the one case the rents could never become part of the personal estate, but the profits of personal estate are part of the estate itself; Green v. Ekins, 2 Atk. 476. Each of these learned judges therefore held that the intermediate profits formed part of the residue, and must be accumulated till the contingency happened; of course this is without reference to the provisions of the Thellusson Act.

In Gordon v. Rutherford, Turn. & R. 373, 376, a moiety of a sum of stock was given to trustees, and they were to hold it in trust for Donald Gordon until he should have attained 25, and the trustees were directed to transfer the stock to him when and as they in their discretion should think proper. If Donald Gordon should die before the stock was transferred to him, the stock was to sink into the residue, which was given to William Forbes. Sir William Grant held that there was no gift to Donald Gordon but through the medium of the discretionary

As regards real estate.—If there be an executory devise to take effect only on a future contingent event, as to the first-born child of a person living who shall attain 21, and no direction is given as to the intermediate rents: if it be a devise of a specific estate, the intermediate rents belong either to the residuary devisee, if there be one, or to the heir at law if there be no residuary devise (a): so that, generally speaking, no accumulation will take place on such a devise. But if the subject of the executory devise be the residue of the testator's real estate, then the heir at law will be excluded, and the rents and profits will be liable to be accumulated until the period arrives to which the vesting under such devise is suspended, equally as the interest and dividends in the case of a contingent executory bequest of personal estate (b).

Where a testator mixes up real and personal estate in an executory gift, the intermediate rents will follow the interest. In Genery v. Fitzgerald the property was partly real, partly personal, and partly such that the testator did not seem to have known whether it was real or personal: the testator made a legal devise and bequest of the whole together, to the eldest of his three natural children who should attain 21, charged with 10,000*l.* to each of his brothers, if they or either of them should attain 21; Lord Eldon held, on the apparent intention, affirming Sir W. Grant's decree, that the intermediate rents of the real estate should go together with the intermediate interest of the personal estate to the legatees, not to the heir (c).

It had been considered, and with great show of reason, that the cases had fully established that trusts for accumulation of interest or power of the trustees, even of the interest, and the trustees not having exercised their power to transfer, the interest was directed to accumulate to go with the capital.

(a) See Stephens v. Stephens, Forrest, 228, 233, Amb. 96; in that case the intermediate rents went to the residuary devisee; so in Rogers v. Gibson, and Gibson v. Rogers, Amb. 93; S. C. 1 Ves. 485, 490; Hargr. § 32, 33. In Hopkins v. Hopkins, Forrest, 44, 50; S. C. 1 Atk. 581, 597, 1 Ves. 268, there being no residuary devisee, they went to the heir at law; and see Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 172; Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bli. N. S. 260, 330; 1 Dow & Clark, N. S. 268, 295, 316, which Lord Eldon hoped would be "a leading case," ibid.

(b) Rogers v. Gibson and Gibson v. Rogers, ubi sup., and Lord Brougham's judgment in Ackers v. Phipps, 3 Cl. & Finell, 691-3 and 699-700; and Elbourne v. Goode, ubi sup.

It has already been observed that "when a person shall attain 21, or the like," does not import contingency, or prevent the vesting in a devise of real estate, where a prior interest, for whatever purpose, is given, extending over the whole interval during which the devise in question is postponed, supra, p. 95; Doe dem. Cadogan v. Ewart, 7 Adol. & E. 663 et seq. and the case itself, p. 665; and that the ordinary conditional effect of "when" and "if" may be controlled by the context, even in a gift of a legacy, sup. p. 97.

(c) Genery v. Fitzgerald, Jacob, 470. Lord Brougham considered the residuary nature of the gift in that case as the strongest reason for adopting the conclusion, 3 Cl. & Finell. 697; the ordinary rule would have given the rents to the heir.

rents of property given by way of executory devise or bequest, although directed by the court rather than by the settlor or testator, were equally within the scope of the act, as where there was an express direction for accumulation (a); however, this construction of the act was brought into doubt by an opinion expressed by the Vice Chancellor, in the case of Shaw v. Rhodes, which opinion may perhaps receive some support if the statutory accumulations are, as above suggested, at the testator's disposal. Lord Brougham, in delivering his opinion in the House of Lords, on the Appeal from the Vice Chancellor's decision on that case (b), stated that his mind was still very much inclined to favour the construction originally put upon the clause in the will on which alone the question arose (c), by the Vice Chancellor of England, namely, that the third clause of the will merely created a deferred charge beyond the scope of the Thellusson Act.

The decision in Shaw v. Rhodes has settled the question as regards a charge made by a testator, but the effect of the act in reference to the accumulation, which is made by the rules of the court only in the case of a deferred gift, has lately been the subject of discussion, and the authority of M'Donald v. Bryce (d), one of the cases above referred to, in which the operation of the act was assumed to be such as is above stated, has been disputed.

In that case a residue, wholly consisting of personalty, was given by will to Robert Shawe, eldest son of Peter Shawe, upon Robert Shawe coming of age,—and failing him, to the next male child of Peter

(a) See Hargr. pp. 76, 85, 86, 90; and Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 135, an abstract of which is set forth, p. 77, § 69; and the same case in the House of Lords, by the name of Evans v. Hillier, 5 Clark & Finell, p. 114 (1837); M'Donald v. Bryce (1838); and Ellis v. Maxwell, 1841, infra.

(b) Evans v. Hillier, 5 Cl. & Finell. p. 128; 1 My. & Cr. 139.

(c) By the clause in question the testator directed that after the decease of the survivor of his sons and daughter, the whole of his freehold and copyhold estates should stand charged for 20 years with the payment of two third parts of the produce of those estates in equal shares of so much money as would in 15 years make in the whole 30,000*l.* which sum, with the interest and produce thereof, he directed should be equally divided between and among all his grandchildren who should live to attain 21, their executors, &c.; or if but one, then to such one, 5 Clark & Finell. p. 117. The word "accumulate," it will be observed, is not to be found in this clause, though it was in the preceding clauses of the will; in the event the trust for accumulation (treating it as such) would have gone on for 39 years after the testator's death, 19 years longer than is permitted by the statute.

(d) 2 Keen, 276. In Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 147 (1835), it appears to have been admitted that where the testator has by necessary inference directed an accumulation, or the clause, by a sound construction of it, requires that such accumulation should take place, it will fall within the act, though there be no express direction for accumulation; Mr. Justice Bosanquet said that was the true exposition of the act, pp. 153, 155; and Lord Cottenham was of the same opinion, pp. 160, 161; and they founded their judgments, which were affirmed in the House of Lords, on that construction; but in that case there was a charge which is stronger than a mere executory bequest, which is the subject of the Vice-Chancellor's observations in Elborne v. Goode; Shaw v. Rhodes was cited in that case.

Shawe, in the same manner—failing male children of Peter Shawe, to the daughters (naming them) of Lewis M'Pherson: there was no express direction for accumulation. Robert Shawe died an infant, and Peter Shawe had no other son, but he and his wife were living. It was assumed by all parties that the accumulation of the income became unlawful under the statute, on the 11th April, 1833, at which time twenty-one years from the death of the testator expired. The question argued was whether the income of the residuary estate, and of the accumulations, from the period to which accumulation was assumed to be limited by the statute, until the contingency should be determined by the death of Peter Shawe, belonged to the daughters of M'Pherson, or to the next of kin of the testator. It was admitted that the contingent gift to the daughters of M'Pherson vested in interest, so as to be transmissible, but Lord Langdale thought that as nothing in the present state of things was given for immediate enjoyment, the next of kin, and not the daughters, were entitled to the intermediate income, thus assuming that the act applied to the case.

The case on which the authority of the case last stated was disputed was Elborne v. Goode, before the Vice-Chancellor of England (1844) (a). The case itself did not in fact raise the question now under consideration; there was an express direction to accumulate during the lives of several annuitants, that is, until the period when the persons to take as executory legatees should arrive, and then there was a gift of the residue; it was held, according to Longdon v. Simpson, and Griffith v. Vere, that all the accumulations beyond the twenty-one years were void, and that they should go to the next of kin. But the case had been argued as if it had been an executory bequest of a residue, and that the only accumulation to be considered was such as would be made by the course of the court; and it was contended that, in such a case, where the accumulation was only incidental to the devise, the Thellusson Act did not apply, and that, being a bequest of a residue, the intermediate rents, before and after the end of twenty-one years, as well as the capital itself, would pass to the residuary legatees on the residue becoming vested, just as it would if the act had not passed; and it was contended that the decision in M'Donald v. Bryce could not be supported, as there was, in that case, no express trust for accumulation: as the question had been argued, the Vice-Chancellor of England delivered his opinion on the point.

The Vice-Chancellor first stated the recital in the act:—"Whereas it is expedient that all dispositions of real or personal estate, whereby the profits and produce thereof are directed to be accumulated, and the beneficial enjoyment thereof postponed, should be made subject to the restrictions hereinafter contained;” his Honour then stated the enactments in the first section of the act (a). “It is observable,” said his Honour, “that there is in this section a most copious use of the words ‘direction’ and ‘direct;’ and it seems to me that the language of the act expressly applies to those cases only where there is a direction to accumulate, and that upon the face of the statute it does not apply to the case of a mere naked executory devise, for without any direction from the testator, this court would direct the profits to be accumulated.” His Honour then cited and adverted to the following observations of Lord Eldon, in Griffiths v. Vere (b). “It had been contended,” said his lordship, “that by analogy to the law applicable to devises and bequests, which are postponed in enjoyment to a period beyond that to which executory devises and bequests may by law extend, the gift should be wholly void.” In answer to this, Lord Eldon observed, that the sort of case then before him was not, he believed, much in the contemplation of the legislature; he further added (c), “As to the analogy between executory devise and the law to be considered laid down by this act, if the act itself does not prescribe what is to be the effect of the direction, the analogy may be resorted to, in order to determine the effect; but if the act has itself said what is to be the effect, you cannot upon analogy go further than to apply it as far as the directing words of the act will allow:” this passage appears to relate to the question then before Lord Eldon, namely, whether the direction was to be considered as wholly void. In a subsequent passage (d), his lordship, still adverting to the same question, says, “I doubt whether the present case was thought of, for by this will the estate is given, not by executory devise, but by creating a trust to pay the annual profits, and then follows the trust for accumulation;” and having decided the main point, his lordship added (e), “The difficulty was put strongly, that supposing the life of the husband should happen to endure for more than twenty-one years, what is to

(a) Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 175-6, after Mr. Hargrave's treatise.

(a) V. supra, p. 168.

(b) The question before Lord Eldon, it is to be remembered, was this, namely, whether the decision of Sir William Grant, that a trust for accumulation during the life of a person (in that case the husband of a married woman, to whom on the death of her husband the accumulated fund was given) was good for 21 years, if the life should exceed that period, and not void altogether, was right: Lord Eldon, as before mentioned, affirmed that decision.

(c) 9 Ves. 134. These observations are quoted by the Vice-Chancellor, p. 174.

(d) P. 135.

(e) P. 136, partly quoted by the Vice-Chancellor of England.

become of the profits accumulated at [qu. from] the end of the twenty-one years. It is clear now accumulation may be directed for twenty-one years, where an executory devise is created as large as heretofore, and when therefore there may be a very long interval. The very same difficulty might occur upon a will precisely in the terms of the act as upon this will: for instance, suppose the testator had an infant son a year old, and a brother; and that he expressly directed accumulation for twenty-one years, and subject to that gave the estate to his eldest son; and after the decease of his eldest son, to the eldest son of his brother: suppose the will contained a direction that the property so accumulated under a direction admitted to be legal, should go to the person who, under those limitations, was to take the estate; it is clear, though the direction to accumulate is only for twenty-one years, yet under the combined effect of the direction and the law, there might be an accumulation for forty years; for if the son lived till just about the end of the first twenty years, and then died, and the brother had a son a week old, and by his will he had provided a maintenance for his own son, under the direction of the law, that accumulation, 4,000*l.* for instance, must, during the minority of that son, accumulate in this court. It is clear then he would take the accumulation of forty years, though the legislature did not mean that, and there would be no difficulty, consistently with the principle which is to result from this decision, in deciding that whenever it arises. I could put many cases in which the same difficulty would occur if the direction for accumulation was in the very terms of this will" (a).

"It is observable," continued his Honour, "that Lord Eldon is putting a case totally distinct from the present, because he is putting the case of a devise to one party, with a direction to accumulate, and then a simple devise to another; and Lord Eldon then supposes, that being the case, that the statute did not at all intend to interfere with the accumulation, which would only be directed by operation of law."

"It struck me," continued his Honour, "on reading the different cases that have followed on the subject, that notwithstanding Lord Langdale's decision in the case of M<sup>c</sup>Donald v. Bryce, he has himself given a very plain rule in the language which is ascribed to him in the case of Eyre v. Marsden, where his lordship says, 'The statute, as it appears to me, was not intended to operate, and does not operate to alter any disposition made by the testator, except his direction to accumulate; striking that out, every thing else is left as before, and all the other directions of the will as to the time of payment, substitution, or any contingencies, are to take effect according to the true construction of the will, unaltered by the effect of the statute;' he added, 'I think therefore that the income which the statute forbids to be accumulated must go as in case of intestacy' "(a). "If you apply that language to a case in which no direction for accumulation is given, but there is an executory devise; by the operation of law, the rents and profits intermediately accruing would be preserved by way of accumulation for the person ultimately taking under the executory devise. Where there is nothing to strike out in the way of direction, you cannot strike out the direction unless you strike out the devise, and the direction therefore must be considered as a separate thing from the devise: and my opinion is, that if ever a case should again arise, such as actually did arise in M' Donald v. Bryce, it would deserve very serious consideration whether, considering the language of Lord Langdale himself, in the case of Eyre v. Marsden, and the hypothetical case put by Lord Eldon in Griffiths v. Vere, the decision in M' Donald v. Bryce could be sustained" (b).

(a) Lord Eldon, Griffiths v. Vere, 9 Ves. 136.

Shortly afterwards (12 March, 1847), the following case came before his Honour. William Guest, by will, gave 3,300*l.* to the corporation of Bridgenorth, upon trust, that they should receive the dividends, and should pay various annuities, and after the death of the survivors of the annuitants sell the 3,300*l.*, and pay the money arising therefrom, and also the proceeds arising therefrom in manner aforesaid, and the surplus of the dividends, after payment of the annuities, whilst they respectively continued payable, and also the proceeds which should have accumulated in respect thereof, unto and amongst all and every his second cousins as should be living at the death of the survivor of the annuitants; and if there should be any difficulty in the making out of the claims or otherwise, the trust moneys and the interest which should have accumulated in respect thereof, were to be divided at the end of two years from the death of the surviving annuitants, amongst those who had made out their claims; the testator gave the residue of his estate to James Baker. The testator died in 1812, the surviving

(a) 2 Keen, 574. That was a case of an express direction to accumulate, the accumulations to be added to the capital of the testator's property for the benefit of his grandchildren living at his decease, to be paid to them on the decease of his youngest surviving child; and the testator had provided that during the life of the youngest child the vested interest previously given might be divested. There was in fact a child still living. His lordship said that to direct that payments should be made to grandchildren at the end of 21 years, before the death of the testator's surviving child, as had been contended, would be to direct that which the testator had not directed, and to give and defeat interests directly contrary to his meaning and intention: then follows the passage above cited.

(b) Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 174-6.

annuitant in 1835; there were two years of dividends, possibly four, which, according to M'Donald v. Bryce, would have belonged to the residuary legatee, and he claimed them accordingly. The Vice-Chancellor, adhering to his former opinion, held, as there was no specific direction to accumulate, but only a sort of passing incidental observation made as to the possibility of there being an accumulation, that the words of the statute did not apply; "the testator has not so devised it," said his Honour, "as that there shall be accumulations; 'any accumulations' that may happen to be made are the result of a mere contingency, and not a devise of the testator's, though there is a direction by the testator to dispose of what may be accumulated;" that there was an accumulation was a mere accidental circumstance, the testator had not directed it (a).

Looking to the prohibitory part of the first section alone (b), it certainly does appear to apply only to cases where the accumulation is made by reason of some direction given by the testator, and not to a case where the court makes the accumulation without any direction on the part of the testator, and not as a matter of construction upon the will but for the sake of the parties interested; yet the latter description of accumulation in the case of a postponed gift seems to be equally within the spirit of the act, for thereby "the beneficial ownership is postponed" (c).

With regard to the supposed case put by Lord Eldon, it can hardly be compared to the case of an executory bequest; it is true there may be an accumulation for forty years, but the accumulation for the first

(a) Corporation of Bridgenorth v. Collins, xi. Jurist, 213. In this case, Shaw v. Rhodes, and the same case on appeal, nom. Evans v. Hillier, was not cited; in Elborne v. Goode it was.

In a late case, Lombe v. Stoughton, (1841,) 12 Sim. 304, the testator gave 20,000*l.* and 1000*l.* a year out of the rents of his estates which were settled, for ten years to his trustees, in order that out of that fund and its accumulations they might build a house, according to a plan to be approved by them, with the consent of whoever should be tenant for life, and they were to accumulate the interest; in the mean time they were to hold the surplus, if any, on the trusts which he had declared as to his personal estate. It happened that owing to various circumstances the fund had been accumulated for more than 21 years; the Vice-Chancellor held that the Thellusson Act did not apply to the case; he thought that if from disputes, negligence, or inadvertence, the fund had been paid into court, and had gone on accumulating for a century, the matter would have remained just exactly as it was before; namely, that out of the accumulated fund the house would be directed to be built according to the declared trust, and the court would have dealt with the surplus of the fund according to the trust declared of that surplus, and consequently that neither the heir at law or next of kin had any interest whatever in the subject. His Honour, by his observations in the course of the argument, ibid. p. 312, seems at first to have thought that the Thellusson Act might apply. In adjusting the rights of the parties in such a case, it would seem that the interests of the parties who would have enjoyed the house, if it had been built, would have to be taken into consideration, as well as the interests of those entitled to the surplus; the right of the latter would probably be regulated as between those successively entitled by analogy to the principle established in the case of Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520.

(b) V. sup. p. 165.

(c) Mr. Jarman appears to have entertained no doubt on the subject, i. 274-6.

twenty years is of a quite different character from that for the second twenty years; the accumulations arising during the first interval are, if I am right in the opinion as to the construction of the act hazarded in a former page, entirely in the testator's or settlor's power to dispose of as he pleases; those which are made during the second interval are accumulations arising merely from the careful management of the infant's own property and for his own benefit; and if the interest should be required for maintenance, there will be no accumulation at all. It seems to be no more than what is constantly introduced into schemes for the regulation of charities, that the surplus income shall be accumulated for repairs or other incidental purposes (a); besides, if the accumulation for the second term should be treated as an accumulation within the act, as the interest and profits during the prohibited interval are directed to go to the person who would have been entitled if such accumulation had not been directed, it would seem that the infant would still be entitled to them (b), and then they must be taken care of for him just in the same way; and in either case, on his death, they would pass as part of his personal estate. With regard to Lord Langdale's observation in Eyre v. Marsden, it appears to be equally applicable to an executory devise as to an express direction for accumulation, the implied direction for accumulation for the interval which takes place after the end of twenty-one years may be struck out, and the executory bequest will still have its entire effect as regards the corpus and the amount of the preceding accumulations. It being necessary therefore to choose between such high authorities, principle and reason appear to turn the scales in favour of the received opinion that executory bequests, which necessarily lead to accumulation, are within the statute (c).

As regards the Operation of the Statute.—The act, it is to be observed, is a restraining statute; it does not give validity to any trust for accumulation, which would have been invalid as the law stood prior to the statute.

Before the Accumulation Act, a testamentary or other trust or direction to accumulate, so worded as to last, or to be capable of lasting, beyond the compass of all lives in being at the testator's death,

(a) So accumulations are continually made of funds in court, where there is a doubt as to the existence of the person beneficially entitled, Cuthbert v. Purrier, vi. Jur. 447; and for other similar purposes to which the statute has never been considered to have any application.

(b) See Trickey v. Trickey, 3 My. & K. 561, 565.

(c) See, as to the cases last adverted to, Roper on Leg. 1560-2.

and twenty-one years after the death of the survivor of those lives, the title being put in suspense till the end of that time, would have been illegal and void for the whole; and such a trust is not less illegal and void since the Accumulation Act (a). But if the accumulations are so given as to vest at the testator's death (b), subject to a postponement of the enjoyment (c), such a gift is not obnoxious to the provisions of the act, so far as to be made void; the act, in such a case, like the rule against remoteness, only applies so as to accelerate the possession (d). A trust for accumulation, as has been remarked by Mr. Lewis, may verge on the very outside of the allowed limits of perpetuity, and yet be void only for the actual excess beyond the absolute period authorized by the act; while if it in any degree, however insignificant, transgress the boundary of remoteness, or, if it be so framed as that it may possibly transgress such boundary, it will wholly fail, without regard to the actual course of events. There are numerous cases from which the latter proposition may be exemplified (e).

The case of Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford (f), before adverted to, may be given as an example where minorities are taken, but so that the accumulation may possibly go on beyond the limits allowed by law. By indentures, certain estates were conveyed in strict settlement, subject to a term of one thousand years, upon the following trusts:—that during the minorities of any person who, for the time being, should, by virtue of the limitations thereinbefore contained, be immediate tenant for life, in tail male, or in tail, in possession, the trustees should receive the rents, and apply them in discharge of incumbrances, and after the discharge of the same, should, during such minorities as above-mentioned, invest the yearly rents in real or government securities, so that the same might accumulate during such minorities; and that the trustees should stand possessed of such accumulations, in trust for such person as should immediately, upon the expiration of such minority or minorities, or the death of such minor

(a) Boughton v. James, 1 Col. 45.

(b) See Blease v. Burgh, 2 Beav. 221-226.

(c) See Boughton v. James, ubi sup. and p. 42.

(d) Jarman on Wills, i. 252.

(e) Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54, and Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swanst. 432, which are cases where income was directed to be accumulated during the minorities of the persons who should become beneficially interested in settled property, and which might exceed the limit fixed by law, Palmer v. Hoiford, 4 Russ.

403; Vawdrey v. Geddes, 1 Russ. & M. 203; Griffith v. Blunt, 4 Beavan, 248, 252, where income was directed to be accumulated and divided among the children, born and to be born, of a person living, at a period which might postpone the vesting of the interests of some of them at least, till more than 21 years after a life in being. Abstracts of these cases may be seen in Mr. Hargrave's Treatise, and Lewis on Perpetuities, 594-6.

(f) Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54; and see Browne v. Stoughton, 14 Sim. 369, 378.

or minors, be tenant in possession, and be of the age of 21. "This is an attempt," said Sir W. Grant, "wholly to sever the surplus rents and profits from the legal ownership of the estate, for a term that may extend beyond the period allowed for executory devises or trusts of accumulation, and to give them to a person who may not come into existence until after that period, and he did not see how any part of such a trust could be executed; and he held the trust to be wholly void" (a). In the case of Marshall v. Holloway (b), Lord Eldon, on the same principle, held the trust for accumulation to be wholly void.

However, it was very early established that where a trust for accumulation, which would be good according to the general law, is so constructed as to aim at either a certain or a contingent duration beyond twenty-one years from the death of the settlor or testator; the effect of the statute is not to nullify the trust altogether, but only for the interval during which in the event it shall be found to exceed that duration (c). But where the limitations of an estate which are valid, have annexed to them trusts for accumulation which are in their creation invalid, by reason of remoteness, the Court of Chancery, when dealing with the instrument, will not support the trusts for accumulation so far as the testator might have carried them, but will reject them altogether: "if it is bad to the extent in which it is given, you cannot model it to make it good" (d); Lord Eldon (e), though at first inclined to support such trusts, so far as not to break in upon any rule of law, yet ultimately came to the same conclusion as Sir Wm. Grant (f).

Care has been taken that the operation of the act should be confined to its purpose, and that the other provisions in the will, not necessarily annulled by the act, should not be interfered with; thus, in Eyre v. Marsden, before cited (g), Lord Langdale held that the title of the legatees to the accumulations directed to be made remained untouched, so that they could not be admitted to have any interest in the accumulations declared to be void, as their title under the gift to such accumulations, had they been good, would not then have been

(a) Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 64; Harg. pp. 91-2.

(b) 2 Swanst. 432.

(c) Griffiths v. Vere, 9 Ves. 127; Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295; Haley v. Bannister, supra; and see the other cases, Hargr. 151-3.

(d) Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257; Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54, 64.

(e) Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swanst. 432, 450.

(f) Sir E. Sugden, Ker v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Dru. & War. 532.

(g) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 574.

complete: on the other hand, in Pride v. Fooks (a), the same learned judge considered that the directions for maintenance and advancement out of the income of the fund directed to be accumulated, were effectual after as well as before the period from which the direction for accumulation had been declared to be void (a).

As regards the void accumulations or the void excess.—By the provisions of the Thellusson Act, not only are directions for prohibited accumulations declared to be null and void, (which is the only provision which is contained in the 9 Geo. II. c. 36, the Mortmain Act, in respect of provisions inconsistent with its provisions,) but it is enacted that the rents, issues and profits and produce of such property so directed to be accumulated shall, so long as the same shall be directed to be accumulated contrary to the provisions of the act, go to and be received by such person or persons as would have been entitled thereto if such accumulation had not been directed: the title of the heir at law and next of kin under the Mortmain Act therefore rests altogether upon the right to property undisposed of; but the act against accumulations gives a statutable title (b). Under the provisions of this act if the accumulations are to be made upon a Specific Portion of the property, the rents or interest during the prohibited interval will go to the devisee or legatee of the property (c), if he would have been entitled to the rents or interest in case such accumulation had not been directed: the same analogy holds in such case as in the case of a perfect gift charged with a trust which is imperfectly declared or which fails of effect: the property is absolutely given, and a trust for accumulation is by a distinct direction imposed upon the property, which being illegal fails of effect; the donee therefore by analogy, as well as by the words of the statute, takes the property discharged of the trust (d). If the title of the legatee or devisee to the enjoyment has not arrived, then the prohibited accumulations will go to the residuary legatees or devisees if any, as part of the capital of the residue (e); if there should be no

(a) 2 Beavan, 430.

(b) Lord Cottenham, Eyre v. Marsden, 4 My. & Cr. 246. It was on this ground that Lord Cottenham reversed the decree of the Master of the Rolls, so far as it charged the costs upon the illicit accumulations treating them as residue undisposed of, and directed that the general costs of the suit should be paid out of the general estate of the testator, including the fund accumulated within the permitted period, p. 248.

(c) Trickey v. Trickey, 3 My. & K. 565.

(d) Lord Southampton v. Marquis of Hertford, 2 Ves. & B. 54, 64; Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 My. & Cr. 135 (see Hargrave, 171, Jarman, i. 170); and see Carver v. Bowles, 2 Russ. & M. 308; Kampf v. Jones, 2 Keen, 761; Ring v. Hardwicke, iv. Jur. 242, 2 Beav. 352; Winkworth v. Winkworth, 8 Beavan, 576, and Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swanst. 450, dict. Lord Eldon.

(e) Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sim. 429, residuary gift, then to the heir at law or next of kin, just as they would have done if there had been no direction for accumulation during that interval; the statute annulling the accumulation, and any gift of the accumulations forming an integral part of the direction to accumulate, but not further. If it be the Residue itself which is directed to be accumulated for the purpose of future gift, the next of kin or heir at law, according to the nature of the property, will be entitled to the accumulations for the prohibited interval; to give them to the residuary devisee or legatee, where the enjoyment has been suspended by the testator, and made to depend on a contingency, would, as it has been observed, be to make a new disposition for the testator (a): if there be a direction for maintenance and advancement out of such accumulations, such maintenance, as before observed, is well given; the act which prevents accumulation only applies to such part as intended to be accumulated (b).

It is to be observed, that where a legacy is given which becomes vested in the legatee at 21, and there is a direction for accumulation until the legatee attain 24 or some other age; such a clause is considered as merely directory as to the future management, and the legatee may put an end to it at pleasure: it is void, not by the effect of the Thellusson Act, but by the general law, as being repugnant to the estate which is given to the legatee (c).

Where property is given to trustees, with a direction that the same be converted into money if not already such, and that the fund be invested in the purchase of real estate to be settled, and there is a direction that in the mean time the rents, interest and profits of the property so devoted to the purchase shall be accumulated and be laid out together with the corpus in the intended purchase, and that no there the legacy did not vest in the legatee till 25. O'Neill v. Lucas, 2 Keen, 313, there the legacy was not to vest till the death of a particular person.

(a) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 573-4. In that case, there was an express direction to accumulate the residue for the benefit of the testator's grandchildren; the rents and dividends from the legal period of accumulation were held to go as in case of intestacy, and not to the residuary legatees; and see S. C. on appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 246, where this part of the judgment was affirmed. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 437; M'Donald v. Bryce, 2 Keen, 284; see Hargrave, 174; Jarman, i.

170, 271.

(b) Lord Langdale, Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 441.

(c) Josselyn v. Josselyn, 9 Sim. 63; Jackson v. Majoribanks, 12 Sim. 93; Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Beav. 155; Saunders v. Vautier, 4 Beav. 115; 1 Phill. 240: that case is important, as having established that where a legacy is given to trustees and set apart from the bulk of the estate (see 1 Ves. 311), and the trustees are directed to accumulate it till the legatee attain 25, or any other age, and then to pay the legacy and accumulated interest to him, the legatee has a vested interest in the legacy; and see Rocke v. Rocke, 9 Beavan, 66.

person is to take any interest till the trusts with respect to the purchase are completed (a); the court, looking to the inconveniencies which would result from a literal adherence to the directions given, has held as a general rule, in regard to the respective interests of the tenant for life and remainder-men of the estate to be purchased, that the direction for accumulation shall operate for one year only, and that though the personalty remains as personalty (necessarily perhaps), it shall at the end of the year be considered as converted, and that the beneficial enjoyment shall be the same as if the conversion had been made (b).

It may be well here to consider the doctrine of the Court of Chancery, in regard to giving maintenance out of the funds directed to be accumulated, and to advert to the doctrines as to maintenance out of contingent legacies generally.

Where a legacy is given to a legitimate child by its parent (c), or by a person who has placed himself in loco parentis (d), or who gives the legacy expressly as a "portion" (e), at least where it is to a natural child, a grandchild, or a nephew or niece (f), the court will allow maintenance for the child from the death of the testator (g), though none be given by the will, notwithstanding that the legacy be contingent, for instance, to such of the testator's children as shall attain 21 (h); and, according to one case, though there be a direction for accumulation, and if the legatee die before 21, then the whole be given over (i).

(a) As in Sitwell v. Bernard, 6 Ves. 520; Entwistle v. Markland, ib. 528, n.; Stuart v. Bruere, ib. 529, n.

(b) Lord Eldon, Angerstein v. Martin, Turn. & R. 239-40. The same principle applies where a residuary personal estate is directed to be got in and invested, and life estates and remainders in the funds are given, Hewit v. Morris, ibid. 241-5, v. supra, p. 43.

(c) Beckford v. Tobin, 1 Ves. 310.

(d) As to the circumstances which will be sufficient to place a person in this character, see Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Scho. & Lef. 5; Hill v. Hill, 3 Ves. & B. 187; Rogers v. Soutten, 2 Keen, 602; Wilson v. Maddison, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 372; Powys v. Mansfield, on appeal, 3 My. & Cr. 374, sup. vol. i. p. 560; and see Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 101; Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. J. 11a; Acherly v. Wheeler, 1 P. W. 783, and Boddy v. Dawes, 1 Keen, 368; on that point and the use of the word "Portion" by the testator.

(e) The subject of Portions will be separately considered in a future chapter.

(f) Acherley v. Wheeler, 1 P. W. 782, provision for a niece; but which case Lord Hardwicke does not appear to have approved; Heath v. Perry, 3 Atk. 102; the reasons given for this decision are special; Hill v. Hill, 3 Ves. & B. 183, provision for grandchildren. As to a natural child see Perry v. Whitehead, 6 Ves. 547; Beckford v. Tobin, 1 Ves. 308, 1 Swanst. 558; Dowling v. Tyrell, 2 Russ. & M. 343.

(g) The rule is not extended to a legacy to a natural child simply as such, ibid.; and Perry v. Whitehead, 6 Ves. 546; or to a grandchild, see Errington v. Chapman, 12 Ves. 24; but there the legacy was not given absolutely.

(h) Dict. Lord Hardwicke, Incedon v. Northcote, 3 Atk. 430, 438; Brown v. Timperley, 3 Russel, 263; in this case there was no gift over.

(i) Mole v. Mole, 1 Dick, 310; and see the other cases, Roper on Leg. 1259; but the Vice-Chancellor of England, 4 Sim. 436, seems to doubt this case.

The basis of this rule, which does not extend to adults, is, that the father being bound to provide maintenance for his child, whilst an infant (a), and having made a provision by a legacy, payable at a future day, and that a person who has placed himself in the character of parent, must be presumed to intend that the child, having no other provision, should be supported in the mean time; but this implication is ousted if he provides any maintenance for the child, however small the maintenance and however large the legacy (b). However, where a legacy is given, payable at 21, so as to be vested at the testator's death, and a provision is made for maintenance, and the remainder is directed to be accumulated; this provision and direction will not prevent the vesting of the legacy, nor will the direction for accumulation prevent the court from ordering a further portion of the interest to be applied for maintenance if required (c): where the property, of whatever nature, is vested, though liable to be divested, maintenance may be obtained (d): if there be an intention to be collected, that maintenance or interest should be allowed from the death or any other time, of course it will be followed, whosoever may be the legatee (e).

Where the legacy is amongst a class with survivorship between them but is not given over, and the grandchildren, or indeed any class of children (strangers to the testator), compose a class of legatees, all or some of whom must absolutely take the fund, all having a common interest in it—an equal chance of taking or being the survivor, there the court will allow interest in the shape of maintenance if the father of the legatees be not of ability to maintain them (f). The case of Fairman v. Green, before Sir W. Grant, though, as after mentioned, it has been disapproved, will, together with the other cases after stated, illustrate this rule. The grandfather, who survived the father, and on whose will the question arose, by his will devised his real estates to his eldest grandson, Joseph, directing that the rents should be accumulated and paid to him at 21; and if he should die under that age leaving issue then to his issue; if he died before that age without issue, the testator gave such accumulated rents to his three other grandchildren, equally, at 21, the interest to be applied for their respective uses in the mean time; the testator also gave to each of his four grandchildren

(a) See Raven v. Waite, 1 Swanst. 553, 558-9.

(b) Lord Redesdale, Ellis v. Ellis, 1 Scho. & Lefroy, 5. Lord Alvanley, in Tyrrell v. Tyrrell, 4 Ves. 5; and see Chambers v. Goldwin, 11 Ves. 1.

(c) Fairman v. Green, 10 Ves. 48; Stretch v. Watkins, 1 Mad. 253, 256-8.

(d) Snow v. Poulden, 1 Keen, 186.

(e) See Leslie v. Leslie, Lloyd & G., temp. Sugd. 4, and Pell v. Fellows, 1 Swanst. 561, there cited.

(f) See Ex parte Kebble, Lord Eldon, 11 Ves. 606; Errat v. Barlow, 14 Ves. 202, stated infra; and see Roper on Legacies, ii. p. 1283.

before mentioned 500*l.* each, to be paid at their respective ages of 21; and he gave the residue of his personal estate to his grandson, Joseph, to be paid at 21; there was a direction to accumulate the interest of the several legacies till they should become payable, to be transferred to the legatees with their original legacies; and in case of the death of either of the children under age without leaving issue, the legacy and the accumulations were to go to the survivors equally, to be paid at the same time as their original shares. A bill having been filed, the eldest and three younger grandchildren applied to confirm the report made by the Master, approving of 250*l.* a year out of the income of 600*l.* a year belonging to the eldest, and 54*l.* a year for the other children, being the amount of the interest of the legacies from their father and grandfather, with the accumulations. The disputed cases of Greenwell v. Greenwell, Cavendish v. Mercer, and Fendal v. Nash, (after noticed,) were cited, to show that in the case of a father and grandfather the rents and interest might be applied for the maintenance of a child otherwise unprovided for, though the devise or bequest were contingent. No one opposed the application. Sir Wm. Grant said, "The court has not done this, except where all parties who were to have maintenance were equally interested. If there are three children, and the property is given to one, and if he dies under 21, then to the others, there is an equal chance of all attaining the age of 21. But if there is any legatee over," (there was none in this case,) "the court has always taken the consent of that legatee" (a). "If," Sir Wm. Grant afterwards said, "the eldest son were to die, the younger children would have maintenance under the grandfather's will; therefore they are not all equal here as in the cases cited. My doubt was," (he said, referring to his having refused to make the order on petition,) "whether it was ever done upon a petition if the infant had not the absolute interest. It could only be on the equitable ground that if the court would not interfere the other children would be just in as bad a situation." His Honour made the order (b).

In Errat v. Barlow (1807), (c), Lord Eldon examined all the cases on the subject; he first observed upon Greenwell v. Greenwell (d); "That was a case where the testator devised his real estates to trustees in trust for his grandson till he should attain 21; they were expressly directed to accumulate the rents during the minority

(a) Sir William Grant decided Errington v. Chapman, 12 Ves. 24, on this principle.

(b) Fairman v. Green, 10 Ves. 49; Lord Eldon, 11 Ves. 605, said this case was not within the former cases, and he disapproved of it, by reason of the limitation to the issue: it is to be observed the grandfather stood in loco parentis.

(c) 14 Ves. 202.

(d) 5 Ves. 194.

of the grandson, for his benefit; and when he attained 21, the trustees were to pay to him such accumulations, but if he should die before 21, the same were to be held in trust for the testator's three grand-daughters, to be paid at 21, or marriage; and in the same event the real estates were given in trust for the three grand-daughters at 21, as tenants in common. The bill was filed by the infant grandson, praying to have maintenance allowed; it is presumed the grand-daughters were parties. Lord Rosslyn at first said he feared if he should make a decree it would be his will and not the testator's; ultimately he granted the maintenance, on the authority of Cavendish v. Mercer and Fendal v. Nash; though Lord Rosslyn stated each of them as being cases in which the consent of those who would be ultimately entitled was obtained, no consent was required in the case before Lord Rosslyn" (a). Lord Eldon next adverted to Cavendish v. Mercer (b), where there was also an express direction for accumulation, but in which all had an equal chance as amongst themselves, and the persons entitled under the limitation over consented. "That case therefore," said Lord Eldon, "is an authority only that where the court sees that it is for the benefit of the infants, the chance of surviving being equal, and can procure the consent of all persons interested, the court will take the chance of controverting the direction of the will." Lord Eldon next observed "that he could not bring himself to think that the case of Fendall v. Nash (c) was properly decided, as upon certain contingencies both the principal and interest would have gone to individuals not then in existence; and how the court," said his lordship, "could give to the infants that property which in that event would belong to others, he could not conceive." "The result is," continued his lordship, "that if the chance of surviving is equal amongst all, and no other interest that upon any contingency would take effect will be defeated, maintenance shall be allowed out of the interest; but it is impossible to give it where in any event under the operation and construction of the will, that interest may possibly belong to other persons" (d). This case therefore over-ruled the case before Lord Rosslyn, and the case of Greenwell v. Greenwell, and the other cases, and is now acted upon as the law. In a previous case, Ex parte Kebble, (1805,)

(a) Sir William Grant does not appear to have disapproved of, on the contrary he acted upon this case, see 12 Ves. 25, and Collis v. Blackburn, (1804,) 9 Ves. 470: there was a clause of survivorship in that case, but no gift over.

(b) 5 Ves. 195, n.

(c) 5 Ves. 197, n.

(d) Errat v. Barlow, 14 Ves. 203-4; but it seems no order was made on that petition, and by a subsequent order (the circumstances are not stated) 50*l.* a year was allowed by the M. R. for maintenance of the infants, to be paid to the father; Haley v. Bannister, 4 Mad. 279.

Lord Eldon had said, "the principle could not be applied where the legacy is not given absolutely to the children and the survivors, but in case of the death of the child there is a limitation to the issue, who for that purpose are strangers," and he there refused to make the order (a).

In a subsequent case Lord Eldon said: "The court has never gone further than this, that though the words of the will do not authorise the application of interest to the maintenance of infants, yet if it can collect before it all the individuals who may be entitled to the fund, so as to make to each a compensation for taking from him part, it will grant an allowance for maintenance; but if the will contains successive limitations, under which persons not in being may become entitled (to the exclusion of the parties presumptively entitled), it is not sufficient that all the parties then living, presumptively entitled, are before the court, for none of the living may be the parties eventually entitled to the enjoyment of the property: in such a case the order would be in effect to give for the maintenance of one person the property of another (b).

In the case of Haley v. Bannister (1819), before referred to, two sums of stock were directed to be purchased by the executors, and they were to receive and accumulate the dividends until one of the children of the testator's daughter should attain 21, and on his attaining that age, if there should be only one, the executors were to transfer the whole to such one; if more than one, they were to transfer one half to such children in proportion to the number of such children then living; there was no specific gift over on failure of children, but there was a residuary gift; some of the children applied for maintenance: Errat v. Barlow, before noticed, was cited. Sir J. Leach, M. R., said, "I take the principle to be that wherever the children have a common interest in the fund, the increase of the fund, if necessary, may be applied to their maintenance: in this case children born and to be born have a common interest, and therefore the interest of the fund is in this case applicable to maintenance" (c). In Kime v. Welfitt, where an accumulation was directed for the benefit of such of the testator's children as should attain 21, and the issue of such as should die before that age leaving issue, and the whole was given over in the event of no one attaining 21, or leaving issue; the Vice-

(a) Ex parte Kebble, 11 Ves. 604. Lord Eldon said there were some older cases than those that were produced in Greenwell v. Greenwell, but his lordship said he did not know the principle on which those cases could be maintained.

(b) Lord Eldon, Marshall v. Holloway (1818), 2 Swanst. 436.

(c) Sir J. Leach, Haley v. Bannister, 4 Mad. 280.

Chancellor of England refused to allow maintenance, even though the legatees over consented, saying, there might by possibility be other claimants; some issue might come into existence who would be entitled to the fund, and he could not affect their rights (a). In Turner v Turner, before the same learned judge, the disposition of the property, which was by the grandfather, was not such as that it could be said "that the grandchildren would of necessity take the whole fund" (b); he therefore, referring to Lord Eldon's decisions before cited, refused to give any maintenance (c). In the case of Cannings v. Flower (d), the testator directed that his trustees should stand possessed of one-sixth part of the moneys to arise from the sale of his residuary real and personal estate, after the decease of two persons named, in trust for the children of one Eleanor Goddard by her late husband, as tenants in common, but the shares of sons were only to be vested on their attaining 24, or dying before that age leaving issue, and the shares of daughters were to vest at 24, or marriage; the shares of such of the children as should not become vested in them as aforesaid were to accrue to the others; there was no gift over: there were three children, none of whom attained 24, and they applied for maintenance. The Vice-Chancellor of England refused the application: he said he considered that the rule was established in the manner stated in his judgment in Turner v. Turner; that the chances of obtaining a vested interest in the fund appeared not to be equal as amongst the children themselves; at all events he would not make the order without the consent of the next of kin. These cases appear to have settled the principle upon this point, the only doubt will be as to its application.

With regard to the Liabilities of Trustees charged with an effectual trust for accumulation, Lord Eldon, after much consideration, laid it down as a principle that where a trustee is directed to lay out a fund intrusted to him to accumulate for the benefit of the cestuis que trust, if he neglect to do so, taking no step for years and keeping the whole in his hands, he acts against his duty, and that upon the nature of his duty compound interest is to be charged against him as much as upon contract or the usage of dealing (e): and again, after further considera-

(a) Kime v. Welfitt, 3 Sim. 535; following Lord Eldon, 11 Ves. 605, supra, p. 187. The decree in the case of Body v. Dawes, 1 Keen, 367, proceeded on the ground of a gift by implication of the intermediate interest.

(b) V. supra, p. 189.

(c) Turner v. Turner, 4 Sim. 437. The Vice-Chancellor there said, he considered Fendall v. Nash, and the older cases, as overruled.

(d) 7 Sim. 523.

(e) Raphael v. Boehm, 11 Ves. 104; 13

tion, his lordship said (h), "Where there is an express trust to make improvement of the money, if the trustee will not honestly endeavour to improve it, there is nothing wrong in considering him, as the Principal, to have lent the money to himself, upon the same terms upon which he would have lent it to others; and as often as he ought to have lent it if it be principal, and as often as he ought to have received it and lent it to others, if the demand be interest and interest upon interest:"—"this is a species of case in which the court would shamefully neglect its duty to infants by adopting a rule that an executor might keep money in his hands without being answerable as if he had accumulated; and if the court cannot find out from the actual circumstances proved that he has attempted accumulation, and the charge falls more heavily upon him on that account the fault is his own in not showing what endeavours to improve it he has made" (i). But this

Ves. 591. Lord Loughborough's original decree, which is not reported, gave double compound interest, which Lord Eldon disapproved (11 Ves. 111; 1 Mad. 300). Even Lord Eldon's order in this case, charging the trustee with compound interest, which proceeded upon the principle stated in the text, has often been observed upon as having been a harsh decision (2 My. & K. 663). Sir Thomas Plumer supposes that it may have proceeded upon the fact that the trustee had laid out the money in his trade, but which does not appear from the case (1 Mad. 300), and he seems to have thought that it was necessary to make out a case of misfeasance, in order to substantiate a charge for compound interest, even where there is an express direction to accumulate, Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 307. The Vice-Chancellor of England, in the Attorney-General v. Solly, 2 Sim. 519, which however was a charity case without any trust for accumulation, describes it as "an excepted case;" but neither Sir A. Hart, (1 Molloy, 85,) who was counsel in the cause, on the re-hearing, nor Lord Erskine, (13 Ves. 412,) appear to have objected to the principle laid down: the present Lord Chancellor, in Heighington v. Grant, 1 Phill. 604, cites it without any expression of dissent, though the question was not before him; Sir William Grant, as is stated in the next note, expressed his approval of this principle. If, as it is constantly declared, he who accepts a trust assumes all the duties imposed by the trust, and is liable to make compensation for all the consequences if he neglect to perform them (see Sir William Grant's judgment, Dornford v. Dornford, 12 Ves. 129) it seems difficult to find any solid ground for exempting a trustee from the full extent of his liability in a case of this description, however much one would desire that trustees should not be so hardly dealt with: his duty is clearly marked out in this case; in the case of an executor omitting to get in debts on personal security, and in other cases, where executors and trustees are held liable for neglect and constructive breaches of trust without any hesitation, they have frequently first to find out what is their duty; or, as in Urch v. Walker, 3 My. & Cr. 702, they may have been misled into an erroneous conception as to their duty: in cases of gross neglect of duty, and of fraud, trustees have been charged with compound interest in cases where there was no direction to accumulate, and that by the highest authority, Stacpoole v. Stacpoole, 4 Dow. 209, 230. If there be any reason for relaxing the rules of the court in the case now under consideration, it is perhaps that such cases are not of so frequent occurrence, and therefore not so necessary to be provided against, as those where it has been considered that the rules of the court must be strictly adhered to. However, in the absence of fraud or gross misconduct, the trustee, if he duly account, will, as it seems, have his Costs, though charged with compound interest; see 1 Phillips, 603-4.

(h) 11 Ves. 107-8, et v. rel.

(i) And see Dornford v. Dornford, 12 Ves. 129, where Sir William Grant, in his judgment, fully adopts Lord Eldon's principle; but the decree charged the estate of a bankrupt trustee with simple interest only, (1 Mad. 302-3,) the direction not being so explicit as in Raphael v. Boehm, (1 Mad. 301-2). In Brown v. Sansom, 1 M'Clelland & Yo. 427, in which case one of the executors was a banker and had kept the funds in his hands with the rule is to be applied only where there is a positive direction to accumulate, a mere direction to lay out the money is clearly not sufficient; and where there is a positive direction to accumulate, only where the trustee has been guilty of culpable negligence, or, according to Sir Thomas Plumer, actual misfeasance (a). "If," says Lord Eldon, "the trustee comes desiring the court not to weigh his conduct in golden scales, but to measure, by his general conduct, an honest endeavour to execute the trust, the court would not deal out harsh measure to him" (b).

permission of the trustees; an inquiry was directed as to what would have been the amount of the accumulations, so as to charge the trustees with that amount (p. 430), and the defendants were charged by C. B. Alexander, on further directions, with interest at five per cent. on the balance from the time the direction for accumulation ceased.

(a) Sir Thomas Plumer, in Tebbs v. Carpenter, ubi supra; citing Dornford v. Dornford, ubi sup.; Ashburnham v. Thomson, 13 Ves. 402; and Rocke v. Hart, 11 Ves. 58 (1 Mad. 303).

(b) Lord Eldon, 11 Ves. 107; see Hill on Trustees, 371.

CHAPTER VI.

TRUSTS BY IMPLICATION, PRESUMPTION, AND CONSTRUCTION OF LAW, WHERE FRAUD OR PUBLIC POLICY DO NOT FORM THE MAIN INGREDIENT IN THE DECISION.

SECTION I.—Introduction.—General Doctrines.

The Trusts here to be considered are those where Fraud and Improper Conduct do not form an Ingredient.

Implied or Presumptive Trusts, Resulting Trusts, and Constructive Trusts not depending on Fraud, will be treated of together.

Whether Vendor's Lien is to be considered an Express Trust within the Statute of Limitations, note.

Trusts by Operation of Law within the Words of the Statute of Frauds, Lord Hardwicke's Definition.

Lloyd v. Spillett.

Trust fixed upon Trust Property in the hands of the Possessor.

Rule applied as regards Persons taking from Executors and Administrators.

Exception as regards Disseisors, &c., and those who come in in the Post.

Effect of Fine levied, prior to their Abolition, in reference to this Subject.

Whether on a Conveyance without Consideration a Trust may result.

Duke of Norfolk v. Brown.

Lord Hardwicke's Opinion, that no Trust will result.

No Presumption of Trust as against a Complete Transfer or Conveyance according to Modern Cases.

Evidence may in some Cases be given to prove a Trust.

No Resulting Trust as regards a Transfer of an Equitable or Trust Estate by Analogy to the Doctrine as to Uses.

BEFORE entering upon a particular consideration of the express trusts usually introduced into wills, settlements and trust deeds, it will be proper to notice the general doctrines of the Court of Chancery on the subject of trusts by Operation of Law, that is, by implication, presumption, and construction of law, so far as relates to such trusts as arise from the voluntary act of the party having the dominion over property,—from contract, expressed or implied,—and such constructive trusts as arise from the application of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery, independently of any particular act or contract; confining ourselves for the present, as regards constructive trusts, to such as arise from the relative situation of the parties; leaving those cases which are based on actual fraud for the next Division (a). These several kinds of trusts will be treated of together in this chapter, there being no definite meaning attached to any one of the expressions by which they are designated, which has been adhered to by the judicial authorities (b).

Lord Hardwicke, as is noticed in the former volume, in the case of Lloyd v. Spillet (c), speaking of trusts of the description we are now to consider, observes that he was bound by the Statute of Frauds (d) to construe nothing a Resulting Trust but what are there called Trusts by Operation of Law, "which," said his lordship, "are : first, when an estate is purchased in the name of one person, but the money or consideration is given by another (e) ; or, secondly, where a trust is declared only as to part, and nothing is said as to the rest, what remains undisposed of results to the heir-at-law (f) ; and they (sic) cannot be said to be trustees for the residue." "I do not know," adds his lordship, "in any other instance, besides these two, where this court has declared resulting trusts by operation of law, unless in cases of fraud, and where transactions have been carried on malâ fide" (g). But this description, as will be seen by what follows, does not embrace every case of trust by operation of law, within the meaning of the statute, which is raised by the application of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery (h).

Some of the most familiar instances of trusts by operation of law, have been noticed in the former volume (i) ; but they require a more particular consideration.

One instance of trusts by operation of law arises from the possession of property bound by a trust (k). Trusts are enforced not only against

(a) V. supra, vol. i. pp. 509, 510, vol. ii. p. 4. Constructive trusts depending on fraud and public policy will be considered under the general jurisdiction in regard to fraud, under the next division, namely, that which treats of Equitable Rights ; and that description of implied or constructive trust which arises on a contract for sale (vide sup. vol. i. p. 509,) will, as before noticed, be treated of under the head "Specific Performance," also in the second division.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 511. Indeed, as we have seen, Lord Nottingham includes Presumptive, or as they are now generally called Implied, sometimes Constructive trusts, under his definition of Express trusts, sup. vol. i. 496 ; Cook v. Fountain. A definition of express trusts is only perhaps material in respect of what is meant by express trusts as distinguished from trusts by implication or construction or operation of law as regards the Statute of Frauds, sup. vol. i. p. 497, and the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, § 25, v. supra, vol. i. p. 503, vol. ii. p. 48.

(c) 2 Atk. 150 ; S. C. Barnardist. 384.

(d) 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 7.

(e) Supra, vol. i. p. 511.

(f) V. supra, vol. i. p. 510 ; it will be seen that a trust may result as to the whole.

(g) Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150.

(h) And see 2 Fonbl. 117 ; where Mr. Fonblanque has observed upon the inaccuracy and insufficiency of this definition ; and see Lewin, 181.

(i) Pp. 509-512.

(k) The holder of trust property becomes a trustee of it as soon as he has notice that it is trust property, Lord C. Sugden, Sheridan v. Joyce, 2 Jo. & Lat. 410 ; that is of course if its character has not been changed ; Fonbl. p. 4, n. (b) : the trust is as it were continued.

those persons who are possessed of the trust property rightfully as trustees; but also against all persons who come into possession of the property bound by the trust with notice (a) of the trust; and against those who take by voluntary conveyance or title, though without notice (b): and whosoever so comes into possession is considered as bound with respect to that special property to the execution of the trust; and this, as Lord Redesdale observes, applies to the administration of assets of a testator or intestate equally as to other trusts (c): and the rule applies to purchasers, with notice of any equitable incumbrance or lien, as of a covenant or agreement affecting the estate (d).

It is not clear how far a purchaser may be affected by notice of a constructive trust: notice of an equitable title, it is to be observed, is very different from notice of a legal title; the result of the authorities appears to be, that where the construction to be put on the words of the instrument on which the equitable title arises may admit of serious doubt, the purchaser will not be bound, though the Court may consider that the words do give an equitable title (e): on a similar principle the Court will not, at least in a doubtful case, rectify a settlement as against a purchaser though the case might be clear as against a volunteer (f).

(a) As to notice, express and constructive, v. infra, chapter on Mortgages, et v. supra, vol. i. pp. 424, 425, 445; Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 55; and Sugd. V. and P. 1040, et seq., which indeed might supersede any other reference; et v. infra, p. 200, add. note.

(b) Dict. Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. W. 681-2, Gilb. For. Rom. 62.

(c) Lord Redesdale, Adair v. Shaw, 1 Scho. & Lef. 262, affirmed on re-hearing; Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Scho. & Lef. 379; affirmed on re-hearing, 2 Scho. & Lef. 740; Nelson, C. C. 378; Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583; supra, vol. i. 445.

(d) Int. al. Ravenshaw v. Hollier, 7 Sim. 15; Leigh v. Macaulay, 1 You. 260; Small v. Atwood, ibid.; and see Lewin, p. 609.

(e) See 1 Sanders on Uses, 256; Sugden, V. and P. 1060, s. 79; Warrick v. Warrick, 3 Atk. 293, there Lord Hardwicke would not hold a purchaser bound by notice, as it was by construction of law that the title (an estate tail under articles) of which he had notice arose. Senhouse v. Earle, Amb. 285, there also Lord Hardwicke held that notice of an old settlement, which according to the modern mode of carrying them into execution would be construed into giving an estate tail, would not bind the purchaser, a mortgagee—it was a stale demand and the mortgage bonâ fide: notice of modern articles, since the rules of construction have been settled, Lord Hardwicke held would bind the purchaser, ib. 288; and see on this distinction Powell v. Price, 2 P.

W. 540; and Sug. V. and P. 1060. In Cordwell v. Mackrill, Ambl. 515; S. C. 2 Eden, 344, Lord Northington held as a general rule that a purchaser, though bound by notice of a deed on which an equity supported by undoubted precedents is founded, is not bound when the equity depends on the mere construction of words which are uncertain and where the meaning often depends on the locality; that is, as Sir W. Grant in Parkes v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 588, interprets this case, there may be such a doubtful equity that a purchaser is not to be taken to know what will be the decision: but Sir E. Sugden, V. and P. 1060, s. 79, disapproves of Lord Northington's doctrine; one ground of the decision was that the articles were not produced. Hardy v. Reeves, 5 Ves. 426, is to the same effect as the dictum of Sir W. Grant, (sup. 9 Ves. 588), that a purchaser is not bound by notice of a doubtful equity, see pp. 428, 431; "notice of an equitable title is quite different from notice of a legal title," ib. 428; the fact of notice being doubtful an inquiry was refused. In Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vern. 385, it was held that a purchaser having notice of a settlement made after marriage was bound to inquire whether it was made in pursuance of articles before, but this is different from fixing him on the construction of the instruments.

(f) Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 188; Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 600; Sanders's note, 3 Atk. 188; Warrick v. Warrick, 3 Atk. 293; and Cordwell v. Mackrill, 2 Eden, 346.

To the general rule above stated, there is an exception as regards those whose claims are paramount to or inconsistent with the trust. A disseisor, abator, or intruder, as has been noticed before, would not have been seised to an use, although he had notice, for no one of them was in in privity of the estate to which the use was annexed, but in the post (a). This doctrine applies to modern trusts; in such case the cestui que trust may, as the cestui que use might have done, by bill compel the trustee to enter upon the disseisor, or to recover the land against him at common law, and then this court will compel the trustee to execute the estate according to the trust (b).

A fine (c) levied in favour of one who had notice of a trust (d), or who, not having notice, was a holder without consideration (e), would not bar the cestui que trust; nor would a fine levied by a person who had purchased with notice strengthen his title as against the cestui que trust (f). A mortgagee could not by fine and nonclaim bar the equity of redemption (g). But wherever a person came in by a title opposite to the title to the trust estate, or came in under the title to the trust for a valuable consideration, without fraud, or notice, actual or constructive, of fraud or of the trust, a fine and nonclaim might be set up as a bar to any claim under the trust (h); but fines and nonclaim having been abolished, these doctrines are now only useful for illustration.

If a trustee conveys to a person with notice, and takes a re-conveyance, it is inoperative; and if even the person to whom he conveyed had no notice, yet on the re-conveyance the trust will again attach; though it did not attach on the person to whom he conveyed, nor would have attached if that person had conveyed to another even with notice (i). This doctrine is analogous to that of the common law,

(a) 1 Rep. 122; For. Rom. 62; sup. vol. i. p. 445.

(b) 1 Rep. 139, 4 Inst. 85; Gilbert on Uses, by Sugden, 429, note; Lewin, p. 29; and see Reynold v. Jones, 2 Sim. & St. 211; but as fines are abolished there cannot now be a disseisin by fine. Where the right to the inheritance was lost by fine and non-claim, he who had lost the inheritance was not entitled in equity to claim the term which was to attend it, ibid. 213; these terms, as already stated, are extinguished, sup. vol. p. 516.

(c) Of fines before their abolition, v. sup. vol. i. pp. 142, 164-5.

(d) See Kennedy v. Daly, 1 Sch. & Lef. 379, 380, affirmed on re-hearing, 2 Sch. & Lef. 740; Bovey v. Smith, 1 Vern. 149; S. C. 2 Ch. Ca. 124; reversed in Dom. Proc. See

Martin v. Martin, Vin. Abr. title Fraud, A. (pl. 12) noticed by Lord Redesdale in Kennedy v. Daly, ubi supra.

(e) Gilb. For. Rom. 62, 11 Ves. 230.

(f) 1 Sch. & Lef. 379.

(g) 1 Sch. & Lef. 380; Story v. Windsor, 2 Atk. 631, contra, 2 Freem. 21, 69.

(h) Gilb. For. Rom. 63; Bell v. Bell, Rep. temp. Plunkett, 59; and see Sugd. V. and P. 1036, § 16.

(i) 1 Sch. & Lef. 379; Lowther v. Carlton, 2 Atk. 242, and the cases cited in the note by Mr. Sanders; Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vernon, 384. But as regards stock sold out, Lord Eldon, in Vulliamy v. Noble, said that, "If a man has sold out stock in breach of trust, and afterwards buys stock of a like description, it would be a novelty to say that any for if a disseisor aliens, and the alienee dies seised, the entry of the disseisee is barred; but if the land come again to the disseisor, the entry of the disseisee is revived. So in regard to goods, if a person who has obtained goods as a trespasser sell them in market overt, the owner's title is barred, but he may seize them if they come to the trespasser again (a).

It may be a question whether a purchaser of trust property with express notice of a trust (b) holds the premises upon an express trust within the meaning of the 25th section of the late Statute of Limitations, so as to be liable to be deprived of the estate at the suit of the cestui que trust after twenty years have elapsed (c). The case of the Attorney-General v. Christ's Hospital (d) would seem to imply that he does: but that was a case of a Charity, where the rules are much more stringent against the holders of trust property; besides, in cases of charity there cannot be any cestui que trust who is competent by acquiescence to affect the rights of the objects of the charity (e), though no distinction was taken on this ground in the argument or the judgment. If a bonâ fide purchaser is to be considered only as a trustee by implication or construction of law, and such it is conceived he actually is, it is presumed that he may insist on the benefit of the statute after twenty years: indeed it is a well established rule that when a person is a trustee by implication only, and as such affected by an equity, that equity independently of any statute must be pursued within a reasonable time. It is conceived, that the statutory bar would clearly apply to such a case as a purchaser fixed with constructive notice only, or where he had purchased under circumstances which, in a recent transaction, might have made him liable for want of having exercised due caution: and persons taking the estate without notice, but without consideration, (from which it is sometimes said notice will be presumed,) are clearly, it is conceived, entitled to the benefit of the statute (f): poverty, ignorance, or mistake part of the stock so purchased can be considered as specifically the property of the cestui que trust, 3 Meriv. 616.

(a) Bovy v. Smith, 2 Ch. Ca. 126.

(b) As, for instance, such notice as in the case of Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 587.

(c) As to the operation of the statute in regard to express trusts, v. supra, vol. i. p. 503, ii. p. 48—62; Ward v. Arch, 12 Sim. 472; Man v. Ricketts, 13 Law. J., N. S.; and Hill on Trustees, 249—254, where the most important authorities are collected.

(d) Before Sir J. Leach, 3 Myl. & K. 344. There is an important case, Toft v. Stephenson, heard 4th April, 1848, as I am informed by my friend Mr. Lee, now under appeal, in which the question will be decided whether the vendor is such a trustee for the vendee, (v. supra, vol. i. p. 509, and 9 Ves. 510, et infra,) as that he or his representatives cannot plead the statute; the Vice-Chancellor Wigram has decided that he is not.

(e) As between private persons acquiescence may have important effects and raise every kind of presumption: see Lord Eldon's observations in Parkes v. White, 11 Ves. 226; Lewin, 619, and sup. p. 60, 61.

(f) See int. al. Townsend v. Townsend; Andrew v. Wrigley, and the other cases cited, supra, p. 63, note (a); Beckford v. Wade, 17 Ves. 97; and see Lewin, 613. As regards express trusts, v. sup. p. 62; and see Attorney-General v. Fishmonger's Company, Preston's Will, 5 My. & Cr. 16.

cannot be taken into consideration where the statutory bar has attached, though it may weaken the effect of length of time considered only as affording a presumption (a). Even if the transaction be affected with fraud the statutory bar will apply if a sufficient time has elapsed since the discovery of the fraud; the general rule of equity is that every new right of suit must be acted upon at least within twenty years after it accrues (b). It may be observed that it has been held by the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, that where an annuity is given by will and the real estate is charged with the payment of it, and then the estate is simply devised charged with the payment of the annuity, that is not a case of express trust; it is a bequest or devise which creates a liability, but does not impose any fiduciary character on the devisee (c).

It has been stated by Mr. Cruise (d), and it may be inferred from a passage in Mr. Justice Story's Commentaries (e) that he entertained the same opinion, that on a conveyance of property to a stranger in blood, where no use or trust is declared, a trust will result to the grantor by analogy to the doctrine as to resulting uses; but if the case be such that an use will not result at law, it is by no means clear that a trust will result in equity. The authority on which Mr. Cruise relies, is the Duke of Norfolk v. Browne, before Lord Keeper Somers (f). The then late duke had executed a grant of the next presentation to a church to the defendant's father, who was a clergyman, and had been much entrusted and employed by the duke, and so far there were grounds for presuming that it was intended as a gift; but the duke had kept the deed in his possession, and never had any communication with the donee on the subject: The Lord Keeper said, "This is a resulting trust for the grantor, there being no other trust declared," thereby rather confirming Mr. Cruise's conclusion; but it will be observed that this was a very special case, and the decision may perhaps have been influenced by the grantor having apparently reserved for himself a locus pœnitentiæ by keeping the deed and making no com-

(a) See Lewin, pp. 617 and 621, and the cases there cited.

(b) Lord Redesdale, Hovenden v. Lord Annesley, 2 Scho. & Lef. 636; sup. p. 61, Lewin, 619. I would refer the reader to this treatise for a very clear exposition of the doctrine as to presumptions and bars from length of time.

(c) V. C. Wigram, Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare, 51, referring to Hughes v. Kelly, 3 Dru. & W. 482; Harrison v. Duignan, 2 D. & W. 295. As to the case of there being no person to give a discharge or release under the 40th section of the statute, see Burrell v. Lord Egremont, 7 Beav. 235—8.

(d) Cruise, Dig. Tit. xii. ch. 1, § 51, 52; and see Hill on Trustees, 72, and Lewin, p. 130.

(e) Vol. ii. § 1197; the authorities there cited apply to the common-law doctrine of resulting uses; see Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150, et supra, vol. i. 451, infra, p. 227, n. (h), and 2 Bla. Comm. 330, in respect of which no question as to any trust can arise.

(f) Prec. Ch. 80. This, it may be observed, was after the Statute of Frauds.

munication to the donee (a). Lord Hardwicke, in the case of Young v. Peachy (b), in conformity with his doctrine in Lloyd v. Spillet (c), mentioned above, expressed an opinion that no trust could result in such a case, for it would be to contradict the Statute of Frauds. "The rule as to trusts by implication or operation of law, is by no means," said his lordship, "so large as to extend to every voluntary conveyance" (d). It seems to be clear, according to the modern authorities, as will be more fully noticed hereafter (e), that if a complete conveyance or transfer of property is effected, whether legal or equitable, and the grantor has not reserved any control over the deed, or locus pœnitentiæ, the legal title in the one case, and the equitable title in the other, and the presumption, will go together; the donee needs no proofs to keep the estate, but the claimant must bring proofs to take it from him (f). If upon the deed there are any circumstances tending to show that a trust was intended (g), then the onus of proof is on the donee; if there are circumstances from which it can be made out in proof that it would be a fraud in the grantee to retain the property as his own, parol evidence may be given of such circumstances, to prove that the transaction was subject to a trust (h). If stock be transferred to another, though he should be a stranger, no resulting trust will have place, it will, primâ facie at least, be considered as a gift (i). As regards the transfer of a trust or equitable estate in writing, which is perfected by the grantor, where no consideration, or a merely nominal consideration,—which in the Court of Chancery is

(a) See Disher v. Disher, 1 P. W. 204, et infra.

(b) 2 Atk. 150.

(c) Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150; and see Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 156, where Lord Hardwicke holds the same doctrine; "if the plea of the statute had stood by itself it might have been a sufficient plea."

(d) Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 256. The decision however is not an authority on the point; the Lord Chancellor turned the grantee into a trustee on the ground of fraud; the conveyance was proved to have been obtained for one purpose and intended to be used for another; and see Lord Nottingham's dict. Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. 590, 592; but see his observations on Wyndham's case, there cited; and Lord Thurlow's, Fordyce v. Willis, 3 Bro. 577, 585: this case related to a grant of a pension from the Crown, not from the party, and does not apply to resulting trusts, but to the point whether a person may aver and prove by parol evidence (if it is admitted it is different) that an absolute conveyance or assignment to a third person was made in trust for him; Lord Thurlow considered that there was no presumption of a trust in such a case, and would not admit parol evidence.

(e) See chapter on Voluntary Conveyances and Assignments, infra.

(f) Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & Phillips, 138; Currant v. Jago, 1 Coll. 261; and see Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. 590; et v. infra, chap. Voluntary Conveyances.

(g) See supra, vol. i. pp. 568-9, as to whether parol evidence should be admitted in the first instance to support a presumption.

(h) Hutchins v. Lee, 1 Atk. 447, the evidence was declarations of the donee at the time and afterwards; Lord Hardwicke admitted it in that case as consistent with the deed, and in avoidance of fraud: and as to evidence of conduct and the acts of the parties, as showing whether the transaction is gift or trust, see 10 Ves. 367, 368, Lord Eldon; Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. p. 593, Lord Nottingham; et v. Cripps v. Jee, 4 Bro. 472.

(i) C. B. Richards, George v. Bank of England, 7 Price, 651.

treated as no consideration (a),—is stated, there is no analogy on which a resulting trust can be supported in such case as against the Statute of Frauds; for no use could result on the transfer of an use (b): the question always is, as will be more fully noticed hereafter, whether in the particular instance the trust estate or interest has actually been transferred.

(a) See Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 256.

(b) Supra, vol. i. p. 454.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

P. 195. "I shall always hold," said Lord C. Sugden, "those who with notice deal with a person entitled to a partial interest in an estate, responsible for any dealing with the property, which professes to encumber or embarrass the estate of the other persons claiming under the same instrument with the grantor. They are not at liberty to deal with it so as to embarrass the persons claiming under the same instrument;" Nixon v. Robinson, 2 Jones & Lat. 15.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE TO CHAPTER V., p. 181.

It should have been stated, in the page above referred to, that the propriety of the decision in the case of Browne v. Stoughton, 14 Sim. 369, S. C. x. Jur. 747, cited p. 181, supra, is discussed in four several articles in the Jurist, Vol. X. Nos. 510, 511, and 512, to which the reader will do well to refer.

SECTION II.—Resulting Trusts arising on Purchases made with the Money of another Person, and Trusts of a similar Character.

Resulting Trusts arising from Payment of Price of Property conveyed to a Third Person. This Resulting Trust may be repelled by Evidence.

Whether after the Death of the supposed Nominal Purchaser.

As to following Trust Money laid out by Trustee in Land or Securities.

Assets of Wife's Testator may be followed.

Where a Person acknowledges himself Trustee of Gavelkind Land, &c. it shall go to Heir-at-Law.

Whether the Rule as to Resulting Trust applies to Joint Advance upon a Purchase in the name of one.

Crop v. Norton.

Where two purchase Lands in equal Proportions.

Where the Proportions are unequal.

Where one of Joint Purchasers lays out Money in Improvements.

Doctrine as to Real Estate engaged in a Partnership Concern as between the Partners, and as between the Real and Personal Representatives of each Partner ; Constructive Trusts as to Profits arising from the Employment of the Property of others in Trade, &c.

Purchase in Name of Child.

of Father and Son.

of Wife.

Exception to General Rule in the case of the Purchase of a Ship, arising upon the Ship Registry Acts.

THE most important perhaps of the cases of trusts by operation of law are those which are classed under the head of Resulting Trusts.

Soon after the passing of the Statute of Frauds it was determined, that if an estate be purchased with the money of one person, and the estate is conveyed to a third person who is a stranger in blood, that person will be a trustee for the person who advanced the money; and it is such a resulting trust by implication of law, as is saved by the statute, and needs no declaration of trust (a): It is, said Lord Hardwicke, a certain known rule, that when a man purchases land in the name of another, it is a resulting trust (b). The conclusion, indeed, from all the cases on this subject appears to be, that the trust of a legal estate, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold; whether taken in the names of the purchaser and others jointly (a), or in the name of others without that of the purchaser; whether in one name or several; whether jointly or successive; results to the man who advances the purchase money: unless in the particular instance such a resulting trust would break in upon the provisions of an Act of Parliament or the policy of the law (b): this is stated to be in analogy to the rule of the common law imported from the Court of Chancery, that where a feoffment is made without consideration, the use results to the feoffor (c). Lord Hardwicke is reported to have said that the rule was confined to an advance by one individual (d); but Sir Thomas Plumer could find no principle for this distinction, and would not believe that Lord Hardwicke could have used the language ascribed to him, and he unhesitatingly decided that it applied to an advance of a part of the purchase money (e). The purchaser of a copyhold estate has the same equitable right as in the case of the purchase of a freehold estate, in whosoever name the estate may be entered on the rolls, and whether the tenure is in the nature of fee simple or for successive lives (f): but a custom, that unless it be entered on the rolls that the nominee is a trustee he shall take beneficially, is, it seems, a good custom (g).

(a) 2 Ventr. 361; 2 Ves. & B. 390; Lade v. Lade, 1 Serjt. Wilson's R. 21; Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71; sup. vol. i. p. 512.

(b) Ryall v. Ryall, 1 Atk. 59; S. C. cited

Lane v. Dighton, Ambler, 413; Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 385; 2 Atk. 75; Gascoigne v. Thwing, 1 Vern. 366; Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 50.

The law implies a trust in these cases for the person who paid the money, on the presumption that such must have been the intention (h); but to establish such a trust, where it cannot be collected from the instrument itself, the proof of payment, or that the money was that of the claimant, must be clear; mere discourses, and even, as it seems, verbal evidence of an acknowledgment, if unsupported, will not be sufficient (i). Sufficient evidence may be deduced inter alia from expressions or recitals in the purchase deed (k); or from some

(a) See Smith v. Baker, ubi supra; Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 367; Benger v. Drew, 1 P. Wms. 780.

(b) Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92; Sugden, V. and P. 908.

(c) Per L. C. B. Eyre, Dyer v. Dyer, (sup. and vol. i. p. 511,) where all the previous cases are collected: the purchaser had in that case actually devised the estate as his own; and see 15 Ves. 51.

(d) Crop v. Norton, 2 Atk. 74; 9 Mod. 233; and Barnardist. 184-5.

(e) Wray v. Steele, 2 Ves. & B. 390; Sugd. V. and P. 912.

(f) Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 385; Howe v. Howe, 1 Vern. 415, "though it was pressed that there was not any custom in the manor that the first taker might surrender." Withers v. Withers, Amb. 152; Benger v. Drew, 1 P. W. 781; it was there said that clear evidence might be received to show who paid the purchase money to contradict the entry on the Roll: in Clark v. Danvers, 1 Ch. Ca. 310, the Lord Chancellor considered that the grandfather, the purchaser, had agreed that Elizabeth the mother should be considered as the purchaser, as stated on the Roll, though he paid the money.

(g) Edwards v. Fidel, 3 Mad. 237. See 2 Y. & Coll. 125.

(h) See Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 257.

(i) Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71; Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 170; Wilkins v. Stevens, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 435; Gascoigne v. Thwing, 1 Vern. 366; and v. Amb. 413; Sugd. V. and P. 909.

(k) See Lord Plymouth v. Hickman, 2 Vern. 168; Newton v. Preston, Pr. Ch. 104; there, although parol evidence as to whose money it was, was read de bene esse, Justice Powel would not decree a trust; Kirk v. Webb, ib. 84, cited 1 Sanders on Uses, p. 258.

memorandum or note of the nominal purchaser (a); or from his answer to a bill of discovery (b); or from papers left by him, and discovered after his death (c). Whether, after the death of the supposed nominal purchaser, parol proof alone is admissible, as to whose money it was, against the express declaration of the deed that such purchaser paid the purchase money, (which it may be observed will naturally have been inserted from the instructions of the nominal purchaser, and may have been so inserted with a fraudulent intent,) has been a subject of controversy (d), though it seems pretty clear that it may (e). Where a person employs a person as his agent to purchase an estate for him, and he enters into a contract for the purchase, it is not material whether at the time he intended that the purchase should be for the benefit of his principal or of himself; the principal will be entitled to the benefit of the contract (f): but where a person contracts for the purchase of an estate in his own name, and pays for it with his own money, parol evidence, that is, other than writing signed by the party, will not be received, as against the purchaser's denial of any trust, for the purpose of proving that the purchaser had agreed to purchase the estate for another, and thus to create a trust; as that would be directly against the Statute of Frauds (g): proof of direct fraud might furnish an exception to this, as to almost every other general rule.

It is not sufficient to prove that the person who purchased the estate had money belonging to another in his hands, unless the employment of that money in the purchase be also proved, and then it seems a lien only will be created (h). Where trust money has been laid out by a trustee in land, or stock, or on any security, it may be followed so as to be subjected to the trusts, provided the proof that the trust

(a) O'Hara v. O'Neil, 2 Eq. Abr. 745; S. C. 7 Bro. P. C. 227.

(b) Cottington v. Fletcher, 2 Atk. 155; but see Moore v. Edwards, 4 Ves. 23. It is now settled that the Statute of Frauds may be pleaded with effect, though a parol agreement be admitted, Mitf. 267.

(c) Ryall v. Ryall, Amb. 413; Lane v. Dighton, ib. 409; et v. 1 P. W. 322; 1 Atk. 59.

(d) See Sand. on Uses, vol. i. p. 259, and the note to Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150; Roberts on Frauds, p. 99.

(e) See Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 511; Carter v. Ratty, 12 July, 1745, MS.; Mad. P. and P. ii. 141; and Sugd. V. and P. ii. 910.

(f) Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. 53; Taylor v. Salmon, 4 My. & Cr. 139, Lord Cottenham; Wilson v. Hart, 1 J. B. Moore, 45, and Maclean v. Dunn, 4 Bing. 722, there cited; and see 5 Hare, 391.

(g) Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 4 East, 577, 1 Cox, 15; S. C. 1 Eden, 515; see Sugd. V. and P. 911-12, ib. 46, 138. The statement of the case in Eden's Report, 515, shows the distinction; it was "upon a verbal agreement between them" that the bill was founded, not employment or agency: the purchaser was convicted of perjury, but Lord Northington would not entertain a bill of review on this ground. (1 Eden, 517.) Mr. Justice Story (§ 1201 a,) construes these cases rather differently.

(h) Kirk v. Webb, Prec. Ch. 84, affirmed in Dom. Proc. Justice Powel there cited a case in which it had been decided that where the King's Receiver had laid out the King's money in the purchase of land, yet the King could not claim the land.

money specifically was so laid out be clear (a): where it is sought to establish that fact by showing that the trustee could not have made the purchase with his own money (b), the only evidence that can be received is such as directly proves the inability of the party to purchase with his own funds; evidence of the opinions of persons acquainted with the trustee, formed in the course of their dealings with him, may indeed be received if coupled with proof of additional facts, but such evidence has been held not to be sufficient of itself (c).

It may be taken as a general principle, that where a man is bound, by covenant or otherwise, to do an act, and he does an act which may be converted to a completion of his engagement, it shall be supposed than he meant to complete it (d), or, as Lord Brougham states the rule, if he has done anything, it will be presumed that he had done it in pursuance of his obligation (e). So that if a person who has covenanted, by marriage articles or otherwise, to lay out money in the purchase of land to be settled, afterwards purchases land to himself and heirs, but does not settle it; as a general rule it will be considered that the lands were purchased to be settled on the trusts, and will be bound by the trust. And this principle will be applied equally in favour of the person liable to the duty, as against him, as between his heir and personal representatives (f); so that land purchased, but not settled, will, as between the heir to whom it has descended and the personal representatives of the covenantor, be con-

(a) Kirk v. Webb, ubi sup. Sugd. V. and P. 918-919; see Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 574-6; et inf. p. 221.

(b) See Willis v. Willis, 2 Atk. 71.

(c) Lane v. Dighton, Amb. 409; Lord Chedworth v. Edwards, 8 Ves. 46, 49; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 M. & S. 562; Liebman v. Harcourt, 2 Meriv. 513; Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 516, Sir W. Grant there notices the doubts which had been entertained on the subject of following the purchased property in any case; Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 163; Wilkins v. Stevens, 1 Y. & Col. C.C. 434-5; Sugd. V. and P. 910-11-19. The trustee cannot claim the investment as his own, and make himself debtor to the cestui que trust, V. C. Wigram, Pinkett v. Wright, 2 Hare, 127. Even money at a banker's may, it seems, be attached on this ground, provided the proof be clear that it is trust money; Lord Chedworth v. Edwards, ubi sup. p. 50. As to following trust money laid out by an executor for the benefit of the estate, see Waite v. Whorwood, 2 Atk. 159.

(d) Lord Kenyon, Sowden v. Sowden, 1 Cox, 166, rather differently stated, 1 Bro. 583; and see Garthshore v. Chalie, 10 Ves. 9, where Lord Eldon, referring to Sowden v. Sowden, says that a purchase of less, equal, or greater value, and the conveyance being taken in fee and left to descend on a son who would be tenant in tail, will, notwithstanding Lord Thurlow's doubts, be taken as a satisfaction of a covenant to purchase and settle lands; and see Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 516, Sir W. Grant. The rule that what ought to be done is considered as done, and the doctrine of satisfaction, which are to some degree involved in what follows, will be considered in separate Sections.

(e) Lord Brougham, Tubbs v. Broadwood, 2 Russ. & M. 493; that was the case of a tenant for life, bound by the provisions of an Act of Parliament, to lay out the produce of land sold under the act: see Sugd. V. and P. 920. A general covenant to settle land does not create a specific lien, Freemouth v. Dedire, 1 P. W. 430; but see ibid. 233.

(f) Tubbs v. Broadwood, ubi supra, Wilcocks v. Wilcocks, 2 Vern. 558. "A man will be presumed to be just before he is generous."—Lord Hardwicke, Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. 327, and see, on this subject, Sugd. V. and P. 921-2, particularly the distinction, 921, § 6 and 7, 922, § 8.

sidered as having been purchased in satisfaction, or part satisfaction, of his covenant, so as to relieve his estate from the burthen of the covenant in whole or in part. In Sowden v. Sowden, Lord Alvanley appears to have gone one step further; he held that where a person was bound to advance money to trustees to be by them laid out, and he had made a purchase, it was to be presumed, in his favour, to have been purchased in execution of the trust (a). Where a trustee or agent is bound by the trust to lay out the money in land, if he actually lay it out, it will be presumed to have been done in execution of the trust (b). It cannot, however, be said that in all cases where there is trust money to be laid out in land, all purchases made by the persons into whose hands the money is traced, must be considered as having been made in the execution of the trust. Where it is clear there was no intention to lay out trust money in land, a purchase made by the party holding it or liable to pay it, will not, of itself, raise a trust so as to give the estate purchased to the cestui que trust in substitution for the trust fund or even a lien upon it (c); though if the trust money has been employed in the purchase it may, as above mentioned, be followed (d). There is no authority or principle, said Lord Rosslyn, to enable the court, where there is no ground for presumption—where, in point of fact, the court must be satisfied that the party, though having trust moneys in his hands, did not mean to execute the trust, or conceive himself to be under a trust—to hold that the estate he purchased is subject to the trust (e).

In a case where the husband had obtained trust money from the trustees, who were empowered, if they should think fit, to invest the money in land, with the consent of a third party; Sir William Grant

(a) 1 Bro. 582-3; 1 Cox, 166; see also Lechmere v. Lechmere, Forrest. 80, 92; S. C. more full, Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 211, 228, (see 1 Cox, 166).

(b) Sugd. V. and P. 919, § 3.

(c) Savage v. Carrol, 1 Ball & B. 285; the heir, in completing the contract of his ancestor, which, under the circumstances, was not binding, had applied the personal estate for that purpose: and see Gardner v. Marquis of Townsend, G. Cooper, Rep. 302—a case of a covenantor having an equitable estate afterwards procuring the legal estate which might have satisfied his covenant: where a person procures the estate with a view to the performance of his covenant the result will be different; see Wellesley v. Wellesley, on appeal, 4 My. & Cr. 577.

(d) Lane v. Dighton, Ambl. 409, (see, as to this case, Sanders on Uses, i. 324); Lewis v. Maddocks, 17 Ves. 48, 57, 58; and Lench

v. Lench, ubi sup.; and see Taylor v. Plumer, 3 Maule & S. 575, Lord Ellenborough's judgment, and Kirk v. Webb, supra, p. 203.

(e) Lord Rosslyn, Perry v. Phelps, 4 Ves. 114, 116, (A.D. 1798); the decree was affirmed on a bill of review by Lord Eldon, (17 Ves. 173, A.D. 1810-11; see 183,) not precisely on the grounds taken by Lord Rosslyn, though not disputing them. Mr. Fonblanque, in his Treatise, p. 120, (A.D. 1820,) disputes Lord Rosslyn's doctrine, but without referring to the subsequent hearing before Lord Eldon. It is to be observed that Wilson v. Foreman, Dickens, p. 593, (Lord Thurlow, 1782,) was decided on the assumption that the trust money must be taken to have been employed in the purchase by the bankrupt; and see Sugd. V. and P. 919; and see the dict. of Lord Eldon, sup. p. 196, note (i), as to trust stock sold out.

held, that a presumption that an estate purchased by the husband was intended to secure the trust money, could not arise (a).

Where the circumstances are such as to raise the presumption, it may be rebutted by evidence showing a different intention, for intention it seems is the ground of decision, excepting in cases where trust money is employed in the purchase; for instance, if the purchaser should sell or mortgage the estate, according to Lord Hardwicke that would altogether destroy the presumption (b).

Any assets of the wife's testator, existing in specie, may be followed into the hands of the husband after her death; and even, as in the case of Pagett v. Hoskins (c), though not existing in specie, if the husband had notice when he obtained the property that it formed part of the goods of the testator (d).

Where two or more purchase lands, and advance the money in equal proportions, and take a conveyance to them and their heirs, this is a joint-tenancy, that is, a purchase by them jointly taking the chance of survivorship, which may happen to the one of them as well as to the other (e): but where two or more persons, who are tenants in common of a mortgage, purchase the equity of redemption, though paying the purchase money in equal shares, the title to the equity of redemption will follow that of the mortgage (f). In an ordinary purchase, where the proportions of the money are not equal, and this appears on the deed itself, this makes the purchasers in the nature of partners; and however the legal estate may survive, yet the survivor is considered but as a trustee for the others, in proportion to the sums advanced by each of them (g). If two or more make a joint purchase, and afterwards one of them lays out a considerable sum of money in repairs and improvements, he has a lien on the land, and a trust is raised for him and his representatives for the amount (h).

(a) Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 515.

(b) In Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. 327, Lord Hardwicke says it would take off all evidence of his intention to bind the estate by the articles; but the observation was called for in reference to creditors and purchasers only.

(c) Prec. Ch. 431, approved by Lord Hardwicke, Mead v. Lord Orrery, 3 Atk. 240.

(d) Lord Redesdale, Adair v. Shaw, 1 Scho. & Lef. 270.

(e) Lake v. Gibson, 1 Eq. Abr. 291. In Moyse v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 385, a grant from a husband, joint tenant with another, to his wife was not considered sufficient to sever the joint tenancy: this is a strong case, for every previous taking of the lease in joint tenancy had been under an express agreement that survivorship should not take place; however the deed was made expressly to sever, which seems to imply a recognition of the existence of a joint tenancy; and see Lake v. Gibson, 1 Eq. Abr. 291; Rigden v. Vallier, 2 Ves. 258; S. C. 3 Atk. 734, 735; Aveling v. Knipe, 19 Ves. 446; and see the cases referred to in the note to Jackson v. Jackson, 9 Ves. 597; the case itself is on the question of implied severance, inf. p. 207.

(f) Edwards v. Fashion, Prec. Ch. 332; 19 Ves. 444.

(g) Dict. Lord Hardw. Rigden v. Vallier, 2 Ves. Sen. 258, 3 Atk. 735.

(h) See the authorities in the next note.

In all cases of a joint undertaking, such as the purchase of lands with a view to draining and levelling them, the purchasers will be considered as tenants in common, and the survivors as trustees for those who are dead (a). But as the title has survived at law, the representatives of the deceased parties who seek for equity, namely, to be let in for the shares of the persons who contributed to the original advance, must do equity; they must therefore, if admitted at all (b), contribute their proportions, with interest, to any subsequent purchases made by the other joint contractors, though without notice to the applicant, and although they may have turned out to be losing speculations; in short, they will be treated as partners throughout if they elect to have any concern in the speculation (c).

Where land is acquired as the substratum of a partnership, in the Court of Chancery the land is considered as part of the stock, and according to the doctrine of the lex mercatoria it will not survive; and where a partnership subsists and land is brought into and actually used by the partnership for partnership purposes, the Court has dealt with it as partnership property, although the ownership apparently has not been in all the members of the firm, or if in all not apparently as partners but under another title; indeed, the person in whom the legal estate is vested, whosoever he may be, is treated as a trustee for all the partners; and a purchaser from any such party with notice will equally be a trustee (d). Whether a subsisting joint tenancy has been severed or not is a mere matter of evidence, in each particular case: where a testator devised real and personal estate to his two sons as joint tenants; though the sons carried on jointly the business of farmers on those estates for twenty years, and carried the profits into the common stock; it was held by Lord C. B. Alexander, that the sons remained joint tenants of the freeholds and leaseholds (in the report it is leasehold and personal estate) devised by the will, but that they were tenants in common of the estates they had purchased with moneys out of the common stock, thus treating these estates as representing the money (e).

(a) Lake v. Gibson, 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 291; S. C. nom. Lake v. Craddock, 3 P. W. 158-9; Jackson v. Jackson, 9 Ves. 596-7, and the note; Jefferys v. Small, 1 Vern. 217. Tenancy in common is favoured in Equity, Parteriche v. Powlet, West, R. 7.

(b) See Norway v. Rowe, 19 Ves. 159.

(c) Lake v. Gibson, and the other cases in note (a), supra; and Sug. V. and P. 903.

(d) Jefferys v. Small, 1 Vern. 217; Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. 193; Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swanst. 518; Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45; V. C. Wigr. Dale v. Hamilton, 5

Hare, 382; Elliot v. Brown, 3 Swanst. 489, note; and see 5 Hare, 386-7, 390. The cases of Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & Coll. 268; see particularly, pp. 288, 289, and Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Coll. 381; see p. 386, and the cases cited in Curling v. Knight, 6 Hare, 49; and Sparling v. Parker, 9 Beav. 450, as to whether shares, in particular public companies, are real or personal estate, depends rather on their own particular circumstances than any general doctrine.

(e) Morris v. Barrett, 3 Yo. & J. 384, 388; but see Jackson v. Jackson, 9 Ves. 591, on

Generally speaking, each partner has a right to have the whole concern wound up by a sale of the partnership stock (a), and a division of the produce; and this right continues till that has been effected (b). If, therefore, after a dissolution any one or more of the partners shall continue to trade with the partnership premises, or indeed any portion of the partnership stock, or to use it for any purpose other than for winding up the concern, he or they so acting, must account for its use, and they will be treated as trustees for the others, or their representatives, of the profits they may have made; but this doctrine does not necessarily apply to the case of a personal office (c). As a general rule, if any person employs the property of another which is under his control in any trade or speculation, he is accountable for the profits he may make, to the owner of the property: the hazard to which the property is thus exposed from possible bankruptcy is a material ingredient in these cases (d): the same doctrine applies where a person standing in a fiduciary character has attempted, by means of a purchase directly or indirectly from himself, or from his cestui que trust the relation of trustee subsisting, to acquire the property for himself (e).

If a partner obtains a renewal of a lease which is part of the partnership property, in his own name, he will be treated as trustee for the partnership of such renewed interest; though after the dissolution one partner may obtain such renewal for himself, provided he take no unfair advantage, and, he and his late partners being on equal terms, the landlord chooses to give him the preference; the same doctrine applies to mortgagees and trustees, and in many cases to persons having partial interests (f): whoever, said Lord Bathurst, has a lease appeal, which was there cited. In that case the premises, which had been used for purposes of trade, were devised with the trade to the testator's two sons. Lord Eldon said, it was very difficult to make a distinction between a joint tenancy by will, by gratuitous deed, or by purchase; the law of merchants, if it applied to one must apply to all; and he seemed to think that the continuing to carry on the trade of a pottery and copperas works upon the premises, by the two sons, would amount to a severance: in the case itself Lord Eldon decided, reversing the decree of Sir William Grant in this respect, that the nature of the dealings between the parties as partners in trade implied a severance, ibid. 594; and see Crooke v. Devandez, 11 Ves. 333.

(a) Vide infra, and Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swanst. 505.

(b) Ex parte Williams, 11 Ves. 5; see Mr. Swanston's note, 1 Swanst. 506.

(c) Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 310; Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Ves. 218; Clarke v. Richards, 1 Yo. & Coll. 384-5.

(d) V. int. al. Heathcote v. Hulme, 1 Jac. & W. 122, 128, 133, 134; Burden v. Burden, there cited; Docker v. Somes, 2 My. & K. 664-5; Palmer v. Mitchell, and the other cases there cited, ibid. 669-673, et v. 11 Bli. 418-9.

(e) See int. al. Cook v. Collingridge, Jac. 607, 619, 620-1-2. The same doctrine applies to a surety who purchases the debt of his principal, Reed v. Norris, 2 M. & Cr. 374.

(f) Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 312, 314; and see Palmer v. Young, 1 Vern. 276; Rawe v. Chichester, Amb. 715; Owen v. Williams, ib. 734; O'Henlihy v. Hedges, 1 Scho. & L. 126, 131; Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & M. 148, 149, note, as to the general principle, which is founded on considerations of general policy.

has an interest in the renewal; therefore the new lease is always subject to the trusts and limitations of the old lease (a).

In cases of partnership where real estate has formed part of the partnership property a similar question has arisen, between the real and personal representatives of the partners, as that which has been discussed as regards conversion by will for a particular purpose which is at an end (b). It has been insisted that whatever may have been the character of real estate, in reference to the purpose of any partnership in which an intestate or a testator may have been engaged, that when the partnership is at an end, it ought, if not wanted for the payment of partnership debts, again to take its natural character.

If it is to be collected that there was an agreement between the parties, express or implied, that the property should at the end of the partnership be sold, as affording the most profitable or convenient mode of division, or that with a view to any other possible event it should be considered not as land, but as amalgamated with the rest of the partnership stock; the property, though remaining real, will be treated as personal estate equally as between the representatives of the partners as between the partners themselves (c).

From what Lord Eldon repeatedly said, it would appear that it was his opinion that where persons engaged in trade as partners (and some of his expressions would seem to include any partnership concern) purchase, or acquire in any way real estate, all such real estate belonging to them jointly which is appropriated to carrying on the trade, becomes so completely stamped with the character of stock in trade, that it must be considered to have been in the contemplation of the parties that on the dissolution it should be sold, together with the rest of the stock, for the purposes of satisfaction of creditors and division, and to have thus become, equally as the rest of the stock in trade, personal estate for all purposes, unless that character has been taken away (d).

In a case before Lord Thurlow, three persons, being seised in fee of some land, entered into partnership for 21 years as paper makers,

(a) Rawe v. Chichester, ubi sup.; Webb v. Lugar, 2 Yo. & Coll. 255; the other material cases are collected in the argument, p. 251.

(b) See Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 430, 432, and 435; see the next Section, p. 222.

(c) Ibid. pp. 435-6; and see 7 Sim. 288. Lord Eldon, in Ripley v. Waterworth, cites some cases to show that there may be a conversion even by relation to some prospective uncertain event, which may not happen in the lifetime of the party, and may depend on the act of a third person, ibid. 437; and see Townley v. Bedwell, 14 Ves. 591, and Lawes

v. Bennett, there cited, to the same effect.

(d) Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swanst. 508, 518, 521, 523; Silkrig v. Davies, 2 Dow. 242; 7 Sim. 283-4. In Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 49; and in Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 663; and Broom v. Broom, 3 My. & K. 444, Sir J. Leach expressed his opinion to be that such was the law in his time, and he acted upon it accordingly: and see Morris v. Kearsley, Collier on Partnership, where Mr. Baron Alderson followed those cases: and see Jackson v. Jackson, on appeal, supra, p. 207.

and mills were erected on the land, and they declared the uses of the land to themselves as tenants in common. They then took four new partners into partnership with them; and, in the partnership deed, there was a covenant that they would stand seised of the land, in trust for the partners, in the proportions in which they were respectively interested in the concern; with a proviso that in case any of the partners wished to dispose of his or their shares, he or they might do so giving notice to the other partners, that they might have an opportunity of purchasing. During the second partnership the partners purchased some adjoining freehold premises for the better carrying on the trade, which was "enjoyed by the partners," so says the report, "as joint tenants:" this partnership expired, and the partners continued the business without any new agreement. Joseph, one of the original partners, purchased from the others one half of the whole concern; how the real portion of the property was conveyed to him is not stated; indeed the report is very scanty for so important a question: on Joseph's death a question arose as to whether the original and the purchased premises ought to be sold as partnership stock, or whether they were still to be considered as real estate, and to be retained by the several partners and their representatives as real estate. Lord Thurlow at first thought they must, according to the general rule, be considered as personal estate, and therefore be sold; but on a re-argument he thought that as there was no agreement that the premises should be valued and sold, the transactions between the parties were not sufficient to vary the nature of the property, therefore that after the dissolution it would "result" according to its respective nature—the real as real, the personal as personal estate (a): it will have been observed that the executed instrument contemplated that the property should continue real estate, and there was a provision authorizing the sale of each partner's share as real estate and distinct from his interest in the partnership effects.

In a case where persons who were in partnership as merchants in London joined with another person, no doubt in reference to their partnership business, in buying an estate in the West Indies, as tenants in common, and their undivided shares had been treated in their books as part of their partnership property, Sir Wm. Grant said, assuming that it was partnership property, he did not consider that that would necessarily operate as a conversion. "If," said he, "there was no occasion to call for it for any of the purposes of the partnership, it remains clear; each on the dissolution may enter into the enjoyment of his share: then suppose all die, why," said Sir Wm. Grant, "is it to be considered personal property, something different from what it in reality is, as between the real and personal representatives?" (a). The Vice-Chancellor of England, in a late case, considered it to be clear that a mere purchase of real estate with partnership funds, and not for purposes of trade, will not of itself give to the purchased property the character of personal property (b); nor if one is to take the estate, and be debtor for the purchase money, will it even be partnership property (c): and it was held by the same learned judge that where each of the partners has land which is made subservient to the purposes of a partnership, not being a trade—for instance, farming—though they may carry on a trade distinct from such concern but connected with it, as that of maltsters and contractors for furnishing biscuits for the navy, that will not operate to convert their land into partnership stock, so as to alter its character (d).

(a) Thornton v. Dixon, 3 Bro. 198, 200. I am not aware that the authority of this case has ever been directly impugned; it is cited in Bell v. Phyn, infra, and Balmain v. Shore, 9 Ves. 500, 508, without disapprobation.

In a later case, where the father, who was then carrying on the trade of a bottle manufacturer on certain freehold premises, took his son into partnership, and conveyed to him and his heirs certain shares in the freehold premises, and articles of partnership were afterwards executed, under which it was agreed that the premises should form part of the joint stock of the partnership business; yet, as nothing contained in the articles was considered to imply that a sale or actual conversion was contemplated by the parties, and as the purposes of the partnership did not require a conversion, the Vice-Chancellor of England held that the shares of each partner in the real estate continued real estate at the death of the father (e). But where it is to be collected from the acts and dealings of the parties that it was their intention that the real estate should be considered as personal, it must be taken as such by their representatives (f).

It may here be noticed that the joint property of a partnership concern is subjected, in case of insolvency, to something analogous to a trust, circuitously in favour of the joint creditors of the partnership.

(a) Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 457; and see Cookson v. Cookson, 8 Sim. 540, 547; where Sir William Grant's doctrine is recognised and acted upon by the Vice-Chancellor of England, et v. ibid. 549; but see Collier on Partnership, p. 86, et seq., where the cases are collected and discussed.

(b) Randall v. Randall, 7 Sim. 288; but see Morris v. Barrett, supra. Much may depend on how it is conveyed and dealt with; for it is clear that the parties, as between themselves, may stamp it with either character.

(c) Smith v. Smith, 5 Ves. 189, 193.

(d) Randall v. Randall, 7 Simons, 271.

(e) Cookson v. Cookson, 8 Sim. 529, 550.

(f) Houghton v. Houghton, 11 Sim. 491, 506.

The creditors themselves, indeed, have no lien on the partnership property; but a long series of authorities, said Sir T. Plumer, has established the equities of creditors to be worked out through the medium of the partners (a.) During the continuance of the partnership the joint creditors have no lien, but something approaching to lien; that is, a right to sue, and by judgment and execution to obtain possession of the property (b.); but till then they cannot prevent the partners from effectually transferring it by bonâ fide alienation: if by bonâ fide conveyance a new purchaser is put into possession, he is to all intents and purposes the owner, and joint creditors cannot follow the property into his hands (c.); and this although the purchaser may be one who was formerly a partner, and to whom, on the dissolution of the partnership, the partnership effects have been bonâ fide assigned for a valuable consideration (d.). It is on the dissolution of the partnership that this equity of the partnership creditors, independently of their legal right, arises on the part of the creditors of the partnership through the partners themselves.

Amongst the partners themselves clear equities subsist amounting to something like lien; the property is joint, the debts and credits are jointly due: they have equities that each shall be discharged from liability, and then that the surplus shall be divided in proportion to their respective interests, or if there be a deficiency they may call upon each other to make up that deficiency according to their proportions; a judgment and execution against one partner for his separate debt does not put the other in a worse condition; for he must have all allowances made to him before the judgment creditor can have the share of his debtor applied (e.). On a dissolution, whether effected by death, bankruptcy, or effluxion, or however else, it cannot be said that to all intents and purposes the partnership is dissolved, for the connexion still subsists until the concern be wound up; there remains a community of interests which makes it necessary that what was partnership property before shall continue such for the purpose of distribution, not as the rights of the creditors, but as the rights of the partners themselves or their representatives require; and it is thus through the operation of administering the equities as between the partners themselves that the creditors of the partnership have the opportunity

(a.) Referring particularly to Ex parte Ruffin, 6 Ves. 127; Ex parte Fell, 10 Ves. 347; Ex parte Williams, 11 Ves. 3; Ex parte Rowlandson, 1 Rose, 416; Ex parte Harris, 1 Madd. 583.

(b.) Ex parte Williams, 11 Ves. 5; Ex

parte Ruffin, 6 Ves. 126.

(c.) Campbell v. Mullet, 2 Swanst. 576.

(d.) Ex parte Ruffin, 6 Ves. 119.

(e.) Lord Hardwicke, West v. Skip, 1 Ves. 242; ib. 456.

afforded of having their claims satisfied (a). The partnership may be dissolved in various ways so as to bring in the application of the partnership effects for the benefit of the joint creditors:—First, by death; secondly, by the act of the parties, that act extending to nothing but dissolution, without any special agreement for a transfer of the property as in Ex parte Ruffin above cited; thirdly, by bankruptcy of one or both; or lastly, by effluxion of time. If it is dissolved by death, by the well-known doctrine of this court, the legal title in some respects, in all the equitable title notwithstanding the survivorship will remain; and the executor will have a right to insist that the property shall be applied to the partnership debts. “But I do not know,” said Lord Eldon, “that the partnership creditors would have that right supposing both remained solvent.” So, upon the bankruptcy of one of them, there would be an equity to say the assignees stand in the place of the bankrupt, and can take no more than he could, and consequently nothing until the partnership debts are paid. So, upon a mere dissolution without a special agreement, or a dissolution by effluxion of time; to wind up the accounts the debts must be paid, and the surplus be distributed in proportion to the different interests. In all these ways the equity is not that of the joint creditors, but that of the partners in regard to each other: the joint creditors must of necessity be paid, in order to the administration of justice to the partners themselves (b). When, therefore, a bill is filed to wind up the concerns of a partnership, in any of such cases (the partners not being solvent), the joint creditors obtain the application of the partnership property to the payment of their debts.

In the administration in bankruptcy, the joint or partnership estate is in the first place applied to pay the joint or partnership debts, so in like manner the separate estate of each partner is first applied in payment of his separate debts (c); and where partnerships have commenced at different times, upon the bankruptcy of all, the court will direct separate accounts, so that each estate shall first bear its own debts (d).

It is now fully established that joint creditors may proceed at once against the estate of a deceased partner to recover the debts due to them from the partnership, without showing or alleging that the joint estate is insufficient for the payment of their debts: doubts have been

(a) V. int. al. Ex parte Williams, 11 Ves. 5, 6; Ex parte Kendal, 17 Ves. 523; West v. Skip, ubi sup.

(b) Lord Eldon, Ex parte Ruffin, 6 Ves. 127.

(c) See, on this subject, Deacon's Bankrupt Law, chap. xv. s. 4, p. 646, et seq. and stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. xvi. s. 62.

(d) Ex parte v. Marlin, 2 Bro. 15.

entertained by judges of the highest eminence whether the creditors ought not to have been left to their legal remedy against the survivors; but the principle of the modern decisions appears to be that in equity a partnership contract is several as well as joint, so that the creditors, in such case, have no occasion to resort to any equities as between the partners themselves to constitute their claims; and the creditor having an original right against each, the death of any one does not affect the right of the creditor (a). Indeed this principle has been applied by the Court of Chancery to securities in form joint only, on loans to persons not partners, on the ground of mistake, the court, in such cases, in fact giving to the instrument the effect which it may be presumed the parties themselves intended to have given to it (b).

If two or more persons take a joint mortgage for a sum of money made up of advances by each, there will be no survivorship, but each will be entitled according to the amount of his advance (c).

It has been held that where a copyhold estate was surrendered to A. and his heirs, who declared himself a trustee for C. and his heirs, the heir at common law was entitled, and not the heir by the custom; and that where the land was Borough English, the heir at common law should have the estate (d); but this must be in the absence of evidence showing a different intention.

The principle on which a trust results in the case of a purchase by one person, with his own moneys, in the name of another is, that it must be presumed that he who advanced the money intended to have the estate for his own benefit; being then founded on a presumption, this resulting trust may be rebutted by written (e) or even by mere parol evidence (f), and as to part of the land or of an interest in the land as well as to the whole (g), for such evidence does not contradict

(a) Devaynes v. Noble, 2 Russ. & M. 505, (1 Meriv. 529, on the original hearing,) Sleece's case, 1 Meriv. 564; Wilkinson v. Henderson, 1 My. & K. 582, where the previous authorities are referred to; Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen, 206.

(b) Devaynes v. Noble, Sleece's case, 1 Meriv. 564; Thorpe v. Jackson, 2 Y. & Coll. 553, 561, 562, et v. infra.

(c) Petty v. Styward, 9 Ves. 597, note; Rigden v. Vallier, 2 Ves. 258.

(d) Per Lord Cowper in Haley v. Halley, Melmoth's MS. Rep. p. 81, amongst the Hargrave MSS. in the British Museum, Nu.

72; Mr. Vernon, the report states, seemed to doubt it, Mad. P. and P. ii. 142. V. supra, vol. i. pp. 571-2; Sugd. V. and P. 910, 914; Hall v. Hill, 1 Con. & L. 139; Carter v. Ratty, 12 July, 1745, MS. Mad. P. and P. n. ii. 141.

(e) Dyer v. Dyer, ubi sup.; Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. W. 112.

(f) V. supra, vol. i. pp. 571-2; Carter v. Ratty, 12 July, 1745, Mad. MS.; Sugd. V. and P. 910, 914; Hall v. Hill, 1 Con. & L. 139.

(g) Benbow v. Townsend, 1 Myl. & K. 506; Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. 585.

but supports the import of the deed: but parol evidence cannot be received against the legal operation of a deed or will, or an implied trust (a), especially where the subject is real estate.

This presumption may likewise be rebutted by the purchaser being under a species of moral obligation to provide for the person in whose name the purchase is made (b). Thus, if an estate be purchased with the money of the father in the name of his child, whether legitimate, or illegitimate if acknowledged and treated as a child (c), an infant or an adult (d), or by a grandfather in the name of his grandchild (e), (if the father be alive it is different, for in such case the grandfather is under no obligation) (f), it will be an advancement of such child or grandchild; unless some contemporaneous (g) declaration can be proved (h), or some contemporaneous act is done to manifest an intention that the son shall take as a trustee (i): possession taken by the father at the time would, it has been said, amount to such evidence, but not conclusive, for, as is stated below, such possession, when the son is an infant, may not have been taken as owner (k). In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the father's equity to consider a person to whom the estate purchased by him has been conveyed without consideration, as a trustee for him, is repelled by the child's title to have the transaction considered as an advancement (l). This principle is not to be frittered away by nice refinements (m).

The evidence of the intention of the father that he meant his son to be a trustee for him, must, to have the effect of making him a trustee, apply to the time of the purchase; a contemporaneous surrender by the father to the use of his will of a copyhold taken in the name of a child will be sufficient (n): but subsequent acts or declarations will not enable him to convert an advancement for his son

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 387; Sugd. V. and P. 914, s. 22.

(b) See 1 Swanst. 17, Murless v. Franklin.

(c) Beckford v. Beckford, Loft. 490; Fearn, Post. W. 327; Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 My. & K. 542; Sug. V. and P. 913.

(d) Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, 2 Beav. 456; but see Lex Prætor. 271.

(e) See Ebrand v. Dancer, 2 Ch. Ca. 26; recognized in Currant v. Jago, 1 Coll. 265, and see the Reporter's note, ibid., and the cases there cited; Lex Prætor. 271.

(f) Ib. Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607; 1 Eq. Abr. 382; see the note 1 Coll. 265, supra; and 2 Fonbl. 123, et infra.

(g) Lex Prætor. 271; Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. 231; and see Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 52; Murless v. Franklin, 1 Swanst. 13.

(h) Lord Grey v. Lady Grey, 2 Freem. 6;

Finch, R. 346; and see 2 Swanst. 594.

(i) Murless v. Franklin, 1 Swanst. 18; Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, 2 Beav. 447, 454-5-6; Scawen v. Scawen, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 65; 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 11.

(k) 1 Swanst. 17; et v. Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Atk. 387: a contemporaneous surrender to the uses of the will would be sufficient, Pranker v. Pranker, 1 Sim. & S. 3.

(l) Lord Cottenham, 5 My. & Cr. 254. Lord C. B. Eyre treats the fact of the nominee being a child as a circumstance of evidence, 2 Cox, 94.

(m) Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 367; 15 Ves. 50.

(n) Pranker v. Pranker, 1 Sim. & S. 3; see Sug. V. and P. 914; and see Cross v. Norton, 2 Atk. 75, as to contemporaneous instruments.

into a beneficial purchase for himself (a); though subsequent acts and declarations of the child may be used as evidence that the son was only a trustee (b): it is different in the case of a stranger, for there the purchaser may declare the trusts at any time (c): if the father die without having paid the purchase-money, in a clear case of advancement his personal estate must pay it for the benefit of the child (d).

If the child be an infant, and the father should take possession of the estate, and receive the rents and profits during his life, the child being an infant, that alone, as it has been held, will not convert the transaction into a trust for the father, he may have received the rents as guardian (e). It has been considered by some Judges, that where the father has received the rents and profits after the child was of age (f), and where the child was of age when the estate was purchased, the son ought to be considered as a trustee (g): but the effect of the taking possession may be different where the purchase is in the name of the father and the son (h), and in a late case the mere receipt of the dividends of stock placed in the son's name by the father, under a power of attorney from the son, being an adult, was held not to turn the son into a trustee of the capital (i). In all these cases perhaps the question resolves itself into this—was the possession or the receipt of rents or profits by the father, looking to the circumstances under which he and his son were placed, to be considered as the exercise of ownership and dominion over the property from the first? (k)

(a) 1 Swanst. 19; 2 Beavan, 455; Lex Prætor. 272; Skeats v. Skeats, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 11; Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 My. & K. 532.

(b) Pole v. Pole, 1 Ves. 76.

(c) Lex Prætor. 272.

(d) Sugd. V. and P. 913.

(e) Mumma v. Mumma, 2 Vernon, 19, and the note; Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 113, that was a case of a purchase in the name of the son and a nephew, the father taking the profits during his life, but he died while the son was an infant; Taylor v. Taylor, ubi sup., stated from Reg. Lib. 3 Bro. 231, the father had taken possession, and continued to receive the rents till his death, approved by Lord C., Crabb v. Crabb, 1 My. & K. 517; Reddington v. Reddington, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 106, 176, 194; and see Lord Grey v. Lady Grey, 1 Ch. Ca. 296; 2 Swanst. 594, from Lord Nott. MS.; S. C. Finch, 338; a very strong case, the father remained in possession till the death of his son, an adult; good manners might, it was said, induce the son to acquiesce, 2 Swanst. 600; but in Murless v. Franklin, 1 Swanst. 17, Lord Eldon said that possession taken by the father would amount to such evidence as would repel the presumption in favour of the son; and see Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. 231, but that was the case of a grandfather. In Woodman v. Morrel, Freem. 32, the father had been in possession ever since the purchase, though the daughter had been married for eleven years; Judge Atkins held her to be a trustee: and see Sugd. V. and P. 914.

(f) Dict. Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 608; but that was a case of a grandmother, and the father was alive, and there was a bond given by the father which made it more manifest that the son was to be only a trustee.

(g) Lex Prætor. cited by Mr. Maddock, ii. p. 145, from MS.; and see p. 271, ed. 1758; but see Sugd. V. and P. 915.

(h) See the cases referred to, 2 Fonbl. 122, n. (g).

(i) Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, 2 Beav. 457-8, evidence was given, but it was not conclusive.

(k) See Gilbert's Lex Prætor. 271. Lord C. B. Eyre, 2 Cox, 95, inclined to think the child could not sustain a bill against the father for an account of the rents received during his infancy, shewing his opinion rather to be that the receipt of the rents would be sufficient to turn the child into a trustee. The doctrine is

Where the son has been before provided for, the son has been considered presumptively as a trustee. "If a father has provided for his son," says Lord Nottingham, "he is under no further obligation to provide more than for a stranger (a), and else no father could trust his child; and this difference I take, and shall always observe" (b); but it has been held, that a reversion settled on the son, expectant on the mother's death, is not such a provision as will prevent the son taking beneficially; and if the father consider him as not having been advanced that is sufficient (c).

A difference (not sustainable, it seems,) has been taken between a purchase in the name of a son and of a daughter; on the ground that though sons are often provided for by a settlement of lands, yet daughters seldom are; possibly the presumption in such case may be said not to be so strong (d): a contract to add the life of a daughter in an existing lease, will not be considered as an advancement (e).

Whether the purchase by the father in the name of his son be of a fee-simple or a reversion, is immaterial, for the proximity or possible remoteness of the possession does not affect the rule (f).

If the father and another pay the money, it will not it seems be an advancement, the child being trustee as regards one, he will, primâ facie, be trustee for both (g); but where the father buys the estate in the names of his son, (especially where the son is an infant,) and of a stranger as trustee, it will be an advancement, for the trustee may have been added for prudential reasons (h): and as it seems, if the purchase be made in the name of himself and his son unprovided for (i), thus stated in the Treatise on Equity (ed. Fonbl. ii. p. 122.) But if the trust is declared before, or at the time of the purchase, (Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. 231,) or the father has already provided for him, (Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. 231; Pole v. Pole, 1 Ves. 76; the reference to Lloyd v. Read seems to be a mistake,) or the whole is not given to him, but part of it to another, (but this is hardly supported by the authority supposed to be referred to,) or if he come of full age (Atty-Gen. v. Bagg, Hard. 125,) and the father acts as proprietor, or does any thing that implies him to be owner of the estate, this shall overrule the presumption of law in favour of the child.

(a) The general rule, said Lord Eldon, 1 Swanst. 17, is subject to exception where the purchaser is under a species of natural obligation to provide for the nominee.

(b) Elliot v. Elliot, 2 Ch. Ca. p. 232; Lord Hardwicke, Pole v. Pole, 1 Ves. 76; Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607; "but this distinction is not very solidly taken or uniformly adhered to;" Lord C. B. Eyre, Dyer

v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 94; and Lord Brougham, Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 My. & K. 542, said it was far from being decisive.

(c) Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 111; Sugd. V. and P. 913-4.

(d) Gilb. Lex Præt. MS., citing Ch. Ca. 24, 30, 2 Mad. P. and P. 145; and see Lex Præt. p. 272, ed. 1758; but see Lady Gorge's case, 3 Cro. 550, and Bedwell v. Frome, mentioned in Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 97.

(e) Bedwell v. Frome, cited 2 Cox, 97.

(f) Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 15; Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92; Murless v. Franklin, 1 Swanst. 13.

(g) Finch v. Finch, 23 March, 1808, Mad. MS. Pr. and P. ii. 118, 2nd ed.; 15 Ves. 43. "If he and another person had purchased jointly, the presumption from the act of the father alone, would not naturally arise from the joint payment;" Lord Eldon, p. 51.

(h) Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 111; Crabb v. Crabb, 1 My. & K. 511.

(i) Scroope v. Scroope, 1 Ch. Ca. 27; Back v. Andrews, 2 Vern. 120; S. C. Pr. Ch.

(though Lord Hardwicke considered this to be a weaker case (a),) the purchase will be considered as an advancement; but the father will have the benefit of survivorship in case the son die during his minority; and the son, though his title is good against all volunteers and even purchasers, is not, it seems, entitled to the benefit of survivorship as against a judgment creditor of the father (b): it was anciently a practice to join the son in a purchase, to avoid wardship (c).

In a case where a copyhold was granted to A., the purchaser, and B. his wife, and C. his youngest son, to take in succession for their lives and the life of the survivor, it was held that C. was not a trustee of his life interest for A., but took it beneficially as an advancement from his father (d). So where the father, being entitled to a copyhold estate for the lives of himself and his brother James, surrendered the estate, and took a new grant for the lives of himself, his brother James, and his son William, the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce held, upon the authorities (there was some evidence, but which does not seem to have influenced the decision), that the son was beneficially entitled; the father had expressly devised the estate, stating in his will that the son was named as trustee (e). When a purchase of a copyhold is in the name of two sons, and the eldest son is not the first named, this is a purchase for the benefit of the sons, to take successively, unless there be a custom in the manor controlling that doctrine, or contemporaneous evidence of a different intention (f). Where, by the custom of the manor, copyholds are granted for lives successivè, it was originally holden, that if the father paid the fine, a grant to children should not be an advancement but a trust; but this has been overruled, and it comes within the general rule (g).

If a purchase be made by a husband in the name of his wife, she will not be considered as a trustee, but she will be beneficially entitled (h), for, primâ facie, a feme covert cannot be a trustee for her

1; there the title of the wife and daughter to a copyhold estate surrendered to the use of the husband, wife, and daughter, was supported against a mortgagee of the husband; 3 Salk. 367; Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92, note 1 to 1 P. Wms. 112, and Watkins' Cop. 216; and see Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 50; Sugd. V. and P. 915; and 1 Atk. 388.

(a) 2 Atk. 480; Pole v. Pole, 1 Ves. 76; but see Back v. Andrews, supra. Lord Hardwicke thought the cases had gone full far enough in cases of advancement, 2 Atk. 480.

(b) Stileman v. Ashdown, 2 Atk. 480; S. C. Amb. 13; and 2 Fonbl. 121, note, citing Scroop v. Scroop, 1 Ch. Ca. 27; Back v. Andrews, 2 Vern. 120; Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92;

Finch v. Finch, 15 Ves. 43; and as to latter point see Sugd. V. and P. 914, § 32.

(c) 1 Ch. Ca. 28; 3 Salk. 367.

(d) Dyer v. Dyer, 2 Cox, 92, 95.

(e) Skeats v. Skeats, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 9; v. supra, p. 215.

(f) Murless v. Franklin, 1 Swanst. 18.

(g) Sugd. V. and P. 913.

(h) See Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 367; Lorimer v. Lorimer, there cited; and Kingdon v. Bridges, 2 Vern. 67; Back v. Andrews, 2 Vern. 120; S. C. Pr. Ch. p. 1; and see Purefoy v. Rogers, 2 Lev. 39; Green v. King, 2 Sir Wm. Black. 1211; Mr. Maddock also refers to Mence v. Mence, before V. C. Plumer, 18 July, 1815.

husband (a); though such a transaction, like every other, might no doubt be affected by contemporaneous evidence: and where the husband purchases in the name of himself and his wife, the wife surviving will be entitled to the property as against volunteers (b); and against purchasers and creditors of the husband also, if it be in pursuance of articles, or there be any consideration beyond that which arises from natural affection though inadequate (c): a transfer by the husband of stock already purchased into the joint names would à fortiori be presumed to be a gift to the wife surviving (d): a purchase in the name of a child solely, or with the father as before noticed, is not within the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4; so that a purchaser cannot claim against the child (e).

It is to be observed, that if A. purchases lands in his own name, but in trust for B., and becomes engaged for debts of B., and B. files a bill to have the lands; B. will not be allowed to take the estate unless he will do equity by paying not only the purchase-money but the other moneys which the purchaser has advanced or which he has become liable to pay (f).

If an annuity be purchased by A., in the name of B. a stranger, A. paying for it, B. will clearly be a trustee of the annuity for A., unless proof be adduced that it was intended that B. should take beneficially (g); and it is the same where stock is purchased in the name of the purchaser and a stranger, or is transferred by the owner into the name of himself and a stranger (h); but if a man deliver money or transfer stock to another, even though he should be a stranger, no trust will arise unless upon evidence, it will primâ facie be a gift (i). If a bond be taken by A. in the name of B. a stranger, an implied trust will be raised in favour of A.; but if a grandfather, the father being dead, takes a bond in the name of his grandchild, it will be considered as an advancement of the grandchild (k). If A. buys stock in

(a) Kingdon v. Bridges, 2 Vern. 67; and see Lex Prætor. 272.

(b) Christ's Hospital v. Budgin, 2 Vern. 683.

(c) See Fitzer v. Fitzer, 2 Atk. 514; and Jones v. March, Forrest. 64, there cited.

(d) Coates v. Stevens, 1 Yo. & Coll. 74, Lord C. B. Abinger; Wilde v. Wilde, 1 Rop. Husband and Wife, Jacob's ed. and the other cases cited p. 54, though the references do not in all cases quite bear out the text; Dummer v. Pitcher, 2 My. & K. 273; and see the other cases cited in the argument 1 Yo. & Coll. 72; and Lex Prætor. p. 272. See Sugd. V. and P. 917.

(e) Sugd. V. and P. 916; but see 917 as to the right of creditors.

(f) Bradburne v. Amand, 2 Ch. Ca. 87.

(g) Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 366.

(h) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Freeman v. Tatham, 5 Hare, 337, referring to Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 366, but v. inf. p. 220, n. (b).

(i) Lord C. B. Richards, George v. Bank of England, 7 Price, 651. A distinction was taken in this case between purchasing stock in the name of another and transferring stock already purchased, see p. 653, Garrow, B. and see Dummer v. Pitcher, 2 My. & K. 273; but see 5 Hare, 337.

(k) 1 Eq. Abr. 382; and see Loyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607; though in that case it would appear that but for the special circumstances the court would have treated the transaction, though the purchaser was the grandmother and the father was alive, as an advancement.

the public funds in the name of B., who has no proof that it was meant as a provision for him, there will be an implied trust raised in favour of the person who paid the money (a), liable to be rebutted in the same manner as in the purchase of land. If a person having stock in the public funds transfers the same into his own and another's name, and dies, and the circumstances are such as to imply that a gift was intended, the onus then lies on the representatives of the deceased to show that it was not intended as a gift (b). These cases may be sufficient to illustrate the principles above stated as applicable to personal estate.

An uncle also may place himself in loco parentis towards his nephew, especially if an infant, so that money placed out by him in the name of the nephew, particularly if in a savings' bank, may be considered as an advancement; and a subsequent dealing with the fund, if it was originally clearly an advancement, will not affect the title of the nephew (c).

If a bond were taken by A. in the name of B., and B. became felo de se, relief might be had against the king, upon the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39 (d): the 4 & 5 Will. IV. c. 23, § 2, prevents any forfeiture in such cases.

An exception to the rule as to resulting trust from the payment of the price, was introduced by the Ship Registry Acts (e): if A. purchased a ship in the name of B. and the sale was registered in the name of B., it was held by force of the statutes that B.'s title was absolute (f). Where a ship was purchased with joint-partnership property, but registered in the name of only one of the partners, it was held, owing to the strong provisions of the Registry Acts, that even against a claim by creditors, no implied trust arose in favour of the partners, in whose name the ship was not registered (g), nor could any relief be granted on the ground of accident or fraud (h). It was, however, a question whether the Acts affected titles by operation of law, as distinguished from those arising from contract, as in the case of assignees, executors, or administrators, and it seems that they

(a) See Rider v. Kidder, 10 Ves. 366, and Mortimer v. Davies, mentioned in 10 Ves. 363.

(b) George v. Howard, 7 Pri. 661. There was in that case strong parol evidence that the intestate intended that the defendant, who had married his niece, should have the stock after his death; the object appeared to be to save the legacy duty, v. sup. 219, n. (h).

(c) See Currant v. Jago, 1 Col. 267-8; the facts in this case are special. And see Dickenson v. Shaw, cited 2 Cox, 96-7; George v. Bank of England, 7 Price, 646. The general rule is that a nephew is a stranger, Lex

Prætor. 272.

(d) Hix v. Attorney-Gen. Hard. 176.

(e) 26 Geo. III. c. 60; 34 Geo. III. c. 68.

(f) Ex parte Houghton, 17 Ves. 251, 253; S. C. 1 Rose, 177.

(g) Ex parte Yallop, 15 Ves. 60, 66; and see Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 739.

(h) Thompson v. Leake, 1 Mad. 39; Barker v. Chapman, ibid. 44, 400, note; and see Battersby v. Smyth, 3 Mad. 110; and Brewster v. Clarke, 2 Mer. 75; and see the analogous doctrine as regards the Stamp Acts, Smith v. Henley, 1 Phill. 391.

might as such have had and may now have equitable interests in a ship, notwithstanding the Ship Registry Acts (a).

The stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 110 (1825), does not appear to have made any material alteration in regard to the right to claim any equitable interest in a ship registered in the names of others (b), in virtue of the payment of purchase-money; though the 33rd section, which has been repeated in the subsequent acts, saved the equitable title of minors, heirs, legatees, and others, exceeding the number of thirty-two (being the greatest number allowed to be legal owners), "duly represented by or holding from any of the persons within the said number, and registered as legal owners of any share or shares of such ship:" and it provided for the existence of trusteeship on behalf of joint-stock companies becoming purchasers. The act now in operation is the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89 (1845), by which the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55 (1833), which was substituted for the act of 6 Geo. IV., and some subsequent acts are consolidated; the provisions of that act, so far as the present question is concerned, do not appear to vary from those of the preceding acts, or, indeed to afford any ground for a different construction, even as regards fraud, from that which prevailed in regard to the original acts (c).

(a) Ib. 253, 254. Dict. of Lord Eldon. And there may be an equitable right to have the legal title completed; see Ridgway v. Roberts, 4 Hare, 112. It has been held that the Bankrupt Acts, in regard to property in the order and disposition of the bankrupt (6 Geo. IV. c. 16, § 72), extend to ships, notwithstanding the effect of the Ship Registry Acts; see the cases cited, Ex parte Burn, 1 Jac. & W. 379; 17 Ves. 252.

(b) See particularly the 31st and 32nd sections, and Slater v. Willis, 1 Beavan, 354, 361 (A. D. 1838), which was decided upon the operation of that statute, although the subsequent act after mentioned (1833) had passed, which however repeats those enactments; see also ss. 33 to 46. There are special provisions (see ss. 35, 42 and 43) as to mortgages, in that and in the last acts (3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 55, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89); as to which see Lister v. Payn, 11 Sim. 348; Langton v. Horton, 5 Beav. 9.

(c) See particularly s. 2 and ss. 31, 32 and 33 of 3 & 4 Will. IV. and ss. 34, 35, and 36 of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 89. The question as to the effect of the act of 3 & 4 Will. IV. as compared with the preceding act in regard to obtaining an equitable title by contract, came under discussion before Lord Cottenham in Davenport v. Whitmore, on appeal 2 My. & Cr. 177; but as his lordship held that the plaintiff's claim in respect of the freight was distinct from any equitable title he might have in regard to the ship, (see also Mestaer v. Gillespie, 11 Ves. 621,) his lordship had no occasion to decide that question; though Lord Langdale had allowed the demurrer, apparently on the ground of the agreement giving no title to the ship as the principal subject. In Follett v. Delany, xii. Jur. 549, on demurrer, the V. C. Knight Bruce held, that where a bill of sale, which had been retained to be delivered only on payment of the purchase-money, had been fraudulently obtained by the vendee without payment, and he had by means of it procured the ship to be registered de novo in his own name, the court was bound by the statute to consider the legal and equitable title as the same.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—Supra, p. 204.

"The product of or substitute for the original thing," said Lord Ellenborough, in Taylor v. Plumer, ubi sup. p. 204, "still follows the nature of the thing itself, as long as it can be ascertained to be such, and the right only ceases when the means of ascertainment fail, which is the case when the subject is turned into money and mixed and confounded in a general mass of the same description:" the remainder of the judgment should be consulted.

SECTION III.—Resulting Trusts in favour of the Heir and Next of Kin, in respect of Property given upon Trust, where the Trusts wholly or partially fail or do not exhaust the Beneficial Interest.

General Rule.

The Person to whom Property would devolve by General Law cannot be deprived of his Right excepting by a Gift to some one else.

On Questions as to Resulting Trusts, the First Question to be determined usually is whether the Donee or Devisee, by the original Gift on the face of the Instrument, takes in Trust merely.

Instances where Donee is, and is not to be considered as Trustee merely.

If Donee an Infant or Married Woman, that is only a Circumstance.

Recognition of Relationship and Expressions of Regard may be taken into Consideration in construing a Will in regard to the Interest conferred.

Quære, if any Difference between a Will and a Deed in this respect.

Distinction between Devise of an Estate charged with Debts, and upon Trust to pay Debts; Effect of the intended Purpose as affecting the Right to the Beneficial Interest.

King v. Denison, before Lord Eldon.

Not universally true that the Purpose limits the Devise.

Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves., Sir W. Grant.

General Rule, that where the Purpose fails the Intention fails.

Absolute Gift of Property, with Illegal Condition annexed—Doctrine of Sir J. Leach.

Bland v. Wilkin (1 Bro.), stated from the Registrar's Book.

Cases considered where the Title of the Donee under the original Gift is out of the question.

Legacy to Heir or Next of Kin will not preclude their Claim.

Nor will bare Intention to exclude, or negative Words.

Charity Legacies given out of Mixed Fund composed of Realty and Pure Personalty will not be marshalled in favour of the Charity.

The Rule as stated by Mr. Cox, as to Descent on Heir-at-Law of Surplus Proceeds of Real Estate.

Conversion out and out—for the Purposes of the Will only.

General Law as settled by Cruse v. Barley and Ackroyd v. Smithson, where there is a Mixed Fund of Real and Personal Estate.

Resulting Trust for Next of Kin where Money is directed to be laid out in Land, and a limited Interest is given in the Land so to be purchased, or the Limitations of the Land or any of them fail.

Cogan v. Stevens, before Lord Cottenham.

Where a Mixed Fund of Real and Personal Estate is devised in Trust and the Trusts wholly or partially fail, and there is no Heir-at-Law or Next of Kin, the Donees in Trust keep the Real Estate, but are Trustees for the Crown of the Personalty.

Taylor v. Haygarth, before Vice-Chancellor of England.

Question frequently arises whether the Resulting Trust for the Heir is not intercepted by Conversion out and out in favour of Residuary Legatee or Next of Kin.

Conversion may be in such Terms as to give the Next of Kin a Claim.

But they must claim as Devisees by Express or Implied Gift.

Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Bro., Lord Thurlow.

Direction that Proceeds of Real Estate shall be deemed Part of Personal Estate and the like, not sufficient.

Fitch v. Webber, 6 Hare.

Question has most frequently arisen between the Residuary Legatees and the Heir.

Doctrine stated by Lord Eldon (1803).

Sheddon v. Goodrick, 8 Ves.

Mallabar v. Mallabar and Durour v. Motteux, until lately were considered as the leading Authorities on Conversion as between Heir and Residuary Legatee.

Amphlet v. Parke.

Green v. Jackson.

Principle of Durour v. Motteux still governing Principle—the Surplus may be so converted as to pass to Residuary Legatees.

But it must be given.

Residuary Clause, though generally it includes all, may be restricted.

Effect of Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, § 25.

The Heir takes the Portion of a Converted Fund which results to him, as Personal Estate.

The Doctrine as expounded by Sir J. Leach.

When Parol Evidence may be admitted to repel the Resulting Trust.

When the entire Property is, on the Construction of the Instrument, fixed with a Trust, Parol Evidence cannot be given.

Where the Resulting Trust arises from Presumption of Law on the Facts, Evidence may be gone into.

On a Devise of Land, apparently for a particular Purpose, Evidence may be permitted.

If Evidence be received on one side, it may be given on the other.

Exception to the Rule as to Resulting Trusts in regard to Gifts for Charity.

Result of the Decisions as to when the Donee in Charity Cases may retain the Surplus or Increased Rents and Profits.

THE general rule which governs cases of the description we have now to consider, has been adverted to in the preceding volume; but the subject, from its importance, and its frequent recurrence in practice requires a particular examination (a).

As regards the heir and the next of kin, their title, as to the one to the real estate of his ancestor, as to the other to the personal estate, depends upon this principle,—that whatever portion of the real estate or its produce is not actually and effectually given beneficially to some one else belongs to the heir,—and that the next of kin, that the executor is a trustee only, have a corresponding right as regards the personal estate; both take by law independently of intention. This principle, however difficult of application in some particular cases, will be found to be the key to all the decisions upon this class of resulting trusts (a).

(a) Supra, vol. i. p. 510; and see 2 Fonbl. 116, et seq.; 2 Powell on Dev. by Jarman, chap. iii. p. 32-44, et seq.; 1 Jarman on Wills, 553; Morice v. Bishop of London, 10 Ves. 537, Lord Eldon: and int. al. Cook v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen, 50; Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 409, 412, 413; and Watson v. Hayes, 5 My. & Cr. 131. The early cases on this subject, beginning with Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425, S. C. Prec. Ch. 162, are collected in Mr. Sanders's note to Hill v. Bishop of London,

1 Atk. 618 (which is a leading case), also in King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 265 (which is also a leading case); Mr. Sanders has also pointed out in the above note the cases which he considers as exceptions: some later cases are collected in the note to Wright v. Wright, 16 Ves. 190, note (a). The case of Cruse v. Barley, 3 P. W. 21, and Mr. Cox's valuable note, part of which is cited infra, should be consulted, and Stonehouse v. Evelyn, ibid. 252.

Where a question as to a resulting trust in favour of an heir on a gift of real estate, or in favour of the next of kin through the personal representatives on a gift of personal estate, is raised (b); in most cases, the first question to be determined is, whether the donee, in the case of a conveyance or assignment or other instrument of transfer (c), or the devisee or legatee in case of a devise or bequest, upon the whole context of the instrument, takes the property under the original gift, in the character of trustee only; for an absolute beneficial gift to a person by the name of trustee will not take away from the effect of the gift (d). If it be determined that he takes under the original gift only as a trustee, then the question as regards any alleged undisposed of interest in real estate under the original gift is confined to this; whether or not, upon the intention expressed as regards the beneficial interest, there is an effectual, distinct, substantive gift to the original donee (e), or to some one else; or whether there is an absence of any such gift, and therefore a resulting trust for the heir: and the same principle applies in respect of personal estate as regards the next of kin. Both these questions also depend upon the intention (f), which is to be ascertained according to the ordinary rules of construction, by looking to the whole context of the instrument (g).

As regards the first question, namely, whether the donee takes under the original gift as a trustee merely, if the words "for his own use and benefit," or any other equivalent expressions are introduced in the original gift, nothing but some irresistible evidence to be collected from other parts of the instrument (h), will justify the taking from them their natural import (i); and it is to be observed that the annex-

(a) The cases discussed in Powell on Devises, by Jarman, ii. pp. 44 to 49, and Jarman on Devises, i. p. 302, et seq., though not so obviously, in truth depend upon the same principle, for the question is whether there is an absolute gift of the whole, and then a reservation or an exception which no one can take advantage of; or a gift subject to an exception or with a portion reserved, so that the exempted or reserved portion does not pass. The decision in Gravenor v. Hallam, Ambl. 645, (see however Powell on Dev. ii. 45; 1 Jarman on Devises, 303, et v. ibid. 306,) affords an illustration; and see Henchman v. Att.-Gen.

3 My. & K. 493, and the add. note, p. 249, inf.

(b) See on this subject Jarman, i. 504, who has stated some of the most important cases.

(c) Stubbs v. Sargon, 2 Keen, 255; S. C. on appeal, 3 My. & Cr. 507.

(d) 2 Ves. & B. 297.

(e) See Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 297.

(f) See 1 Atk. 618, Lord Hardwicke.

(g) V. supra, p. 20, Ellis v. Selby, 1 My. & Cr. 298, Lord Cottenham.

(h) See Stubbs v. Sargon, infra.

(i) Wood v. Cox, 2 My. & Cr. 690; and see Meredith v. Heneage, supra, p. 66.

ation of the words "upon trust," though, generally speaking, according to the authorities they will fix on the donee the character of trustee, whether a trust be declared or not and whether the instrument be a deed or a will (a), yet those words are capable of being explained away upon the context, so as to prevent them from operating to fix the character of trustee upon the donee (b), or at least so as to confine that character to a portion of the property (c). If the devise be to an infant (d) or a married woman, though it is difficult to suppose that either should have been intended to be made a trustee, and that circumstance must be attended to in giving a construction to the will, yet it must not be allowed too much weight: if the will upon a fair construction has made them such, all the consequences must follow (e). A discretion as to the application of the property given may be so large as to amount to an absolute gift; as where there is an uncontrolled power to give away the property as and to whom the donee may think fit (f); but if the discretion to dispose is limited to certain general purposes, though they may be too indefinite to be enforced, the donee is a trustee (g).

A grant of a rent-charge de novo in trust is unnatural and unusual, and therefore not to be presumed; it is very different from an assignment of a rent in esse, in which case an intention to create a trust may well be supposed (h).

Where the father in a conveyance to his son, made with a view to sever a joint-tenancy, (which in ordinary cases would make the son a trustee, as it excludes the presumption of an advancement,) reserves to himself an estate for life or other limited interest; as this is inconsistent with his taking the whole by resulting trust, the son will take beneficially, subject to such limited interest (i).

(a) V. int. al. Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 10 Ves. 537, Lord Eldon; Pain v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 14 Ves. 370; and the cases cited Hill on Tr. p. 82; Hobart v. Countess of Suffolk, 2 Vern. 644; Southouse v. Bate, 2 Ves. & B. 398.

(b) Dawson v. Clarke, 15 Ves. 409; 18 Ves. 257; and the other cases cited Lewin, 133.

(c) Batteley v. Windle, 2 Bro. 31, stated from Reg. Lib.; Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 199; these cases relate to executors where the leaning is in favour of the next of kin on account of their relationship; Sir A. Hart, Broune v. M'Guire, 1 Beat. 366.

(d) In Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 83, Sir William Grant considered the appointment of an infant as executor as almost conclusive that he was intended to have a beneficial interest: a legacy to the other executor did not operate against the infant, at least so as to exclude evidence on his behalf.

(e) Lord Eldon, King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 275, 278.

(f) Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 294; Flanders v. Clark, 1 Ves. Sen. 10, et v. supra, pp. 68, 69; see also Cuthbert v. Purrier, Jacob, R. 417; and Pope v. Pope, 10 Sim. 5.

(g) Ellis v. Selby, 1 My. & Cr. 299, on appeal; Fowler v. Garlike, 1 Russ. & M. 232; Pain v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 14 Ves. 370. See the analogous doctrine as to trusts by Precatory words, supra, p. 69: White v. Briggs is now reported 15 Sim. 34.

(h) Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swanst. 597.

(i) Baylis v. Newton, 2 Vern. 28; Sydney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 352.

Where a donor has shown that a gift was originally intended to be made upon trust, it is not sufficient to remove that character from the donee, that he has omitted to declare any trust or any effectual trust, or that the trusts have failed. Illustrations of this principle, and of many others which are stated in this section, may be drawn from the old law prior to the late statute in regard to the title of Executors to the Residue undisposed of: under the old law, where a residuary bequest was cancelled, still the executor was held to be a trustee; it appearing to have been the testator's intention to dispose specifically, though to whom was uncertain, that was considered sufficient to repel the presumption that the mere appointment of executors was intended as a gift (a): "any intention of disposition," said Sir Wm. Grant, "would be sufficient to exclude the executor, even supposing the intention to have been to give the residue to the executor himself" (b).

One of the most important of the distinctions applicable to cases of this kind, which indeed has been already adverted to, is pointed out by Lord Eldon, in the case of King v. Denison, who adopts the principle laid down by Lord Hardwicke, in Hill v. Bishop of London (c). "If I give to A. and his heirs all my real estate, charged with my debts (d), that is a devise to him for a particular purpose, but not for that purpose only; if the devise is upon trust to pay my debts, that is, a devise for a particular purpose, and nothing more: and the effect of those two modes of disposition admits just this difference; the former is a devise of an estate of inheritance, for the purpose of giving the devisee the beneficial interest, subject to a particular purpose (e); the latter is a devise for a particular purpose, with no intention to give him any beneficial interest. In the former case therefore the devisee keeps the

(a) See particularly Urquhart v. King, 7 Ves. 225, 229.

(b) Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. 351, 352; 5 Hare, 48; Browne v. M'Guire, Beat. 366, 369, where most of the cases relating to executors are noticed; Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566, et v. 2 Fonbl. 128. In Francis v. Grover, 5 Hare, 39, the testator had erased a clause in his will in pencil; Mr. Justice Earle, on an issue directed, held that prima facie this was not to be considered as indicating an intention to revoke, but only as deliberative or indicative of some future and incomplete purpose, ibid. 44; and the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, on a motion for a new trial, agreed in that view; (see the cases on this subject, cited ib. pp. 41, 42, 47). In the ecclesiastical court, (ibid.), and therefore it is presumed in this court, extrinsic evidence will be admitted,

(v. ibid. 49); it is stated in the report, p. 43, that no other evidence than the instrument itself was given, from which I presume it was understood that other evidence would have been received. The cases where the executor was held to be a trustee and excluded from the residue—the principles of which are applicable generally, for they all proceed upon evidence of intention—are stated by Mr. Fonblanque, vol. ii. p. 127 et seq.

(c) 1 Atk. 618, supra, and see Wainwright v. Bendlowes, 2 Vern. 718.

(d) Or legacies, see Cooke v. Stationers' Company, 3 My. & K. 265, Sir J. Leach, and the illustrations; Wright v. Row, 1 Bro. 61; Jackson v. Hurlock, 2 Eden, 274.

(e) See Dawson v. Clarke, 18 Ves. 257; Wood v. Cox, 2 My. & Cr. 694, et v. 3 My. & K. 265, supra, vol. i. p. 449.

surplus, for it is intended for him; in the latter the heir takes the surplus, for there is no intention that the donee should keep it" (a).

It is not however universally true, that the expression of a purpose for which even a devise of land is made, confines and limits the devise to the purposes so expressed (b): the conclusion to which Lord Hardwicke came was this: "No general rule is to be laid down, unless where an estate is devised to be sold for payment of debts and no more is said, there is clearly a resulting trust (c); but if any particular reason occurs why the testator should intend a beneficial interest to the devisee, there are no precedents to warrant the court to say it shall not be a beneficial interest" (d). The same principle will of course apply where the transaction is by voluntary deed (e). If the purpose expressed is something in favour of the party to whom the devise or bequest is made, the presumption is rather stronger that the benefit expressed is the only benefit which he is intended to derive from the devise or bequest (f): if a legacy be given to a devisee of real estate out of the proceeds of the fund to be formed by the sale of the real estate, that would, no doubt, by analogy to the case of a legacy given to a sole executor, be considered as a circumstance to fix the character of trustee merely on the devisee (g).

A distinction has been taken between a devise and a conveyance, in regard to whether the donee shall or shall not be considered as a trustee in respect of the relationship of the donee to the donor, where it is noticed in the instrument; and it has been said, as affecting this distinction, that a devise always imports bounty, and implies a consideration in itself which a deed does not (h). A testator devised to his cousin, Thomas Mellish, a house and premises, to hold to him, his heirs and assigns for ever, in trust, to be sold, for the payment of all his debts and legacies within a year after his death; and he made Thomas Mellish his executor; the plaintiff, who was cousin and heir to the deviser, claimed the surplus as a resulting trust for him: it seems to have been admitted on both sides that on a conveyance in these terms he

(a) Lord Eldon, King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 272; 1 Keen, 320, et v. supra, vol. i. pp. 499, 510.

(b) Sir W. Grant, Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 322; Hill v. Bishop of London, 1 Atk. 618; see 1 Jarm. 507.

(c) As to this see Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 322, supra.

(d) Lord Hardwicke, Hill v. Bishop of London, 1 Atk. 618.

(e) Cock v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen, 42, 51, supra, vol. i. p. 510.

(f) Sir W. Grant, 14 Ves. 322.

(g) See Powell on Devises, by Jarman, ii. p. 40.

(h) Rogers v. Rogers, Forrest. 271; so that a limitation to a man and his heirs, without declaring the use, will not pass the use for want of a consideration, ibid.: in Sidney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 366, as before noticed, Lord Eldon declared that the court is not at liberty to consider the intention in a deed in the same way as in a will, et v. infra.

would clearly have been entitled; but the Lords Commissioners held that the making Thomas Mellish executor, which was equivalent to a gift of the personal estate, and calling him cousin were circumstances(a) which showed that he was intended to take beneficially; for if it were a resulting trust, then, as the personal estate must first be exhausted in ease of the lands, Thomas Mellish might have nothing, either as devisee or executor, whereas it was plain, as the Lords Commissioners considered, that the testator had a regard and kindness for Thomas Mellish, which might be disappointed if the heir-at-law were to take; and the heir-at-law was therefore excluded and ordered to join in the sale(b). The principle on which this case was decided is in accordance with Lord Hardwicke's rule(c); the only doubt is, whether the intention to benefit the devisee could be collected from the will: other cases have established that the recognition of relationship and expressions of affection or regard, ought to be looked to in construing a will, in reference to the interest intended to be conferred(d). However, it is not quite clear that in this respect there ought to be any distinction made, so far at least as regards the admission of such expressions as circumstances of Evidence, between the case of a surplus arising on a voluntary gift by deed and a devise; near relationship and expressions of affection and regard, according to the modern doctrine(e), are only to be taken into consideration as circumstances to guide the court in a doubtful case(f), and as matter of evidence may be counteracted by the language of other parts of the instrument: this rule of construction appears to be equally applicable to a voluntary gift by way of trust for such purposes as are above mentioned, in a deed, as to a devise by will, though the appointment of the donee as executor in a will, may be an additional circum-

(a) And see King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 279, Lord Eldon; and Cook v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen, 42; Duke of Rutland v. Duchess of Rutland, 2 P. W. 216, case of wife; Lake v. Lake, Amb. 127, Lord Hardwicke.

(b) Coningham v. Mellish, 1 Eq. Ab. 273; Prec. Ch. 31; affirmed in Dom. Proc., cited by Lord Hardwicke as of authority, 1 Atk. 619; and see North v. Crompton, as reported 1 Ch. C. 197; Rogers v. Rogers, 3 P. W. 193; S. C. Forrest. 268; and see Lewin, 132.

(c) Hill v. Bishop of London, 1 Atk. 618; sup. vol. i. 510, and p. 227 of this vol. "Where the devisees are very near relations, as a wife and children, in all such cases inferences of bounty have been drawn to rebut the equity of the heir," Lord Hardw., Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 565; and see Forrest. 78 and 268.

(d) See Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425; City of London v. Garway, ib. 571: in both these cases the devise was to strangers, upon trust. In Hobart v. Countess of Suffolk, et p. 644, one of the devisees was a stranger, therefore the presumption of bounty was excluded; but the Lord Chancellor added, if the devise had been to the other trustee who was a near relation alone, it might have been different: and see King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 279, and the other cases cited Lewin, p. 132.

(e) See Lake v. Lake, Ambler, 127, as to relationship.

(f) See Lake v. Lake, ubi sup.; King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 274, and the other cases cited by Mr. Lewin, 132, note (e); and see 1 Jarman, 508 to 511.

stance which cannot occur in a deed: indeed, as a will of itself implies bounty, there seems to be less occasion for resorting to such expressions in a will, in order to show an intent to confer a beneficial interest, than in a deed: if they are found in a deed it would appear therefore to be a stronger case for the donee: but the question is not very likely to arise.

As regards executors: where one was made a trustee, the others in the absence of evidence to the contrary were also held to be trustees (a); as there was no principle upon which one could be considered as having a beneficial interest given to him and the other as having a mere office (b): the same principle would seem to apply to devisees or any other description of donees taking by voluntary gift.

Where there is an absolute gift of property with an illegal condition (c), the donee, as has been noticed before, may retain the whole—there is no resulting trust: thus, where a testator bequeathed a leasehold property, upon condition that the legatee should assign a certain leasehold estate, part of the property, to a charity, the legatee was declared to be absolutely entitled (d); and Sir J. Leach held that if the condition had been that he should pay a sum of money to a charity, it would have been the same: such a case seems to be clearly distinguishable from the case of a gift with an exception of a part (e), which of course would meet with a different construction: the charity was to take by assignment from the donee; but the donee was prohibited by law from making the assignment. However, in Bland v. Wilkin, where the estate was given on condition (f) of paying 10*l.* to (a) Milnes v. Slater, 8 Ves. 308; Williams v. Jones, infra. As to the admission of parol evidence in such cases, see 10 Ves. 82-3. and infra in this chapter.

(b) Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 81.

(c) See Arnold v. Chapman, 1 Ves. 110, at the foot of the page; Wright v. Row, 1 Bro. 60, was a case of an illegal trust, which received the same determination; et v. supra, p. 183, n. (e). "A condition to pay legacies," said Sir J. Leach, in Cooke v. Stationers' Company, 3 My. & K. 266, "is no more than a charge of the legacies," which, as before stated, does not create a trust, though it imposes an obligation.

(d) Poor v. Mial, 6 Mad. 32, supra.

(e) But see Hill on Tr. 109. In Baker v. Hall, 12 Ves. 497, Sir W. Grant held, that where a testator gave a rent-charge to the minister of a parish, for the time being, upon certain void charitable trusts, and devised the estate, subject to the charge, to a particular devisee, the charge sunk for the benefit of the specific devisee; but no claim was made on behalf of the heir, and the case was decided before Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow. 212, infra.

(f) 1 Bro. 61, in the note, but the report there is incorrect. In this case, as appears by Reg. Lib. 1781A, p. 456, the testator, by his third codicil, dated 15th February, 1780, revoked the devise of his 24 acres of Dolver ground and devised them to the defendant Eliz. Northcote and to her heirs and assigns for ever, subject to and upon the express condition that she, the said E. N., her executors, administrators or assigns, should pay the several legacies therein bequeathed, namely 10*l.* to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of Soham, to be distributed in charity; and 10*l.* to the churchwardens, &c. of Fordham, to be distributed in like manner; and the testator gave 10*l.* to his executors, to be distributed amongst the Baptist poor people in St. Mary Costany; which three legacies he directed to be paid by the said E. N., her executors or administrators, within twelve months after his decease. Elizabeth N. insisted (457 b) a charity, Sir T. Sewell held that the heir was entitled to the 10*l.*, probably on the ground that the payment of it was a condition precedent, and there was no one but the heir who could claim it when paid, and that as the heir might have taken advantage of the condition he was entitled to the fruits of it. Lord Hardwicke appears to have decided Arnold v. Chapman,—where a copyhold estate was devised on condition to pay 1000*l.* to the testator's executor, the residue whereof, after payment of debts, &c., was given for charity,—on this ground (a).

If there be a devise of land to A. to be charged with a legacy to B. provided B. attain 21, the devise is absolute to A., unless B. attain 21; if he does he is to have the legacy: but his attaining 21 is the condition on which he is to obtain it; and if he does not, the devisee will have it—the heir can make no claim (b): “but,” said Lord Eldon, “a gift which fails, must clearly be intended upon the failure of the condition to be for the benefit of the devisee, otherwise he cannot take advantage of that failure, as he being devisee can only take what is given him by the will” (c). This would seem to impugn Sir J. Leach's doctrine above stated (d), for certainly there is no intention in such cases that the devisee should take; but that doctrine depends, as will be observed, upon another principle, namely, that where a gift is absolute, an illegal condition annexed to it is void, which was not applicable to the case which Lord Eldon was considering.

The heir will have the benefit of the surplus interest in a term or other personal interest carved out of the inheritance for a particular purpose which does not exhaust the whole, as against the devisee, that is, where the devisee takes only what remains after the particular interest so given is carved out; and what the heir so takes in that case, he takes as personal estate (e): it is the same where lands are devised to trustees for a term of years, upon trust, to raise a sum of money for certain that the legacies thus imposed were void. The will and third codicil were established, and it was declared that the charity legacies were void under the stat. of Geo. II. (Mortmain Act), and that they belonged to the heir-at-law, as a resulting trust.

(a) 1 Ves. 111. The charge was well made, but not well disposed of, ib., and see Tregonwell v. Sydenham, supra et infra.

(b) Lord Eldon, Sydenham v. Tregonwell, 3 Dow. 212. Mr. Jarman draws a distinction between the case of a legatee in such case dying under 21, and his attaining 21 and then dying in the life of the testator, so as to cause a lapse.

(c) See 2 Powell on Dev. by Jarman, 42.

(d) P. 229, supra.

(e) Levett v. Needham, 2 Vern. 138, 140; so, the surplus proceeds of a term created for payment of debts will result to the grantor and will be personal estate in his hands and will pass as such; Hewitt v. Wright, 1 Bro. 90; and see Watson v. Hayes, 5 My. & Cr. 125. Of the old analogous doctrine, as to Satisfied Terms being held in trust to attend the inheritance, see Maundrell v. Maundrell, 10 Ves. 259; Sydney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 358; Capel v. Girdler, 9 Ves. 509-12, 3 Swanst. 201, 612, 622, Hill on Tr. 317, and supra, vol. i. p. 514-16.

purposes which are void by law, and then the estate is given over, so that the devisees in remainder are not intended to take any thing but subject to the term, the declared trusts of which would have intercepted pro tanto the beneficial enjoyment (a). Lord Eldon, referring to Levett v. Needham, cited above, said, "That case and the others rest upon a distinction extremely nice, perhaps not easy of application; that if the estate is given to the devisees in such a way that a charge is to be created by the act of another person, raising a question between that person and the devisees, the heir has no claim; but if the deviser has, as in Emblyn v. Freeman (Prec. Ch. 541), and other cases, himself created the charge, and to the extent of that charge the intention appears on the face of the will not to give the estate to the devisees, it will to the extent of that charge, the particular object failing, go to the heir; but the question, if it arises upon a will, is always a question of intention" (b).

According to a dictum of Lord Hardwicke, in Brown v. Jones (c), where a term is created by will and no trusts whatever declared, it will result to the heir; but Lord Eldon doubted the accuracy of this dictum, and was of opinion, and so indeed he decided, that in all cases the whole scope of the will must be looked to, to see whether or not the term could have been intended to interfere with the beneficial enjoyment, under the provisions disposing of the estate; and in the case before him he thought that he might read the will as if "subject thereto," had been introduced, as he would have done in marriage articles (d): the probability in all these cases is, that the term has been created with a view to the raising of portions, or some such purpose, which would not have had the effect of postponing the beneficial enjoyment.

These authorities may be sufficient to give a general idea of the circumstances appearing upon the instrument itself (e), which will or

(a) Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow. 194, on appeal: the Court of Exchequer had held the term to be void in its creation, as the trusts declared were void, taking it as an absolute gift of the whole, with something to be taken out of it.

(b) 19 Ves. 363-4; and see his lordship's observations in King v. Denison, infra; and Andrew v. Andrew, 1 Coll. 689.

(c) 1 Atk. 191; so also in a voluntary settlement; but, said his lordship, it is different in a settlement for valuable consideration, ibid., and 19 Ves. 365; and see the note, 19 Ves. 361.

(d) Sydney v. Shelley, 19 Ves. 359; and see, as to Lord Hardwicke's dictum, 1 Cruise, Dig. 479. Lord Eldon considered that there was more scope given to the intention in a will than in a deed, 19 Ves. pp. 359, 366. "If it is by deed," said his lordship, "I must give it the legal effect, and cannot consider the intention in the same way as I could upon a will;" but in the case of a legal term created by voluntary deed upon trust, and no trust declared, if the other provisions of the deed plainly contemplated immediate enjoyment, it can hardly be doubted that Lord Hardwicke and Lord Eldon would have applied the same principle of construction to the deed.

(e) Et v. supra, p. 20, note (g); Vezey v.

will not be sufficient to confer on the donee the beneficial interest in the entirety of the property given; but each case must be decided upon its own circumstances (a). We are now to consider more particularly the cases where the title of the donee is out of the question; and the only question is as between the heir and the residuary devisee or legatee, or the next of kin, as regards the proceeds of realty; or between the next of kin and the residuary legatee, as regards personalty: the general doctrine applicable to such cases has been already adverted to.

A legacy which has lapsed may be so given, as that some other person shall take it in substitution for the legatee (b); and even charitable legacies which fail of effect may also be given by way of substitution, so as to prevent any resulting trust (c); but in accordance with the principle stated at the outset, it may be taken as clear that the person to whom property would devolve by the general law, can only be deprived of the right which the law confers upon him, by a clear expression of intention on the part of the person whom he represents or under whom he claims, that he shall be excluded and some one else shall take; the intention of the testator is not to be inferred from a particular expression, which taken alone might not furnish a ground for his exclusion, but it is to be collected from the force and meaning of the expressions used by the testator through the whole will (d). No doubt remains at the present day that a legacy to the heir-at-law or next of kin will not of itself preclude their claim to the surplus undisposed of (e), though it may be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in putting a construction on the instrument (f); nor will a bare intention to exclude, however expressed, and accompanied by words of anger or antipathy, or even negative words, be sufficient to exclude the heir in respect of the beneficial interest in real estate undisposed of, or the next of kin in respect of personalty, unless it be,

Jamson, 1 Sim. & S. 69, 71; and see the other authorities, Hill, pp. 83, 84, 85; the latest is Stubbs v. Sargon, 3 My. & Cr. 507, see p. 513-14.

(a) See int. al. Ellis v. Selby, 1 My. & Cr. 298.

(b) Cook v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen, p. 50; Countess of Bristol v. Hungerford, 2 Vern. 644, as corrected 3 P. W. 194 from Prec. Ch. 81, is an instance of a resulting trust to the heir being repelled by a devise to some one else, and of a trust for the next of kin being fixed upon the devisee (the executor); Rose v. Rose, 17 Ves. 352, is a case of special substitution.

(c) Price v. Hathaway, 6 Mad. 307, 313, is an instance.

(d) Sir J. Leach, Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. & K. 661; though the application of the principle to the facts in that case has not been approved. See the cases collected Lewin, 133, notes (d), (e), (g) and (h), et v. infra, in this chapter.

(e) Randall v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425; S. C. Prec. Ch. 162; Andrew v. Clark, 2 Ves. 162; Sir J. Strange, Lord North v. Purdon, ib. 495; Wheeler v. Sheer, Mos. 288; Kellett v. Kellett, 1 Ball & B. 543; there the testator had appointed and devised his executors to be residuary legatees, yet the heir, who had a legacy, took the surplus; and see other cases, 2 Fonbl. 129.

(f) See Rogers v. Rogers, 3 P. W. 193.

either specifically or as part of a fund, actually and effectually devised away to some one else, either directly or by the same kind of necessary implication as is in other cases admitted to constitute an actual gift (a).

Where charity and general legacies are given out of a mixed fund made up of the proceeds of realty directed to be sold and pure personal estate, the court will not marshal the assets in favour of the charity legacies; that is, it will not compel the general legatees to resort to the proceeds of the real estate and chattels real for the payment of their legacies, so as to leave the pure personalty applicable to the payment of the charity legacies (b). The mode of administration, where legacies are given to charity out of a mixed fund so composed, is to appropriate the fund as if no legal objection existed as to applying any part of it to the charity legacies, then holding so much of the charity legacies to fail as would in that way have to be paid out of the prohibited fund (c).

The several cases on the subject of the descent to the heir-at-law of real estate, directed by will to be sold for certain purposes which fail in the whole or in part, says Mr. Cox, in his valuable note (d), to Cruse v. Barley, which has often been referred to with approbation (e), seems to depend upon this question, whether the testator meant to give to the produce of the real estate the quality of personalty to all intents, or only so far as respected the particular purposes of the will; for unless the testator has sufficiently declared his intention not only that the realty shall be converted into personalty for the purposes of the will (f), but further, that the produce of the real estate shall be taken

(a) As to heir, see Cook v. Duckenfield, 2 Atk. 565, Lord Hardwicke: and see int. al. 2 Vern. 571-2; 1 Ball & B. 541; Pickering v. Lord Stamford, 3 Ves. 492-3; Wilson v. Major, 11 Ves. 205. As to next of kin, Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. Jun. 465: S. C. on appeal, ibid. 644; and see Mayor of Gloucester v. Wood, 3 Hare, 147, et v. infra. Whether a declaration that the next of kin should not take, was sufficient as between the executor and next of kin appears to have been undecided; see Langham v. Sanford, 2 Meriv. 6, 10. The question whether, where lands are devised by will dated before the late Will Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, came into operation, (v. sup. vol. i. p. 474,) to trustees in fee in trust for a person without any words of limitation as to his interest, the cestui que trust would take an equitable co-extensive with the legal estate devised to the trustees, has been lately definitively settled in favour of the cestui que trust. Moore v. Cleghorn, before Lord

Cottenham, xii. Jur. 591; before the M. R., ix. Jur. 958, (and see Knight v. Selby, 3 Man. & Gr. 92, there cited).

(b) Philanthropic Society v. Kemp, 4 Beav. 581; Sturge v. Dimsdale, 6 Beav. 462; Mann v. Burlington, 1 Keen, 235; Pritchard v. Arbouin, 3 Russ. 456; Giblett v. Hobson, 3 My. & K. 517.

(c) Lord Cottenham, Williams v. Kershaw, cited 1 Keen, 274; Hobson v. Blackburn, 1 Keen, 273. In Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. 201, it seems to have been considered that the purchase money of the estate, which the testator had contracted to sell during his life, was personal estate applicable to the payment of charity legacies, which perhaps is the only case in which a charity can take an interest in lands against the Mortmain Act.

(d) Published A.D. 1793.

(e) 3 P. W. 22; see 2 Russ. & M. 227.

(f) The subject of Conversion generally will be treated of in the next section.

as personalty whether such purposes take effect or not; so much of the real estate, or the produce thereof, as is not effectually disposed of by the will at the testator's death, whether from silence (a) or the inefficacy of the will itself, or from subsequent lapse, will result to the heir (b).

A testator may convert his real estate out and out in one sense, that is, for all the purposes of his will, so as to affect the character of the property, as between the real and personal representatives of persons taking under the will (c); but that will not prevent the heir from taking any part that is undisposed of, by way of resulting trust (d); and if he will pay off the charges he may prevent a sale and take the estate (e):—à fortiori, where real and personal estate is devised to trustees, and the testator has only said what is to be done with the personalty, there is a resulting trust as to the real estate for the heir-at-law (f). Though the testator may have directed that the funds should be united and blended, so as to form one fund for the purposes of his will, if those purposes fail, the separate character of each, as noticed more particularly below, survives, for the benefit of the next of kin and heir-at-law (g). Where no object exists for which a conversion of land into money was to be made, the court will not change or vary the property from that state in which it was found at the death (h), the next of kin cannot call for a conversion merely that they may take the proceeds as personal estate (i); the same principle applies to personal estate:—"where the purpose fails," said Lord Eldon, "the intention fails, and the court regards the testator as not having directed the conversion" (k).

The general law, as originally settled by the cases of Cruse v. Barley (l), and Ackroyd v. Smithson (m), and explained by the sub-

(a) Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. J. 687.

(b) Citing int. al. Randall v. Bookey, Prec. Ch. 162, and Ackroyd [Akeroid] v. Smithson, (1 Bro. 503,) stated from the Registrar's book; Digby v. Legard, (cited 1 Bro. 501, 3 P.W. 22,) also from the Registrar's book: Ogle v. Cook, (cited 1 Bro. 501,) as the last editors of Peere Williams have observed, appears from Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. J. 686, not to stand in contradiction to the other cases; and see Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow. 203, and the other cases cited in the last edition of P. W.

(c) See Tily v. Smith, 1 Col. 440, 441.

(d) V. int. al. Hopkinson v. Ellis, 2 R. Prop. & Conv. Ca. 431.

(e) Nicholls v. Crisp, cited 4 Ves. 65; this case is misreported, Ambl. 769.

(f) Dunnage v. White, 1 Jac. & W. 585.

(g) Lord Cottenham, Christian v. Foster, 2 Phillips, 166; S. C. 7 Beavan, 540; nom.

Bunnett v. Foster, see p. 543; et v. infra.

(h) Croft v. Slee, 4 Ves. 65.

(i) Chitty v. Parker, 2 Ves. J. 271; Collins v. Wakeman, ibid. 683; Maugham v. Mason, 1 Ves. & B. 410, 2 Russ. & M. 229.

(k) Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 435; Hill v. Cock, 1 Ves. & B. 174.

(l) 3 P. W. 20, supra.

(m) 1 Bro. 503. Before this case was decided it had been generally considered, even by Lord Thurlow himself, that if a general conversion were directed and it became necessary for any of the purposes of the will that it should be made, the heir was excluded: and down to the time of Cogan v. Stevens, after cited, the notion prevailed that the next of kin were excluded and that the heir would take, when money was directed to be laid out in land, and partial interests only in the land were given, v. infra.

sequent cases, is, that where a testator creates from real estate and personal estate a mixed and general fund, and directs the whole of that fund to be applied for certain stated purposes, as for the payment of debts and legacies, he does in effect direct that the real and personal estates which have been converted into that fund shall answer the stated purposes, and every of them pro rata, according to their respective values (a). If any of those purposes fail, then the part of the fund, which according to the intention of the testator would otherwise have been applicable to those purposes is undisposed of. As far as this part of the fund has been composed of real estate, the heir is to have the benefit of it, as so much real estate undisposed of, whether the estate be eventually sold or not (b); and as far as this part of the fund has been composed of personal estate, it is personal estate undisposed of for the benefit of the next of kin (c). But if there are any words of devise which will embrace the surplus, the person in whose favour it is made may of course claim the benefit of the bequest (d), as will be more particularly noticed hereafter.

Where money is devised to be laid out in land, the same principle applies as where land is directed to be converted into money; the conversion will operate only so far as the will disposes of the land into which it is to be converted; so that if the land is devised for a limited estate only, the produce of the fund, or the fund itself, if unconverted, beyond the interest so given, will result to the testator's next of kin, unless it be devised away to some other person (e): it had been con-

(a) So that where there is a conversion, and charity legacies are then given, they will be considered as charged on the personal estate and proceeds of the real estate proportionately, and will therefore fail as to that proportion which would have come out of the proceeds of the real estate; Flint v. Warren, 14 Sim. 554; et v. supra, p. 233, Philanthropic Society v. Kemp, 4 Beav. 581.

(b) Hill v. Cock, 1 Ves. & B. 173. The cases are collected, Lewin on Tr. 135, n. (b).

(c) Sir J. Leach, Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. 767. Before this case, which was also decided by Sir J. Leach, it had been contended that the debts and legacies should be thrown on the personal estate only till exhausted, that being the natural fund for their payment; this is the leading case for the contrary doctrine, which is stated in the text: where the real estate is a subsidiary fund, there of course it is different; see Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 1; and see Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 659; Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 413; Salt v. Chattaway, 3 Beav. 579; Smith v. Claxton, infra; and Christian v. Foster, supra; et v. infra, add. note, p. 250.

In the case of Christian v. Foster, supra, the Lord Chancellor confirmed the decree of the Master of the Rolls, throwing the costs upon the two funds proportionably, (the heir-at-law having been declared, as against the next of kin, to be entitled to so much of the fund as had arisen from real estate,) following Howse v. Chapman, 4 Ves. 542; Ackroyd v. Smithson, 1 Bro. 503; Attorney-General v. Winchelsea, 3 Bro. 373; and see on this point Seton on Decrees, 130; Attorney-General v. Hurst, 2 Cox, 364; and Eyre v. Marsden, 4 My. & Cr. 231; and 1 Tamlyn, Rep. 277; et v. sup. p. 183, n. (b).

(d) Griffith v. Pruett, 11 Simons, 202: as to what general words will carry real estate, as against the heir claiming by resulting trust or directly, see also, Day v. Daverson, 12 Simons, 200, and Kellett v. Kellett, 3 Dow. P. C. 248, there cited.

(e) Cogan v. Stephens, before Lord Cottenham, M. R. 1835: the judgment, one of Lord Cottenham's ablest, (and the argument of Mr. Pemberton was one of his ablest,) is reported fully by Mr. Lewin, Append. vii. p. 719; the case is shortly reported 1 Beav.

sidered before Lord Cottenham's time (a) that the contrary was settled by the cases of Fletcher v. Chapman (b) and Leslie v. Duke of Devonshire (c), and that the heir would take. Lord Cowper was of opinion that when money was directed to be invested in land, and no trusts of the lands were declared, the money should go to the heir as land, just as he would have given the produce of the sale of an estate directed to be sold out and out, where no trusts were declared, to the executors (d), but which, as will have been seen, is not now the law. However, Lord Cottenham observed, in Cogan v. Stephens, that if the testator were simply to direct an investment of a sum of money in land and declare no trust of it, the heir might with some plausibility contend that the testator could have had no other object than to create or add to his real estate, and that it might be enjoyed in that line by whom that description of property is by law inherited; so that perhaps this point is not absolutely concluded.

Where the interest of a mixed fund, consisting of the proceeds of real and personal estate, is directed to be accumulated for a space of time exceeding the limits allowed by the Thellusson Act (e), so that the accumulation for a portion of the time is unlawful under the provisions of that act only; the interest of the mixed fund, which accrues between the end of the 21 years and the period fixed for the termination of the accumulation, unless there be some person who would be entitled in possession to the rent or interest directed to be accumulated but for such direction, will result to the heir-at-law and next of kin, in the proportions in which the mixed fund is constituted of real and of personal estate: the statute does not accelerate the possession of those who are to take subject to the direction for accumulation, and the accumulation of the rents so as to form a money fund being directed only for the purposes of the will, the next of kin cannot claim as against the heir (f).

Where a mixed fund of real and personal estate is devised in trust, note, p. 483; Hereford v. Ravenhill, 1 Beav. 481; 5 Beav. 51, 55; the fund had not, in either case, been invested in land, but that it is presumed could make no difference.

(a) Powell on Devises, by Jarman, ii. p. 74. Mr. Jarman, on Wills, i. 554, is mistaken in supposing that Fletcher v. Chapman and Lord Redesdale's dictum were not cited; they were particularly observed upon by the counsel and the judge, see the Report, Lewin, Append. 726-7.

(b) 3 Bro. P. C. 1.

(c) 2 Bro. 187.

(d) Hayford v. Benlow, Amb. 582; S. C.

2 Vern. 718; but see Townley v. Bidwell, 6 Ves. 198; and Lord Cottenham's observations on Lord Cowper's doctrine, in Cogan v. Stephens, Lewin, 725; and Lord Redesdale's, McClelland v. Shaw, 2 Scho. & Lef. 545.

(e) V. supra, chap. v.

(f) Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 573-4-5. The Lord Chancellor, on appeal, only varied the decree by directing that the costs should be borne by the general estate, not by that part only which resulted to the heir-at-law and next of kin as had been directed by the Master of the Rolls, 4 My. & Cr. 236, 248.

and the trusts for any reason become inoperative in the whole or in part, and the testator has left neither next of kin nor heir, and there is no residuary gift, the trustees are trustees of the personal estate for the crown; but, as was observed in the former volume, the crown has no equity against the trustees, the legal owners, as regards the real estate, and they keep it themselves (a).

A question often arises in cases of devises of real estate in trust for sale, whether the title which would otherwise accrue to the heir-at-law by way of resulting trust is not intercepted by reason of the proceeds of the real estate having the character of personal estate so completely impressed upon them as that they shall pass under a residuary bequest as personal estate, or even, in the absence of any such bequest, that they shall vest in the executor or administrator in trust for the next of kin.

It is not to be expected that in the case of a devise of real estate upon trust for sale, the testator, who supposes, in most cases at least, that he has effectually disposed of his entire property and that his dispositions will be effectual, should make such a disposition of his real estate or its proceeds, as that the next of kin should be able to claim any portion of it that may lapse, or not be effectually disposed of, as against the heir (b): it is however of course possible that such a case should arise, and that without the subject of lapse being present to the mind of the testator; thus, if the testator should direct expressly, or by necessary implication, that the proceeds of the real estate should be considered as having been converted into personalty before (c) the time of his death; and à fortiori if he should direct that it should be treated as personal estate for every purpose, whether disposed of by his will or not, and whether as regards legatees or next of kin (d); such a devise would operate to give such proceeds to the next of kin: but as they can only claim such proceeds as actually given, that is as devisees, the direction would require to be very explicit (e): if, as before observed, there be no specific devise the heir-at-law can never

(a) Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. 201, and the other cases cited 14 Sim. 10, 18, as to the first point; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 177; Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. J. 185; Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Sim. 17, and the other cases there referred to, as to the second point; Henchman v. Attorney-General, on appeal, 3 My. & K. 485, et v. sup. vol. i. p. 177, 504.

(b) See 2 Russ. & M. 236.

(c) Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Bro. 589; 1 Ves. J. 44; 6 Hare, 148.

(d) Dict. Lord Langdale, Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 413. In the case itself the conversion was to have taken place 12 months after the testator's death; the heir-at-law had the benefit of so much of the residue of the mixed fund as had arisen from real estate.

(e) In Phillips v. Phillips, 1 M. & K. 649, Sir J. Leach considered that the proceeds of the realty had been so given; but v. infra, as to this case.

be defeated by the next of kin (a); the mere intention to exclude the heir cannot operate unless the proceeds be given to some one else (b). Of course personal estate could never have been so converted by anticipation as to exclude the claim of simple contract creditors (c).

The mere direction that the proceeds of the real estate "shall be deemed part of the personal estate," or "shall be a fund of personal and not of real estate," is not sufficient to give the surplus to the next of kin (d), nor will a reference to a mixed fund, composed of personal estate and the proceeds of real estate directed to be sold at a specified period after the testator's death, by the name of "personal estate," be sufficient to show that the entire fund is to be treated for all purposes as personal estate (e); and any purpose, however limited, as payment of costs, apparent upon the face of the will, with reference to which the conversion might have been directed, is conclusive against the next of kin (f). In a very late case the testatrix declared that her trustees should stand possessed of the proceeds to arise from the sale of real estate as a fund of personal and not real estate, adding, "for which purpose I declare that such proceeds or any part thereof shall not in any event lapse or result for the benefit of my heir-at-law;" the testatrix then directed the payment of the legacies after mentioned out of such proceeds; and as to the residue of her estate and effects, she directed her trustees to apply the same to such persons as she should by codicil appoint. She made no codicil. Sir James Wigram decided that the heir-at-law took the surplus: "the next of kin," he said, "could no more take it by way of devise than the heir; the testatrix had intended to give it away from both:—therefore, in the absence of any disposition, it must devolve according to the rule of law (g)."

Lord Thurlow seems to have been of opinion that the personal representatives could not get at that which was not personal estate at the death of the testator, excepting by express words (h); but this seems to

(a) Maugham v. Mason, 1 Ves. & B. 410; Collins v. Wakeman, 2 Ves. J. 683, approved by Sir J. Wigram, 6 Hare, 150; Chitty v. Parker, 2 Ves. p. 271; 2 Russ. & M. 229; Jessop v. Watson, 1 My. & K. 665; Cogan v. Stephens, before Sir C. Pepys, M. R., Lewin, Append. 724.

(b) See 6 Hare, 152, and supra.

(c) Beauclerk v. Mead, 2 Atk. 170.

(d) This is now established by the concurrent opinions of Lord Cottenham, Lord Langdale, and Sir J. Wigram, against Sir J. Leach's decision in Phillips v. Phillips, supra, see 6 Hare, 150-1; and of the Vice-Chancellor of England in Flint v. Warren, and of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in Gordon v. Atkinson, cited ibid. 151.

(e) Johnson v. Woods, 2 Beav. 414.

(f) Hill v. Cock, 1 Ves. & B. 173; 6 Hare, 148.

(g) Fitch v. Weber, xii. Jur. 646, 6 Hare, 153-4. However the Vice-Chancellor guarded against his being supposed to entertain an opinion that the next of kin can never take by implication, ibid.; see add. note, No. 2, p. 250.

(h) In Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Bro. 589.

be carrying the rule in favour of the heir-at-law rather too far : if there be what, upon the whole will, is to be construed as a gift by necessary implication, there seems to be no reason for not applying to such a case the ordinary rules of construction ; “ when the meaning of a will is ascertained by construction it is the same as if it were distinctly expressed ” (a).

The question, however, has most frequently arisen between the residuary legatee and the heir (b).

Lord Eldon, on a review of the authorities (c), (1803), in reference to an analogous point (d), said, “ The only cases in which the surplus of money, the produce of an estate converted by the will, has been held to pass, are those that have been cited at the bar and cases like them, where the instrument, executed in the presence of three witnesses, has itself treated the surplus as comprehended in the description under the words ‘ my personal estate ; ’ and the court has collected from the whole will, duly attested, an intention to give the property, which was surplus after payment of the debts and legacies arising from real estate—to give his real interest in that property and surplus, in terms primâ facie descriptive of personal property only, but which, upon the whole taken together, the court adjudged to be, according to the meaning of the testator, calculated and intended to pass such surplus ; the cases are not carried farther than that, and I am not at liberty,” said his lordship, “ to extend the doctrine without an authority for it ” (e).

The cases of Mallabar v. Mallabar and Durour v. Motteux (f), were

(a) Sir W. Grant, Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 321 ; Durour v. Motteux, infra ; and see 6 Hare, 147, 154, and 2 Beav. 413.

(b) A further question may arise between the legatees of a particular residue and the legatees of the general residue ; each case, of course, must depend upon its particular circumstances in this respect—see Master v. Layprimaudaye, 2 Coll. 445.

(c) Mallabar v. Mallabar, and Durour v. Motteux, after stated, were cited int. al.

(d) Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 495. The question was whether the surplus was so converted as to pass by an unattested codicil, (a question much discussed in Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. J., 204, but which the late Will Act has put an end to) ; the question is, said Lord Eldon, which it was in his lifetime and at his death, and by what instrument he could have disposed of it in his lifetime, 8 Ves. ubi sup.

(e) This dictum called forth some observations from Sir Wm. Grant, in Hooper v.

Goodwin, 18 Ves. 166 ; and see Sir S. Romilly’s argument, ibid. p. 163 : but the new Wills Act has rendered the point to which Sir Wm. Grant referred immaterial for the future.

(f) The case of Mallabar v. Mallabar, as Sir J. Leach observes, in Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 660, was not a case of lapsed legacy (where the original intention is defeated) ; the sole question was whether the testator intended to comprise the proceeds of the sale of his real estate in the residuary gift ; he had directed his debts and legacies, and amongst the rest a legacy of 500*l.* to his heir, to be paid out of the proceeds : on the inference to be derived from the general scope of the will fortified by the gift of the legacy to the heir (but which alone will not exclude the heir in a case of lapse, v. supra, p. 232), the court held that the surplus proceeds did pass to the residuary legatee (see 1 My. & K. 660, Phillips v. Phillips) ; Sir J. Leach, in the same case, comments upon the case of Durour v.

considered until lately the leading cases in questions as to the produce of real estate between the heir-at-law and the residuary legatees of the personal estate. In those cases, at least in Durour v. Motteux, the court was of opinion that upon the construction of the will the real estate was converted into personalty for all the purposes of the will, and therefore for the purposes of the residuary bequest; nor perhaps has Durour v. Motteux been impeached so far as it established this proposition, that although the testator does not in express terms state that the produce of his real estate shall for all purposes have the same quality as if it had been part of his personal estate at his death; yet such intention may be collected from the general tenour of the will; and in such case the heir will not be entitled to any portion of a lapsed or failing legacy as against a residuary legatee (a).

Motteux, as corrected from the Registrar's book, 1 Sim. & S. 292, n. It is to be observed that Sir J. Leach in referring to his own previous decision in Amphlett v. Parke, does not advert to his opinion upon the words of the residuary clause noticed above, which, but for Durour v. Motteux, would have led him to decide differently, see 1 My. & K. 662.

(a) See Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 659, dict. of Sir J. Leach. In the following cases the court held that there was a conversion out and out, so as to give the lapsed portions of the proceeds to the residuary legatee to the exclusion of the heir; Kennell v. Abbott, 4 Ves. 802, 809, which according to Lord Brougham's view was founded on Durour v. Motteux (see below in this note), and therefore not to be considered as a binding authority; Brown v. Bigg, 7 Ves. 279; Green v. Jackson, 5 Russ. 35, affirmed 2 Russ. & M. 238, by Lord Lyndhurst (after Lord Brougham's reversal of Amphlett v. Parke, infra), on the principle laid down by Lord Hardwicke in Durour v. Motteux, ib. 246, and probably Lord Brougham would, under the circumstances, have decided the same way. Amphlett v. Parke, before Sir J. Leach, 1 Sim. 279, and 4 Russ. 75, was reversed by Lord Brougham, 2 Russ. & M. 221, on the ground that as the decision of Sir J. Leach was founded, against his own opinion, on the cases of Mallabar v. Mallabar, Forrest. 78, and Durour v. Motteux, 1 Ves. 320, (this was before Phillips v. Phillips, supra, came before him,) and as those cases, when examined, did not necessarily govern the case of Amphlett v. Parke, it ought to stand upon the general doctrine. The question was, who was entitled to a lapsed legacy payable out of the proceeds of real estate directed to be converted: each of the learned judges in that case seems to have thought that if after directing the sale of her real estate, and that the moneys to arise by such sale should form part of her personal estate, the testatrix had then simply given the residue of her personal estate to the legatee, it must have been taken that she was devising the proceeds of the real estate under the name of personal estate, and that the lapsed legacy therefore would have passed; but she included in the residuary bequest nominatim the moneys to arise by the sale of the real estate, and one of the purposes for which such sale was directed having failed, the money directed to be raised to answer such purpose could not be considered as included in such residue, it was therefore on the face of the will, independent of authority, undisposed of. Lord Brougham did not consider himself fettered in his construction of this particular will by the preceding cases, he therefore put the construction upon the will which, but for those cases, Sir J. Leach would have put upon it, (see 1 Sim. p. 279). The difference between Lord Brougham and Sir J. Leach was, whether the point of construction was an open question; Lord Brougham thought that as regards that particular case it was, Sir J. Leach that it was not; an appeal to the House of Lords was presented, but it was compromised, (see Phillips v. Phillips, 1 My. & K. 653, 660). In Salt v. Chattaway, 3 Beav. 579, (1841,) Lord Langdale followed Durour v. Motteux, and Green v. Jackson, in favour of the residuary legatee. In Yates v. Compton, 2 P. W. 308, (rather a strong case,) A. devised an estate to his executors to sell, and with the proceeds and the surplus of his personal estate to purchase an annuity for the life of Jane Styles, which he disposed of partly to her, partly to her children, and gave the residue of his personal estate to Jane Styles, and appointed other persons executors. Jane Styles died three months after the decease of the testator. Lord King compelled the heir

Where even the real estate is converted for all the purposes of the will, a question may arise whether the residuary clause is such as will carry it. The word "residue," in its largest and general sense, comprehends whatever, in the events which happen, turns out to be undisposed of; which is founded upon this—not that it effects in specie what the testator intended, but because the testator is supposed to give it away from the residuary legatee only for the sake of the particular legatee; so that upon failure of the particular intent the court gives effect to the general intent (a), and therefore a lapsed legacy will pass under a general residuary gift (b). But if it appears that the word "residue" is used in a more restricted sense, in that restricted sense the court is bound to construe it (c).

If a portion of the residue itself lapses or becomes undisposed of, it will go to the heir-at-law or next of kin, according to the nature of the property, unless there be a gift of it, express or implied, to some one else (d).

According to the authorities, it is not sufficient, to give a title to the residuary legatees any more than to next of kin (e), if the testator merely directs that the moneys to be produced by the sale of his real estate shall be considered and taken as part of his personal estate; and if he directs the application of such mixed fund for particular purposes, the surplus of the mixed fund—if any such should arise by lapse or otherwise—must be given to the claimant or he cannot take. If the testator directs that out of the moneys to arise from such sale, and all at law to join in the sale; and though only a part of the proceeds were then required to answer the purposes of the will, he gave the whole that might remain and the intermediate rents to the representatives of Jane Styles, probably as residuary legatee: it was possible that, if the sale had taken place immediately on the testator's death, the whole might have been wanted to purchase the annuity. In Gibbs v. Rumsey, 2 Ves. & B. 294, 296, before Sir Wm. Grant, one of the questions was as to who was entitled to a legacy to a charity, given out of the proceeds of the real estate, which was void under the Statute of Mortmain; Sir William Grant there said it was clear that it would go to the heir, and not to the next of kin or the residuary legatee; but the report is not full on this point. In Wilson v. Major, 11 Ves. 205, the same very able judge decided, upon the context of the will, that the word "effects" in the residuary clause would not carry the portion of a converted fund which was undisposed of, distinguishing it, on the special circumstances, from Mallabar v. Mallabar, ib. 208.

(a) Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 25; Lord

Cottenham, in Easum v. Appleford, on appeal, 5 My. & Cr. 62; and see Henniker v. Henniker, before V. C. K. Bruce, xii. Jur. 618.

(b) Leake v. Robinson, 2 Meriv. 366; Ackers v. Phipps, 9 Bli. N. S. 430; and see Cunningham v. Murray, on appeal, xii. Jurist, 547. Under the 25th section of the statute 1 Vict. c. 26, a residuary gift of a mixed fund, consisting of the proceeds of real and personal estate, would pass a lapsed legacy given out of such mixed fund, and so no doubt would a residuary gift of personal estate, if the will for all the purposes of the will has converted the real estate into personal, though the words of the clause are "shall be included in the residuary devise, if any."

(c) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, Green v. Pertwee, 5 Hare, 252; and see Easum v. Appleford, 5 My. & Cr. 62.

(d) Easum v. Appleford, ubi sup.; Lloyd v. Lloyd, 4 Beavan, 231, and Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 570, both special cases; the earlier authorities are referred to in those cases.

(e) V. supra, p. 238.

other his personal estate, certain legacies shall be paid, and then the residue of the personal estate, and of the moneys arising from the real estate, are given to other persons, that does not necessarily imply that a lapsed legacy, payable out of the mixed fund, shall go to such persons—for the residue given is after the payment of the legacy (a): though under a residuary gift of personal estate generally, after such a direction for conversion and amalgamation, the mixed fund may pass, subject only to the charges which are or may in event become actually payable out of it (b).

If the intention of a testator is, to convert real estate into personal for all the purposes of the will, and some only of such purposes should fail, and in consequence of such failure part of the proceeds should result to the heir, as a general rule, what he so takes will vest in him as personal estate, and be so considered in a question between his real and personal representatives (c). Sir John Leach, in the case of Smith v. Claxton, has so clearly expounded the doctrine on this subject, as well as in regard to others points which have been adverted to in this section, that it may be useful to set forth the main portion of his judgment, though at the expense of some repetition.

“Where,” said that very able Judge, “the testator directs his real estate to be sold, and the produce to be applied to particular purposes, and those purposes partially fail, the heir-at-law is entitled to that part of the produce which in the events is thus undisposed of. The heir-at-law is entitled to it, because the real estate was land at the devisor’s death; and this part of the produce is an interest in that land not effectually devised, and which therefore descends to the heir. It is for this reason that the produce of an estate which the devisor directs to be sold, can never be strictly part of his general personal estate. If a devisor directs such produce to be paid to his executors, and applied as part of his personal estate, the executors take it as devisees. Every person taking an interest in the produce of land directed to be sold, is in truth a devisee and not a legatee.”

“A devisor may give to his devisee either land or the price of land at his pleasure, and the devisee must receive it in the quality in which it is given, and cannot intercept the purpose of the devisor (d). If it be the purpose of the testator to give land to the devisee, the land will descend to his heir; if it be the purpose of the devisor to give

(a) Amphlett v. Parke, supra, note (a), p. 240; see additional note, No. 2.

(b) Ibid. v. supra, p. 240, note.

(c) Wright v. Wright, 16 Vesey, 88;

Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Meriv. 296; Dixon v. Dawson, 2 Sim. & St. 340; supra, p. 230, n. (e); and see Smith v. Claxton, infra.

(d) See Ashby v. Palmer, 1 Meriv. 296.

the price of land to the devisee, it will, like other money, be part of his personal estate. Under every will, when the question is whether the devisee, or the heir failing the devisee, takes an interest in land as land or money, the true inquiry is whether the devisor has expressed a purpose that, in the events which have happened, the land shall be converted into money. Where a devisor directs his land to be sold, and the produce divided between A. and B., the obvious purpose of the testator is that there shall be a sale for the convenience of division, and A. and B. take their several interests as money, not land. So if A. dies in the lifetime of the devisor, and the heir stands in his place, the purpose of the devisor—that there shall be a sale for the convenience of division—still applies to the case, and the heir will take the share of A. as A. would have taken it—as money and not land : but in the case put, let it be supposed that A. and B. both die in the lifetime of the devisor, and the whole interest in the land descends to the heir, the question would then be—whether the devisor can be considered as having expressed any purpose of sale applicable to that event, so as to give the interest of the heir the quality of money ; the obvious purpose of the devisor being that there should be a sale for the convenience of division between his devisees, that purpose could have no application to a case in which the devise wholly failed, and the heir would therefore take the whole interest as land ” (a).

The resulting trust in favour of the heir or next of kin, may be repelled by parol, that is extrinsic, Evidence ; but as to some of the points we have been considering extrinsic evidence cannot be received. It has been observed in the former volume (b), that no evidence can be received as against a positive rule of construction of a written instrument, therefore no evidence can be received to show that a person was not intended to be a trustee, when by the terms of the instrument he is expressly or by construction of law conclusively made a trustee. As an illustration ; if upon the face of the instrument the property is vested in the donee, upon certain trusts or for certain purposes, which if they should be carried out would exhaust the whole of the property, (and the insertion of a residuary clause which becomes inoperative by the legatee dying in the testator's lifetime is an example of such a case (c),) the entire property in such case is

(a) Sir John Leach, Smith v. Claxton, 4 Mad. 492-3; and accordingly in that case one portion of the property was held to have descended to the heir, as land, and another portion as money ; and it went to his representatives respectively accordingly.

(b) Vol. i. p. 566-7.

(c) Bennet v. Batchelor, 3 Brown, p. 30 ; Nicholls v. Crisp, Ambl. 769. Lord Hardwicke seems to treat an imperfect residuaryimpressed with a trust (a); a surplus undisposed of can only arise by reason of the failure of some of the trusts; and so far from there being any presumption that the trustee should in that case take beneficially, the inference is plainly to the contrary (b), and by construction of law the donee is conclusively fixed with the character of trustee: no parol or extrinsic evidence can be admitted in such a case. So where the character of trustee was given expressly (c), or conclusively upon the construction (d), by the will to the person who was constituted executor, parol evidence of an intention that the executor should take the surplus beneficially was never admitted (e). In these cases evidence could not be admitted without contradicting or at least adding to the instrument, that is, giving a beneficial interest where upon the construction of law a fiduciary interest only was conferred by the instrument, which would have been contrary to one of the established rules of construction (f). But where, the instrument being silent on the subject, the law gives the beneficial undisposed of surplus to the donor or his representatives; as this is only upon a presumption that the donor did not intend to pass such beneficial interest to the donee, the general rule applies that such presumption may be rebutted by evidence of the intention of the maker (g) at the time the instrument was executed (h). Such evidence does not clause only in the light of a presumption, Bishop of Cloyne v. Younge, 2 Ves. 98, but see p. 99; and see Nourse v. Finch, 1 Ves. J. 344, and Mence v. Mence, 18 Ves. 351.

(a) See Dawson v. Clarke, before Lord Eldon, on appeal, 18 Ves. 255; Ellis v. Selby, 1 My. & Cr. 297.

(b) See 18 Ves. 254, as regards an executor.

(c) See Langham v. Sanford, on appeal, 2 Meriv. 17; Gladding v. Yapp, 5 Mad. 59; that is of the entire property, not of part only, Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 198, Sir W. Grant.

(d) Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. 635; Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 473; White v. Evans, 2 Ves. J. 22.

(e) Sir W. Grant, Walton v. Walton, 14 Ves. 322; but where the character of trustee arose only by reason of the circumstances which afforded a presumption of trust, as from a legacy being given to the executor generally, not expressly for his care and trouble (see 2 Ves. J. 22), or from expressions in the will importing, prima facie, that he was to be trustee, as that he should keep proper accounts (5 Mad. 60); or from one or more of several executors being made trustees so as to raise the presumption against all (10 Ves. 77); there evidence might be given by the executor against whom the presumption arose that he was intended to take beneficially; Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 474, 649; Langham v. Sanford, 17 Ves. 449; S. C. on appeal, 2 Meriv. 14, 17, 20; Gladding v. Yapp, 5 Mad. 59; Oldman v. Slater, 3 Sim. 95. The act of 1 Will. IV. c. 40, has, for the most part, superseded all such questions for the future, but the cases are material to illustrate the principle as to the admission of parol evidence. As Mr. Hill has observed, p. 87, note; the act does not apply to cases where there is an express disposition of personal property, upon trust or otherwise, to a person who is appointed executor.

(f) Supra, vol. i. p. 555. The case of Brown v. Selwyn, supra, vol. i. pp. 567, 570, (et v. Ambl. 127) was determined by the House of Lords on a similar principle; the evidence was offered to avoid what was considered to be upon the face of the will a direct gift to another.

(g) Vol. i. p. 565; Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 508; Cook v. Hutchinson, 1 Keen, 50, dict. of Lord Langdale, in the case of a deed: Mallabar v. Mallabar, Forrest. 80, and the cases cited ibid. in the note; and Docksey v. Docksey, 2 Eq. Abr. 506-7, upon a will; Hall v. Hill, 1 Conn. & L. 146.

(h) Duke of Rutland v. Duchess of Rutland, contradict the apparent meaning of the instrument—it only gives to it an operation which but for the legal presumption the instrument itself would effect—for it is assumed that upon the face of the instrument the whole of the donor's interest has passed to the donee; the beneficial interest is taken out of him again, to the extent of the unapplied surplus, by the effect of the presumption; the evidence is applied to prevent the property being taken from him by the sole operation of this presumption. Even in the case of a devise of land for a particular purpose, it has been considered that if the implication contended for, namely, that the devisee was a trustee only, be raised for the heir on the words of the will; yet the devisee will be let in to give parol evidence of the actual intention in his favour: à fortiori evidence may be let in as regards a bequest of personal estate (a). It may be observed that the exclusion of one executor from taking the residue beneficially by the character of trustee being fixed upon him, primâ facie excluded his co-executor; but as it was on presumption only as regards him, evidence of intention in his favour might be given (b): the stat. 1 Will. IV. c. 40, requires that the intention that the executor should take beneficially should appear upon the will itself; parol evidence cannot now be admitted (c).

Where the next of kin or the residuary legatees claim a legacy by reason of its having been given for an illicit purpose, and the terms of a bequest are such that it is doubtful whether the purposes to which the legacy is devoted are illegal or not, evidence may be given, on the part of those who claim the legacy, of the surrounding circumstances, so as to place the court in the situation of the testator, and thus to be enabled to form a judgment as to the meaning of his words, and if the evidence be satisfactory to support the bequest (d). Thus, in Giblett v. Hobson (e), evidence of extrinsic circumstances at the time when the testator made his will was received, with a view of showing that the testator meant by the expressions in his will that the legacy should be

2 P. W. 214; 2 Ves. 99. But as regards declarations of a testator, though they must have reference to his intention at the time of making his will, they need not be contemporaneous; Lord Alvanley, Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 473.

(a) North v. Crompton, cited in Lord Gainsborough v. Lady Gainsborough, 2 Vern. 252, cited also by Sir W. Grant, without disapprobation, 14 Ves. 323; Lake v. Lake, 1 Wils. 313; S. C. Ambl. 126; Clennell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 465, 644; Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193, and the references ibid. 197, note (a). The evidence of declarations of the donor in such cases, referred to in these cases, is observed upon infra. There is no instance of an issue being directed in such cases, at least as between the executor and next of kin, Sir W. Grant, 14 Ves. 323.

(b) Williams v. Jones, 10 Ves. 77; Pratt v. Sladden, 14 Ves. 193; Dawson v. Clark, 15 Ves. 416.

(c) Love v. Gaze, 8 Beav. 478.

(d) V. supra, vol. i. p. 557.

(e) 3 M. & K. 517. The evidence failed.

employed in building upon land already in mortmain, and not of having it laid out so as to bring any land into mortmain.

Evidence of Declarations of the Testator, so as to rebut a resulting trust, it has always been considered must be received with great caution: under some circumstances it would be proper to confine it to declarations made at the time; thus, if it should be proved that the testator declared at the time that he intended that the donee should take beneficially, or the converse; such a declaration ought not to be controverted, at least otherwise than as in connection with such contemporaneous declarations, by contrary declarations made prior or subsequent to the making of the instrument. But if no declaration took place on the subject at the making of the instrument, it would seem, that as regards a deed, as well as a will, subsequent declarations may, under proper caution, be admitted: there is indeed less reason for admitting subsequent declarations in the case of a will than in the case of a deed; as a testator may alter his will to give the property expressly, therefore he need make no declaration on the subject, but a deed he cannot; it is natural therefore that if the deed be not in accordance with his intentions he should so declare; besides any statement which a testator may make in regard to his will may be intended as a blind—as regards a deed no such purpose can be answered. As to declarations prior to the making of the instrument, they can have little or no effect, unless they are connected with the actual making of the instrument, or as forming part of the instructions upon which it was framed, and then they assume the character of evidence to correct the instrument on the ground of mistake (a).

If evidence is received on the one side, evidence may of course be produced to avoid its effect by the other (b).

There is an exception to the doctrine as to resulting trusts, as regards gifts for Charity, to which kind of gift the Court of Chancery, which has an original inherent jurisdiction to support devises made for charitable purposes, following the Roman law, applies different principles to those by which it is governed in gifts to individuals (c).

(a) The above observations are mainly founded on Mr. Fonblanque's note, vol. ii. 131, and the cases there referred to; Clenell v. Lewthwaite, 2 Ves. J. 473, sup. p. 245; Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 508, 517, 518, and Lord Eldon's observations, Langham v. Sanford, 17 Ves. 443, 2 Meriv. 23.

(b) Bishop of Cloyne v. Younge, 2 Ves. 95; Coote v. Boyd, 2 Bro. 521; Hall v. Hill, 1 Conn. & L. 149.

(c) Lord Eldon, Mills v. Farmer, 1 Meriv. 94-5, 101; 1 Conn. & Laws. 69; Swinburne, part i. § 13, pp. 52-3; Domat, vol. ii. pp. 161-2; 2 Fonbl. 218, sup. vol. i. p. 587.

If a fund which may be properly devoted to charity, that is, without infringing upon the mortmain acts, be given to trustees, and they are directed to apply a part to some charitable purposes which are pointed out, and the intention appears to be that the rest should be applied for other charitable purposes which are not declared at all; there will be no resulting trust, but the whole of the property will be considered as devoted in substance to charity; and the Court of Chancery will apply it for charitable purposes, according to a scheme to be approved by the court: and it will be the same if no particular purposes are declared as to any part of the fund, provided the plain intent is that the donees are to be trustees for charitable purposes (a). Where there is a general indefinite purpose, not fixing itself upon any objects, the disposition is by the King, as parens patriæ, by sign manual; but where the execution is to be by a trustee, with general or some objects pointed out, there the court will take the administration of the trust and direct a scheme; not however interfering with the exercise of any absolute discretion that may be given to the trustee (b). It is perfectly established, that though the object of a devise be to some future establishment of a use good in itself, the intermediate rents and profits are not capable of being taken by the heir standing in the place of his ancestor, but at law they are applicable to the use, if the use is a legal one (c).

In the construction of the wills of the founders of charities, it has been held that where the testator has by his will given the whole of the then value of the lands to charitable purposes therein expressed, denoting upon his will that he knows what is the whole value of the lands; as giving the yearly value is equivalent to giving the rents and profits, and giving the rents and profits is equivalent to giving the lands themselves, the consequence must be that the increase of the rents and profits will belong to those to whom he has given the yearly value alias the rents and profits alias the lands themselves (d);

(a) Mills v. Farmer, on appeal, 1 Meriv. 55, 94-5-6, 100; the case, in 2 Freeman, 330, Attorney-General v. Syderfins, and Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. 36, and the other cases there cited, which are collected and some of them stated by Mr. Hill on Trustees, p. 98; Pieschel v. Paris, 2 Sim. & St. 392; Simon v. Barber, 5 Russ. 113.

(b) Moggridge v. Thackwell, 7 Ves. 75, 84, 86; Paice v. Archbishop of Canterbury, 14 Ves. 372; see Roper on Legacies, ii. p. 1182, supra, vol. i. 588.

(c) Attorney-General v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 725-7.

(d) Lord Eldon, Attorney-General v. Mayor of Bristol, 2 Jac. & W. 317, 318; the rules there stated have been the guide to all judges who have followed him; and see Jack v. Burnett, 12 Cl. & Finel. 826. In that case Lord Eldon came to the conclusion that the fund was given to the corporate body, subject to the charge imposed, and not as mere trustees: in Attorney-General v. Cordwainer's Company, 3 My. & K. 535, Sir J. Leach, and in Attorney-General v. Smythies, 2 Russ. & M., 717, Lord Brougham came to the same conclusion; see 12 Cl. & F. 827, and 5 My. & Cr. 83: and see Attorney- so that no one in such case can claim any increase in the rents, either by way of resulting trust or by any other title as against the charity.

So if the testator shows clearly in any other way an intention to devote the whole income of a property to charitable purposes, then, although he does not in specifically directing the application of portions of it, exhaust the whole income, still the general intention that the whole shall be applied to charitable purposes will prevail; and on the other hand, although he does not make any such general declaration of devoting the whole to charity, but gives each and every portion of the whole income at the time to some charitable purposes, and by that means exhausts the whole (a); then if the income should afterwards increase, the increase will also be applicable to charitable purposes (b).

However in gifts for charity, as well as to individuals, the intent may plainly appear to be to give the property beneficially to the donee, subject only to a charge in favour of a charity; if so the construction will be according to the intent (c). Where the gift is to a Corporation, and such corporation appears to have been a material and prominent object with the author of the gift, and more especially where it is to a College or institution having duties to perform in which the public at large or a community are concerned, the intention may well be considered to be to endow such corporation or public body with the surplus if any, that is, to consider the property as given subject only to the charges (d).

It is a general rule, long established, whether well founded or not, that where the charity would lose if the fund decreased in value, it ought to gain in the event of an increase (e); and the converse of this proposition will hold as a general rule, namely, that where the corporation would lose in the event of a decrease it should have the benefit of any increase. "The result of the decisions (f)," says Lord Cottenham, "is, that generally speaking in searching for the intention of the donor, it will be assumed that he intended to confer a benefit upon the donee,

General v. Skinners' Company, 2 Russ. 435; followed in Attorney-General v. Christ's Hospital, 4 Beavan, 75, and Attorney-General v. Drapers' Company, ibid. 70. If certain payments to a definite amount are directed to be paid, and the surplus is actually given, expressly or by necessary implication, as surplus, or by the effect of the original gift of the property, the donees may of course take the increase or surplus beneficially, 2 Russ. 435, 438; Attorney-General v. Coopers' Company, 3 Beav. 35; and see 2 Beav. 511.

(a) Lord Eldon, Attorney-General v. Mayor of Bristol, 2 Jac. & W. 318.

(b) Lord Langdale, 3 Beavan, 34; Attorney-

General v. Coopers' Company. See on this subject Hill on Trustees, p. 98, et seq., and Roper on Legacies, 1182, et seq., where the principal cases are collected, and the distinctions pointed out.

(c) Supra, p. 226.

(d) Attorney-General v. Mayor of Bristol, 2 Jac. & W. 317, 332; and see the other cases, Lewin, p. 134, note (a), where this doctrine has been followed; et v. Attorney-General v. Fishmonger's Company, 2 Beav. 151; 5 My. & Cr. 11.

(e) Lord Eldon, ibid. 318, 319.

(f) In Jack v. Burnett, 12 Cl. & Fin. 828.

in the enjoyment of any increase of the fund—First, should such gift be to the donee, subject to certain payments to others; 2ndly, if the gift be upon condition of making certain payments, subject to a forfeiture upon non-performance of the condition; or, 3rdly, if the donee might be a loser by the insufficiency of the fund, which indeed is consequential upon the last (a). But in a late case (b), although it was admitted that the company would be bound to perform the trust to the full extent, though there might happen to be a diminution in the income of the trust property, (excepting in the case of loss by inevitable accident or by diminution of fines,) and there was a clause of forfeiture, which generally implies that the party must have something valuable to lose (c); yet, as the transaction originated in contract establishing a trust for the charity alone, and the company who were the trustees had obtained considerable collateral advantages,—the patronage of a vicarage and the nomination of boys to the school,—Lord Langdale decided that the whole of the rents, whether more or less, ought to be applied for the purposes of charity.

(a) In the case above referred to, Lord Cottenham considered that all the rules concurred, and though it was a Scotch case, as there were no decisions on the subject in the Scotch courts, the Lord Chancellor applied the above rule to the case before the House of Lords, pp. 826, 830; v. supra, p. 15.

(b) Attorney-General v. The Merchant

Venturers' Company, 5 Beav. 338: see pp. 356 to 358.

(c) Attorney-General v. Cordwainers' Company, 3 My. & K. 534; Attorney-General v. Coopers' Company, 3 Beav. 29. My friend, Mr. Blunt, has been kind enough to furnish me with several of these authorities.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, I.—Supra, p. 224.

Where there is a gift, and then a direction as to the manner in which the legacy is to be invested and applied for the benefit of the legatee; not a diminution or qualification of the original gift, but merely a direction as to the mode in which it is to be dealt with and enjoyed in a certain event; this will not destroy or impair the gift; Whittel v. Dudin, 2 J. & W. 279; Mayer v. Townsend, 3 Beav. 443; Campbell v. Brownrigg, on appeal, 1 Phillips, 304; Hulme v. Hulme, 9 Sim. 644: but where the subsequent directions amount to a diminution of the original gift (the clause, 2 Phillips, 107, affords an instance), whatever interest is not exhausted by the gift as so diminished remains the property of the testator, and will go to his next of kin or residuary legatees; Gompertz v. Gompertz, on appeal, 2 Phillips, 109. All the cases on this subject, including, besides the above, Harvey v. M'Laughlin, 1 Price, 264; Arnold v. Congreve, 1 R. & M. 209; Carver v. Bowles, 2 R. & M. 301; Kampf v. Jones, 2 Keen, 756; Green v. Harvey, 1 Hare, 428; Winkworth v. Winkworth, 8 Beav. 576; Eaton v. Barker, 2 Coll. 124; and Billing v. Billing, 5 Sim. 232; were examined by Lord Langdale, in the late case of Scawin v. Watson, 1 Beavan, 202. Lord Langdale sums up the result thus:—"In this case, as in all others of the same description, the question is whether, having regard to the general purport and effect of the will, the words import an absolute gift modified only by certain restrictions, so that the first absolute gift may have its full effect in every event to which the restrictions are inapplicable; or whether the effect is to give a restricted or limited interest only, so as not to be affected or enlarged by any failure of the subsequent limitation: that is the question." Lord Langdale held, in the principal case, that it was not an absolute gift, but restricted and limited: the decision of Lord Langdale was affirmed by Lord Cottenham, ib. 203.

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE, II.—Supra, pp. 235, 238, 242.

A direction by a testator that his debts shall be paid out of his personal estate may be controlled by the context, so as to make a mixed fund created by the same will liable for the debts, where the testator has, in a subsequent part of his will, referred to such mixed fund as his common personal estate; Hopkinson v. Ellis, 10 Beav. 174, 176. The Master of the Rolls said he should be willing to hear any case which there might be on this point, if he had any doubt upon it, which he had not; the Counsel (Mr. Kindersley) did not desire that the judgment should be reserved. But it was held that such a direction did not operate as a conversion out and out of the real into personal estate, so as to prevent the heir-at-law from taking so much of the proceeds of the real estate as would have been applied for the payment of certain charity legacies, which failed under the operation of the Mortmain Act, as it is called; the conversion was only for the purposes of the will, ibid. 175. The charity legacies were ordered to be paid pro rata, adopting the form of decree in the Attorney-General v. Winchelsea, Seton on Decrees, 130, and 3 Bro. 373. "So far as the residue consists of pure personalty," added his lordship, "the executors are to apply it to charitable purposes, according to their discretion; and they are at liberty, if they think fit, to apply it to making good the charity legacies given by the testator to the extent to which they have failed by the application of the Mortmain Act: that, I think, is the best way to do it."

SECT. IV.—Trust Estates and Interests arising from the Maxim that “What ought to be done is considered as done.”—Conversion of Real Estate into Personal, and of Personal Estate into Real, and some Incidental Doctrines.

GENERAL RULE—What ought to be done considered as done.

Kettleby v. Atwood.

Consequence of this Maxim—the Person in whom the Property is vested, is Trustee for the Purposes to which it is devoted.

Land turned into Money, Money into Land.

The Conversion must be definitely fixed.

Option given.

Direction to sell with all convenient Speed.

Event may determine whether the Rule is to be applied.

Where Intent was to rely on Personal Covenant.

Principle carried out in all its Consequences unless controlled.

Not in favour of mere Stranger, as the Crown, or Lord, by way of Escheat.

Burgess v. Wheate, before Lord Northington, Lord Mansfield, and Sir Thomas Clarke.

WHO ARE ENTITLED TO CARRY OUT THE PRINCIPLE.

I.—Where the Question arises upon a Devise by Will.

Rights of Heir, and of Next of Kin and Personal Representatives.

II.—Where the Question arises upon Contract.

1st. Where the Contract affects some existing Property, Real or Personal, which belongs to one of the Parties.

Heir entitled where Real Qualities are impressed on the Fund.

Personal Representative or Next of Kin.

Wheldale v. Partridge.

Lingen v. Sowray.

Chaplin v. Horner.

Stead v. Newdigate.

Qualification of the Rule as to Conversion.

Where the same Person is Obligor and Obligee.

1. Where the Money is at Home.

2. Where the Property is outstanding.

Election.

2nd. Where the Contract does not affect any specific Property.

Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle.

3rd. As to Stipulations in favour of Strangers to the Contract, as Brothers or other Relatives—When and as against whom such Stipulations can be enforced.

If Two Persons enter into an Agreement for the Benefit of a Third Person each may enforce it.

Davenport v. Bishop.

The Stranger stands in a Different Situation.

Doctrine of Common Law as to Deeds.

Deed made between Parties.

Stranger cannot enforce it.

Either may release the other.

Doctrine of Common Law as regards Agreements on which Equitable Action of Assumpsit may be brought.

Strangers have in some Cases been permitted to enforce such Agreements, when it was part of the Consideration that the Stranger being a Relation, Child for instance, should have a Benefit.

Indeed a Child appears not to have been considered in such Case as a Stranger.

Dutton v. Poole.

Physician's Case.

Where Stranger has performed the meritorious Act.

Sprat v. Agar.

Where Favour to the Third Person does not appear to have been the Motive, he is considered as a mere Stranger.

Crow v. Rogers.

Bourne v. Mann.

Buller, Justice's, Opinion.

Marchington v. Vernon.

Lord Mansfield's.

Lord Eldon's.

Ex parte Williams.

Ex parte Williams, distinguishable from the Cases cited.

Also Phillips v. Bateman, 16 East.

Where Promise made to the Stranger, he may sue.

Old Rule of the Court of Chancery followed the Law.

And the General Law is the same at this Day.

Colyear v. Lord Mulgrave.

Gibbs v. Glammis.

So that each may abandon the Contract.

But if the Condition of Life of the Stranger has been altered by reason of the Promise, he may enforce it.

Hill v. Gomme.

A Distinction has been taken where a Person who has contributed any Valuable Consideration has stipulated for some Benefit for a near Relation, and the Arrangement was a reasonable one.

Edwards v. Countess of Warwick.

Osgood v. Strode.

Vernon v. Vernon.

Stephens v. Freeman.

But Lord Hardwicke would not carry such a Contract into Execution, if the Heir would be Disinherited.

Goring v. Nash.

It is assumed in all these Cases that the Parties have not released one another, and that the Person claiming seeks to stand in the Place of the Covenantee or Party who exacted the Stipulation.

Lord Northington's Opinion that the Covenant might be enforced against the Heir of the Covenantor—on the ground of Intention.

Hale v. Lambe.

Modern Doctrine that a Volunteer cannot compel the Performance of a Covenant in his favour.

Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & Phillips, overruling Ellis v. Nimmo.

Does not controvert the Decisions establishing that a Third Person may enforce a Stipulation exacted in his favour.

Sutton v. Chetwynd, a Case of a mere Stranger for whom no one could have been interested to exact the Covenant.

Where the Money has been deposited, or the Estate conveyed to Trustees, it is a stronger Case for the Collateral.

Instances where a Third Person has been permitted to treat the Party exacting a Stipulation as his Trustee.

Gregory v. Williams.

Hook v. Kinnear.

Where there are a Series of Limitations, some of which are in favour of Strangers, if any Party seeks to have the Agreement carried into effect it must be performed in toto.

Davenport v. Bishop.

III.—Of the Rights of Purchasers, for Valuable Consideration, without Notice, as against Voluntary Conveyances and Limitations, under the operation of the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, and of the Rights of Creditors under the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, in connection with this subject.

ANOTHER and a very important kind of trust which arises by operation of law, and which very frequently arises upon marriage articles and settlements, is that which results from the maxim that "What ought to be done is to be considered as done," which maxim has indeed been already adverted to in some of its bearings. This maxim, where any specific property is the subject of its application, gives rise to equitable interests in such property analogous to those which arise upon express trusts; the interests of the parties in the property is secured to them by the court enforcing this rule, as the execution of a trust, against all persons having any legal estate or interest which might interfere with the appropriation of the property to the purposes to which, by the operation of this maxim, such property is applicable (a).

It may be taken then as a general rule that what ought to be done is to be considered as done (a), and it is the deed or instrument that must determine the question in whatever state the property itself may be found, unless it gets into the hands of a party who would have it either way (b), and, generally speaking, the conversion is to be allowed in all its consequences (c); but these rules, with their qualifications, will be more particularly adverted to hereafter.

(a) See Matson v. Swift, 8 Beavan, 375; and Legard v. Hodges, infra.

This rule applies wherever there is an obligation, whether that obligation arises under a devise imposing the obligation, or whether it arises from a contract entered into by the party; but in the latter case, it need hardly be added, a contract according to the rules of law must exist (d). A covenant to settle or charge or dispose of or affect property hereafter to be acquired, is a good and available covenant, and it will operate in equity upon the property so afterwards acquired (e). If there be an option in the party as to how the contract is to be completed, the court will not permit him under the pretence of exercising his option to evade the performance of his contract (f), nor can a person by payment of the penalty imposed on a breach of his contract evade its performance (g), and although the condition of a bond to do an act may be saved, so that no recovery could be had at law, yet the contract, if complete, will be decreed in the Court of Chancery (h). There is some difference in the application

(a) Kettleby v. Atwood, 1 Vern. 471, stated infra; Lechmere v. Lechmere, Forrest. 90; Guidot v. Guidot, 3 Atk. 256; Mr. Sanders has collected and arranged the cases in his note to this case: Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. p. 446; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 186; Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Vesey, 227; Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 138; Kirkman v. Miles, 13 Ves. 338; Buckmaster v. Harrop, 13 Ves. 472. Lord Thurlow in Pulteney v. Lord Darlington, 1 Bro. 236, calls this "a cant expression;" and he refers it to the case of Kettleby v. Atwood above cited, adding, "either that idea should have been fully carried out or abandoned." In the case before Lord Thurlow, as will be noticed hereafter, one of the exceptions to the rule was established, there are others which will be presently adverted to.

(b) Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 136-9, a case of a settlement; Kirkman v. Mills, 13 Ves. 338, case of a will.

(c) Lord Hardwicke, Earl of Buckingham v. Drury, in the House of Lords, 2 Eden, 65; S. C. 3 Bro. P. C. 492; see 1 Russ. & M. 371. Lord Hardwicke added, especially if the condition of the parties is changed. The case itself related to an equitable jointure settled on an infant, which was established as a good bar to her dower.

(d) Buckmaster v. Harrop, 13 Ves. 472; a case arising on a contract for sale.

(e) Metcalf v. Abp. of York, 1 My. & Cr. 547, 556; Lyde v. Mynn, 1 My. & K. 683; Wellesley v. Wellesley, 4 My. & Cr. 561; Lewis v. Maddocks, 17 Ves. 48; Tooke v. Hastings, 2 Vern. 97; see Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Keen, 423, 561, as to what property of the wife will be subject to such a covenant on the part of the husband.

(f) Wellesley v. Wellesley, ubi infra; Deacon v. Smith, 3 Atk. 323; and see Wood v. Percy, 5 Vin. Ab. 547, pl. 36.

(g) A person intending to devise his copyhold estate to his sister's son, and finding a surrender not then practicable, prevailed on his sister, who was his heir, to give a bond in a penalty to surrender at her son's request, on a payment of 200*l.* It was held that the sister was a trustee for her son, and a surrender by her was decreed on payment of the 200*l.*; Parks v. Wilson, 10 Mod. 515; Howard v. Hopkins, 2 Atk. 371.

(h) As where the condition of a bond was to settle land situate within a certain manor by a given day, and the obligor died before the day, Holtham v. Ryland, Nels. Chan. Rep. 205; and an agreement may, as will be more fully noticed under the head of "Specific Performance," be decreed to be specifically of the maxim above alluded to in the case of an obligation imposed by a will and one by contract, as will presently be seen; where the obligation arises on contract, the party seeking to enforce it must show that there was a consideration, of which he may take advantage; and that the parties by the terms of the contract have given to him the right which he seeks to enforce (a): as regards devisees and legatees, though they are all volunteers, yet, as has been frequently observed, they have no occasion to shew more than that such was the will of their testator (b).

The doctrine above alluded to was first completely established by Lord C. Jefferys, in the case of Kettleby v. Atwood. In that case, which is still a leading case, it was agreed, by marriage articles, that the wife's portion, 1500*l.*, and 500*l.* to be added by the husband, should be deposited in the hands of trustees till a convenient purchase could be found for investing it in land; the land, when purchased, was to be settled to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the first and other sons of their two bodies in tail, remainder to their daughters in tail, with the ultimate remainder to the right heirs of the husband, who, as regards the 1500*l.*, it will be observed, could only claim under the contract. There was this special circumstance, that in the articles there was a proviso, that in case the husband should die without issue the wife might make her election whether she would have the trust property as land or money, and she had six months to make her election. The husband died before any purchase was made, leaving the wife enceinte of a daughter born soon after the husband's death, but who lived but a month; the wife was administratrix to her husband and to her child. The plaintiff, who was the brother and heir-at-law of the husband, filed the bill to have the 1500*l.* and 500*l.* settled according to the articles. On the original hearing, Lord Keeper North said that if a bill had been brought in the lifetime of the infant to have the money laid out he would have decreed it, it being safer for the infant to have land than money, but he saw no equity for the heir against the administratrix; he therefore thought that the property must be left as it was, and accordingly dismissed the bill; but Lord Chancellor Jefferys reversed performed, though relating to personal estate as stock in the funds, Gardner v. Pullen, 2 Vern. 394; Colt v. Netherville, 2 P. W. 304, q. v.; or to purchase an annuity, Annandale v. Harris, 2 P. W. 433, affir. in Dom. Proc. 3 Bro. P. C. 445.

(a) As in the case of Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 594, stated infra; that was the case of a stranger to the contract (a brother); but, as will be seen in most of the cases, the heir of one of the contracting parties has usually been the claimant.

(b) See Lechmere v. Lechmere, Forrest. 90, and 2 Fonbl. book ii. c. viii. § 2 and 3, and the cases in the notes.

this decision and decreed for the heir, following the case of Lawrence v. Beverley (a), and the case of Whittek v. Jermin, previously decided by himself, on the ground that the money was bound by the articles. It was insisted that under the proviso, (which was material as shewing that it was intended that in a certain event which had not happened the money should not be absolutely bound,) the wife had her election to take it as money or land, but as the husband had not died without issue, it was considered that the right of election on her part did not arise (b).

It is a consequence of this maxim that as a general rule the person in whom the property is or becomes vested, with the exception of a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, becomes a trustee of that property for the purpose to which it is devoted; I take this maxim, said Lord Thurlow, to be universal, that wherever persons agree concerning any particular subject, in a court of equity, as against the party himself and any claiming under him voluntarily or with notice, it raises a trust (c). The same principle applies to a devise; and as regards a contract, for the present purpose, it makes no difference whether the property be transferred to trustees, in order to their completing the purpose agreed upon, or covenanted to be transferred to them with that object: a covenant to convey is in equity equivalent to a conveyance (d).

Generally speaking, therefore, money directed to be employed in the purchase of land and land directed to be sold and turned into money, are to be considered, "by the transmutation of a court of equity," to use Lord Hardwicke's expression (e), as that species of property into which they are directed to be converted (f), and this in whatever manner the direction is given, whether by will, or by way of contract, marriage articles, settlement, or otherwise; and whether the money is actually deposited or only covenanted to be paid; whether the land is actually conveyed or only agreed to be conveyed (g): the owner of the fund, or the contracting parties, may make land money or money land (h).

(a) 2 Keb. 841.

(b) Kettleby v. Atwood, 1 Vern. 298; on rehearing, ibid. 471.

(c) Legard v. Hodges, 1 Ves. J. 478; 4 Bro. 421, on rehearing.

(d) Sir W. Grant, Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Meriv. 530.

(e) Guidot v. Guidot, 3 Atk. 256.

(f) Doughty v. Bull, 2 P. W. 323; Best v. Stamford, 1 Salk. 154; Attorney-Gen. v. Johnston, Ambl. 580; Williams v. Coade, 10 Ves. 500; Gibbs v. Ougier, 12 Ves. 415; Berry v. Usher, 11 Ves. 87; Robinson v. Taylor, 2 Bro. 589; S. C. 1 Ves. J. 44.

(g) See Mr. Hargrave's argument in Pulteney v. Darlington, 1 Bro. pp. 226-7; Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Meriv. 530-1; and see Oldham v. Hughes, 2 Atk. 452; Edwards v. Warwick, and Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, ubi infra; and Ward v. Arch, x. Jur. 978.

(h) Dict. Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Bro. 499; cited by Lord Alvanley, Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 396, though his decision was against the application of the principle in that particular case; Dict. of Lord Redesdale, Tregonwell v. Sydenham, 3 Dow. 207; but this dictum, as Lord Cottenham observed in

This principle has been applied even in favour of a wife living in adultery, suing to have the specific performance of a covenant on the part of the husband to secure to her a jointure (a).

It is a necessary circumstance, in order to bring the rule into operation, that where it is by contract, the deed or other instrument, and where it is by will, the will, should decisively and definitively fix upon the money the quality of real estate, and upon the land the quality of personal estate (b): where the directions for the conversion are not explicit the court will not interfere (c).

When, therefore, money is directed to be laid out by trustees, and an option is given to them to purchase freeholds or leaseholds for long terms of years, with the moneys to be invested, and no investment has been made, the money will not be considered to all intents as real estate (d); and to this extent therefore, contrary to the general rule, the interests of the parties concerned, or of their representatives, as between themselves, may be affected by the conduct of the trustees in acting or declining to act in making the conversion. Where the words directing the investment in land are followed by the words "or some other security," these words may, on the context, be construed to refer to an interim investment in money; but that construction is not lightly to be resorted to (e). If upon the whole context the conversion from money into land, or land into money, is clearly made to depend on a Request to be made by the parties interested, or any of them, and no request is made, the property will retain its actual character—will remain as it is (f): but a simple direction to convert after request does not of itself imply that it is not to be done without request; where the limitations are strictly applicable to real estate, that direction may be inserted to put the trustees in default if after the request the conversion is not effected (g). If in the case of a

Cogan v. Stevens, (1835,) Lewin, Append. vii. cannot be sustained without some qualification.

(a) Sydney v. Sydney, 3 P. W. 269; approved Seagrave v. Seagrave, 13 Ves. 443; Buchanan v. Buchanan, 1 Ball & B. 206; and see the cases cited in the note, Haworth v. Bostock, 4 Y. & Coll. 6.

(b) Lord Rosslyn, Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. J. 170; Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 396-7; S. C. affirmed by Lord Eldon on Appeal, 8 Ves. 234; and see Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 521, 530; and Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161.

(c) Curling v. May, cited in Guidot v. Guidot, 3 Atk. 363; Cowley v. Hartstonge, stated infra, 1 Dow, 378-80; et v. 12 Cl. & Fin. 145, 146.

(d) Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. J. 170; Swann v. Fonnereau, 3 Ves. 50; Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 388; 8 Ves. 227; Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102.

(e) See Earlom v. Saunders, 1 Ambl. 241; (12 Cl. & Fin. 141-2, 145, 149;) and Cookson v. Reay, and Hereford v. Ravenhill, ubi inf. The use of the words "remainder" and "heirs" is by no means conclusive that the conversion is to be in all events into land, Lord Campb. 12 Cl. & Fin. 149.

(f) See Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Meriv. 530; and the case in the next note.

(g) See Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 133, direction for conversion into real estate the limitations are such as are exclusively applicable to real estate and cannot be effected if the fund be left as money or be invested in leaseholds, any option that may be given will be put aside in order to effect the plain and paramount intention (a).

Lord Eldon observed, that notwithstanding the general doctrine there may be, in a particular case, enough appearing upon the instrument to show that the parties did not mean that the money should be impressed with real qualities and clothed with real uses immediately upon the execution; but either that, or that it should remain personality in an event to which they looked in case the purchase was not actually made; for instance, when the money is to be laid out in land in some particular situation. The inference in such case is less strong where it is to be laid out in a County than in a Parish: but suppose it was to be laid out in a parish as soon as conveniently should be, and the parties showed upon the face of the instrument that they adverted to the difficulty of procuring lands in that parish for a long period, and dealt with the property as money until that difficulty should be removed, and that in the interval they looked to some events in which the principal (b) was to be paid over; the intention must be taken to be that the instrument should not immediately upon the execution impress the property with real qualities, and clothe it with real uses (c).

Where there is a Power to lay out money in real estate under some particular circumstances, but the original intention was, that it should be considered as money if it were not actually invested in land, it shall not be considered as land and go to the heir, unless it be actually invested (d). If in such cases, or in any case where the conversion into realty is to be by the act of the trustee and at his discretion, and the trustee has made no election, the court will act upon the fund in the state in which it finds it, and will not direct it to be laid out unless it can see a clear, manifest, definitive intention for that purpose (e):

135; the direction was, that after request of the husband and wife, the money should be laid out in land, with power for the husband to jointure.

(a) See Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 133, 135, 136-7; Earlom v. Saunders and Cowley v. Hartstonge, ubi supra; Cookson v. Reay, 5 Beav. 30; Hereford v. Ravenhill, ibid. 51.

(b) Not the interest merely, as to which see 8 Ves. 238-9.

(c) Lord Eldon, Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 236. Lord Eldon referred to a note of his own of such a case; and see ibid. 239-40.

(d) Stamper v. Millar, 3 Atk. 212. Lord Hardwicke said "shall or may," though imperative in an act of parliament, are not so in cases of this description; here they only give an option, ibid.; the heir-at-law, said his lordship in that case, is not at all in the consideration of the settlement; a circumstance which is always to be attended to.

(e) Lord Alvanley, Swann v. Fonnereau, 3 Ves. 50; the trust was to lay out the trust fund on freehold lands, or leasehold estates for lives. Lord Alvanley held that the conversion into reality was not imperative; he combut as regards money, if it can be collected from the deed or will that the ultimate object of the parties was conversion, and that its being in the shape in which it is found is only temporary, then it will be considered as real estate (a).

If a testator clearly manifests his intention on the face of the will that his trustees shall have an absolute Discretion as to the conversion of money into land, or the converse, the court, in conformity with the rule before alluded to (b), will not control the exercise of that discretion, if the words are so express and clear that the design to give an absolute uncontrolled discretion to the trustees cannot be misunderstood; but where the trustees do not act, the court is not precluded from looking at the object the testator had in view, in order to ascertain with more exactness the meaning of his expressions if otherwise at all doubtful; where it is evident that the testator intended that the money should sometime or other be invested in land, but giving the trustees a discretion, this discretion must be understood in reference to the testator's main intention (c). In the case of Cowley v. Hartstonge (d), which called forth the above remarks from Lord Eldon, the testator had given his real and personal estate, and subjected it to various limitations, giving a discretion to his trustees as to laying out the personal estate, but his evident meaning was that the real and personal estates should go to the same persons; the limitations were not at all applicable to personal estate (e), the trustees had not exercised their discretion. Lord Eldon put the case of the nephew, one of the devisees, being in a condition to say, that having had a son born, though he had died the hour after his birth, as the trustees had not before exercised their discretion, the money should be considered as the property of the son, who would necessarily have died intestate: Lord Eldon held that the trustees might, in such case, in the exercise of their discretion, determine that the money should be invested in land, and should be considered as such, in order that it might go according to the limitations of the will; and the very occurrence of such a circumstance as that above referred to might, it was said, be a good reason for their interposition; and the House of Lords, on Lord Eldon's advice in this case, confirming the decree of the Lord Chanpared it to the case where trustees have an option to lay out money in a way that would be void by the Mortmain Act, and in a manner that would not be void, ibid. p. 50; Curtis v. Hutton, 14 Ves. 537; Davies v. Goodhew, 6 Sim. 585; Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & Coll. 708.

(a) Swann v. Fonnereau, 3 Ves. 49.

(b) Supra, pp. 85-6-7; and see Polley v. Seymour, 2 Y. & Coll. 721.

(c) Lord Eldon, Cowley v. Hartstonge, 1 Dow, 379-80.

(d) Dom. Proc. 1 Dow, 378.

(e) Ibid. p. 381.

cellor of Ireland, held that an ex post facto exercise of an absolute discretion ought to be supported, it appearing to be in accordance with the general scheme of the will that such a discretion should be exercised: in the case itself, it was held that the discretion had devolved on the court (a). But it is to be observed that the court will never admit trustees to have such an election as to change the property, unless it be expressly given to them (b). Where no option is given, whether the trustees act or neglect or refuse to act, according to the general rule in such cases, the rights of the parties will not be affected. "If the trustees," said Lord Macclesfield, "by delaying the purchase, might alter the right, and give it to the executors, by leaving the fund as money; this would be to make it the will of the trustee and not the will of the testator, which would be very unreasonable and inconvenient (c), and the trustees would become judges whether and how men should be bound by their covenants" (d). A direction to sell with all convenient speed after a particular event will not keep in suspense the character in which the property is to be taken; such a direction is prima facie a direction for an immediate sale after the event (e).

It is not absolutely necessary that the conversion of personalty into realty be effected within the Time specified, as the Court of Chancery will dispense with that circumstance where a conversion appears to be the ultimate object (f): the same principle will apply to a direction for the conversion of land into money. And where the intention in marriage articles is plain, that a conversion should be made, but Consents of the parties interested to the actual purchase cannot be obtained as required by the instrument, by reason of their deaths or for some other cause, if any convenient purchase could have been obtained, the court will take upon itself to judge whether such consents ought to have been given, and the conversion being the paramount object, it will be considered as made; else the parties to consent would have the option of determining whether the property should be real or personal, which, unless it be clearly given to them, will not be permitted (g). An equitable conversion of land into money or of (a) The case was decided on its own peculiar circumstances and the language of the testator in his will, 1 Dow, 379.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Earlom v. Saunders, 1 Amb. 241; Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 341.

(c) Lord Macclesfield, Scudamore v. Scudamore, Pr. Ch. 543 (1720), cited and approved 1 Bro. 501.

(d) Lord Talbot, Lechmere v. Carlisle, 2 Forrest. 83.

(e) Sir J. Leach, Fitzgerald v. Jervoise, 5

Mad. 29; but see, as regards tenant for life, Sparling v. Parkes, x. Jur. 448, M.R.

(f) Kentish v. Newman, 2 P. W. 236.

(g) Per Hutchins, Lord Comm., Symons v. Rutter, 2 Vern. 228, whose opinion, though against that of the other two Lords Commissioners, has been approved by subsequent judges; Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 220, Sir J. Jekyl, affirmed by Lord Talbot, Forrest. 80; Scudamore v. Scudamore, Prec. Ch. 543; Wrighton v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 497.

money into land takes place by force of the direction, notwithstanding the conversion or investment is directed to be made with the approbation of certain parties (a); and legatees of legacies out of a property directed to be converted with the consent of the tenant for life in writing, are entitled to their legacies whether the property be converted or not; and the residuary legatees of the proceeds are entitled, subject to the legacies, to the estate itself, if not converted (b): there is an implied or constructive trust in their favour; though, of course, as before mentioned, a previous request may be made a necessary preliminary (c). Real estate charged with debts remains real estate till actually converted (d).

It is a general rule that if all the purposes with a view to which the parties have contracted that a particular act shall be done are at an end, persons who were not in the contemplation of the parties in making the contract cannot call for its completion merely that they, collaterally, may obtain an advantage by it (e). So if in the case of a will it should appear that the conversion of real estate into personal or personal into real was only intended to be made for the purposes of convenience, and in the events it is not necessary that a conversion should take place, as where there is a direction for sale, with a view to divide the proceeds amongst the children of a person, and it should turn out that there is only one child to take, then, the reason failing, the property will not be considered as converted as between the real

(a) Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487; and see Sheddon v. Goodrich, 8 Ves. 481.

(b) Waddington v. Yates, 15 Law J. 223, Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce.

(c) V. sup. p. 257.

(d) Bourne v. Bourne, 3 Hare, 35, 38.

(e) The case of Godsall v. Webb, 2 Keen, 121, may be taken as an illustration of the general rule. One of the clauses of a marriage settlement was that the trustees should, out of the trust funds, effect and keep up an insurance on the life of the intended wife, and on her death the money insured was to be laid out by the trustees and they were to pay the interest to the husband for life, if he should survive, and after his death to such persons as the wife should by will appoint; in default of appointment to the persons entitled under the Statute of Distributions. The policy was effected, but the husband having died the surviving trustee of the settlement and the wife assigned over the policy to the plaintiff, a relation, on condition of his paying the future premiums. On her death her next of kin claimed the amount received on the policy on the effect of the express words in their favour. The Master of the Rolls construed the settlement as being an agreement between husband and wife only, for his benefit, (pp. 120, 121,) that the next of kin (being mere volunteers) could not have compelled the wife or the trustees to keep up the insurance for their benefit, indeed that she might have prohibited the trustee from applying the funds for that purpose, (p. 122,) and that the plaintiff was entitled under the assignment; but he intimated that if the wife had chosen to keep up the policy the next of kin would have been entitled (p. 121), it would have been an intimation of an intention that they should have it.

The Master of the Rolls distinguished this case from Anderson v. Dawson, 15 Ves. 537, where it was held the wife had only a life interest, with a power of disposition only by will, (see Sugd. Powers, ii. 237-8); there the fund was actually realized and in the hands of the trustees bound by the trust; here the next of kin would have had to compel the trustee, that is the wife, to create the fund by keeping up the policy.

and personal representatives (a); in such cases therefore the event may determine whether the rule is to be applied. But if the contract or direction for conversion of an existing fund is absolute and unrestricted (b), if any event shall have happened on which the conversion ought to have taken place, as if a child be born, though it live but for an hour (c); and, what is stronger, if in the case of marriage articles the marriage take place, and the obligation to invest has in the terms of the articles become absolute, so that one of the parties has a right to insist upon the conversion as against the other (d), the property, the subject of the covenant or direction, is bound, though it may be only for the benefit of some collateral heir as regards personal estate, or the personal representative as regards real estate, though neither of them could have been personally or specifically the object of consideration. Thus, where by marriage articles it is stipulated that money shall be laid out in land, to be settled on the husband and wife, and their issue, with remainder to the heirs of the wife, if the marriage take place, the money must be laid out or considered as laid out, though the wife die without issue in the lifetime of the husband (e).

(a) See Crabtree v. Bramble, 3 Atk. 687. However, in that case the child had done acts to shew that she desired that the property should remain as land, and she was clearly entitled to elect; and see the cases cited in Mr. Raithby's note, p. 680. In Abbott v. Lee, 2 Vern. 284, a testator gave to his two daughters 550*l.* a-piece, which he directed to be laid out in lands, at the discretion of his executors, one year after his death, to the use of the two daughters, and in case of the death of either before marriage, 150*l.*, part of the portion of the one so dying, or, if the 1100*l.* should have been laid out, so much of the land as should be of the value of 150*l.* should go to the surviving sister, the rest to go to the two sons and their heirs. Jane, one of the daughters, died unmarried, leaving Mary, the other, surviving, who married but died without issue; both the sons died without issue. The court decreed that the personal representative of Mary took both the sums of 550*l.* and 150*l.* against the claim of the heir of the testator, who was also the heir of his four children. This case appears to have proceeded on the principle that there was not an absolute conversion, but as it was left to the discretion of the executors (see Lewin, 717,) the fund must be taken as it was found. It may have partly turned on the words "or 150*l.* part of the portion," &c., which contemplated that so much might go over as money, out of the whole fund as money; besides the original gift was of so much money; et v. sup. p. 243.

(b) See Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 530-1, a case as to conversion of money into land.

(c) Kettleby v. Atwood, on re-hearing, 1 Vernon, 471; Edwards v. Countess of Warwick, 2 P. W. 171, 3 P. W. 221, inf. p. 282, and the cases cited below, and in Pulteney v. Darlington, 1 Bro. 227.

(d) See Stead v. Newdigate, sup., and the cases cited below.

(e) Lancy v. Fairechild, 2 Vern. 102; the money indeed had been the wife's, though on principle it would have made no difference if it had been the husband's; a wife has a clear right to exact a stipulation in favour of her heir. Knights v. Atkyns, 2 Vern. 20, stated infra, is a stronger case, for the limitation to the heirs of the husband had to be implied. In Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 211, 217; S. C. Forrest. 80, on appeal, also stated infra, the claimant was a collateral heir; there was no specific purpose to answer by enforcing the covenant, excepting that Lady Lechmere was entitled to a jointure out of the lands. In Chaplin v. Horner, 1 P. W. 483, the husband stipulated by marriage articles to lay out a sum of money then in the hands of trustees in the purchase of lands to be settled on himself and his heirs; the marriage took effect, the father received 1300*l.* part of the 2000*l.*, and applied it to his own use, which it was admitted he had a right to do; it was decreed that the remaining 650*l.* was converted into land, and that the heir, an only daughter, was entitled to it; (and see the opinion of Lord

Lord Rosslyn indeed appears to have doubted the right of the heir, merely as such, the particular objects being gone, to have a conversion, in order to give him the money, his lordship conceiving that there was no equity, as between the real and personal representatives, to induce the court to interfere (a); but this doubt of Lord Rosslyn seems, on reference to the cases cited in the preceding notes, to have been without foundation, and it was so considered by Lord Eldon and Sir Wm. Grant, who were both of opinion that when money is impressed by the instrument with the real uses, as land, one of those uses being for the benefit of the heir, it will remain for his benefit, no act being done to alter its character (b): this subject will be again considered in treating of who may call the court into activity to enforce a conversion.

In the case of a contract, if upon the context it appears that the intent was to rely upon the personal covenant, the Court of Chancery will not apply the maxim. Thus, where by a settlement a person was made tenant in tail with remainder to his issue, and by the same instrument he contracted not to suffer a recovery, the object being that the descent of the estate to the issue might not be barred, and he did suffer a recovery, an attempt was made to have that agreement considered as a covenant binding in equity upon the subject-matter of the agreement; but Lord Cowper was of opinion that it was plain, as the entail was created by the same deed which contained the covenant, it was the intention of the parties to rely upon the security of that covenant, and that the court ought not to vary the security which the other side had agreed to accept, for that would be going beyond if not against the intent of the parties, and an issue quantum damnificatus was accordingly directed (c).

Commissioner Hutchins, in Symonds v. Rutter, Prec. Chan. 23, which has been approved by subsequent judges, though the other two commissioners were of a contrary opinion, as there was no child or creditor in the case). In Oldham v. Hughes, 2 Atk. 452, 455, the covenantor had left no issue; the heir, who was a collateral, was alone interested in the conversion. In Biggs v. Andrews, 5 Sim. 424, 430, a case of conversion of real into personal estate by a voluntary deed, it was contended that there was no longer any specific purpose to answer; as all the testator's debts had been paid, which was the main object, by the sales already made; but the conversion was held to be complete, and the unsold estates were treated as personalty. In Scudamore v. Scudamore, Prec. Ch. 543, the same principle was applied to a will; 8000*l.* was devised to Mrs. Prince, the testator's daughter, to be laid out in land to be settled on herself for life, with remainder to John Scudamore and his heirs, and in case he died in the lifetime of Mrs. Prince (as he did) to the Lord Scudamore and his heirs, executors, and administrators; it was decided that the heir of Lord Scudamore was entitled to the money; so that, as a general rule, whether a person covenants with trustees of a marriage settlement that his money shall be turned into land, or directs it by deed or by will, it is the same thing in reference to the doctrine of conversion.

(a) Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. Jun. 175-6, 183-4; Oxenden v. Compton, ibid. 70; Lord Compton v. Oxenden, ib. 265; Lewin, 674.

(b) Lord Eldon, Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 235; Sir W. Grant, Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 138; Kirkman v. Miles, 13 Ves. 339.

(c) Collins v. Plumer, 1 P. W. 106, cited with approbation by Lord Loughborough; but if the agreement had been by a subsequent Generally speaking the court carries out the principle in all its consequences (a); thus, the real and personal representatives respectively take the property in that state in which it ought to be. Real estate and personal estate were devised to trustees, in trust to sell so much as was sufficient to pay the testator's debts, then to permit the testator's widow to enjoy the residue during widowhood, and on her death to sell and divide the proceeds between the testator's son and daughter, with benefit of survivorship: the son survived and attained 21, but died in the life of the widow; the contest on her death was between the heir of the son and his personal representative; it was decided, on the principle above adverted to, namely, that the land was turned into money, that the whole of the trust property must be considered as personal estate, and go to his personal representative (b). So, where a person who had become absolutely entitled under the limitations in a will to 3,148*l.*, which by the will had been directed to be laid out in land, made his will, devising his real and personal estate in different channels, but without any intimation as to the character in which he viewed this trust money, Sir Wm. Grant held that, in the absence of all intention on his part, it must be considered as of that character which the Court of Chancery impressed upon it, namely, land; if he had died intestate, it would have gone to his heir (c). Again, where money was devised to be laid out for the benefit of a feme sole in the purchase of lands in fee, and the feme married and had issue and died, the husband surviving; it was decreed that though the money was not invested in a purchase during the life of the wife, yet in regard in this case, if it had been laid out, the husband would have been tenant by the curtesy, and that this was as land in equity, therefore the husband was entitled to a life estate in the money by analogy to an estate by curtesy (d).

Money devised or contracted to be laid out in land will pass under a devise of all the testator's messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments (e).

deed, as in Lord Peterborough's case, where he by a subsequent deed covenanted not to execute his power to make leases, it might have been different, ibid. 1 P. W. 107.

(a) Lord Hardwicke, Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 445; Crabtree v. Bramble, ibid. 687, where Lord Hardwicke mentions the exception in not giving the wife a right to dower.

(b) Fletcher v. Ashburner, 1 Bro. 499, 500.

(c) Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 165. There was a tenant for life of the estate to be purchased living at the death of the deviser and at the date of his will, though that is not adverted to in the argument or the judgment.

(d) Sweetapple v. Bindon, 2 Vern. 536; 1 P. W. 110; Cunningham v. Moody, 1 Ves. 174. The new act relating to dower has settled that the wife is entitled to dower in money directed to be laid out in land, which before, though contrary to principle, she was not, 1 Bro. 500.

(e) Rashley v. Masters, 1 Ves. J. 204; 3 Bro. 100. In Green v. Stephens, 17 Ves. 77, Lord Eldon held that money so circumstanced would pass under the words "mes-

The terms of the will, as was noticed in the last section, may turn real estate so completely into personal estate that it will go to the residuary legatee or even to the next of kin.

Money directed to be laid out in land might, by the general doctrine of the court independently of the late statute, be rendered available to judgment creditors (a).

The doctrine of constructive conversion will not be extended to cases where the act might have been done merely. The case in which this point first arose, and which has been noticed in the former volume, was this: a woman seised ex parte paternâ conveyed the estate to trustees, in trust for herself, her heirs and assigns, and died without heirs of the paternal line; of course in such a case the cestui que trust might have called upon the trustee to convey the estate to her in fee, so as to give to her the legal estate which would have been descendible to the heirs general, including those of the maternal line: on this ground the heir ex parte maternâ claimed the estate. The case was heard before Lord Northington, assisted by Lord Mansfield and Sir T. Clark, and is referred to in the former volume. On the part of the heir ex parte maternâ it was urged, that as the settlor might at any time have called upon the trustees to convey, and equity looked upon what ought to be done as done, the court would consider what ought to have been done as actually done, and would consider the conveyance as actually made by the trustees, and then in default of heirs of the paternal line the estate would have descended to the heir ex parte maternâ. Sir Thomas Clark, M. R., admitted that this would have been the effect of an actual reconveyance to the settlor, suages, lands, tenements, and hereditaments," adding that although it was very improbable that the testator contemplated that it would so pass by his will, yet he could not take it out of that constructive intention, which had in many cases been collected from such words. The price of land taken under an improvement act or the like, passes as money if not reinvested; Ex parte Hawkins, 13 Sim. 569.

(a) Frederick v. Aynscombe, 1 Atk. 393. By marriage articles the father covenanted to pay to the trustees 12,000*l.* to be settled on his son Philip for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to sons in tail, remainder to daughters in tail, remainder to the right heirs of Philip the son, with a proviso that if there should be one only child a daughter (which event happened), and the heirs or executors of Philip should, within three months after his death, pay 4000*l.* to such daughter, then the estate should be discharged of the estate tail to the daughter.

Philip died leaving an only daughter; the 4000*l.* was not paid within the three months; the money was not laid out in land. Lord Hardwicke held, at the instance of a judgment creditor of Philip the son, that the reversion dependent on the widow's life estate was real assets, and that the creditor, though the three months had elapsed, might pay the 4000*l.* so as to discharge the estate tail of the daughter, the Lord Chancellor considering the proviso only a security: but money directed to be laid out in land was not, till the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, liable to simple-contract debts, Whitwick v. Jermin, cited 2 Vernon, 58; Fulham v. Jones, cited Pulteney v. Lord Darlington, 7 Bro. P. C. 550, approved by M. R., Lechmere v. Lechmere, 3 P. W. 217; and see Lewin, p. 672, n. (g); unless it were in the hands of the covenantor, &c. at his death, and there was no one to call upon him to invest it; Chichester v. Bickerstaff, 2 Vern. 295: et v. infra, and Lewin, 677.

but as no conveyance had been executed, the consequence insisted upon would not follow; that it might have been done was not sufficient; the settlor never prayed a reconveyance, and it was impossible to say whether she ever would, and the maternal heir was not to be considered a privy in blood, but a mere stranger: Lord Northington adopted the same view (a).

One of the grounds for denying the right of the heir ex parte maternâ in the last-cited case was, as above stated, that the heir ex parte maternâ was to be considered as a stranger to the settlor and to the trust: on the same ground it was decided, that the crown could not claim. The claim of the crown was founded upon this, that there being no heir ex parte paternâ, the original grant in virtue of which all lands in England are assumed to be held (b), was spent; and consequently the estate ought to be considered as having reverted to the crown, and therefore that a conveyance by the trustees to the crown, in right of such title by reverter, ought to be enforced; but there was, in fact, a legal tenant of the estate, so that the crown had no title at law, and as the crown was an entire stranger to the trust, the court refused to interfere on behalf of the crown (c). In a subsequent case, before Lord Rosslyn, where money was devised to be laid out in land, and the person who would have been entitled to the land had died without an heir, though his lordship decided the case on another ground, he intimated a strong opinion that there was no equity for the crown, being a stranger, to call for a conversion, and such is now the settled doctrine: the same reason will apply to the lord of a manor seeking to enforce a trust, in order to have the benefit of an escheat (d): but the lord may redeem a mortgage upon an estate which has come to him by escheat (e).

(a) Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Sir W. Black. 123; 1 Eden, 177, 186; supra, vol. i. p. 504.

(b) V. supra, vol. i. p. 93. Lord Mansfield, as before noticed, would have carried out the principle in all its consequences.

(c) V. supra, vol. i. p. 504.

(d) Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. J. 170, 185; recognised by Lord Brougham, Henchman v. Attorney-General, 3 My. & K. 494; though the decision was made on a different ground. Lord Rosslyn added, that he thought the limitation to "the right heirs" meant nothing; that they were only inserted because the testator did not know what to do with the estate when the express limitations were spent; but as Mr. Lewin observes, p. 682, this doctrine has been repeatedly disapproved; indeed it would make a serious inroad on the general rules: for the construction of wills, see int. al. Robinson v. Knight, 2 Eden, 155; et supra.

The claim of the crown, under similar circumstances, was rejected on the same grounds in the late case of Taylor v. Haygarth, 14 Simons, 8, 17, 19; viii. Jurist, 138, V. C. E. The rights of the crown to personal estate are larger: the executors are as much trustees for the crown as they would be for the next of kin, Middleton v. Spicer, 1 Bro. 201; 14 Simons, 13, 16, 18; and see Du Hourmelin v. Sheldon, 1 Beav. 93, though that case turned on a different point. It has been equally held that in the case of a contract for a purchase the rule only applies to the parties to the contract; a third person, a stranger to the contract, cannot intervene to enforce it, Tasker v. Small, 3 My. & Cr. 70; and see Moore v. Croat, 8 Sim. 522; and Arkwright v. Colt, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 4.

(e) Downe v. Morris, 3 Hare, 394.

It is a general rule that settling lands by a freeman of London on a child is not such an advancement as shall be brought into hotchpot, so money laid out in lands for the benefit of a child takes it out of the customary estate, and is not subject to be brought into hotchpot; it is considered as equivalent to a purchase of the lands, and a gift of them by the father (a).

Real estate may be so converted into personal estate as to be liable to legacy duty. Real estate was devised to trustees to be sold, and the proceeds to be considered as part of the testator's residuary estate (after disposed of), or to go in aid, if necessary, of the rest of his property in discharge of his legacies. Lord C. B. Thomson considered that under this direction the proceeds were to go as the residue of the testator's personal estate, and that if the residuary legatee and devisee had died before making any election, it would have gone as part of his personal estate; and he held that it was liable to legacy duty, under 48 Geo. III. c. 149, sched. 3; for the person entitled could not, by preventing a sale, which he might do as between himself and the trustees, intercept the attaching of the legacy duty (b).

It may here be observed that where an estate is devised to a particular person, and then the testator contracts to sell the estate, as this operates to convert the devisor into a mere trustee of the estate for the purchaser, subject to a lien for the payment of the purchase-money, and the purchaser into a trustee of the purchase-money for the vendor (c) it is the purchase-money alone that the vendor is entitled to at his death; it will therefore go to the personal representatives or legatees of the vendor; he has at his death no interest in the real estate within the 23rd sect. of the 1 Vict. c. 26 (d). Even where the contract is binding at the death of the testator, but the right to enforce it is lost by subsequent laches, the estate is so converted that it will belong to the personal representatives (e).

Where a person conveys a mortgaged estate to a trustee and empowers him, not making it compulsory but at his discretion, on non-payment of the debt charged in the estate, within a certain time to sell it, and to apply the proceeds in payment of the debt, and to pay the residue to the grantor, even should the period at which the

(a) Hume v. Edwards, 3 Atk. 453; Annaud v. Honeywood, 2 Cha. Rep. 117, 129; Babington v. Greenwood, 1 P. W. 531, referred to in note. N.B. The money had been laid out in land, though not settled according to the testator's intention. Query, if the money had only been directed to be laid out?

(b) Attorney-General v. Holford, 1 Price, 426.

(c) V. supra, vol. i. 509; Wall v. Bright, 1 Jac. & Walker, 500.

(d) Sup. vol. i. p. 476; Farrar v. Earl of Winterton, 5 Beav. 7.

(e) Curre v. Bowyer, cited 5 Beav. 6.

trustee is authorized to sell happen during the life of the donor; if in fact no sale has taken place, the mortgagor's interest in the property will descend as real estate, or go to the devisees of the grantor (a). If the direction for sale is imperative, or a clear intention is shown that there shall be a conversion out and out, then the surplus will go as personal estate whether the estate has been sold or not (b).

We have now to consider more particularly who are the persons in whose favour the court will interfere, and under what circumstances the court will refuse to interfere to carry out this principle; for it is not in favour of every one that the rule is enforced, but only between the parties who stipulate and those who stand in their place (c).

I. As regards Devises of land or of money. The right of the heir-at-law, where a particular sum of money has been directed by will to be laid out in land, the ultimate limitation being to the testator's right heirs, to have the money or the estate to be purchased in the event of such ultimate limitation coming into possession, has been repeatedly recognized (d); and as consideration and even privity in the case of a will are out of the question, and the intention only is to be looked to, there seems to be no necessity in such cases to resort to the once-admitted principle that favour should be shown to the heir (e).

In Wheldale v. Partridge, Lord Alvanley, M. R., said the only question in such cases is whether the character of land or money is definitively affixed to the property or whether it is left as matter of uncertainty in what manner the owner of the property intended it to descend (f). In the case in question Lord Alvanley held that the character of land was not definitively affixed, and Lord Eldon affirmed the decree; but his Lordship said that if the deed had concluded with the first limitation it would immediately have impressed this money

(a) Bourne v. Bourne, 2 Hare, 35; Dalzell on Conversion, p. 89, et seq. cited 2 Hare, 35; and see the distinction, ib. p. 91, where the interest of the person dying vests before his death under a deed absolutely requiring conversion.

(b) As in Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 102, 109-10-11; Biggs v. Andrews, 5 Sim. 424, supra; et v. supra; and see Matson v. Swift, 8 Beav. 375-6.

(c) See Burgess v. Weale, 1 Eden, R. 186; 1 Fonb. 419-20-22-25.

(d) V. supra p. [263]; and see Robinson v.

Knight, 2 Eden, 156, 158; though this case seems to have been decided against the residuary legatee on the ground that the plain intent was not to give this property as part of the residue.

(e) See the reporter's note to Scudamore v. Scudamore, Prec. Ch. 544. Lord Thurlow, in Rashley v. Masters, 1 Ves. Jun. 204; 3 Bro. 99, notices the effect which this favour to the heir had produced in some of the earlier decisions, which he would not follow.

(f) Wheldale v. Partridge, 5 Ves. 396-7; case of a Deed.

with real qualities (a); and he added, that if the instrument was to be taken as having impressed the fund with real qualities immediately upon the execution, in the question between the heir and executor, the money being once clearly and plainly impressed with real uses as land, and one of those uses being for the benefit of the heir; the impression, in his opinion, unless removed, would remain for the benefit of the heir (b).

II. Where the rights of the parties depend upon a Contract. In such cases it frequently becomes an important question as to who is entitled to put the court in motion, in order to have the contract carried into effect. It is not, as above observed, in favour of every one that it is to be carried into effect. The trustee, as he cannot, by delaying to invest or to sell, affect the interests of the cestui que trust, so neither can he of himself give efficacy to a contract, which would otherwise be dormant, according to his whim and caprice; there must be some purpose to answer, and some person entitled to call the trustee into activity. The general rule is that it shall be between the parties who stipulate what is to be done, or those who stand in their place (c).

First. As regards the rights of the Heir and Personal Representatives and Next of Kin, where the contract affects some Existing Property, real or personal, which belongs to one of the parties. In ordinary cases where there is a contract, under which certain lands are to be settled, and the lands are expressly limited to the heir of one of the contracting parties, after the particular limitations have become expended, or in the event of their not taking effect; and where land is directed to be converted into money, and after the particular limitations have been satisfied, or in the event of their becoming ineffectual, the money so to be raised is limited to the next of kin; the heir is entitled to have the contract carried into effect in the one case, and the next of kin in the other (d); but there is no equity between the two lines of heirs to call for a conveyance in order to alter the course of descent (e). So if there be a contract that money then in the hands of a third person, or afterwards to be deposited, and which is actually deposited,

(a) S. C. on appeal, 8 Ves. 227, et v. sup. p. 270—272.

(b) And see Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 166; in which the dictum of Lord Eldon in opposition to that of Lord Rosslyn; viz., that there was “no equity between representatives to change the nature of the property,” was followed.

(c) See Lord Compton v. Oxendon, 2 Ves.

J. 264; S. C. 4 Bro. 397; Langley v. Sneyd, 1 Sim. & S. 54; Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Sir Wm. Black. 123; 1 Eden, 177, 186, Sir T. Clark, M. R. et v. sup. p. 261.

(d) Lord Alvanley, M. R., Lord Compton v. Oxendon, 2 Ves. J. 264; and see Rashley v. Masters, 1 Ves. J. 204; 3 Bro. 99.

(e) Langley v. Sneyd, 1 Sim. & S. 55.

shall be laid out in the purchase of lands to be settled to certain uses, with the ultimate remainder to the heir of one of the contracting parties, the heir will be entitled to have that contract carried into effect (a).

It has already been noticed that the rule that what ought to be done is considered as done so as to effect a conversion of real estate into personal, and personal into real, is subject to some qualifications.

It is a clear principle, both at law and in equity, that where there is a confusion of rights,—where the debtor and creditor, the obligor and obligee, become the same person,—there can be no right put into execution, but there is an immediate merger, though on the intent, express or implied, equity will keep them distinct (b).

1st. When therefore the money bound by the direction or contract for conversion gets into the hands of the person who is absolutely entitled to it either way, when as it is sometimes said the money is "at home," the operation of the rule of conversion will cease; the fund and the uses coming together the uses are discharged and merged (c).

But if a part only of the money bound by the contract has been called in, by a party having a power to do so, the remainder of the money will still be considered as retaining its real character as between the real and personal representatives (d).

(a) Chaplin v. Horner, 1 P. W. p. 483; Edwards v. Countess of Warwick, 2 P. W. 171; Lancey v. Fairchild, 2 Vern. 101.

(b) Lord Compton v. Oxendon, 2 Ves. J. 264; Philips v. Brydges, 3 Ves. J. 127; Selby v. Alston, 3 Ves. 342; Harmood v. Oglander, 8 Ves. 128; et v. sup. vol. i. p. 508.

(c) Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. J. 204; Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 235; Pulteney v. Darlington, 7 Bro. P. C. 530, there cited; Chichester v. Bickerstaff, 2 Vern. 295. Assuming that Mr. Lewin's view of this case is correct, as it appears to be, and that the 3000*l.* covenanted to be furnished by Sir Ch. Bickerstaff himself had been given to the heir, then Sir J. Jekyll's and Lord Talbot's objections to this case would be removed; see Lewin, 677-9.

(d) By articles before marriage, the husband agreed to add 700*l.* to his wife's portion, and the securities were assigned to trustees to be invested in land, and settled on the husband for life, with remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the first and other sons, and then to daughters in tail, with remainder to the right heir of the husband. There was no issue of the marriage; the husband received a part of the trust fund, and invested it in his own name on personal security, though his wife was alive. By his will he devised all his real estates, and appointed executors: it was held that such part as he had called in should go to his executors, for having the right to elect to take the reversion of the fund as he chose, and having taken the security in the names of his executors, it was clear he did not mean his real representative to have it, but the rest went to his devisee, the articles having changed the money into land, Lingen v. Sowray, 1 P. W. 172, Lord Harcourt; affirmed on rehearing by Lord Cowper. So where by marriage articles a father in consideration of the marriage and of the marriage portion brought by the wife covenanted int. al. that 2000*l.* belonging to him, then in the hands of trustees, should be invested in lands to be settled on himself and his heirs, without any intermediate limitations, and there was issue of the marriage one daughter: on a question between the daughter as heir, and the personal representative of the father, it was held that all the residue of the fund which had not been called in by the father belonged to the daughter: it was remarked that this was not a question between the person who was to pay the money,

2nd. Where the property is Outstanding in a trustee, but there is some person in whom both the qualifications are united, that is, who is absolutely entitled to the property in whichever quality it is to be taken, such person may declare his election in what quality it shall be taken, whether for descent or otherwise (a); and then the property must be taken for all purposes, according to the quality which such election has impressed upon it (b). All the cases establish this, said Lord Cottenham in a late case in the House of Lords, that where the conversion has not in fact taken place, and the interest vests absolutely, whether in land or money in one person, any act of his indicating an option in which character he takes or disposes of it, will determine the succession as between his real and personal representatives (c): such election may be made by any act from which the intention can be collected, and slight circumstances have been considered to be sufficient (d); but of course no election can determine the question; as regards other parties claiming under the trust, the election can affect those only who claim as volunteers (e) under the party electing; therefore where the entire absolute interest never vests in a person during his life, he has no power by any act of his to effect a present re-conversion, though he may dispose of his reversionary interest in the property by whatever denomination he may think fit, and it will be taken by his donees accordingly (f).

and the person to receive, but between the heir and executor in respect of money outstanding in trustees; but as regards that portion which the father had called in from the trustees, as he would have had the absolute dominion over it, had it been land, the daughter had no claim against the father's executors to refund this portion, Chaplin v. Horner, 1 P. W. 484; M. R. 1718.

(a) V. Thornton v. Hawley, 10 Ves. 129; Triquet v. Thornton, 13 Ves. 345, 357.

(b) Lord Eldon, Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 235-6.

(c) Lord Cottenham, Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & F. 146, on appeal from Lord Langdale's decision, 5 Beavan, 22. The cases down to Langley v. Sneyd, 1 Sim. & S. 45, are collected by Mr. Vesey in his note to Rashleigh v. Master, 1 Ves. J. 204; the rest may be found in Mr. Bethell's argument, 12 Cl. & F. p. 137: Lord Cottenham, p. 145, particularly noticed Earlom v. Sanders, 1 Amb. 241, and Cowley v. Hartstonge, 1 Dow, 361; and see, as to the general doctrine, Wrightson v. Macaulay, 4 Hare, 487, affirmed on appeal, Nov. 1846.

(d) Lord Langdale, stating the result of the authorities, Matson v. Swift, 8 Beav. 375;

et v. int. al. Lord Eldon's judgment, Wheldale v. Partridge, ubi sup.; Pulteney v. Darlington, 1 Bro. 223; Van v. Barnett, 19 Ves. 109.

(e) Lord Hardw., Crabtree v. Bramble 3 Atk. 686.

(f) In the case of Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Meriv. 521, by marriage articles int. al. land of the husband was agreed to be conveyed within two years to trustees, and after the death of one Sarah Nievel to be sold, and the produce settled on the husband for life, then to the issue of the marriage; if no issue then to the husband, his executors, &c., or as he should appoint. There was no issue, and the estate was not conveyed according to the articles, nor was it sold. The husband by his will confirmed the articles, and gave to his wife, int. alia, the residue of his personal estate, and appointed the wife executrix. Sarah Nievel survived the testator, and afterwards died. The widow gave her personal estate to the plaintiff; the defendant, to whom the legal estate had passed by the will of the husband, had entered upon the estate so articulated to be sold. The plaintiff claimed the estate as having been converted into personal estate of the husband, and having been therefore Until an election is made, by the person capable of electing, (it is different, as we have seen where the property has come into his possession,) the property remains and passes as it would have done if a conversion had actually taken place as directed, and the onus lies on those who would show an election to take it in another character than that it would have if converted (a). The decisions, as before stated, have overruled the general proposition of Lord Rosslyn (b), that, in these cases, in the absence of an election, the court will not interpose, and the property is to be taken as it happens to be at the death of the party through whom it is claimed (c); for, as Lord Eldon observed, it is not correct to say that the court does not interpose between volunteers, if it gives to the executor that money which the instrument gives to the heir (d).

Secondly. Where the contract does not affect any specific property.

Where the matter rests on a general covenant in a settlement not affecting any specific property, there the only legal title is a right in the covenantees to sue the covenantor or his representatives; and this right, as has already been observed, is not to be put into activity by a mere trustee, unless there be some person who is entitled to call upon the trustee to do so. Where one of the parties to a settlement has contracted to pay a sum of money which is to be laid out in land to be settled in favour of the husband and wife, and their issue, with remainder to the heirs of the husband or of the wife being a stranger to the covenantor; the heir, it is conceived, in default or on failure of issue, is entitled as against the contracting party and his representatives to have the contract carried into effect; the heir in such case is only seeking to enforce a contract for valuable consideration entered into with his ancestor, and which, by the general law, he is entitled to enforce by himself or through the trustee, according as the covenantee was the ancestor himself, or a trustee. In Knights v. Atkins the father, on the marriage of the daughter, agreed to give to his daughter 1500*l.* as her portion, the husband agreed to add 1500*l.* to it, and given to the wife by his will. Sir W. Grant said, the case was the same as if the estate had been conveyed at the end of the two years upon the trusts of the settlement (p. 530); the trust to sell at the period prescribed was absolute and imperative. The event of there being no issue was provided for, but the provision was not that there should be no sale, but that the money should be paid to the husband; therefore, in contemplation of equity, the estate was to be considered as converted into money: the onus was on those who said that it was real estate. As to election on the part of the husband, the time for sale, said the learned judge, did not arrive in his lifetime; there was no moment of his life when the absolute interest in the property as money or land could be considered to be his (p. 531).

(a) See Stead v. Newdigate, 2 Mer. 521 supra.

(b) In Walker v. Denne, 2 Ves. J. 170.

(c) See Kirkman v. Miles, 13 Ves. 338; Biddulph v. Biddulph, 12 Ves. 161.

(d) See Wheldale v. Partridge, 8 Ves. 227, 235.

the whole 3000*l.* was to be laid out in land to be settled on the husband for life, then to the wife for her jointure, with remainder to the heirs of their two bodies; but nothing was said as to any ultimate remainder: 500*l.* of the wife's portion was paid to the husband afterwards, he then died without issue, and then the wife died: the heir of the husband claimed the remainder of the wife's portion; and the court being of opinion that if a settlement had been made the ultimate remainder would have been directed to be limited to the heir of the husband, the money was decreed to be paid to him, though, in that particular case, there were strong grounds for contending that, in the absence of any express limitation, the money should have reverted to the wife or her ancestor (a). But where the covenant has to be enforced by the heir against the personal representative of his ancestor the remedy is not so plain. It seems to be settled that, where in the events that have happened, the covenant has been broken at the death of the covenantor, and therefore ought to have been enforced in order to secure the interests of some of the particular objects contemplated by the covenant, and at the death of the ancestor there is still some person in existence having a right to enforce the contract, the heir, in the event of the limitation in his favour taking effect by the non-existence or extinction of the objects of the particular limitations, is entitled to enforce the covenant against the personal representatives of his own ancestor, even though at the time he files his bill no one but himself is interested to enforce it (b).

One of the leading cases on this subject is Lord Lechmere's case, which has before been adverted to. Previously to Lord Lechmere's marriage, marriage articles were executed by Lord Lechmere, by which it was agreed that 30,000*l.* should be laid out in land, with the consent of the trustees of the settlement, within one year after the marriage. The lands were to be settled for the benefit of Lord Lechmere for life—there was a provision for securing a jointure to the intended wife (Lady Lechmere)—and subject to these provisions the estate was to be settled in strict settlement on the issue of the marriage, with the ultimate limitation to the heirs of Lord Lechmere; a term was to be created for securing portions for daughters, which, in the event of there being none, was to sink for the benefit of Lord Lechmere and his heirs; 6000*l.* belonging to the wife was to be contributed towards the 30,000*l.*; Lord Lechmere covenanted to provide the remaining 24,000*l.* within a year. The marriage took place, the year elapsed, but the 24,000*l.* was not provided, so that the covenant was broken. Lord Lechmere died without issue, leaving his widow surviving, who, as before stated, was entitled under the articles to a jointure in the lands to be purchased. On Lord Lechmere's death, Lady Lechmere took out letters of administration to his personal estate, and his heir, a nephew—who was well provided for, as estates of considerable value had descended to him from Lord Lechmere—instituted a suit against Lady Lechmere, as administratrix of Lord Lechmere, and the trustees, in order to enforce the performance of the contract, in effect claiming the 30,000*l.*, subject to Lady Lechmere's jointure. Lady Lechmere insisted that the contract ought only be enforced, if at all, for the purpose of securing her jointure. Sir Jos. Jekyll, M. R., on the original hearing, and Lord Talbot on appeal, decided that the claim of the heir was well founded, and that the covenant ought to be specifically performed (a). Lord Lechmere being contingently entitled to the money, subject only to the jointure, might have disposed of such interest as he pleased, or might as regards himself and those claiming under him, have extinguished the obligation; and if he had survived his wife,—in which case there would have been no third person interested to enforce the covenant,—then, according to the principle above stated (b), Lord Lechmere being covenantor, and in effect also covenantee, the covenant would have been extinguished without any act on his part, and his heir could not have required to have it enforced.

(a) 2 Vernon, 20, referred to supra.

(b) V. supra, p. 263, &c.

When and to what extent a person, not being the heir or next of kin or personal representative of any one of the parties to the contract, may enforce a covenant to settle money or land in such manner as that he may take under the limitations, is now to be considered.

It frequently happens that some stipulation is introduced into a contract in favour of some Third Person, not a party, and most commonly in favour of some Relation of one of the parties. The question as to how far the statutes in favour of purchasers and creditors operate upon limitations to collaterals, which is intimately connected

(a) Lechmere v. Lord Carlisle, 3 P. W. 211 (1733); S. C. Forrest. p. 80. Sir Joseph Jekyll observed that the covenant was broken during Lord Lechmere's life, and the trustees might have filed a bill against him to have enforced a specific performance of the covenants, 2 P. W. 213, and the forbearance of the trustees shall in no case prejudice the cestui que trust, ib. p. 215; and see Forrest. 83. Sir Jos. Jekyll relied chiefly (pp. 215-6) on Lord Jeffrey's decision in Kettleby v. Atwood, 1 Vern. 471, v. supra.

(b) Supra, p. 54.

with this subject, will be noticed at the end of this chapter. I propose now to take a general view of the rights which may thus be conferred on a stranger, when the matter rests on contract, and to consider under what circumstances and to what extent they may be enforced, as against the parties to the settlement, or any of them, and their representatives.

It is to be observed, in the first place, that if two parties, in contemplation of a marriage intended, and afterwards had between them, or for any other consideration between themselves, coming under the description of valuable, have entered into a contract together, in which one of the stipulations made by them is a stipulation solely and merely for the benefit of a third person, that third person being even a stranger in blood to each, a stranger to the contract, and a person from whom not any valuable or meritorious consideration moves, has moved, or is to move, it cannot, generally speaking, be competent to one party to the contract, or those representing that party in estate, to say to the other party to the contract, that that stipulation shall go for nothing, or shall not have any effect given to it. The two parties to the contract having made the stipulation with each other, mutual assent must generally be requisite to dissolve that which by mutual assent was created; with the question between them, the gratuitousness of the provision towards the stranger as far as the stranger is concerned, seems generally to have little or nothing to do (a); each of the parties therefore may enforce the contract against the other. Even where one of the parties has omitted or even become incapable of performing his part of the contract that will not in all cases discharge the other party. In marriage contracts there may in various instances be default of performance on one side, without giving the other any title to be discharged or relieved from his part of the agreement; though the contracts may be so framed as to be mutually dependent (b): but a stranger to the contract stands in a very different situation to that of the parties and their representatives.

As to the doctrine at law in regard to strangers.—Where a deed is made between parties, whether indented (c) or not, according to the doctrine of the common law, the stipulations it contains are suable and releasable by the parties only, and not by a stranger, though made for his benefit (d). When therefore two persons covenant be-

(a) Dict. Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C., 460.

(b) Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Mylne & Cr. 192, 203-4.

(c) Indenting is not now material, vide sup. vol. i. p. 291.

(d) Per Levinz, J., Gilby v. Copley, 3 Lev. 138. Though two of the judges were of diftween themselves to do some act for the benefit of a mere stranger, as a general rule that stranger has no right to enforce the covenant against the two, or against either of them (a), each may effectually release the other.

This doctrine, however, has not been applied with the same rigour to agreements; a stranger has in some cases been permitted to bring the equitable action of assumpsit to enforce a stipulation for his benefit contained in an agreement, to which, nominally at least, he was not a party, when it has been clear that the inducement operating upon one of the parties was, in whole or in part, that some specific benefit should be secured for that particular person, he being a person in whom the party exacting the stipulation might be supposed to have taken an interest, as, for instance, a child or near relation: indeed it would seem that a child is not to be considered a stranger in such a case.

A person seised of certain lands was about to cut some timber to provide a portion of 1000*l.* for his daughter; the son, who was heir apparent, and to whom the land descended on the death of the father, promised the father, that if he would not cut the timber, he, the son, would pay the daughter the 1000*l.* He not having done so, the husband of the daughter, together with her, brought an action of assumpsit to recover the 1000*l.* from the son. It was insisted that the father, whose wood it was, or his executors, were alone entitled to sue; but it was held by the whole court, that the plaintiffs might bring the action; it might have been another case if the money had been to be paid to a mere stranger; “But there is such a nearness of relation between the father and child, that it is a kind of debt to the child to be provided for, so that the plaintiff, the daughter, is plainly concerned” (b). Pollexfen argued, that the promise was [to be taken] indifferently to the party or the cestui que use, therefore that either might bring the action (c). So in another case, a person promised a physician that if he cured him of a disease under which he laboured, he would give the physician a certain sum of money, and another sum to his daughter; it was resolved that the daughter might bring assumpsit on this promise, though not a party, because the nearness of the relation ferent opinion, and no judgment was given; Rilley v. Dennell, 1 Danv. Abr. 64; et v. infra, Ex parte Williams.

(a) Colyear v. Countess of Mulgrave, 2 Keen, 98; Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 462; vii. Jur. 1077; and see Hill v. Gomme, 1 Beav. 554; affirmed 5 My. & C. 255;

9 Law J., N. S. 56.

(b) Dutton v. Poole, 1 Ventris, 318; 30 Car. II.; 2 Levinz, 210, affirmed in Excheq. Chamber; Sir Tho. Raymond's Rep. p. 302; see 9 Law J., N. S. p. 56.

(c) 2 Levinz, 212.

gave the daughter the benefit of the consideration performed by the father (a).

Where the stranger to the contract, especially where that person has been a child, has done the act which was the consideration of the promise, he has been permitted to sue; thus, where a person promised the father, in consideration that he would give his daughter in marriage with his son, he would settle so much land upon the son, and the marriage was had; afterwards the son brought an action on the covenant, and it was adjudged to be maintainable, because the son had done the meritorious act, though the promise was made to another (b): although the stranger to the covenant was a son, the decision was not put upon that ground.

But where the agreement has been one that appeared to have had for its object the mere private convenience and benefit of the party himself, and the stranger did not sustain such a character as that particular favour to him could be supposed to have influenced the party exacting the stipulation, there the third person has been treated as a mere stranger, and consequently the general rule of law has been applied.

One Hardy owed the plaintiff 70*l.*; Hardy and the defendant agreed that the defendant should pay the debt due to the plaintiff instead of Hardy, and that in consideration thereof Hardy should assign a house to the defendant; Hardy was ready to perform the agreement on his part; the plaintiff brought assumpsit against the defendant for the 70*l.*, but as he was a stranger to the consideration judgment was given against him (c).

One Parry was indebted to the plaintiff in one sum, and to the defendants in another sum of money, and a stranger was indebted in another sum to Parry. The defendants, in consideration that Parry would permit them to sue the stranger in Parry's name for what was due from him to Parry, promised they would pay the debt which Parry owed to the plaintiff, and thus relieve Parry from the debt he owed to the plaintiff. They accordingly sued and recovered, and according to the agreement ought to have paid the debt due from Parry to the plaintiff; but not having done so, the plaintiff, no party to the agreement, brought an action against the defendants, and obtained a verdict. But the court arrested the judgment on the ground that the

(a) Physician's case, cited and approved 1 Ventris, 6.

(b) Sprat v. Agar, cited and approved in Dutton v. Poole, 1 Ventris, pp. 318, 332; and see the cases cited, ibid.

(c) Crow v. Rogers, 1 Strange, 592, 10 Geo. I.

plaintiff was a stranger to the consideration (a). In these cases it is obvious that the parties were not stipulating for any benefit for the stranger; however, Mr. J. Buller, in his Nisi Prius (b), stated that perhaps in these days these cases would receive a different determination, as the courts have been more liberal than formerly in extending the benefit of the action of assumpsit; and the same learned judge, in the case of Marchington v. Vernon (c), said that independently of the rules which prevail in mercantile transactions, if one person makes a promise to another for the benefit of a third person, that third person may maintain an action upon it; and Lord C. B. Eyre did not object to this doctrine, but he said the promise must be laid as made to the third person himself (d).

In Martyn v. Hind (e), Lord Mansfield (after referring to Dutton v. Poole) said he wondered how a doubt could have arisen upon it; and in the principal case he held that on a promise by a rector to the bishop to pay a fixed salary to the curate, the curate might recover in assumpsit the amount of the stipulated salary. The case of Dutton v. Poole being the foundation of these cases, it would seem that the generality of the expressions in those cases is to be interpreted in reference to the principle of that case, namely, that the benefit was intended for the third person, not for the party himself, though Mr. Justice Buller's observations in his Treatise on Nisi Prius would certainly go beyond it.

In a case in bankruptcy (f), Lord Eldon, after stating the law to be that if A. by deed covenanted with B., a party to it, that he, A., would pay a sum of money to C., a stranger to the deed, C. could not, according to the modern doctrine, sue A. upon the covenant at law; held that where A. being a trader took B. as his partner, and a contract by deed was entered into that the debts of A. should be paid by the partnership, the property of A. being assigned so as to form the stock of the new firm, that did not of itself make those creditors joint creditors of A. and B.; adding, that in order that the joint creditors should have the benefit of such an arrangement, it was necessary they should assent so as to make themselves parties, though of this slight evidence would do (g). It is obvious that in this case the partner was

(a) Bourne v. Mason, 1 Ventris, 6; 20 & 21 Car. II.

(b) P. 134, where he cites Dutton v. Poole, before stated, with approbation.

(c) 27 Geo. III. K. B.

(d) Comp. of Feltmakers v. Davis, (1797,) 1 Bos. & P. 102.

(e) Cowp. 443, 16 Geo. III. 1776.

(f) Ex parte Williams, Buck, p. 13. In this case Marchington v. Vernon, supra, was cited.

(g) Ibid. and see Ex parte Jackson, 1 Ves. J. 132.

stipulating for his own convenience and benefit, and in order to relieve himself, not for the purpose of securing the payment to his creditors for their sakes, but only as such payment would conduce to his own individual advantage; it is like the case of a person making an assignment of his property to trustees in trust to sell and pay his creditors, which, as before observed, does not make the creditors cestuis que trust (a); and though Lord Eldon, referring (apparently only from recollection) to the old cases before cited, said that they were not law (b); it will be seen that the principle on which they were decided did not apply to the case before him.

It would seem therefore that, as regards a deed, at law a stranger to the contract and to the consideration cannot take advantage of a covenant in his favour; but where a father or near relative exacts for valuable consideration a promise in favour of his child or other near relation whom it is evident he intended to benefit, and the transaction is not clothed with the formalities of a deed, there is strong authority for contending that the child or other near relative may sue by the equitable action of assumpsit.

It seems that if the promise he made to a person, not a party to the consideration, but for whose benefit the stipulation is made, as well as to the party from whom the consideration proceeds, such third person may enforce it. A father intending to make his will and devise an annuity to be charged on his real estate to his younger son, the eldest son promised to both, that if the father would forbear to make the devise, he would pay the annuity; the younger son, after the death of the father, brought an action against the elder brother, and recovered (c).

(a) Vide supra, Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, &c. sup. pp. 59, 60.

(b) In Ex parte Peele, 6 Ves. 604, (1802,) Lord Eldon again adverted to the common-law doctrine in regard to a stranger to a covenant not being at liberty to bring an action upon it, and acted upon it, and again denied that the old cases were law; but the party there had not exacted any stipulation in favour of his creditor, Sir Robert Peel, the petitioner: Phillips v. Bateman, 16 East, 373, is distinguishable from the cases before cited on the same ground; the stipulation that the creditors should receive payment from the third person was not the motive, otherwise than as such payment would conduce to the convenience of the party himself; besides there was no promise to pay each particular creditor individually so as to give to each a right to sue, ibid.

(c) Rockwood's case, 1 Leonard, 192, 32 Eliz.; Eyre, Ch. Baron, 1 Bos. & P. 102, held that in all cases of a promise to one for the benefit of a third person, the promise must be laid, in an action, as made to the third person. It may be observed that a promise made to a testator alone, on the faith of which he omits to make a devise, will be enforced in equity, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Reech v. Kennegal, 1 Ves. Sen. 123, Ambl. 68, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 167; Sellack v. Harris, 5 Vin. Abr. 521; Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 649, 655; and see the other cases cited in the argument, p. 649; Leister v. Foxcroft, Dom. Proc. cited Gilbert's Eq. R. 11; and see Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. 565; Mestair v. Gillespie, 11 Vesey, 621; Walker v. Walker, 2 Atkins, 98; and the cases cited by the Vice-Chancellor, 7 Sim. 655, et seq. as to not permitting a person to take fraudulent advantage of an act of Parliament made to suppress fraud, which seem to be to some extent applicable to prevent an improper advantage being attempted to be taken of a rule of law.

As to the Doctrines of the Court of Chancery in regard to Strangers to the contract.—The old rule of the Court of Chancery, said Lord Hardwicke, was, that none can come here for a specific performance who does not come under the consideration of the agreement; but, said Lord Hardwicke, as agreements are entire and the several branches might have been in view, the court has in latter cases laid hold of any circumstances to distinguish them out of it, still preserving the rule in general: if therefore there was any kind of consideration the court would support it, as in Osgoode v. Strode, (which will be noticed hereafter): the court, continued Lord Hardwicke, has got out of it in another way, as in Vernon v. Vernon (after stated), because an action might be brought in the names of the trustees, though there clearly the persons claiming were not within the consideration (a). The general law as to strangers in blood, strangers to the contract, is the same at this day, to this extent at least, that the parties to the contract may at their pleasure abandon the contract, and mutually release each other from its performance (b); still, however, the question

(a) Stephens v. Trueman, 1 Ves. 74. Ib. 215.

(b) Colyear v. Mulgrave, 2 Keen, 98, Lord Langdale. In that case a natural daughter sought to enforce a covenant entered into by a son of her father with her father; there was a valuable consideration as between the contracting parties, but there was in that case the additional circumstance against the contract being enforced that something was to be done by one before the other could be called upon to join in transferring the money in question, and the son died before this was done, leaving his father his executor. Lord Langdale on general principles refused to enforce the covenant; he held that when two have contracted for, amongst other things, a benefit to a mere stranger, that the stranger has not a right to enforce against the two contracting parties a covenant so entered into by them for his benefit; in that case it will be observed the stranger to the contract was in law a stranger in blood. V. C. K. Bruce recognised Lord Langdale's doctrine, as a general rule, in Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 462. In the case of Hill v. Gomme, 1 Beavan, 540; (1839,) (affirmed, Dec. 1839, by Lord Cottenham, 9 Law Journal, N. S. 1840, p. 56, 5 My. & Cr. 255,) an indenture was executed between James Dean of the one part, and John Hill of the other part, whereby Dean covenanted to maintain and bring up William Thomas Hill, son of John Hill, as his own son, and at 14 to apprentice him, and that his heirs and executors should convey and assign his real personal estate on his death to William T. Hill: the consideration was stated to be 100*l.*, though it was evident the money consideration was an after-thought, and there was no sufficient proof of the payment: neither party appears to have acted on the deed, nor did it appear that W. T. Hill had lived with Dean. William Thomas Hill having discovered the deed amongst his father's papers after his death sought to put it in force against Dean's representatives; he was not his father's representative. Lord Langdale held that the two contracting parties must be considered to have abandoned the deed. The case was brought before Lord Cottenham by appeal. "Neither party," said his lordship, "derived from it the benefit which it purported to secure." His lordship considered that this was an arrangement which, if not performed to an extent to alter the condition in life and expectations of the plaintiff (see Lyons v. Blenkin, Jacob, 245,)—in which case he thought the court would have compelled the performance of the covenants in his favour (p. 554)—might have been put an end to by an agreement between Dean and Hill, and he thought that the evidence showed that it was put an end to, and that such evidence was not rebutted by the single fact of the deed having been found uncanceled (p. 555). Here it will be observed there was in effect no consideration, so that the case could not be brought within the common-law authorities before cited, though the stranger to the contract was in this case a child of the party exacting the stipulation. The late case of Gibbs v. Glamis, 11 Sim. 584, (1841,) may here be noticed: in that case a suit was instituted by one Hill against several defenremains whether where one of the parties has contracted for some advantage in favour of a collateral, the party in whose favour it is made may not enforce it against the party making the stipulation as part of the entire agreement, it not having been released by the party exacting it, more especially when to secure the interests of all the contemplated objects, there is a covenant with trustees that the act shall be done which, if enforced, would, as we shall presently see, enure for the benefit of all persons the objects of the covenant, and who may therefore be considered in the light of cestuis que trust. If, by reason of the expectations held out to the stranger to the contract, under the contract, his condition in life has been changed, to the knowledge and by the instrumentality of the parties, then the stipulation may be enforced by such stranger: not, however, so much in virtue of any original efficacy in the contract as between the stranger and the contracting parties, but that the stranger would suffer a positive injury if the contract were not performed, so that a direct equity arises as between the two contracting parties and the stranger, by reason of their acts in regard to him (a).

One of the distinctions which has been taken in the Court of Chancery, in favour of strangers, so as to take particular cases out of the general rule, and which is noticed by Lord Hardwicke, will be seen, by reference to the cases at law above cited, to bear a strong analogy to the doctrine which has been held at law (b). It is this, that where a person who has contributed any valuable consideration to an intended settlement, has exacted as part of the contract that certain property shall be so settled as that in the event of the intended limitations to the issue of the marriage failing to take effect, the property, whether belonging to one of the parties or the other, shall go to some near relative, for dants claiming an interest in the arrears of an expired annuity, and against Gibbs, who was supposed to claim an interest, but who disclaimed. The parties interested by deed, to which Gibbs was not a party, assigned the arrears to trustees in trust to pay the costs, including those of Gibbs, and to pay part of the clear residue to two of the original parties, and the balance after such payments to Lady Glamis. The fund, or a portion of it, was realized, and Gibbs filed a bill against the trustees, and the parties beneficially interested, for the execution of the trust, and payment of his costs provided for by the deed. Lady Glamis demurred, the Vice-Chancellor of England overruled the demurrer, on the ground that it appeared plainly that Gibbs's costs must have been paid by Hill in the first place; but Lord Lyndhurst reversed that decision, for that Gibbs in his view was only a creditor; that the trust for payment of those costs was equally revocable as an ordinary trust for payment of debts, (Garrard v. Lord Lauderdale, supra, p. 59,) and Lady Glamis was at liberty to revoke it. This case, it will be seen, does not affect the present question, it was decided on quite a different principle; it was an attempt to enforce the contract, not through, but against one of the authors of the stipulation, which was introduced only for the convenience of that party, not to benefit the creditor.

(a) See the judgments of Lord Langdale and Lord Cottenham in Hill v. Gomme, 1 Beav. 540; and 5 Mylne & Cr. 255; supra, p. 280, note.

(b) Supra, p. 276.

instance, within the degree of a brother, then that the party in whose favour such stipulation has been made, or those claiming under him, shall be entitled to stand in the place of the person who exacted the stipulation in his favour, and to enforce it against the parties to the contract from whom the stipulation was exacted, and against their representatives. But when such a contract has been sought to be enforced by persons claiming through the covenantor against his heir, the court has (at least in some cases) regarded them with so much of favour as first to inquire, whether the arrangement entered into was a reasonable arrangement (a); and Lord Hardwicke seems to have

(a) In Edwards v. Countess of Warwick, 2 P. W. 174, before cited, supra, p. 262, (1723,) the question arose upon a settlement executed, and the point in dispute was whether the limitations to the collaterals, who were relations of the party at whose instance the stipulation was introduced, could be supported as against a purchaser claiming the benefit of the statute of the 27th of Elizabeth; but the reasoning in that case, which has been adopted in subsequent cases, applies to the point now under consideration. The consideration for the precedent limitations in a marriage settlement, said Lord Macclesfield, has been applied even to subsequent ones (provided the transaction be fair and honest, see the dictum of Lord Kenyon, in Nunn v. Wilsman, 8 T. R. 529); as where, in consideration of a marriage and portion, land has been settled on the husband for life, and then to the wife for life, remainder to the children, with remainder to a brother, these considerations have extended to the brother; and the reason is, because it may be very well intended that the husband, or his parents, would not have come into this settlement unless all the parties thereto had agreed to the limitation to the brother: (and see Sugd. V. and P. 932-4, particularly the dictum of Lord Eldon in Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Vesey, 92, after stated). In the case of Osgood v. Strode, 2 P. W. 245-7, affirmed with some hesitation by Lord King, C. (see note to 2 Eq. Ab. 25, § 26, A.D. 1724,) a father, and his son who was seized in fee subject to certain equitable claims of his father, on the marriage of the son articulated to settle lands on the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the issue male of the marriage, remainder to the nephew of the son (grandchild of the father), in fee. As the father had an equitable interest in the property, it might therefore, said the Lord Chancellor, well be presumed that he would not have joined unless the property had been limited over to the nephew, therefore the nephew could not be considered as a volunteer; and the Lord C. at the instance of the nephew, decreed a specific performance of the articles against the representatives of the father and the son. There was no question in this case as to creditors or purchasers. Edward the son had so far attempted to repudiate the covenant, that he had devised the estates in a manner inconsistent with the covenant. Lord King, in affirming the decree, was in a great degree influenced by its being a reasonable provision, 2 P. W. 258; see Sir Edward Sugden's observations on this case, V. and P. 932.

In the case of Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 599 (A. D. 1731), by marriage articles, which were executed on the marriage of the son, to which the father was a party, (though he contributed nothing in value, the whole of the money consideration for the covenants on the part of the son having come from the wife,) the son, who appeared to have particular reasons for desiring to favour his brothers, covenanted to purchase and settle lands of certain value upon his issue male, and in the event of no such issue upon his two brothers (the plaintiffs) in succession: the estate was not purchased, and the covenantor died without issue male. Lord King, at the instance of the brothers, enforced a specific execution of this covenant against the wife, who was residuary devisee and legatee and executrix of the son; it was made, said his lordship, on a solemn occasion, and was an agreement which not only his own but his wife's relatives came into; and he would not put the plaintiffs to sue on the covenant in the names of the trustees for the recovery of damages, as that would be an inadequate remedy (ibid. 599); holding that even the covenantor himself could not have refused to perform it (that is, at the instance of the father, or of the brothers as standing in his place). Lord Hardwicke, in Stephens v. Trueman, 1 Ves. Sen. 73 (1748), as before noticed (p. 280), observes (p. 74), upon this and the preceding case (Osgood v. Strode), and other cases which he mentions, that they thought that the court ought not to interfere to enforce the specific execution of such a contract, at the instance of a person not claiming adversely to the covenantor, if in doing so the heir would be left without a competent provision (a).

show that the court had got out of the strictness of the old rule (viz., that none but parties should have the benefit of marriage articles), where the party plainly stipulating for the volunteer, as father for his daughter, &c., gave any sort of consideration (and small circumstances have been held to constitute a consideration, Nunn v. Wilsmore, 8 T. R. 529; Lord Kenyon, Sugd. V. and P. 936); or where an action might have been brought by the covenantees (trustees) for substantial damages. Lord Hardwicke decided Stephens v. Trueman, 1 Ves. 73, partly on this ground; the bill was filed by a collateral heir of the father of the wife, against her heir, ex parte maternâ, to have the specific performance of articles; the consideration which the father had given was, that he had secured a sum of 500*l.* to his daughter which before was contingent: the daughter covenanted with the trustees for herself and her heirs, &c., that the real estate to which she was or might become entitled should be settled to uses, namely, to herself for life, then to the issue of the marriage, then to her sister and her issue, and then to the father's right heirs: Lord Hardwicke decided that the covenant ought to be performed; the ground was, the consideration on the part of the father, and that there was a subsisting covenant; et v. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. 215; 1 Dick. 132.

(a) Goring v. Nash, 3 Atk. 186; Reg. Lib. 1743, fo. 666; before Lord Hardwicke (1744). This case, as it appears in the Registrar's Book, arose as follows. By articles executed on the marriage of Sir Robert Fagg's eldest son with Sarah Ward, in consideration of the marriage and of 4000*l.* portion covenanted to be paid by William Ward, father of the intended wife, Sir Robert Fagg and his son covenanted with William Ward, the father, that they or the survivor would, on or before the 1st of February then next, convey to the trustees therein named, a portion of the estates mentioned in the articles, to the use of Robert Fagg, the son, for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c. remainder to trustees for 200 years, to secure a jointure of 400*l.* a year to the wife, with remainders over to the use of the issue of Robert Ward, male and female, by his intended wife (all which had become of no effect by the death of Robert Fagg the son without issue). It was further covenanted that another portion of the estates should be settled by them for four years from the marriage to the use of Sir R. Fagg, and at the expiration of that time to the use of R. Fagg the son for life, with the same remainders as those which were limited in regard to the first-mentioned premises, and that other premises in the counties of Sussex and Kent should be conveyed by them chargeable with the 400*l.* a year jointure, to the use of Sir R. Fagg for life, remainder to trustees for 300 years, for raising portions for the daughters of Sir R. Fagg, so as to make them up, together with what the grandfather had charged on the estates in their favour, to 8000*l.*: then to the use of R. Fagg, the son, for life, remainder to trustees, &c.: then to trustees for 400 years for securing portions for younger children of that marriage, remainder to the use of the first and other sons of the marriage, with certain remainders over, which never took effect, and in default of heirs of the body of Robert Fagg, the son, all the estates comprised in the articles were covenanted to be settled, subject to the 400*l.* per annum jointure to use of the plaintiff, Elizabeth Fagg, daughter of Sir R. Fagg, in tail, unless Sir Robert, the father, should otherwise appoint, with remainders over, the ultimate remainder being to John Fagg, in fee; William Ward, the father, covenanted immediately to pay the 4000*l.* Sir R. Fagg died intestate, whereupon the estates in question descended to the son; the son gave directions that a settlement should be prepared according to the articles, and a draft was prepared, which, as it was alleged, he approved; but before he had executed the settlement he died, intestate and without issue, leaving his wife surviving. The plaintiff and her three sisters were coheiresses-at-law of Robert Fagg, the son, and the plaintiff sought to have the covenant in the articles specifically executed against her sisters: it was objected that all the uses, excepting that for securing the jointure, were voluntary, and to the disinheritance of the defendants, and that the articles were a partial and inequitable division in favour of the plaintiff. On the original hearing (1729), Lord Hardwicke referred it to the Master to inquire what were the respective values of the real estates which had descended to the plaintiff and her three sisters, as coheiresses-at-law, and what incumbrances and debts there were affecting them. The Master reported that estates were clearly comprised in the articles, which were of the yearly value of 820*l.* 6*s.*, chargeable (with other estates) with the jointure; that other estates, of the value of 530*l.* a year, were also comprised in the Lord Northington indeed seems to have thought that, according to the authorities, even where the covenantor was himself the owner of the estate, and the only claim of the third person in the way of consideration was relationship to the covenantor himself, and the covenant was therefore purely voluntary on the part of the covenantor, still it might be enforced against his representatives (a), for that it was equally an expression of an intention in favour of the third person, as if the estate had been devised according to corresponding limitations, in articles; that there were other estates, of the value of 737*l.* per annum, and that it was doubtful whether they were comprised in the articles; that estates, of the value of 804*l.* per annum were not comprised in the articles, and had descended to the plaintiff and her sister; that the widow of Sir R. Fagg, the grandfather, was entitled to dower over all the estates, and that all the estates were charged with the jointure of 400*l.* a year to the widow of the son; and that the incumbrances on the estates descended amounted to 23,849*l.* On the hearing, on further directions, Lord Hardwicke directed that on the circumstances of this case, the plaintiff and her husband (she having married) were entitled to have a specific performance of the articles, as to such uses as were still subsisting; it was referred back to the Master to review his report with regard to those estates which he had not reported, whether they were or were not comprised in the articles, and if he should find that they were comprised in the articles, they were to be settled in the same manner. The Master was to adjust the proportions in which each estate was to bear the jointure of 400*l.* as between themselves, according to their values; and on such jointure being secured, William Ward was ordered to pay the residue of the 4000*l.* remaining unpaid. According to the report in Atkins, Lord Hardwicke made his decree on three grounds:—1, that the plaintiff, in respect of a charge she had affecting all the lands, was clearly entitled to a specific performance of the articles in part (see Davenport v. Bishopp, 1 Phill. 705, infra); 2, that the trustees, as covenantees, would have been entitled to recover the whole value of the estate out of the real assets (following in this respect Vernon v. Vernon, 2 P. W. 594, sup.; and see 1 Phill. 702); 3, that this limitation was part of the provision made by a father for his daughter, (the estate had in fact belonged to him,) 3 Atk. 189: a provision for younger children, said Lord Hardwicke, is always favoured here; they are considered as purchasers, by reason of the natural obligation of parents to provide for their children; hence surrenders are aided for their benefit: and though Lord Hardwicke in this case (Goring v. Nash), thought the Lord Keeper's reasoning in Watts v. Bullas, 1 P. W. 60, too large, as taking in too extensive a range of relations, (he had aided a defective conveyance in favour of a brother of the half-blood;) his lordship apparently admitted the reasonableness of the doctrine when confined to a wife or children.

Lord Hardwicke, it will be seen, directed the original inquiry, in order to ascertain whether the provision made by the articles was a reasonable one, having regard to what the other daughters took by descent; see pp. 188, 189, 191 of the report in Atkins. The reasonableness of the arrangement had also an influence in Osgood v. Strode, supra, 2 P. W. 258, as it has had in many other similar cases. Finch v. Lord Winchelsea, 1 P. W. 277; Rodgers v. Marshall, 17 Ves. 294; and Cory v. Cory, 1 Ves. 19; Glessen v. Ogden, cited 2 Atk. 258; and see Saunders's note, 3 Atk. 188.

In none of these cases, it will be observed, was there an attempt on the part of a volunteer to enforce a stipulation against the covenantor, solely on the ground of the relationship between the covenantor and himself. In each case the party who had exacted the stipulation was dead, without his having in any manner released the covenantor; the claimants sought to stand in the place of the party who, for a valuable consideration as regards the original settlement, had exacted the stipulation sought to be enforced, and to have the benefit of the covenant, which the covenantees, as it seems to have been admitted, might have enforced at law. The Relationship was made use of to show that it was not only natural but reasonable that the party who had contributed to the consideration on the original settlement should have exacted such a stipulation in favour of the third person, and to show that it was with a view to confer a benefit on such third person that the stipulation was exacted.

(a) Not against the covenantor himself, for in Wycherley v. Wycherley, 2 Eden, 177, the same learned judge said he knew no instance where a court of equity had compelled a man to execute a mere act of volition; but as regards the representatives, the covenantor himself not having expressed any different intention, it is compelling them to carry his will into effect.

which case the heir would clearly be excluded ; it certainly is difficult to find a distinction in principle between the two cases, though in the case of a will the estate is conveyed, in the case of articles there is only a covenant to convey, which however in equity, where there is a contract, is equivalent to a conveyance (a).

The modern authorities have certainly established, as a general rule, that where a contract under which a plaintiff claims is not founded on valuable consideration, this court will not lend its aid to perfect the plaintiff's title (b); and that although the contract may have been entered into between father and son (c). But all these cases (d) appear to relate to the question whether a person can enforce against the contractor a mere agreement entered into with the party himself, or can enforce the completion of an imperfect conveyance or gift made directly by one person to another without any consideration, where the transaction does not amount to a declaration of trust in

(a) See the case of Hale v. Lamb, 2 Eden, 295. Lord Chancellor Northington there said, referring to Osgoode v. Strode, Watts v. Bullas, and Vernon v. Vernon, that a settlement made on marriage, with extension to collaterals, if defective in law should be made good in equity for the same collaterals ; for the consideration of the marriage and the settling of the estate run through all the limitations, and the authorities confirm the decision. "Nor do I see," said his lordship, "any sound objection to this, for a man's serious disposition by will, as all will admit, supersedes the heir-at-law without injustice" (but there it is to be observed that the estate passes to the devisee), "and these cases," said his lordship, "have nothing to do with the statutes against fraudulent conveyances : " and in that case Lord Northington expressed his opinion to be, that if the covenantor had died without issue male, and the limitations had run out, the uncle would have been entitled to a specific performance.

(b) Vice-Chancellor Wigram, M'Fadden v. Jenkins, 1 Hare, 460 ; for which proposition the learned judge cited Colman v. Sarel, 3 Bro. 12, 1 Ves. Jun 50 ; Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 656 ; Adams v. Claxton, 6 Ves. 226 ; Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 39 ; Colteen v. Missing, 1 Mad. 76 ; Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 84 ; Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 140 ; Edwards v. Jones, 1 My. & Cr. 226, (which has been followed in the late case of Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 99,) and Dillon v. Coppin, 4 My. & Cr. 647 ; Consitt v. Bell, 1 Yo. & C., C. C. 577.

(c) Holloway v. Headington, 8 Sim. 324 ; Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & Phillips, 138 ; Dillon v. Coppin, 4 My. & Cr. 647 ; which cases may be considered as having overruled Sir E. Sugden's decision in Ellis v. Nimmo,

Lloyd & J. temp. Sugd. p. 333. "My impression," said Lord Cottenham, in Jefferys v. Jefferys, 1 Cr. & P. 141, "is that the principle of the court to withhold its assistance from a volunteer applies equally, whether he seeks to have the benefit of a contract, a covenant, or a settlement."

(d) And see Hale v. Lambe, 2 Eden, 294 ; Fursaker v. Robinson, Pr. Ch. 475, which was the case of a grandchild seeking to have a surrender supplied under a covenant for further assurance ; Evelyn v. Templar, 2 Bro. C. C. 148 ; Malcolm v. Scott, 3 Hare, 39 ; Walburn v. Ingilby, 1 My. & K. 61, and Ward v. Audland, 8 Sim. 571, 8 Beav. 201. It may here be observed, that the court will not supply a surrender, excepting in favour of those who can rely on a legal or moral obligation, as creditors, bonâ fide purchasers or mortgagees as regards the former, and a wife and legitimate children as regards the latter ; v. int. alia Bradley v. Bradley, 2 Vern. 164 ; Wardell v. Wardell, 3 Bro. 116, 12 Ves. 216 ; Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 1 Ves. 228 ; Byas v. Byas, 2 Ves. 164 ; Kettle v. Townsend, 1 Salk. 187 ; Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 386 ; Fielding v. Winwood, 16 Ves. 90 ; Sampson v. Sampson, 2 Ves. & B. 337 ; and not even in favour of the latter, if the heir be not to some extent provided for by settlement or otherwise ; Hawkins v. Leigh, 1 Atk. 388, (but see on this point, Hills v. Downton, 5 Ves. 557, 564). It will not be supplied in favour of a grandchild, especially where the father is living ; Elton v. Elton, 3 Atk. 508 ; Crickett v. Dolby, infra ; nor of a natural daughter against the heir under the ancestor's covenant for further assurance ; Fursaker v. Robinson, Prec. Ch. 475 ; Gilb. Eq. R. 139 ; Crickett v. Dolby, 3 Ves. 12.

favour of such person (a). There is not, as it is believed, any decision which controverts the several cases before referred to, so far as they establish that a third person, particularly if a relation, may enforce in equity a legal existing stipulation exacted from another in his favour, and for which the party exacting it has given a valuable consideration plainly with a view to benefitting such third person, though such third person, as regards each of the contracting parties, may be a volunteer; some of the decisions on the subject of the operation of the statute of the 27th of Eliz. (which will presently be mentioned), seem to confirm them (b): in the case of Sutton v. Chetwynd, before Sir Wm. Grant, which might appear to be at variance with those cases, the party who sought to enforce the covenant in the articles was not a relation, nor could it be supposed that any favour towards him or the person whom he represented could have influenced any of the parties to the articles (c) in the stipulations which they entered into one with another (d).

Where money has been deposited in the hands of trustees, or lands have been conveyed to them with a view to an investment, or a settlement upon the proposed trusts, the case is stronger in favour of the parties who claim under the alleged voluntary limitations, for the legal title to the property being in the trustees, the court must interfere for some one, in order that the money or the land may be obtained from the trustees; and the specified object of the trust, whether it be a designated person, or those who claim under him, or the heir, or the personal representative, would appear in such case, under the limitations in their favour, clearly to have the preferable claim to all others.

There are instances where a third person has been expressly allowed to treat the party exacting the stipulation as his trustee, though such third person was a mere stranger to the parties. In the case of Gregory v. Williams (e), one Parker, who was in possession of a farm belonging to the defendant Williams, was considerably indebted to Williams, he also owed a large debt to one Gregory; Parker, as Williams knew, was under apprehensions that Gregory would arrest him; Williams,

(a) See Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 100; et v. sup. p. 57.

(b) V. p. 291, infra.

(c) And see Lord Cottenham's observations on this case, 1 Phill. 704, and Lord Eldon's, Turn. & R. 296.

(d) Sutton v. Chetwynd, 3 Mer. 249, affirmed in the House of Lords, see Turn. & R. 296, and the note to Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 456; and see Ellis v. Nimmo, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 343. The Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in reference to another point, on which Lord Hardwicke partly proceeded in Goring v. Nash, supra, p. 284, namely, that where articles are to be carried into effect in part, they must be carried into effect in toto, remarked that if Sir R. Sutton had been a defendant, and some one within the consideration had sought to enforce the contract, the result might have been different, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 462; and see Jenkyns v. Kemys, 1 Lev. 150, 237; 1 Ch. Ca. 105.

(e) 3 Meriv. 582.

the landlord, and Parker, the tenant, entered into an agreement, in writing, to which Gregory, the creditor, was neither a party nor privy, to the following effect, namely, that if Parker would make over to Williams all his stock and effects of every kind, he would pay the debt due to Gregory. Gregory subsequently was informed of this arrangement, and he and Parker filed the bill against Williams to enforce it: the stock and effects assigned to Williams by Parker had been sold at a loss. It was insisted by Williams, that if Gregory had any remedy it was at law; Sir Wm. Grant considered that it was at least doubtful whether Gregory could recover at law, for the engagement of Williams was not made directly to Gregory but to Parker only, and the consideration was furnished by Parker only, for he alone did the acts which constituted the consideration, Gregory was not a party to the contract; however that learned judge supported Gregory's right to sue in equity, saying, Parker acts as his trustee, and Gregory may derive an equitable right through the medium of Parker's agreement, though it was at least questionable whether he could have maintained an action at law; it was like the case (a) where a man promised the widow that if she would allow his name to be joined with hers in the administration, he would make up the deficiency of the assets for the payment of the intestate's debts; which promise was held to be binding in favour of the creditors, though they could not sue at law, as the promise was not made to them; so here Gregory had a right to insist upon the benefit of the promise made to Parker, to the extent of 900*l.*, which Parker represented to be the amount of the debt (b).

Where there are a series of limitations, some of which are in favour of persons who are parties to the contract or to the consideration, and others in favour of strangers to both; and any one of the parties who is within the consideration files a bill to have the articles carried into execution, the court will not carry into effect those provisions which are in favour of the parties to the contract or consideration, and stop there, but it will carry them into execution in toto, whatever it might do if the stranger sought to have the contract enforced (c).

(a) Tomlinson v. Gill, Ambl. 330.

(b) 1 Meriv. 590: so in Hook v. Kinnear. Kinnear and Sir John Phillips were tenants in common of some lands; Kinnear had taken a lease from Sir John Phillips of his moiety, at a rent. The rent being in arrear, Kinnear entered into an agreement with Sir John Phillips, by which he bound himself to join in executing to the plaintiff such lease as the plaintiff and Sir John Phillips should agree upon, Sir John to receive the rent till the arrears due from Kinnear were paid. Sir John performed his part by executing a lease of his moiety to the plaintiff. The Lord Chancellor considered that Sir John had contracted on behalf of himself and the plaintiff (which made him a quasi party), and decreed a specific performance of this agreement against Kinnear. Hook v. Kinnear, 3 Swanst. 417, n. (no date).

(c) Davenport v. Bishopp, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 456, confirmed on appeal, 1 Phillips, p. 698;

An agreement entered into to secure the peace of a family, though resting on contract, will be supported and enforced at the instance of any one of the persons who are to take a benefit under the arrangement and those claiming under him, though the party seeking to enforce it may not have contributed any portion of the consideration; the doctrine as to volunteers is not applied to such cases (a).

The doctrine in regard to the rights of purchasers and creditors, to avoid voluntary provisions by way of settlement, has been adverted to as bearing upon this subject. I have therefore here introduced the general heads of that doctrine.

By rather a forced construction of the stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4 (b), it has been held that a voluntary settlement in favour of a wife and children is void against a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration even with notice (c); and a specific performance of a contract for sale of the estate so settled entered into by the settlor, will be decreed at the instance of the purchaser even after the death of the settlor (d). It is held that the purchaser can in no way be affected by the settlement; it matters not that he takes with notice from a person who by reason of the settlement is a trustee of the estate; the statute annuls the deed as against the purchaser, he cannot therefore be affected with the trusts of the deed so destroyed (e). As against the party himself the settlement is valid; but though this is admitted, the court, with some degree of inconsistency, will not interfere to prevent a sale, by which the settlor seeks, by taking advantage of the provisions of and see the Vice-Chancellor's remarks on Sutton v. Chetwynd, and Goring v. Nash, supra, p. 283, note.

(a) Stapilton v. Stapilton, 1 Atk. 10, (1739). In that case an agreement by deed had been entered into by a father, his eldest son (then treated as legitimate, but who afterwards turned out to be illegitimate), and the second son (legitimate). Lord Hardwicke decreed that it should be carried into execution at the instance of the son of the illegitimate son, chiefly on the ground that it was entered into to establish the peace of a family (p. 11). It is to be observed that the real heir, the eldest son, took a portion of the estates under the agreement so carried into execution. This case was followed by Lord Langdale, in Neale v. Neale, 1 Keen, 68, though the agreement was by parol only, and related to lands, but there had been long possession in conformity; this case was affirmed on appeal.

(b) Supra, vol. i. p. 172.

(c) Smith v. Garland, 2 Meriv. 127; Doe dem. Otley v. Manning, 9 East, 59; Cotterel

v. Homer, 13 Sim. 506.

(d) Sir Wm. Grant, in Buckle v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 100, followed the doctrine which he found settled, but he doubted whether, on principle, the statute of the 27th Eliz. ought to have been applied to cases where the purchaser had notice; as the purchaser, knowing of the settlement, cannot be said to be defrauded, ibid. p. 110. In Lister v. Turner, 5 Hare, 291, Vice-Chancellor Wigram considered that that case had established that an equitable interest in land entitles a purchaser by contract to clothe it with the legal title; he therefore felt himself bound to hold that an equitable mortgagee was entitled to avoid a voluntary conveyance. Copyholds are within the statute, Doe dem. Tunstill v. Bottriell, 5 Barn. & Adol. 131.

(e) Currie v. Nind, 1 My. & Cr. 25. There the property belonged to a married woman, and the settlement was made during coverture, but that did not prevent the operation of the statute; Goodright v. Moses, 1 Blackst. 1019, ibid.

the statute, to get rid of the settlement (a). The parties in whose favour a constituted trust is created by voluntary settlement may indeed file a bill to have the trust carried into execution; but the pendency of the suit will not prevent the settlor from selling the property, or the purchaser from filing a bill to enforce his rights under the contract (b). There is a difference in this respect in favour of Charity: a purchaser with notice of a gift to a charitable use takes subject to the charitable use, but if he had no notice, he will have the same protection as in an ordinary bonâ fide purchaser without notice (c).

If the settlor has reserved a power to sell, and has covenanted that in case he shall sell, the purchase money shall be laid out in the purchase of land to the same uses, that does not so far bind the money as that the purchaser is bound to see to the application; he may safely pay to his vendor (d). In the case of a sale of an estate settled on volunteers the court will neither impede nor assist: it will not interfere in any manner as against the settlor in respect of a voluntary settlement (e), nor will the court give its aid to the settlor to enable him to complete a contract for sale against a purchaser (f).

A voluntary settlement is with greater reason held to be void under

(a) Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 93. Lord Eldon's first impression had been different, he had granted an injunction.

(b) Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, ubi sup.; Metcalfe v. Pulvertoft, 1 Ves. & B. 180; 2 Ves. & B. 200; Sugden, V. and P. 941.

(c) Sugd. V. and P. 944-5.

(d) Evelyn v. Templar, 2 Bro. 148. Lord Lord Eldon, in Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 93, says of Evelyn v. Templar: "But if Lord Thurlow did not think himself authorized to lay hold of the money in Evelyn v. Templar, where there was notice and an express covenant to lay out the money to the same uses, I must take his opinion to have been, as I believe it was, that with a mere voluntary settlement this court has nothing to do." From this statement of Evelyn v. Templar, it might be supposed, that it arose on an attempt to intercept the money, so that it might not be paid to the settlor, and that the settlor was a party. But, in fact, the bill was against the representative of the purchaser only, and it sought to compel him to pay the purchase money over again out of the assets of the purchaser, on the ground that the money was bound by the uses of the settlement; it being insisted that the settlement, which the statute made void, was good for that purpose, which it clearly could not be as against the purchaser. But that case does not decide that the money in the hands of the settlor would not have been bound, though it has been so considered; that case, therefore, may stand with Williamson v. Codrington, 1 Ves. 516, in which case the covenant was in favour of natural children, and therefore not so strong as in the case of a wife and legitimate children: besides Lord Thurlow's expressions, two years afterwards, in Colman v. Safrel, 1 Ves. J. 54-5, a case of a mere stranger (v. supra, p. 57, note), are, "Whenever you come into equity to raise an interest by way of trust, you must have a valuable or, at least, a meritorious consideration; nothing less will do"—having in his mind, as it would seem, Lord Hardwicke's doctrines as to the consideration as between parent and child; see particularly Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. Sen. 411, 412; and see Parry v. Carwarden, 2 Dick. 544, as stated 18 Ves. 92, note (b): so that all that Lord Eldon meant, possibly, was, that as against the purchaser this court would have nothing to do with a voluntary settlement, which was all that the case before him called for. But this note rather belongs to another place, where it will be referred to.

(e) Sir Wm. Grant, Smith v. Garland, 2 Meriv. 127, (et v. 18 Ves. 93); Buckle v. Mitchell, 18 Ves. 112.

(f) Smith v. Garland, ubi sup.

the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5 (a). But there is this difference between the stat. 27 Eliz. and the stat. 13 Eliz. If, said Lord Hardwicke, as reported, there is a voluntary conveyance of real estate or a chattel interest by one not indebted at the time, though he afterwards become indebted, if that voluntary conveyance was for a child, and no particular evidence or badge of fraud to deceive or defraud subsequent creditors, that will be good; but if any mark of fraud, collusion, or intent to deceive subsequent creditors appear, that will make it void, otherwise not, but it will stand, though afterwards he becomes indebted (b): under the 27 Eliz., the settlement is absolutely void as against a purchaser, whatever may have been the circumstances of the settlor at the time.

The courts will anxiously endeavour to support a fair settlement even as against the claims of a purchaser or creditors, and in the absence of fraud nearly any bonâ fide consideration will be sufficient for that purpose. Therefore if a person, whose concurrence the parties think essential, join in a settlement, his concurrence will be deemed a valuable consideration, although he did not substantially part with anything (c): arrears due on a voluntary bond are a valuable consideration (d).

If on a marriage, and in consideration of that marriage, an estate is limited to the husband and the issue by other persons who are of the family, and therefore may be considered as making a provision for the persons claiming under that settlement, the husband may set up a claim as purchaser for a valuable consideration, not with a view to his own enjoyment simply, but because his enjoyment of that estate is part of the inducement to the marriage itself. If a father in consideration of the marriage of his son were to convey an estate in fee to the son, the son would be a purchaser for a valuable consideration, though no consideration had passed to the father but the marriage. All the provisions made for the husband, as well as for the wife and issue by a marriage settlement, are to be taken as for valuable consideration (e).

(a) Sup. vol. i. p. 185. As to some questions as to frame of the suit for taking advantage of the statute, and the capacity of the creditor, particularly whether he must obtain a judgment at law; see Lister v. Turner, 5 Hare, 281.

(b) Lord Hardwicke, Lord Townsend v. Windham, 2 Ves. 10, 11; et v. Walker v. Burrows, 1 Atk. 93; Cutten v. Sanger, 2 Gl. & J. 459; and Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 112.

(c) Sir E. Sugd. V. and P. 936, Roe v. Mitton, 2 Wils. 356, and other cases there cited: all reasonable transactions of this kind are favoured, Cory v. Cory, 1 Ves. 19; Glissen v. Ogden, cited 2 Atk. 258; Lord Kenyon, Nunn v. Wilsmore, 8 T. R. 529; Dewey v. Bayntun, 6 East, 273.

(d) Tanner v. Byne, 1 Simons, 160.

(e) Lord Redesdale, O'Gorman v. Comyn, 2 Sch. & Lef. 148.

Where a settlement is actually executed, and a limitation to a collateral is inserted, whether the parties claiming under such a limitation can prevail as against a purchaser has lately been the subject of much discussion (a).

Lord Macclesfield was of opinion that, as a general rule, the marriage portion did not go beyond the limitations to the husband and wife and issue, so as to affect creditors or purchasers, even where the property was actually conveyed upon the trusts stated. However, Lord Eldon observed, as has been before noticed (b), that in the case of a father, tenant for life, with remainder to his son in tail, they may agree, upon the marriage of the son, to settle not only upon his issue, but upon the brothers and uncles of that son; and the question would be, whether they, though not within the consideration of the marriage, are not within the contract between the father and the son, both having a right to insist upon a provident provision for uncles, brothers, sisters, and other relations, and to say to each other "I will not agree, unless you will so settle." The court, he added, has held such a claim not to be that of a mere volunteer, but as falling within the range of the consideration, and therefore, said his Lordship, these statutes would not bear upon it (c). Very small considerations, said Lord Kenyon, have been holden sufficient to give validity to a deed; where, in framing family settlements, limitations are made in favour of distant branches of the family, such remainders are not considered as voluntary if the object of the parties in making the settlement was fair and honest (d).

In Johnson v. Legard (e), the point was expressly put to the judges of the Court of King's Bench, in a case from the Court of Chancery. The wife had only a rent-charge, and therefore, as Sir E. Sugden observes (f), it might be supposed that she stipulated for the settlement of the estate in remainder on her husband's brothers (it was the husband's estate (g),) in order that the family dignity might be maintained, and her annuity be regularly paid; but the Court of King's Bench (1818), composed of Lord Ellenborough, Mr. Justice Bailey, Mr. Justice Abbott, and Mr. Justice Holroyd, unanimously certified their opinion that none of the limitations to the collaterals were good or valid limitations; the Vice-Chancellor, Sir J. Leach, expressed his entire concurrence with the certificate, and decreed accordingly (h).

(a) It might perhaps be sufficient here to refer to Sir E. Sugden's ample treatise, p. 932, et seq.

(b) And see Sugden, V. and P. 932.

(c) Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, 18 Ves. 92, supra, and v. Ithell v. Beane, 1 Ves. 215; 1 Dick. 132.

(d) Lord Kenyon, Nunn v. Wilsmore, 8 T. R. 529.

(e) See the case stated, Sugd. V. and P. 940.

(f) V. and P. 934.

(g) S. C. 3 Mad. 297.

(h) 3 Mad. 302. Lord Eldon also appears

Sir E. Sugden, in the case of Stackpoole v. Stackpoole (1843), observed upon Johnson v. Legard, that it went beyond what the law authorized, "but," said that learned and very able judge, "the authorities on the whole are, I think, in favour of the courts acting in such cases; so also is the current of opinion, to which I always pay great attention—and I believe it is generally considered that a contract for valuable consideration will bind in this court those having merely voluntary interests, and I am therefore prepared, when called upon, so to decide" (a). It is to be presumed therefore that, as regards purchasers and creditors, the law on this subject is settled: but these cases are governed by positive acts of parliament; they do not necessarily determine that a collateral relation may not enforce a stipulation in his favour, as against the party who has contracted with another for valuable consideration, that he shall have the benefit which he is seeking to obtain: or that he shall not have the benefit of a provision, unrevoked, which a person has voluntarily made for him, as against the representatives of the person making the provision. In the former case, as between himself and the party exacting the stipulation he is a volunteer, but standing in the place of the party who exacted the stipulation, as against the other parties, he claims the benefit of the consideration given by such party; and though according to the decisions lastly above adverted to, the collateral may not be able to claim even under an executed settlement, as against purchasers and creditors, by reason of the provisions of the acts in favour of creditors and purchasers, those decisions do not necessarily stamp the character of volunteer upon the collateral, so as to prevent his coming to the court to enforce even a contract in his favour as against the parties to the contract who have bound themselves that property shall be settled or applied in a manner which the collateral seeks to have carried out, or against their representatives. In the latter case, namely, where the provision made is entirely voluntary, if specific property be actually settled in favour of a collateral, it is a constituted trust (b), in respect of which, it is presumed, no question can arise: if the matter rests in contract and that contract affects specific property, it is presumed, at least if the covenantor does nothing in his lifetime indicative of a to have approved the certificate, S. C. Turner & R. 295. Yet it was not quite in conformity with his doctrine in Pulvertoft v. Pulvertoft, unless that doctrine is to be confined to contracts as to the property of a stranger.

(a) Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, 2 Conn. & L. 508, and see p. 507. "It admits of no doubt that the collateral relations are not within the marriage consideration," i.e. as regards purchasers and creditors, "and nothing appears on this instrument to take it out of the general rule of law, which is too well settled to admit of discussion," S. C. 4 Dru. & War. 320; and see Cotterell v. Homer, 13 Sim. 506.

(b) V. supra, pp. 52, 149.

change of intention, the property will be bound as against all volunteers claiming under the covenantor, and consequently the covenant may be enforced as against his representatives, if, on the whole, the transaction, looking to the circumstances as regards the different members of the family at the time, does not appear to have been an unreasonable one: the strict measure, says Lord Hardwicke, in Goring v. Nash, which governs the court in a question between persons who come to carry articles into execution and purchasers, is not the rule of this court between families, for between families the court has considered whether a superior or inferior equity arises on the part of the person who comes for a specific performance; it is one consideration, he adds, how far the court will support agreements of this kind against relations in a family, and another against purchasers and creditors (a). But where the matter rests on contract merely, as where there is a covenant that a certain sum, or that land of a certain value, not specifying any particular fund or any particular lands to give, shall be settled, so as to give to the claimant, he not being a party to the contract or to the consideration, an interest in the property to be settled; this seems to be a case in which the Court of Chancery will not, at his instance, in any way interfere (b).

(a) Cited by Lord Cottenham in Davenport v. Bishopp, 1 Phillips, 705; so a family arrangement will not readily be disturbed as founded on error; Clifton v. Cockburn, 3 My.

& K. 100-1; et v. sup. p. 290, n. (c).

(b) V. supra, p. 285, et v. infra, "Voluntary Conveyances of Equitable Estates and Interests."

ADDITIONAL NOTES.

In addition to the cases, p. 257-8, in which it has been held that the directions in a will amounted to an absolute conversion, see Flint v. Warren, ix. Jur. 420, 14 Sim. 554; and Ward v. Arch, 16 Law J., N. S. 66.

P. 271. Trustees held real estate in trust to sell and invest the proceeds, and to stand possessed of the proceeds for the absolute benefit of a person named. That person obtained possession of the title deeds from his solicitor; it was held that this amounted to a declaration of intention that the fund should be considered as real estate; Davies v. Ashford, ix. Jur. 612.

SECTION V.—Miscellaneous Instances of Implied, Presumptive, Constructive, and Transferred or Continuing Trusts.

Court of Chancery more liberal than Courts of Law in putting a Construction on Devises in Trust, so as to carry out the Intent of the Testator.

The Courts of Law also governed by the Intent in determining what Estate the Devisee in Trust takes.

Stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 30, 31, as to the Estate of Trustees.

But the Cases here to be considered are those where the Legal Interest is clearly in some Third Person.

Heir a Trustee where there is a Direction to Sell.

Trustee for Sale to pay Debts constructively a Trustee for the Creditors.

Implied or Constructive Trusts may be raised by the Acts of the Parties—Consignee who is directed to pay an Annuity to a Third Person a Trustee for such Third Person.

Heir of Mortgagee in Fee Trustee for the Personal Representatives.

Executor, Trustee of a Debt due from himself to his Testator.

Legatees who have been paid before Debts satisfied, Trustees for the Creditors—One Legatee also may in some cases compel another who has been paid to refund.

When the Legatee must refund with Interest, and when not.

Person taking Property from Executor in Breach of Trust, as for Payment of a Private Debt, is himself a Trustee.

Assignees of Broker, Trustees of Price of Goods sold, if in Specie, for the Principal.

Trustee, Executor, or Agent, or Person having a Limited Interest in an Estate, obtaining a Renewal of a Lease, is a Trustee of such Renewed Interest.

Executor of Mortgagee purchasing Equity of Redemption, a Trustee for the Mortgagor's Estate.

Annuitant whose Annuity is charged on a Leasehold Interest, or whose Annuity is charged by Will on a Leasehold Interest, entitled to the Benefit of a Renewal.

Moody v. Matthew, 7 Ves., before Sir W. Grant.

Annuitant under a Will must contribute to the Fines.

Proportions in which Tenant for Life and Remainderman must contribute to Fines paid on Renewals.

Whether where a Person having a Limited Interest purchases the Reversion he shall be held as a Trustee.

Randall v. Russell, 3 Meriv., before Sir W. Grant.

The Person so converted into a Trustee entitled to an Allowance for Repairs and lasting Improvements.

The Right to convert such Person into a Trustee may be lost by Laches or Acquiescence. Tenant for Life committing Equitable Waste Trustee of the Produce.

Trust in favour of Wife on a Mortgage of her Estate for Payment of her Husband's Debts.

Trust in favour of Person having a Limited Estate paying off Incumbrances.

Generally the Person who has the Legal Right in Personal Property may of himself sue for the Property though liable to a Trust for others.

Jones v. Goodchild, 3 P. W., before Lord C. King.

Exceptions.

Loy v. Duckett, 1 Cr. & Phill., before Lord Cottenham.

The Bank of England not affected by Notice of a Trust—Ordinary Banker not a Trustee.

It may be observed that as regards the estate and the powers of trustees under devises by way of trust, (which the Court of Chancery is bound to carry into execution according to the intent of the testator) a greater latitude has been allowed than at law in the construction, to make it agree with the intent of the testator (a); though even at law, in construction, the intention is taken as the governing principle; thus, as we have seen (b), before the late act 1 Vict. c. 26, § 30, 31, where it was necessary, for the purpose of a trust created by will, that the trustees, under a devise to them, should take the inheritance, it was held that by construction of law the inheritance should pass. In case of a devise to trustees for sale before the late act above referred to (c), though only a part of the inheritance was required to be sold, yet the court would not make fractions and consider them as trustees for only a part of the inheritance, but of the whole; the possibility that the whole might be required, would make them trustees throughout, and whoever would be entitled on the contingency that the whole might not be required had to take a legal conveyance from them (d). But where the purposes of the trust might be answered by a less estate than the fee, no greater estate would pass to the trustee by implication (e). As regards the parties beneficially interested, where the trust is to pay the rents, after deducting rates, taxes, and repairs, or to deal with the property in such manner as to require that the donee should have the dominion over the estate, the donee, as was noticed in the former volume (f), will retain the legal estate in order to enable him to perform the trusts reposed in him (g). But the

(a) See Bagshaw v. Spencer, 2 Atk. 581.

(b) Supra, p. 36, Shaw v. Weigh, 1 Eq. Ab. 185: as to effect of the act, see also Ackland v. Pring, 3 Scott, N. S. 297; Doe v. Davies, 1 Ad. & Ell. N. S. 430, referred to in the Index to 2 Jarm. 798.

(c) Shaw v. Weigh, 1 Eq. Ab. 185.

(d) Lord Hardw. Gibson v. Rogers, Ambl. 93.

(e) Doe v. Simpson, 5 East, 162; Doe v. Nicholls, 1 Barn. & C. 343, Blunt's note: and a devise in trust to sell may be so confinied as not to give the inheritance, Doe v. Harris, 2 Dow. & R. 36; Jarman, i. 200; and see Heardson v. Williamson, 1 Keen, 41.

(f) Supra, vol. i. p. 466.

(g) Shapland v. Smith, 1 Bro. 74; Jarman, i. p. 201-2-3; Harton v. Harton, 7 T. R. 652: a trust to permit a feme covert to receive the rents for her separate use (v. supra, vol. i. 496; supra, p. 2): see Lord Eldon's strictures on this case, Hawkins v. Luscombe, 2 Swanst. 391.

cases more immediately belonging to our present inquiry are those where the legal estate is clearly in one person, and though no trust is expressly declared or assumed by him, the property which he holds by descent or acquisition is subjected in his hands to a trust in favour of others.

In the case of a mere direction to sell, the person through whose hands the money is to pass will, generally speaking, be held to be constituted the person who is to effect the sale; and if the legal estate be not disposed of expressly or by implication, and it be not outstanding, the heir, on whom it shall descend, will be constructively a trustee of the legal estate for the purposes of the trust (a).

A trust by implication of law may arise from the dealings and conduct of the parties (b): where a consignee is directed to pay an annuity to a third person, and he does so for a time, he will be considered as a trustee for such third person of the consignments he may have received (c). Where property is conveyed to trustees in trust to sell for payment of debts, this is an express trust only as between the grantor and the trustees; but the grantee, if he accept and act upon the trust towards the creditors, will also become, by construction, trustee for the creditors, though not parties to the deed, if the trust shall not have been revoked by the grantor whilst he has the power so to do (d); and in that case the creditors being, by construction, cestuis que trust, may enforce the performance of the provisions of the deed against the grantee (e).

Where a person has a mortgage in fee which he has not foreclosed, the legal estate in the mortgaged premises descends to his heir; but by construction of equity he is trustee for the personal representatives, and through them for the persons entitled to the personal estate of the mortgagee (f).

A debt due from an executor is in effect extinguished at law, for by the rules of law there is no remedy for it; but as an intention to extinguish the debt is not to be presumed from the mere appointment to the office, the debt is preserved in equity; the executor is

(a) Bentham v. Wiltshire, 4 Mad. 44; Tylden v. Hyde, 2 Sim. & St. 238.

(b) See Henderson v. Eason, x. Jur. 822; Simond v. Hibbert, 1 Russ. & M. 727-8.

(c) Fitzgerald v. Stewart, 2 Russ. & M. 460; S. C. on orig. hearing, 2 Sim. 333: if the agent refuse to recognise the arrangement it is different, ibid. 458-9; Williams v. Eve- rett, 14 East. 582; et v. sup. p. 58, n.(e).

(d) V. supra, p. 58-9.

(e) See King v. Denison, 1 Ves. & B. 276; et v. infra.

(f) Ellis v. Guavas, 2 Ch. C. 50; Winn v. Littleton, 2 Ch. C. 2 Ventr. 351, 2 Fonbl. 283.

converted into a trustee of the debt for the parties interested in the estate, including the residuary legatee and next of kin of the testator (a).

A constructive, in the nature of a continuing trust, arises where an executor distributes the assets of a testator to the legatees without having paid the whole of the debts of his testator, more especially where it is done in ignorance of the existence of the debts (b); as the legatees in such case have no beneficial interest till the debts are paid, they are considered in equity as trustees of the portion of assets received by them, and the creditors may follow the assets so as to make the legatees answerable personally for what they have received—in effect they have received so much money belonging to others by mistake (c). Where some of the legatees have been paid under an order of the court in a suit for the administration of the estate, and a part of the fund has been carried to the account of infants or other unpaid legatees, and a creditor is afterwards let in by reason of such portion of the fund yet remaining in court, the legatees who have not been paid, as between themselves and the creditor not coming in sooner, are not liable to pay him wholly out of what is so carried to their account; but only to pay him a due proportion of the debt, and he must seek payment of the rest of his debt in proportions against those who have been actually paid (d). In effect the original trust is continued in respect of the assets which have come to the hands of the legatees; but care is taken that no legatee shall be prejudiced by the delay of the creditor in prosecuting his claim (e). If the executor be insolvent the creditors have the same right, though the assets were originally sufficient for payment of the debts and the legacies (f), and it makes no difference whether the legacies were paid to the legatees voluntarily or by compulsion (g); the same principle will apply where an administrator has distributed the assets amongst the next of kin without paying the debts. Whether an unpaid

(a) Brown v. Selwyn, Forrest. 240; S. C. 3 Bro. P. C. 607, sup. vol. i. p. 570; Carey v. Goodinge, 3 Bro. 111; Berry v. Usher, 11 Ves. 87; Simmons v. Gutteridge, 12 Ves. 262, 264.

(b) Hodges v. Waddington, 2 Ventr. 360; March v. Russell, 3 My. & Cr. 41, there had been a considerable lapse of time in that case.

(c) March v. Russell, 3 My. & Cr. 41. In the Ecclesiastical Court the legatees were compelled to give security to refund if necessary.

(d) See Gillespie v. Alexander, ubi infra; Roper on Leg. p. 459.

(e) Anon. 1 Vern. 162, Newman v. Barton, ubi sup.; Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vernon, 94;

Gillespie v. Alexander, 3 Russell, p. 136-7; March v. Russell, 3 My. & Cr. 31. Where the payments have been made under an order of the court, the trustee is protected so that he has no right to interfere to enforce the claims of creditors in such case; Underwood v. Hatton, 5 Beav. 39; Gillespie v. Alexander, ubi supra.

(f) "A creditor shall follow the assets in equity into whosoever hands they come," Newman v. Barton, 2 Vernon, 205; Anon. 1 Vernon, 162; and see Williams on Executors, 1146.

(g) See the cases in the last note.

legatee can compel a legatee who has been paid his legacy to refund, (the executor being insolvent,) depends upon whether the assets were originally sufficient for the payment of the legacies in full (a). If the deficiency has been occasioned by debts which have turned up since the payment of the legacy, it is clear that the legatee must refund (b).

As regards the question of Interest, Lord Eldon said, "If a legacy has been erroneously paid to a legatee who has no further property in the estate, in recalling that payment I apprehend that the rule of the court is not to charge interest; but if the legatee is entitled to another fund making interest in the hands of the court, justice must be done out of his share" (c).

A person who deals with an executor in respect of property which he knows to be part of the assets of the testator, and which he knows is parted with only to answer the private purposes of the executor, cannot hold property so possessed against creditors or legatees under the will; the trust originally affecting the property is continued in the hands of persons so acquiring it: but the executor, having an absolute power of disposal, may, in general, confer a complete and indefeasible title to personal estate on a person who has no notice that the transaction is a breach of trust (d).

If a broker or commission merchant sells goods consigned to him for sale, and takes bills or promissory notes for the purchase money, in case of his bankruptcy those bills or notes, if remaining in specie and unnegotiated, will not pass to his assignees beneficially, but will belong to his principal; the trust is continued in the person of the assignees (e); so if the broker should die before payment his executor will be trustee of the purchase money for the principal or his estate (f).

It has been already (g) incidentally noticed, in speaking of renewals of leases being partnership property, by one of the partners, that if a trustee or executor, or any agent employed by such trustee or

(a) Anon. 1 P. W. 495; and Walcot v. Hall, in the note; Noel v. Robinson, 1 Vern. 94, and Raithby's note; Bell's note to Orr v. Kaines, 2 Ves. 193; Williams on Executors, 1146-7; Roper on Leg. 459.

(b) Nelthrop v. Hill, 1 Ch. Ca. 136; in Gillespie v. Alexander, 3 Russ. 130, the payments had been made to the legatees under an order of the court. In Newman v. Barton, ubi sup. a distinction is taken between a voluntary and a compulsory payment by the executor, where it is the executor who calls on the legatee to refund; Roper on Leg. 456; and see Conolly v. Farrel, 10 Beav. 142, as to contribution, as between specific legatees.

(c) Gittins v. Steele, 1 Swanst. 200.

(d) Hill v. Simpson, 7 Ves. 152; M'Leod v. Drummond, on Appeal, 17 Ves. 152; Keane v. Roberts, 4 Mad. 333; Watkins v. Cheek, 2 Sim. & S. 205; Wilson v. Moore, 1 My. & K. 146-7; et v. infra.

(e) Ex parte Dumas, 1 Atk. 232, 234; Ex parte Ousell, Ambl. 298.

(f) Burdett v. Willett, 2 Vernon, 638; and see Paul v. Birch, 2 Atk. 623. See on the general subject Grigg v. Cocks, 4 Sim. 438; and Wilkins v. Stevens, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 431.

(g) Supra, p. 208.

executor (a) (the rule may apply even to a person who meddles with the assets, though not an executor otherwise than as executor de son tort (b),) or other person having the control of the property of another, in a fiduciary character (c); or if any person having a partial interest in property held for a term—for instance, as tenant for life—obtain an additional beneficial interest in the property, such trustee, executor or other person is considered by the Court of Chancery constructively as a trustee of the beneficial increase so acquired for the persons interested in the property as it stood (d). If a term or interest in land, however short, is bequeathed to various persons in succession, and the tenant for life renew, it must be as well for the benefit of the persons to take afterwards as for himself (e); whether the new lease is granted to the same person or to any other, if the lessee in the new, takes in right of him who was the owner of the old lease, he must take subject to all the equities to which the original lease was liable (f).

The principle of these decisions as regards trustees and executors and persons in fiduciary situations, is, that where property in which others are interested is committed to the charge of any person, his first duty is to make the most of the property committed to his charge for the benefit of those who are beneficially interested in it; and the principle is carried to this extent, that an executor or other trustee is not entitled to an allowance for his time and trouble, even though it appears that he has employed himself for the benefit of the trust to the prejudice of his own private concerns (g); and if he neglect to make an investment according to the duty imposed on him, he is held to be liable to make good the loss which may be occasioned by his neglect (h). Nor is it necessary that the property should be expressly committed to the charge of such person, it is sufficient that he holds the property so as to be constructively trustee for other persons. If a

(a) See James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 392; Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Scho. & Lef. 353.

(b) Mulvany v. Dillon, 1 Ball & B. 409, q. v.

(c) East India Company v. Henchman, 1 Ves. Jun., 287; S. C. 8 Bro. P. C. 85; Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 R. & M. 132; Hichins v. Congreve, ibid. 150.

(d) Palmer v. Young, 1 Vern. 276; 2 Fonb. 118; Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298. Mr. Lewin, p. 171 to 176, has collected the cases establishing the general rule and the exceptions to it: and see 2 Yo. & Coll. 251, and Wood v. Marquis of Londonderry (Rolls, June, 1848), xii. Jurist, 735, which was decided partly upon the principle stated in the text, the circumstances however are special.

(e) James v. Dean, 11 Ves. 396; 15 Ves.

236, on rehearing; Randall v. Russell, 3 Meriv. 190, et v. Hardman v. Johnson, ibid. 347. And see Webb v. Lugar, 2 Y. & Col. 247, inf. add. note.

(f) Lord Hardwicke, Edwards v. Lewis, 3 Atk. 538, et v. ib. vol. i. p. 480, note (2).

(g) Robinson v. Pett, 3 P. W. 249; and see, on the general principle, Gould v. Fleetwood, and the other cases cited in the note, 3 P. W. 251; Cuthbert v. Peacock, 1 Salk. 155; Scattergood v. Harrison, Mos. 128; Brocksopp v. Barnes, 5 Madd. 90.

(h) Byrchall v. Bradford, 6 Mad. 13; S. C. ibid. p. 235; Lord Montford v. Lord Cadogan, 17 Ves. 485; 2 Meriv. 3, omission to renew; Holmes v. Dring, 2 Cox, 1; and see Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430.

person so circumstanced were permitted in any way to deal with the property with reference to his own individual interests, not only would it be contrary to the design under which he has obtained or has been permitted to retain the control over the property, but he would be placed in such a situation as that his interests might, in reference to the conduct of the trust, by possibility come into conflict with those of his cestui que trust; and in such a conflict the personal interest of the trustee would in all probability prevail, against which the court will in all cases endeavour to provide (a); and, such being the principle, the circumstances of the particular case, generally speaking, can have no influence on the decision; and therefore it has been held that where the lessor has refused to grant a renewal of the lease to the cestui que trust, still the cestui que trust will be entitled to the benefit of any renewal which the trustee may have obtained (b). It is on the same principle that it is held that a trustee or particular agent, if the relation of trustee or agent has not been got rid of (c), is not to be allowed as against his cestuis que trust to become a purchaser from his cestuis que trust of that which he holds in trust or to deal with it in any way so as to derive for himself any benefit; he will be a trustee of any interest or profit that he may so acquire (d); if any advantage is gained by a person in a fiduciary character in respect of the trust property that advantage belongs to the trust (e). The transaction may have been perfectly bonâ fide and such that in truth no advantage was gained by the trustee at least at the time; but advantage or no advantage would not be a satisfactory principle on which to determine the question on which the validity of such transactions should depend; it would be difficult in all cases, and

(a) Holt v. Holt, 1 Ch. Ca. 191; 2 Fonbl. 189; Passingham v. Sherborn, 9 Beav. 424, 427, 436. This was a strong case, for the testator himself had placed the trustee in the incompatible situations.

(b) Fitzgibbon v. Scanlan, 1 Dow. 269; Keech v. Sandford, Sel. Ca. in Ch. 61, is the leading case on this subject; Griffin v. Griffin, 1 Scho. & Lef. 353; and see Blewett v. Millett, 7 Bro. P. C. 367; and Giddings v. Giddings, infra.

(c) V. int. al. Medlicott v. O'Donel, 1 Ball & B. 156.

(d) Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. 679, where, p. 682, Whelpdale v. Cookson (1 Vesey, 9) is stated from the Registrar's Book; Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 54; Whichcote v. Lawrence, 3 Ves. 740; Lister v. Lister, 6 Ves. 631; Attorney-General v. Mayor of Plymouth, 15 Law J. 109, M. R.: et vide supra, vol. i. p. 512. The rule, as regards purchases from third persons, is extended—to the heir-at-law as between himself and subsequent incumbrancers, where he purchases a prior incumbrance (Brathwaite v. Brathwaite, 1 Vern. 334; Williams v. Springfield, ib. 476; Morret v. Parke, ubi supra; Lancaster v. Evors, 10 Beav. 154; 1 Phillips, 354); to a surety who buys in the original debt (supra, p. 208, n.); indeed, as it would seem, to all persons who acquire the means of obtaining the renewed interest by reason of their particular interest; and, generally, to all cases where the accident which gave the person the opportunity of acquiring such additional interest has happened whilst he had a particular interest connected with interests in others; infra, p. 303.

(e) See the cases in the preceding notes, and int. al. Anon. 2 Ch. Ca. 208; Forbes v. Ross, 2 Bro. 430; Littlehales v. Gascoyne, 3 Bro. 73; Lees v. Nuttall, 1 Russ. & M. 53; Carter v. Palmer, 11 Bli. 418-9; Fosbrooke v. Balguy, 1 My. & K. 226.

impossible in some, to determine whether any advantage had really been obtained or not; the rule therefore is general—the cestuis que trust have the option of taking to or repudiating the transaction, as may appear to them best to serve their own interests (a). It is to be observed, that it was formerly held that if a trustee purchased lands out of the profits of the trust estate and took the conveyance in his own name, though the land might be sequestered for the payment of the trust money with interest if the trustee were insolvent, the cestui que trust would no more be entitled to the estate than would a person from whom the purchaser had borrowed the money (b); but this doctrine, which proceeded upon the obligatory nature of the Statute of Frauds in excluding parol evidence, has been subverted by more modern decisions (c). A person may indeed, if he choose, grant a beneficial interest to his agent, yet the agent must show that the dealing with his employer was fair (d); if the employer chooses he may make him a present, but the agent must show that the principal had the same knowledge as he had (e). If an attorney gives advice to his client, who acts upon it, and the attorney by that means gains an advantage, though the advice may have been given with quite a different view, the transaction will be held to be null and void as far as the attorney is concerned (f); but this subject will be again considered under the head of “Constructive Fraud,” in the next division. Where the executor of a mortgagee purchased the equity of redemption of the mortgaged estate in his own name with the money due on the mortgage and a small advance beyond it, it was held that he was a trustee of the purchase for the benefit of the testator’s estate (g).

The principle on which persons who having limited interests in property acquire an additional interest in the property, are considered as

(a) See Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. 681; Ex parte James, 8 Ves. 348; Ex parte Bennett, 10 Ves. 385, 393; Lane v. Dighton, Amb. 409; but see Savage v. Carroll, 1 Ball & B. 284; and Lewis v. Madocks, 8 Ves. 150, 17 Ves. 57, 58, as to the case of a person who is no otherwise trustee than that he has obtained trust money and employed it in the purchase, and the case of money liable to a trust, traced as having been applied in part purchase of an estate.

(b) Kirk v. Webb, Prec. Ch. 84, affirmed in the House of Lords, followed in Heron v. Heron, Prec. Ch. 163, a stronger case; and Kinder v. Miller, Prec. Ch. 172; 1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 743-4, pl. 1, 2, 4.

(c) The authorities are collected by Mr. Lewin, p. 156, note (b), v. supra; and see 1 John. U. S. Rep. 582; Story on Equity, § 1201, note.

(d) Lord Selsey v. Rhoades, 2 Sim. & S. 41; 3 Bli. 1; see Thomas v. Phillips, xi. Jur. 80.

(e) Lord Chancellor Sugden, Ker v. Lord Dungannon, 1 Dru. & War. 542; a bare trustee to preserve contingent remainders may purchase, Parker v. White, 11 Ves. 226.

(f) Bulkley v. Wilford, 2 Cl. & Fin. 177; 8 Bli. N. S. 111; Tanner v. Elworthy, 4 Beav. 490.

(g) Fosbrooke v. Balguy, 1 Mylne & K. 226.

trustees for the other persons interested, is somewhat similar to the above; it is in respect of such limited interest, at least in most cases, that the person in the enjoyment of it is enabled to acquire such additional interest, which is an advantage beside the purpose for which such limited interest was conferred; if accident puts in the way of the person actually in the enjoyment of such limited interest the means of enlarging the beneficial interest in the thing to be enjoyed by himself and others, it is not he alone that ought to have the benefit of such an accident; therefore, where the lease is renewed by a person so circumstanced, in equity the renewal will be considered as the same lease, or, as it is sometimes expressed, a graft upon the old one (a). The addition of other property in the renewed lease does not interfere with or impair the rights of those in remainder; nor does it alter the case if the renewed lease be taken not from the immediate lessor, but from a superior lessor (b).

An annuitant having a charge upon premises held on lease will, generally speaking, be entitled to a charge on the renewed lease. The husband of a wife, who if single would have been bound to renew in favour of some third person, stands in her place, and any renewal he may obtain after her death will be equally liable to the claims of such third person as if it had been obtained by the wife (c). The same

(a) Sir W. Grant, Moody v. Matthews, 7 Ves. 183; Nesbitt v. Tredennick, 1 Ball & B. 29; Winslow v. Tighe, 2 Ball & B. 205; Tanner v. Elworthy, 4 Beav. 490.

(b) Giddings v. Giddings, 3 Russ. 251-7, 258; v. infra.

(c) Ibid. In that case one Mary Price sold an annuity to John Moody for his life, out of certain tithes held by Mary Price, held by her under a lease from the Dean of St. Asaph for a term of years, and she covenanted that the tithes should remain as security for the annuity during the life of Moody. After the sale Mary Price surrendered the lease and obtained a new one for seven years, which by assignment she made a security for 300*l.* borrowed of one Ruddock; she then married John Matthews and afterwards died; her husband took out letters of administration to her. After her death Matthews renewed at various times, paying the fine; the annuitant claimed to be entitled to the benefit of the renewed lease and to have the lease renewed from time to time out of the estate of Mary Matthews; the defendant, the surviving husband, contended that he was only bound to pay the annuity during the term the lease had to run, when he acquired it in right of his wife. Sir W. Grant felt considerable difficulty in deciding this case, which had not been the subject of previous decision: he at length determined that the annuity was a charge upon the renewed term, and that the grantee was not even bound to contribute to the expence of the renewal. Sir Wm. Grant, in giving judgment, said, "If Mrs. Matthews had continued unmarried there can be no doubt the annuity would be as much a charge upon the renewed as upon the original lease; indeed she would have been bound to keep up the lease on account of the annuity. The plaintiff (the annuitant) acquired an interest in the lease for his life; not a lease in present existence to last so long, but with a capacity to be extended by renewals; and the charge would always attach upon each renewed lease, the grantor being bound to keep it up for his benefit. Her husband could derive no other interest in her right than she had; the lease and right of renewal could pass to him only in the same plight and condition as she held them, and therefore subject to every equity that would attach upon her. The husband taking by marital right is not esteemed a purchaser for valuable consideration, he stands precisely in the place of his wife: that is laid down in Fitzgerald v. Lord Fauconberg, Fitzgibbon, 207;" (1 Eq. Abr. 745, pl. 11;) "notice is therefore immaterial. The husband's obli-principle has been held to apply to other persons having a partial or particular interest in a subject, who have acquired a private or individual interest not contemplated on the occasion of such partial or particular interest being conferred or acquired, as in the instance of a mortgagee who procures a renewal of a lease (a), and a surety who purchases the original debt (b).

Sir William Grant, as will be seen by reference to his judgment in Moody v. Matthews, gave a sanction to the doctrine in Maxwell v. Ashe, that an annuitant under a will was not bound to contribute towards the fines on renewal, but Lord Manners, after having these cases called to his attention, decided that the annuitant was bound to contribute in proportion to his interest in the property; "for all the legatees," he said, "appear to have been equally the objects of the testator's favour: could it have been his intention that one of them should alone bear the expense of the renewal, and that the others should receive the full amount of their annuities without any deduction?" (c).

It would seem that the rule, that where a person having a limited interest in leaseholds enlarges that interest by obtaining a new lease, he shall be a trustee for the other parties interested, has not, at least as a general rule, been extended to a purchase of the reversion; though in doing so, as Sir W. Grant observed, he thereby makes use of his situation to intercept future renewals, and thus to prejudice the interests of those who stand behind him, so that such a purchase would appear to be equally within the principle as where a renewal merely is obtained (d). A testator seised in fee of a moiety of an estate at L., and in possession of the other moiety as tenant from year to year to St. John's College, his lease from the College having expired, gave to his wife gation to renew is different from that of the wife; after the dissolution of the marriage he is not bound by her personal covenants; but when the lease is renewed the equity attaches upon it, for the renewed lease is considered in equity the same lease. The plaintiff is not bound to contribute to the fines of renewal, that would be to make him pay the consideration twice. The case of Maxwell v. Ashe, at the Rolls, 17 Dec. 1742, 1 Bro. 444, note," (which his Honour stated from the Registrar's Book, 7 Ves. p. 184,) "is decisive, the only difference between the cases was in favour of the present plaintiff; in Maxwell v. Ashe the question was between two volunteers, the annuitant under a will and the representatives of a devisee, subject to the annuity; yet it was held that the annuitant was not bound to contribute to the annuity."

His Honour declared that the annuity claimed by the plaintiff was a charge upon the renewed lease of the tithes, and that the arrears must be paid, and the annuity must be continued to be paid, out of the renewed lease; 7 Ves. 186; and see 2 Y. & Coll. 251; 4 Bli. N. S. 421.

(a) See Nesbitt v. Tredennick, 1 Ball & B. 29, 46-7.

(b) Supra, p. 208, and 300, n. (d). But a prior creditor who buys in a puisne incumbrance is entitled to claim the full amount against the debtor, though he did not give the full value; Morret v. Paske, 2 Atk. 54; v. Williams v. Springfield, 1 Vern. 476; ib. 336.

(c) Stubbs v. Roth, 2 Ball & B. 548.

(d) See Randall v. Russel, 3 Meriv. 197; and Hardman v. Johnson, ibid. 347, 3 Russ. 253; also Norris v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 37, 38; and Acheson v. Fair, 3 Drury & War. 524, q. v.

during her widowhood all that his messuage or tenement at L., (describing it,) and all his estate and interest therein, she paying the rent reserved to St. John's College. The widow, after his death, obtained a new lease, and subsequently purchased the reversion of one to whom it had been conveyed by the College, under an Act of Parliament. It was held that the renewed lease must be considered as subject to the trusts of the will, and those in remainder were directed to contribute to the fines paid by the widow, in proportions to be settled by the master (a); but as regards the purchase of the reversion, which was obtained not from the College but from the person to whom it had been conveyed by the College, it was held, under the circumstances, that the purchase was not to be taken as subject to the trusts of the will (b).

The cestui que trust is entitled to the same relief against all volunteers claiming under the original trustee, executor or tenant for life, and purchasers from them with notice, express or implied, as he would have had against the original party (c).

The person so converted into a trustee of a renewed lease, is entitled to the costs and expenses of the renewal, with interest, and to compensation for repairing, building, and lasting improvements, and, as it seems, though made pending the suit; and he may retain the renewed lease to secure the payment (d). As regards allowances for repairs in the cases before referred to, it has not been, generally speaking, on the ground that the making of repairs and improvements of itself constitutes a lien that they have been allowed (e), but rather on the

(a) It may here be observed that the proportions in which the tenant for life and remaindermen are to contribute to the fines and expenses of renewal, have very lately been the subject of discussion before the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, in the case of Jones v. Jones, 5 Hare, 440. His Honour laid down in that case that where the testator directs that the leases are from time to time to be renewed, the fines and expenses of renewal are to be borne by the tenant for life and remaindermen, or parties successively entitled, in proportion to their actual enjoyment of the estate, and that there is no difference in the rule whether the leases are for lives or for years. Some other important points connected with this subject are discussed in that case.

(b) Randall v. Russell, 3 Meriv. 190; and see Fosbrooke v. Balguy, 1 My. & K. 226, supra.

(c) Bowles v. Stewart, 1 Scho. & Lef. 209; a fine levied by the tenant for life keeping possession of the deeds was no bar, ibid.; see the other authorities, Lewin, p. 178.

(d) Holt v. Holt, 1 Ch. Ca. 190; Rawe v.

Chichester, Ambl. 720; James v. Dean, 15 Ves. 236, though there was direction for the computation of interest in that case; Walley v. Walley, 1 Vernon, 487, though the improvements made pending the suit are not specifically mentioned in the decree, Raithby's note, nor is interest directed to be computed. See the other cases, cited Lewin, p. 175-6. An allowance for improvements with interest, is made to a trustee whose purchase of the trust estate is set aside, Sugd. V. and P. 897, 898; York Building Comp. v. Mackenzie, 8 Bro. P. C. 42; Trevelyan v. White, 1 Beav. 588; Ex parte Hughes, 6 Ves. 617, 624; Ex parte Bennet, 10 Ves. 381; Williamson v. Seaber, 3 Yo. & Coll. 717, there cited; and see Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Mad. 2; Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 444; Attorney-General v. Baliol College, 9 Mod. 411.

(e) See Swan v. Swan, 8 Price, 518; and see Sugd. V. and P. 1028, 1029; but where, in the case of a joint purchase, one lays out a considerable sum in repairs and improvements (v. sup. p. 206), the lien appears to be positive. See Sugd. V. and P. p. 902.

ground that he who requires equity must do equity (a). Where a tenant in common applies to equity for a partition, he is compelled to make an allowance for repairs and improvements. Where a person in possession of an estate not his own, founds his claim on the ground that the real owner has stood by and seen the improvements going on, there also, if the owner apply to the Court of Chancery to recover the estate, he will be compelled to make a like compensation: but if the real owner, on whom no imputation rests, can recover his estate at law, the Court of Chancery, generally speaking, will not interfere (b).

In all such cases the right to turn the purchaser, or person acquiring a benefit under the circumstances above alluded to, into a trustee, being founded on equitable principles only, the party having the right, being sui juris, must assert his claim within a reasonable time; such a delay as may be considered as amounting to acquiescence or a renunciation of any claim to the property, will be a bar to this as to every other merely equitable title (c); it would obviously be unjust that, after a person has been induced by the conduct of those who might have asserted a claim to the property to treat and consider the property for years absolutely as his own, they should afterwards be permitted to deprive him of the property (d).

Another instance of a constructive trust created by the acts of a person having a limited interest arises upon the tenant for life committing what is called equitable waste, that is, cutting down ornamental timber. "The restraint upon the legal owner as to equitable waste," said Sir John Leach, "is to be considered as founded on a breach of that trust and confidence which the deviser reposed in the tenant for life, that he would use his legal estate only for the purpose of fair enjoyment: it is a trust implied in equity from the subsequent limitations and from the presumed intention of the testator that he meant an equal benefit to all in succession" (e).

(a) This makes the equity of the party to depend upon whether he stands on the record as a plaintiff or as a defendant, a doctrine which, as will be seen in the Chapter on Mortgages, the V. C. Wigram does not approve.

(b) Sugd. V. and P. 10th ed. iii. p. 436-7; 11th ed. page 1029. Mr. Justice Story, On Equity, vol. ii. p. 669, et seq. has collected the authorities from the Roman law on this subject, which the student may usefully refer to.

(c) Pryce v. Burn, cited 5 Ves. 680, referred to with approbation by Lord Alvanley, in Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. 680, (and v. ib. 681); Gregory v. Gregory, G. Coop. R. 201, a leading case—relief was refused after the lapse of eighteen years; affirmed on appeal, Jac. 631; Champion v. Rigby, 1 Russ. & M.

539; and see Lewin, p. 178, n. (i); Roberts v. Tunstall, 257, where the Vice-Chancellor Wigram, p. 267, 269, enters into the consideration of poverty and other circumstances, which may be material ingredients in the consideration of the question of acquiescence; and see, on the same subject, Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 120; and Edwards v. Meyrick, 2 Hare, 60. These cases apply to transactions originally affected with what is considered as a fraud in equity; the principle of them will apply with greater force to cases founded on general principles of policy and convenience; and see Gwynne v. Edwards, 9 Beav. 36, 37.

(d) V. sup. p. 61; and Lewin, p. 178, 619-21.

(e) Marquis of Ormonde v. Kynersley, 5 Mad. 369; S. C. 2 S. & S. 15.

Another instance of implied trusts arises upon the common case of a mortgage of the wife's lands for the debt of the husband. The general rule is, that where a mortgage is made the equity of redemption follows the original right (a). Where the wife joins with the husband in effecting a mortgage upon her own estate, if there be no recital, and no special circumstances, her interest will not be changed, or the equity of redemption taken from her, by a mere reservation of the equity of redemption to the husband and his heirs (b); for the mere limitation of the equity of redemption is something ultra the only purpose that is apparent upon the face of the deed, namely, the creation of an incumbrance on the wife's estate (c). The same principle applies where the wife joins in respect of a charge by way of jointure or of her dower (d); but where the declaration of uses of the deed shows an intention (unconnected with the purposes of the mortgage) to make a new settlement of the wife's estate, and there is no evidence of mistake or improper contrivance, that intention, so to be collected, will prevail (e).

Where the property of the wife consists of chattels, or of choses in action, and they are mortgaged or pledged by the husband and wife, or the husband alone, the equity of redemption being reserved to the husband, the wife will be entitled to redeem; nothing short of an

(a) See Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bli. 104; Corbett v. Barker, 1 Anst. 138; 3 Anst. 755; Ravald v. Russell, 1 Younge, 9; 1 Bli. 125; Brond v. Brond, 2 Ch. Ca. 98, affirmed on rehearing, 1 Vern. 213, though there was a special agreement on the part of the husband in that case; and see the cases in the subsequent notes.

(b) Ruscomb v. Hare, 6 Dow. P. C. 1, 20, 21; S. C. 2 Bli. N. S., 192, (there were special directions as to the amount to be paid); Jackson v. Innes, 1 Bli. P. C. 104, 114, 126; Clark v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 227; Brond v. Brond, 2 Ch. Ca. 98; S. C., on rehearing, 1 Vern. 213; Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Ch. Rep. 72; and see 1 Bli. P. C. 117; but there the husband had promised that it should be no detriment to the wife.

(c) See Anson v. Lee, 4 Sim. 378; Clark v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 227; Lord Huntington v. Lady Huntington, 2 Vern. 437.

(d) Cotton v. Cotton, 2 Ch. Rep. 72; Brond v. Brond, or Broad v. Broad, 1 Vern. 213; 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 62; Jackson v. Parker, Ambl. 687.

(e) Innes v. Jackson, 1 Bli. P. C. 126-7-8, overruling Lord Eldon's decision (16 Ves. 356), with his concurrence, 1 Bli. 136; there the term by which the mortgage was created and the fee were kept distinct by the deed, 1 Bli. 127, 132. Lord Eldon's decision had proceeded upon the opinion of Lord Thurlow, that it was not sufficient to collect the intention from the limitations of the estate, there must be an express declaration of intention, by recital or otherwise: and see Rowel v. Whalley, 1 Ch. Rep. 116, which is the leading case on this subject, (1 Bli. 128); Reeve v. Hicks, 2 Sim. & Stu. 408; and Barnett v. Wilson, 2 Yo. & Coll. C. C. 407, 417, 418, where the doctrine as to changing the destination of property by an instrument not ostensibly executed for that purpose was much discussed; the Vice-Chancellor held that on the true construction of the deeds executed by a wife, by which, under a power, she executed three successive appointments, by way of mortgage, the power was exhausted. "I think," said his Honour, "that the safer and better course under the circumstances of the present case, is to abide by the actual language of the instruments;" though he thought it probable that the appointor was not aware that such would be the effect of the instruments she had executed; ib. p. 417. No agreement of a married woman that is not perfected by fine, or now by deed acknowledged according to the Act for Abolishing Fines and Recoveries (supra, vol. i. pp. 166-7), or by the due exercise of her power where she has one, will of course bind her or those who claim under her; Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & W. 425.

actual reduction into possession will deprive the wife of that right (a). Where the estate belonged to the husband, and the wife joined in the mortgage by fine, and the redemption was reserved to the husband and wife and their heirs, but in the latter part of the deed declaring the uses of the fine, there was a clause which declared the uses of the fine to the husband, his heirs and assigns, it was held that the wife had only a power of redemption to secure her dower (b).

A similar doctrine prevails where a mortgage is made under a power of appointment (c); it will be considered as an appointment pro tanto only, unless there be upon the face of the instrument an indication of ulterior intention inconsistent with a future exercise of the power; and the right of redemption will remain in the persons entitled to the estate in default of appointment (d).

An instance of an administrator being held to be constructively a trustee for the persons entitled under the Statute of Distributions, occurs in the following case. By a marriage settlement the ultimate trust declared of copyhold lands the property of the husband, was limited to his executors and administrators, and a similar trust was declared with respect to the executors and administrators of the wife as to a copyhold estate belonging to her; the wife survived, and took out administration to her husband; it was held that she was not entitled to the former estate for the benefit of herself only, but of herself and the husband's next of kin (e).

Where money charged on an estate is paid off by an individual not having an absolute permanent interest in the premises, a constructive trust in his favour may arise. In all these cases the court looks at the

(a) Bates v. Dandy, 2 Atk. 207; Pitt v. Pitt, Turn. & Russ. 180; Clark v. Burgh, 2 Coll. 221, 229. In this case the proviso for redemption in the last of the mortgages in which the wife, the trustee, and the husband joined, was that upon payment by the husband and wife, or either of them or their, his or her executors, &c. the property should be assigned not to the husband only, but to the husband and wife, or either of them; there was also a power of sale, and the clear surplus, if any, was to be paid to the husband and wife, or either of them, their heirs, &c. according to their respective interests; but the V. C.'s decision appears to have been founded on the general principle. "It does not appear to me," said his Honour, "that the wife's rights in equity are more prejudiced than if a mere deposit of the deeds had been made" (as in Bates v. Dandy) "by the husband for securing the money," ibid. p. 230.

See the note, 1 Russ. 33, and 3 Russ. p. 72, and 2 Roper, Husb. and Wife, Jacob's note, p. 512, and 9 Mod. 102, as to whether the right of the wife, in Bates v. Dandy, was in any way affected; and see 9 Sim. 147.

(b) Jackson v. Parker, Amb. 687; 1 Bli. P. C. 123-4.

(c) Innes v. Jackson, 16 Ves. 367; but see next note, as to this case.

(d) Coote on Mortgage, p. 62; Thorne v. Thorne, 1 Vernon, 141; Innes v. Jackson, 16 Ves. 356, 367, there cited; but this case was reversed, 1 Bli. 104.

(e) Wilman v. Bowring, 3 Sim. p. 328. Goodere v. Lloyd, ibid. 538, is also a case of implied trust: 700*l.* was appointed to trustees by will, but no express trust was declared, the 700*l.* was directed to be raised and applied in the same manner as the testator's personal estate was directed to be applied.

intention; for instance, where a tenant in tail pays off an incumbrance, primá facie, he is considered as disencumbering the estate, but still the court thinks itself at liberty to look at the intention; thus, if the tenant in tail pay off a charge upon the estate and take no assignment, and there is nothing distinctly to show any intention on his part to keep alive the charge; yet if it appear that he had considered the estate as his own, the court will direct that his estate shall be reimbursed (a).

It may here be observed that, generally speaking, the person who has the legal right is entitled to sue for and recover personal property, though the beneficial interest may be in others, without joining the persons beneficially interested as parties, and it follows that the person who holds trust property may safely pay over the trust property to the actual trustee having the legal interest in the property (b). Thus the mother of a bastard child by her will gave all her personal estate to the child and made B. and C. her executors, in order to take care of her child and do it justice; the mother died, and within a short time after the bastard died intestate without wife or issue. One of the executors filed a bill against the mother of her who was the mother of the bastard, who had in her hands the portion belonging to the bastard, praying an account of the same: the defendant demurred, because neither the administrator of the bastard or the Attorney-General in right of the Crown were parties. Lord King overruled the demurrer; he said that the executor of the bastard's mother was legally entitled to the personal estate of the testatrix, and though this might be a trust for the bastard, yet as the executor had the legal title he could give a good discharge to the defendant (c). But if the property has been appropriated to the cestui que trust (d) so that he has a direct title to the specific property it is different: for instance, if the executor has assented to a legacy given in trust for a person, his receipt will be necessary to give the holder an effectual discharge (e); and although the party might recover at law, it does not follow that in this court

(a) Kirkham v. Smith, 1 Ves. 258; Pitt v. Pitt, 1 Turn. & R. 183, the wife there was permitted to redeem on payment of what her husband had paid in discharge of the mortgage on her estate, ib. p. 184; a covenant to pay is not decisive, ibid.; Bagot v. Oughton, 1 P. W. 347; et v. Burrell v. Egremont, 7 Beav. 232.

(b) This may be considered as one of the qualifications of the rule stated supra, pp. 194-5.

(c) Jones v. Goodchild, 3 P. W. 32.

(d) See Philippo v. Munnings, 2 My. & Cr. 314, sup. p. 62.

(e) See Loy v. Duckett, 1 Cr. & P. 312, where Lord Cottenham approved of Sir J. Leach's view in Gutteridge v. Stilwell, 1 My. & K. 486, as being more correct than Lord Brougham's. On the question as to what shall be an Assent to a legacy, and for whom it shall enure, see Roper on Leg. 847-854; and Trail v. Bull, 1 Coll. 352, 359; it is not essential to the efficacy of the assent that it should confer the legal title, ibid.

the party will in all cases obtain possession of the property in the absence of the parties beneficially interested. Where a person beneficially entitled to one fourth of a fund which belonged to the estate of a testator who had been dead 150 years had obtained letters of administration, de bonis non, to the testator, and then filed a bill for an account and payment to himself of the whole fund, it appearing that no part of the fund was required for the payment of debts, but that the other three fourths had passed under the residuary bequest in his will, and had belonged to the estates of several persons successively who were named in the proceedings but were not parties to the suit, Lord Cottenham ordered that one fourth only should be paid to the plaintiff, and although the plaintiff did not require it, that the other three fourths should be paid into court, with liberty for any person interested to apply, giving notice to the Attorney-General (a).

The inconveniences would have been so great of affecting the Bank of England with notice of trusts of stock in the public funds transferable at the bank, that it has been established that the bank is only bound to recognize the person who has the legal title to the stock, whether as regards the payment of dividends or transfer of the capital; the bank cannot refuse to allow the executor of the testator to transfer on the ground that the stock is specifically bequeathed (b). Where a judge's order under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, has been obtained, by which the interest of a debtor in a sum of stock held in trust is charged with the debt; the Bank of England is still bound to pay the dividends to the legal hand to receive them (c). An ordinary banker is not expressly or constructively a trustee in respect of the deposits made in the regular course of business; the balance may be recovered at law; and unless under special circumstances the customer cannot sue his banker for an account (d).

Though the subject of the interest acquired by a vendor is reserved for future discussion, it may here be observed that although the pur-

(a) Loy v. Duckett, 1 Cr. & Phillips, 314; and see Orrok v. Binney, Jac. 523, a case of infants; Ex parte Ram, 3 My. & Cr. 25. The case of Ex parte Nicholl, Turn. & R. 119, depends upon the particular provisions of the act in regard to unclaimed dividends, 1 Cr. & P. 314.

(b) Hartga v. Bk. of Eng. 3 Ves. 58; Bk. of Eng. v. Parsons, 5 Ves. 669; Austin v. Bk. of Eng. 8 Ves. 522, 525; Bk. of Eng. v. Lunn, 15 Ves. 569, 583; Franklin v. Bk. of England, 1 Russ. 582 et seq.; the decree was made against the Bank with costs; an appeal was presented, but I have not learned the result. But see Humberstone v. Chace, 2 Y. & Coll. 209.

(c) Churchill v. Gov. and Co. of Bk. of Eng. 11 Mees. & W. p. 323; and see Fowler v. Churchill, ibid. 57; Bristed v. Wilkins, 3 Hare, 235. As regards this statute, a receiver will not be appointed at the instance of a judgment creditor until the year has expired, nor, under the general law, until an elegit has been sued out, Smith v. Hurst, 1 Coll. 706, V. C. K. B.: as to chattels the case is different, the writ of fieri facias binds the property, ibid.

(d) Foley v. Hill, MS., Hill on Tr. 148.

chaser has neither a legal or an absolute equitable right as against the seller until he pays the purchase-money; yet for all the purposes of disposition the equitable title which the purchaser has obtained under the contract for sale is subject to his control; and in the event of the purchase being completed, the vendor will be a trustee for those who have acquired interests in the estate under the purchaser. If the vendor should again sell the estate, of which by reason of the first contract he is only seised in trust, he will be considered as selling it for the benefit of that person for whom by the first contract he became trustee, and therefore liable to account (a). Other instances of constructive or implied trusts might be produced; one is where a person holds money which in conscience he cannot retain, as where it has been paid to him by mistake (b); but those which have been produced will suffice to illustrate the principles on which persons having the legal interest in property are held, by the Court of Chancery, on equitable grounds, to be trustees for the benefit of others; we now proceed to the consideration of the particular trusts which are usually to be found in Trust Deeds and Wills.

(a) Lord C. Sugden, Baldwin v. Belcher, 1 Jo. & Lat. 26; Lord Eldon, Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 255.

(b) See 2 Fonbl. 4, 5; v. supra, p. 296; infra, "Mistake."

---

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—Supra, p. 299.

A testator being seised in fee of a farm in the parish of A., and being also possessed of a lease for lives of the rectorial tithes of that parish, devised the farm to his nephews in tail male, and the lease to his brother J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, upon condition that his said brother J., his executors, administrators, and assigns, owners or occupiers of the said parsonage tithes and premises, should at all times after his decease free and discharge his said farm from all manner of tithes which should be payable out of the same to the said owner or occupier of the parsonage and tithes aforesaid. J. survived the testator, and devised his interest in the lease to his four sons, who took several renewals, and in 1782 assigned the existing lease, for a valuable consideration, to A. B. with notice of the trusts of the will: It was held, that a party to whom the tithes were bequeathed by the will of A. B., and who took a renewal of the lease in 1817, held the renewed lease upon the trusts of the will; consequently that he had no title to the tithes of the farm, and that the owner of the farm was not bound to contribute to the renewal fines; Webb v. Lagar, 2 Yo. & Coll. (Exchequer), p. 247.

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE TRUSTS WHICH ARE USUALLY INTRODUCED INTO WILLS AND SETTLEMENTS.

SECTION I.—Charges of Debts by Will, in Reference to the Statutes 1 Will. IV. c. 47, and 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104.—What amounts to a Charge of Debts.

Liability of Heir for Payment of Debts.

Trusts for Payment of Debts and Legacies—Consequences of.

Doctrine of Equitable Assets based on Power which Testators had before Statute of Fraudulent Devises to disappoint their Creditors.

3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14.

1 Will. IV. c. 47.

If no Devise of Real Estates for Payment of Debts, Specialty Creditors may enforce their Claim according to Legal Priority.

If a Devise within the meaning of the Statute, Devise ceases to be Fraudulent, and no Creditor can claim except under such Disposition.

At Common Law Specialty Creditors had no Lien on Land before Judgment, and Simple Contract Creditors had no Rights against Real Estates.

Rule while 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, was in operation.

As 5th Section of 1 Will. IV. c. 47, is the same, same Rule must still prevail.

And as the Estate can only be reached through the Court of Chancery all Creditors will be entitled to share in Proportion to the Amount of their Debts.

If a Creditor institutes a Suit to obtain the Benefit of the Trust, Decree must be such that all other Creditors may come in.

Devise for Payment of Simple Contract Creditors before Specialty satisfies the Words of 5th Sect. of Statute and is therefore good.

But Devise must be for Payment of all Debts.

Deg v. Deg, 2 P. & W.

Lands devised to an Executor to sell are Equitable Assets.

Power given to Executors to sell, Proceeds are Equitable Assets.

Lands charged with Debts which descend to the Heir are Equitable Assets.

If Mode prescribed for Payment of Debts be inconvenient, it will not take the case out of Statute.

Where Trust is created for the Purpose of raising Money out of Rents and Profits, if the Trusts of the Will require a Gross Sum to be raised, generally the Trustees are to raise it by Sale or Mortgage.

If a Person selects Part only of his Estate, which is insufficient for Payment of Debts, Devise is Fraudulent against Specialty Creditors.

Rule, that the Estate when realized shall be Equitable Assets, is liable to be controverted by the apparent Intention.

Soames v. Robinson, 1 M. & K., in note.

Devise to Executors as Trustees makes the Assets Equitable.

Creditors who have been paid Part out of Personalty not entitled to have Remainder paid out of Realty until Creditors who have received none have been paid in equal Proportions out of Realty.

Creditors having Security not affected by the Rule of Distribution.

Provisions of 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104.

Statute does not apply where there is a Disposition of Real Estate for Payment of Debts.

Great Importance to ascertain whether a Charge of Debts has been created or not.

Leigh v. Earl of Warrington.

Words sufficient to create a Charge.

General Charge of Debts includes all Debts Testator may contract during Life.

A Direction to pay Debts and a Gift of Property to same Person, the Property (unless contrary Intention appear) will be considered to be charged with Payment of Debts.

But a Direction to Executors to pay and a Devise of Real Estate to another will not operate as a Charge.

Nor a Devise to a Person (after a Direction to Executors to pay Debts) who happens to be afterwards named an Executor.

If there be a general Charge by Implication under the preliminary Direction, it becomes a Question on the Effect of subsequent Devises whether that Intention has been altered.

But where there is an Express Charge of Debts on Testator's Real Estate, it is not liable to be defeated by subsequent Devises and Directions.

Coxe v. Basset.

Trust or Charge for Payment of Debts may also materially affect Real Representatives of Testator by Devise and Intestacy.

Example.

Charge of Debts by a Married Woman, by Will upon her Separate Estate.

I now proceed to take a general view of the doctrines of the Court of Chancery in reference to some of the most usual Trusts which are found in Wills and Settlements.

One of the most usual trusts in wills is a trust, express or implied (a), for the payment of debts, or for the payment of legacies or annuities, or of all of them united. Such a trust must, as regards legacies, always have important consequences with respect to those who take the real and personal estate of the testator; and it may have a material effect as regards the rights of specialty creditors, by the estate being turned into equitable instead of legal assets. These subjects will now be considered in their general features: and first as regards Creditors.

The heir being named in the obligation is considered to be himself a debtor, not indeed a debtor liable to pay the debt under all circumstances, but liable to the extent of the lands descended, and he is not

(a) A charge, as will be seen, partakes of an express and an implied trust; the trust, so far as the heir or devisee may be considered as a trustee, arises by implication, but the trusts themselves are express.

restrained from alienation ; but after alienation he is personally liable to pay his ancestor's debts to the amount of the value of the estate he has alienated (a). It is established, that, in the absence of special circumstances, the land, after an alienation by an heir for a valuable consideration as that of marriage, is not itself liable to the specialty debts of the ancestor (b).

It may be here observed, that the general rule in the Court of Chancery is, that a judgment creditor, who—as regards land as well as chattels, is not a purchaser, he not having any right to anything specific (c),—can only take in execution that which belongs to his debtor, and not property of other persons, though it may be in the possession of the debtor as trustee ; the court, having established that the equitable ownership may be in one person and the legal ownership in another, must interpose, where it is necessary, to protect the equitable ownership (d) : this principle is applied as regards personal chattels as well as real estate (e).

The doctrine of Equitable Assets is based on the power which testators had, before the Statute of Fraudulent Devises, to disappoint their creditors of all resort to their freehold estate by devising it (f). By the original statute, which was passed to protect creditors from fraudulent devises made by their debtors (3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14), provision was made for rendering all devises void against specialty creditors, where the heirs were bound, unless there were a provision in the will for the payment of debts (g) : that statute has been re-enacted with modifications by the 1 Will. IV. c. 47. By this statute the devisee is placed in the same situation, substantially and for all practical purposes (excepting as regards the mode and order of administration, as after noticed,) as the heir (h). The question therefore—whether in any will by which real estates are devised, there is a provision for the payment of debts within the meaning of the statute—becomes a matter of serious importance to specialty creditors ; if there be not such a provision, though the simple-contract creditors may come in under the act 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, before noticed (i), which renders real estates liable for simple-contract debts, yet the specialty creditors may enforce their claims according to their legal priorities ;

(a) See Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 124.

(b) Matthews v. Jones, 2 Anstr. p. 506 ; Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 124.

(c) Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. Wms. 491 ; so that land afterwards purchased may be extended on the judgment.

(d) Langton v. Horton, 1 Hare, 560.

(e) Newlands v. Paynter, 4 My. & Cr. 408, case as to furniture ; Lodge v. Lyseley, 4 Sim. 75, case of real estate.

(f) Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, Lyon v. Colvile, 1 Coll. Rep. 472.

(g) Vol. i. p. 174.

(h) Lord Langdale, Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 121 ; v. infra, as to this case.

(i) Et v. inf. p. 319.

but if there be a sufficient provision for payment of debts within the meaning of the statute, then the devise ceases to be fraudulent or void, and none of the creditors can claim excepting under such disposition (a).

The rule was, whilst the statute 3 & 4 Will. & M. c. 14, continued in operation, that a provision by will, effectual in law or in equity (b), for payment of creditors, was not fraudulent within the intent of the statute. As the fifth section of the 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. c. 47, is in similar terms to the fourth section of the statute 3 & 4 Will. & M., the same rule must now prevail; therefore, as the devise is not fraudulent against creditors under the act, and the estate can only be reached by the creditors under the devise—which must be either in the way of an express or implied trust, and the trust in either case can only be made effectual through the medium of the Court of Chancery—the proceeds of the estate, when realized, will be equitable assets, and by consequence they must be distributed according to the principle of equity which the Court of Chancery has adopted, that all debts are equally due in conscience (c); and all the creditors will be entitled to share in proportion to the amount of their debts (d): and as all the creditors are to be paid in proportion, where any creditor institutes a suit to obtain the benefit of the trust, the decree must be such that all other creditors may come in under it, and thus the proper proportion of each may be ascertained (e). A testator devised his real estate to trustees and their heirs upon trust to sell, and after declaring his will to be that the clear money arising from such sale should sink into and become part of his personal estate, he gave and bequeathed the same, and all his stock, crops, goods and effects whatsoever, to the same trustees, their executors and administrators, upon trust, after converting the same into money and paying all his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, to pay legacies and dispose of the residue as there directed. It was held that this was substantially a devise for payment

(a) V. infra. It will be remembered that by the common law specialty creditors had no lien on the land of their debtor before judgment, and simple-contract creditors as such had no rights whatever against the real estate of their debtor for payment of their debts, supra, vol. i. pp. 173-4, et sup. 313; Lyon v. Colville, 1 Coll. Rep. 472, et seq. where the doctrine as to the operation of a devise as affecting lands in Jamaica is considered.

(b) Lord Eldon, Bailey v. Ekins, 7 Ves. 323.

(c) Supra, vol. i. p. 421; Lex Prætor. 316; Lord Nottingham, 2 Ch. Ca. 54.

(d) Soames v. Robinson, 1 My. & K. 504. The M. R. in the case last referred to expressed a doubt as to whether the same effect would result from a devise to sell, and a direction that the proceeds should form part of his personal estate, as it might be inferred that the testator in such case intended that the proceeds should be administered in the same way as his personal estate would by law be administered; et v. infra, sect. iv.: and see Barker v. May, 9 Barn. & C. 489; and Lex Prætor. 319.

(e) Hamilton v. Houghton, 2 Bli. 185, 187, 193.

of debts within the fourth section of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises : that the produce of the real estate, therefore, was equitable assets, and that, the speciality creditors having exhausted the personal estate, the simple-contract creditors were entitled to have so much of the proceeds of the real estate paid to them, before the specialty creditors were let in to any participation (a).

If the devise be for payment of simple-contract creditors before specialty creditors, it satisfies the words of the fifth section of the statute, and is therefore good (b). The parties claiming the benefit of a trust on this as on other occasions must be content with what is given to them by the instrument creating the trust (c).

But the devise or charge must be for payment of all debts ; the exception of one will be sufficient to make the devise fraudulent and void (d) ; and if a person, having two estates, devises one of them, charged with one fifth only of his debts, the other charged with the other four fifths only, that is not a sufficient charge within the statute (e).

It was formerly held that lands devised to an executor to sell were legal assets (f) ; but it is now settled that they are equitable assets (g). It is also settled that where a power is given to executors to sell lands—whether that power be naked or coupled with an interest—whether it be reserved to them and their heirs, or merely to them quasi exe-

(a) Soames v. Robinson, 1833, 1 Myl. & K. 500. sup. p. 314.

(b) Millar v. Horton, G. Coop. 45. This case was of course decided in the 4th sect. 3 Will. III. but the 5th sect. 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Will. IV. is in the same words ; and see 1 Coll. R. 474.

(c) See Boazman v. Johnston (stated infra), 3 Sim. 382.

(d) Vernon v. Vaudrey, Barnardist. 304 : there a debt which the testator owed as surety was excepted ; the words however in both statutes are of “ any real or just debt or debts.” It is said by Lord King in Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 418, a man may give his equitable assets (the case itself arose upon a devise of an estate which would have been legal assets) in what manner and upon what terms he pleases, for instance, he may dispose of them in trust to pay simple-contract debts only ;—that these equitable assets being entirely within his power, he may let in the specialty creditors for a satisfaction thereout upon what terms he shall think proper. The latter proposition in the large and comprehensive manner in which it is laid down, is perhaps doubtful, but it is presumed that the first proposition cannot be sustained ; see

Vernon v. Vaudrey, Barnardist. 304, supra ; though the words of the Statute of Fraudulent Devises would originally have justified such a construction ; and Ch. J. Willes, in Gott v. Atkinson, Willes’s R. 524, actually put that construction upon them. Lord Langdale, in Richardson v. Horton, 7 Beav. 123, refers to this doctrine ; but see the remarks on this subject in the Jurist, vol. xi. part ii. p. 112.

(e) Lyon v. Colvile, 1 Coll. R., Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, 473-4. The Vice-Chancellor considered this to be a case of some difficulty and doubt, looking to the decision in Millar v. Horton (Sir Geo. Coop. R. 45), see p. 474.

(f) Blatch v. Wilder, 1 Atk. 420, and the other cases cited in Mr. Raithby’s note ; Silk v. Prime, 1 Brown, 139, note. Two rules are obtained from the cases, said Lord Camden, (Silk v. Prime, ibid. 140, note) : It is a good rule of expounding wills to make them speak in favour of equitable assets, if it may be done. 2. That if you can lodge the assets in the hands of trustees, the court will never put them in the hands of the executors, and when one person is invested with both characters the trustee shall be preferred.

(g) Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. 135-38 ; Silk v. Prime, ibid. 139-40 ; infra, p. 317.

cutors—the lands subject to such power will be considered as affected by a trust—the executors are trustees—and the moneys arising by the sale are equitable assets (a); and though it was also formerly held that where lands charged with debts descended to the heir-at-law, and were legal assets, because the descent was not broken as it would be on a devise to a stranger (b), they are now equitable assets: “a devise to an heir to sell,” said Lord Thurlow, “would make the produce equitable assets, and a charge is a devise pro tanto” (c); whether in fact in such case the descent is broken or not, the rule is established (d).

If the mode prescribed be inconvenient only, that will not take the case out of the saving of the statute (e). As the trust has not unfrequently been created in the way of a direction to raise the debts out of rents and profits, it may be well to observe that it is a settled rule that where a trust is created by term or otherwise, for the purpose of raising money out of rents and profits, if the trusts of the will require that a gross sum should be raised, the expression “rents and profits” will not confine the power to the mere annual rents, but the trustees are to raise it out of the estate itself by sale or mortgage, though there may by probability be sufficient to convince any man out of a court of justice that the testator meant annual profits only (f). But where a testatrix devised freeholds of inheritance to trustees for 500 years, and subject to that term to the use of various persons successively for their respective lives, with remainder to the first and other sons of such persons successively in tail general with remainders over; and the trusts of the term were declared to be that the trustees of the term should out of the rents, &c. of the hereditaments comprised therein pay the several annuities given by the will and subject thereto, and should out of the residue of the rents and profits raise such sums not exceeding 8000*l.* as should be necessary to pay such debts as might be owing by her husband and herself, all which she directed the trustees to pay out of the said rents and profits as they should think fit, and as soon as convenient after her death; and subject to the several

(a) See the cases, Raithby's note, 1 Atk. 420.

(b) Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P.W. 430; et v. Plunket v. Penson, 2 Atk. 293.

(c) Hargrave v. Tindal, 1 Bro. 136, note; Batson v. Lindegren, 2 Bro. 94; Raithby's note, 1 Atk. 420.

(d) Bailey v. Elkins, 7 Ves. 319, 322; Shiphard v. Lutwidge, 8 Ves. 26.

(e) Lord Thurlow, Hughes v. Doublin, 2 Cox, 170; S. C. 2 Bro. 614.

(f) Lord Eldon, Bootle v. Blundell, 1 Meriv. 232; v. infra, sect. v. Portions. A general gift of the income of property indefinitely is a gift of the property itself, and it makes no difference whether the income be given to the legatee directly, or through the intervention of trustees; Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463; Haig v. Swiney, 1 Sim. & S. 487; Elton v. Shephard, 1 Bro. C. C. 532. In the last two cases the direction was that the trustees should pay the dividends of stock to a person for her sole and separate use; this was held to be an unlimited gift of the stock.

trusts of the said term upon trust to pay the residue of the net rents, &c. of the premises comprised therein, unto the person who for the time being should be next entitled to the reversion or remainder of the premises expectant thereon under the preceding limitations: it was held that the testatrix did not intend that the debts should be raised out of the corpus of the estate, but only that they should be discharged out of the annual rents and profits (a).

If a person selects a part only of his estates, and those are insufficient for the payment of the debts, then, according to the construction which has been put upon the statute, the devise is fraudulent and of no avail against specialty creditors (b).

The general rule that the estate when realized shall be equitable assets is liable to be controlled by the apparent intention. It was formerly considered that a direction that the money when raised should be applied by the executors, together with the personal estate, was an indication of an intention that the rule of law should be followed (c). Lord Chief Baron Gilbert states generally, that if lands be devised to executors to be sold, or a power be given to them to sell, there the money arising from the sale is assets and shall be distributed according to the course of administration, and then a bond creditor shall be preferred to a simple-contract creditor, because it being only the intention of the testator to make the lands personal assets, equity must follow the intention of the testator, and distribute them in a course of administration (d); but this doctrine has been exploded (e). At a later time, however, (1833,) Sir John Leach expressed an opinion, that when a testator devises his real estate to be sold, and declares his wish that the produce of such sale shall become part of his personal estate, and there stops, the argument in favour of the specialty creditors, that there was no intention on the part of the testator to deprive them of the legal priority to which they are entitled in the distribution of the personal estate would be extremely forcible; but as the testator in the case before him proceeded to direct that the produce should be applied in payment of debts, his Honour held that it was clearly a devise within the fourth section of the stat. 3 & 4 Will. & M., and that the proceeds were equitable assets (f); and it is now fully settled, as before stated, that where the devise is to the trustees, who are also made executors, the assets will be equitable, not legal (g).

(a) Heneage v. Lord Andover, 3 Yo. & J. 360; et v. infra.

(b) Hughes v. Doublin, ubi supra.

(c) See the cases cited in Barker v. May, 9 Barn. & C. 491, and in Mr. Cox's note to Deg v. Deg, 2 P. W. 416, n. (2), et sup. 315.

(d) Lex Prætor. 319.

(e) See Barker v. May, 9 Barn. & C. 492-3.

(f) Soames v. Robinson (stated sup.), 1 My. & K. 504; Barker v. May was cited.

(g) Lewin v. Okeley, 2 Atkins, 50; Lord Hardw. Silk v. Prime, 1 Bro. 138, n.; 1 Dick.

Although in these cases the creditors shall be paid according to priority out of the personal estate, which must be distributed in a course of administration (a), and the executor may retain to satisfy himself; yet neither he nor any other creditor who has been paid in part out of the personal estate, can come in with the creditors who have received no part of their debts, to be paid the residue of their debts on an average out of the real estate, until such unpaid creditors shall have been first satisfied out of the real estate, in proportion to what has been received out of the personal estate by the other creditors (b).

According to Lord Harcourt, the court will not marshal assets on the death of the grantor who in his lifetime has created a trust for the payment of his debts, so as to compel bond creditors, who have recovered against the personal estate, to waive their preference against the personal estate before letting them in under the trust term. "The law," said Lord Harcourt, "gave the creditors the fund of the personal estate, and the party gave them the fund arising from the trust term;" "and the clause," said his lordship, "that no debts should have preference, must be intended only with regard to their satisfaction out of the trust term" (c). Lord Harcourt's decree as reported, which does not agree with the Registrar's Book as regards the question of interest decided in that case, was questioned by Lord Hardwicke in two several cases, so far as it gave interest on simple-contract debts (d), and it cannot perhaps be depended upon on the main question. Mr. Hill (e) considers that it is supported by the late case of Boazman v. Johnston before the Vice-Chancellor of England. That case was as follows:—Husband and wife, being lessees of a rectory, assigned it to trustees in trust to sell and to pay certain bond debts of the husband, and certain debts due on mortgages on his freehold estates; and by deed of even date the husband, in consideration of his wife having joined in the assignment, conveyed his freehold estates in trust for himself and his wife for their lives, and after their deaths to be sold for the benefit of their children. The produce of the lease of the rectory was not sufficient to pay in full both the bonds and the mortgages: it was held that the bond creditors had no right as against the children to

p. 384, Lord Camden; Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. 134, Lord Thurlow; et v. supra, p. 315, note (g).

(a) And so must the real estate under the provision of the legislature giving simple-contract creditors a remedy against the real estate, v. infra, p. 319; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104.

(b) Baily v. Ploughman, Mosely, 95, Lord

C. King; Soames v. Robinson, sup. p. 315.

(c) Car v. Countess of Burlington, 1 P. W. 228.

(d) Barwell v. Parker, 2 Vesey, 364; Lloyd v. Williams, 2 Atk. 110; and see Mr. Cox's note.

(e) On Trustees, p. 334.

throw the mortgagees upon the produce of the freeholds (a). The principle on which the Vice-Chancellor proceeded in that case appears to have been this—that the bond creditors were only entitled, as regards the beneficial lease so assigned by the husband and the wife, to what was given to them under the trusts of the trust deed; what was given under that deed was, that they should share the proceeds rateably with the mortgagees, according to the amount of their debts; to have allowed them to throw the mortgagees first upon the property mortgaged would have given them more than a rateable proportion with the mortgagees (b), so that this case appears to depend on a different principle.

Where the creditor has a security which affects the lands of his testator, either at law or in equity, as a mortgage or an equitable lien, and where he is a creditor by judgment duly entered up and registered (c), there of course he will not be affected by the rule of distribution which has just been noticed, he has a direct lien on the land (d).

The statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 104, mentioned in a preceding page (e), has provided that after the 29th of August, 1833, when any person shall die seised of or entitled to any real estate, freehold or copyhold, which he shall not by his last will have charged with or devised subject to the payment of his debts, the same shall be assets to be administered in courts of equity, for the payment of the just debts of such person, as well debts due on simple contract as on specialty, and that the heir and devisees shall be liable to all the same suits in equity at the suit of any creditors, whether by simple contract or by specialty, as the heir-at-law or devisees were theretofore liable (in respect of freehold estates) at the suit of creditors by specialty in which the heirs were bound; but the creditors by specialty in which the heirs are bound are to be paid before creditors by simple contract or by specialty where the heirs are not bound.

If therefore there be any disposition of the real estate for payment

(a) Boazman v. Johnston, (1830,) 3 Sim. 377.

(b) See L. v. G. temp. Sugd., p. 257; and see Buck v. Shippman, 1 Phill. 694, inf. 360.

(c) The new law, as regards judgments, under the act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 (as to which see vol. i. p. 295), and the subsequent statutes, is fully stated in Sir E. Sugden's Vend. and Pur. 11th ed. 662-3. By that statute a judgment is made a charge on all lands, tenements, &c. of or to which the debtor was entitled or interested in, at law or in equity, at the time of entering up the judgment.

(d) See Wolestoncroft v. Long, 1 Ch. Ca. 32; Anon. 2 Ch. Ca. 54; Child v. Stephens, 1 Vern. 101, 103. The creditors of a feme covert having a separate estate all come in pari passu, even those who may have bond or mortgage, as a feme covert cannot by law make a mortgage or enter into a bond; Lord King, Anon. Mos. 328; v. infra, p. 324.

(e) Supra, p. 313.

of debts, or a charge for that purpose, the statute does not apply (a); and the creditors can only claim by force of the devise or charge, and the proceeds of the estate will be distributable as equitable not legal assets (b): hence it becomes, in all cases where the trusts of a will have to be carried into execution and the estate of the testator to be administered, a matter of serious importance in reference to this statute, as well as the Statute against Fraudulent Devises before referred to, to ascertain (c) whether in point of fact a charge of debts within the meaning of the statute has been created (d). "Courts of Equity," said Lord Lyndhurst, "have always been desirous of sustaining charges by implication for payment of debts, and the presumption in favour of them is not to be repelled by anything short of clear and manifest evidence (from the will) of a contrary intention" (e); the main reason for this astuteness in sustaining doubtful charges, as will have been seen, no longer exists, but the decisions will no doubt still be followed, lest the law should become unsettled. One of the leading cases on the subject is Legh v. Earl of Warrington (f). There the testator commenced his will thus: "As to my worldly estate, which it hath pleased God to bestow upon me, I give and dispose thereof in manner following, that is to say:—Imprimis, I will that all my debts which I shall owe at the time of my death, be discharged and paid out of my estate;" and he then disposed of his real and personal estate, expressly charging the real estate with an annuity. The House of Lords, affirming Lord King's decree, held, that a general direction so made was a sufficient indication of intention

(a) See Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 My. & Cr. 708; corrected, 4 My. & Cr. 269.

(b) See vol. i. p. 421, 584; and supra, p. 313.

(c) It is to be observed that most of the cases were decided before real estates were liable to debts by simple contract, excepting under a devise or charge, and when such a construction was put upon wills as tended to do justice to creditors, and when therefore all wills, especially in the Court of Chancery, received a most liberal construction in favour of creditors; see Lord Hardwicke's judgment, Godolphin v. Penneck, 2 Ves. Sen. 272; Thomas v. Britnell, 2 Ves. Sen. 313.

(d) Mr. Jarman on Wills, ii. 511, et seq., has minutely examined the leading cases on this subject, and to his very able work I beg to refer the reader.

(e) Price v. North, 1 Phillips, 87; the Lord Chancellor refers to and distinguishes the case before him—where he reversed the decree of the Lord Chief Baron (see 4 Y. & Coll. 509)—from Thomas v. Britnell, 2 Ves. Sen. 313; and Douce v. Lady Torrington, 2 My. & K. 600 (1 Keen, 567), 2 My. & K. 606, (which the Vice-Chancellor of England, in Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 56, did not seem to approve, see below, next note); and Palmer v. Graves, 1 Keen, 545, where the specific charge was held to cut down the general charge; and see Earl Godolphin v. Penneck, 2 Ves. 272.

(f) 1 Bro. Par. C. 511; and Belt's Supp. to Ves. Sen. 341; and see Clifford v. Lewis, 6 Mad. 33; and Thomas v. Britnell, ubi supra, (1 Keen, 567). The Vice-Chancellor of England seems to have considered that Douce v. Lady Torrington, ubi sup. was decided without much consideration, Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 56: and see the reporter's note explanatory of this case, Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 567.

that the real estate should be charged generally with debts. Other authorities (a) have decided that the words "I direct, in the first place, all my debts to be paid," will create a charge (b): and it may now be considered as settled that where there is a direction that all the testator's debts shall be paid, and then there is a devise of the real estate, the debts will be charged on the real estate (c); and where a person gives his freehold, copyhold and leasehold estates and the residue of his personal estate, after payment of his debts and funeral expenses, that also has been held to amount to a charge on the real estate (d). Independently of the operation of the late statute as to wills, a general charge of debts includes all the debts the testator may contract during his whole life (e).

It may be taken as a general rule, that where there is a direction to a person, for instance to the executor, to pay the testator's debts, and property is given by will to the same person, the property so given (unless on the context an intention to the contrary shall appear) will be considered to be charged with the payment of the debts (f); but where there is a mere direction to the executors to pay the testator's debts and legacies, and the real estate is specifically devised to other persons, such a direction will not operate as a charge (g), there being nothing in such a case from which an intention to that effect can be collected; and where the estate is specially devised to a person who happens to be one of the executors, after a general direction to the executors to pay debts and legacies, it will not be considered for that reason as given to the executors and charged with the payment of (a) See Parker v. Marchant, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 290.

(b) Harding v. Grady, 1 Dru. & War. 430.

(c) Clifford v. Lewis, 6 Mad. 33; Ball v. Harris, 8 Sim. 485; 4 My. & Cr. 264; Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 My. & Cr. 707, and the cases there cited; Shaw v. Borrer, 1 Keen, 559; Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 55; Jarman on Wills, ii. 519, note; in Clifford v. Lewis, Sir J. Leach held that if on the context the testator has in fact directed his debts to be paid in the first place, it is immaterial whether he uses those words or not.

(d) Withers v. Kennedy, 2 My. & K. 607.

(e) Brudenell v. Boughton, 2 Atk. 274; Bridgman v. Dove, 3 Atk. 201; "I have contracted," must be construed or "shall contract;" et v. infra, section iv.

(f) Powell v. Robins, 7 Ves. 209; (2 Dr. & W. 62; Henvell v. Whitaker, 3 Russ. 343; Finch v. Hattersley, ibid. p. 345, n., approved by Vice-Chancellor of England, Dover v. Gre- gory (stated infra), 10 Sim. 396, 399; that case was decided in accordance with Henvell v. Whitaker, the Vice-Chancellor stating that it was a question of intention, and that the whole will must in this as in other cases be taken into consideration; Barker v. The Duke of Devonshire, 3 Meriv. 311; Nyssen v. Gretton, 2 Y. & Coll. 231-2, where Lord Abinger states the rule—the reason of the rule—and the exceptions: and see Aubrey v. Middleton, Vin. Abr. Charge, D. 15; 2 Eq. Abr. 497, where the same rule is applied to legacies.

(g) Brydges v. Landen, cited 3 Ves. J. 550; Powell v. Robins, 7 Vesey, 210; Keeling v. Brown, 5 Ves. 359; and see 2 Jarm. on Wills, 525, et seq. If the direction be general, as that the testator's debts be paid, without saying by whom, and there be no devise of the real estate, Mr. Jarman seems to think that the real estate would be held to be charged, as against the heir, ii. 520.

debts and legacies (a). Even where the executors are also devisees, a mere general introductory direction to the executors will not operate as a charge, if in reference to the context and general scheme of the will, it appears to have been introduced by the testator as a matter of mere form, without any view to the regulation of the enjoyment or the distribution of his property (b).

As Mr. Justice Story has observed, if a testator directs a particular person to pay, it is natural to presume, in the absence of all other circumstances, that the testator intended him to pay out of the funds with which he is intrusted, and not out of other funds over which he has no control; and if the executor is pointed out as the person to pay, that excludes any presumption that other persons not named are to pay (c).

If there be a general charge by implication by virtue of the preliminary direction or otherwise, then it becomes a question to be determined upon the effect of the subsequent devises and directions, whether that intention has been altered (d), or whether the implication arising from the general words is or is not repelled. But where there is a clear and express charge of debts upon the testator's real estate, though it may of course be confined by express words, it is not liable to be defeated by such subsequent devises and directions as might operate to that effect in the case of an implied charge; in the latter case, as the whole must be taken together, according to the ordinary rules of construction, the implication may be repelled (e). Thus, if a particular estate is in a subsequent part of the will specifically directed to be sold for payment of debts, this will vary the order in which the property is to be applied, but will not annul the general lien or charge (f).

(a) Warren v. Davies, 2 My. & K. 51, which was followed in Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen, 219, as regards debts.

(b) Symons v. James, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 310; and see Parker v. Fearnley, 2 Sim. & S. 592: there the testatrix directed her executor, after named, to pay the legacies given by her at particular times, and she next devised a real estate to her son, by name; then she gave him the residue of her personal estate, after payment of her debts and legacies; it was held that the legacies were not charged on the real estate.

(c) Story on Equity, § 1247; see Henvell v. Whitaker, 3 Russ. 343; Warren v. Davies, 2 My. & K. 49; but see Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 54-56.

(d) Palmer v. Graves, 1 Keen, 550; Thomas v. Britnell, 2 Ves. Sen. 313; Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 43, 56; the devotion of a particular estate for the payment of debts was not considered as of itself conclusive; see p. 59, note. In Douce v. Lady Torrington, 2 My. & K. 606, the appropriation of a particular estate for that purpose by a subsequent codicil was considered as sufficient to control the general words. In this case Sir J. Leach laid stress upon the words "in the first place," being wanting, though in Clifford v. Lewis, supra, he considered this circumstance as immaterial; the Vice-Chancellor of England, as before mentioned, seems to consider that this case was hastily decided.

(e) See Thomas v. Britnell, 2 Ves. Sen. 315, et v. supra, vol. i. p. 527-9.

(f) Coxe v. Basset, 3 Ves. J. 161; Crallan v. Oulton, 3 Beav. 8; Graves v. Graves, 8 Simons, 56, 59; Jones v. Williams, 1 Coll. 160.

A testator by his will directed all his debts, legacies, and personal charges to be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his death; afterwards he devoted a particular estate to the payment of his debts, legacies, and personal charges, in aid of his personal estate, and he devised the residue of his estate in strict settlement: it was held by the V. Ch. of England that the preliminary words charged all his real estate, and that the subsequent words did not cut down the charge so as to make the particular estate only liable, but that all the real estate would be liable, if the specific estate should prove not to be sufficient to pay all the debts, legacies, and personal charges (a).

Where a testator directs his real estate to be sold, and that the proceeds shall form part of his residuary estate, so that the real and personal estate are to form one common fund, and there is a direction to pay the debts and legacies and to secure annuities out of that common fund, this will not be altered or affected by the common direction at the beginning of the will for payment of the debts out of the personal estate (b).

Where the testator has contracted to grant an annuity, and by his will he charges his real estate with the payment of all his debts, whether by bond or mortgage or due on simple contract, in exoneration of his real estate therefrom, a just construction of those words requires the court to hold an annuity to be within their influence and operation, as the annuitant would have been in a situation to sue the testator's executor for a debt in respect of the annuity from time to time (c).

A trust or charge for payment of debts and legacies, may also materially affect the real representatives of the testator by devise and intestacy, as regards the order in which the estates are to be applied for the payment of the debts.

The general rule, without reference to any trust or charge for payment of debts, in the administration of real assets is, that the de-

(a) Dover v. Gregory, 10 Sim. 393; Henvell v. Whitaker, 3 Russ. 343, where, and in 10 Sim. 395, the principal authorities on the subject are cited; and see Graves v. Graves, 8 Sim. 54-56, and 2 Powell on Devises, by Jarman, 644-653, where the cases are collected and discussed.

(b) Hopkinson v. Ellis, 10 Beav. 169, 174; 2 Real Prop. and Conv. Ca. 435; and see Attorney-General v. Southgate, 12 Sim. 77, on appeal, ibid. 83; Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. 752.

(c) Money Penny v. Mascall, 2 Coll. 220. It was decided in Bulwer v. Astley, 1 Phillips, 422, reversing Sir J. Leach's decision, that the value of certain annuities which had been granted by the testator, as it was held by way of security only, was a charge upon the corpus of the testator's estates, under a charge in his will for payment of debts, and that the tenant for life was only bound to keep down the interest on such value, not the growing payments of the annuities.

scended estates must be first applied and then the estates devised (a); but if the devised estate is selected and appropriated to, not merely charged with, the payment of debts, it will be applied before the residue of the real estate which descends to the heir on intestacy; but the descended estates are applied before lands merely charged with payment of debts (b).

As regards a charge of debts by a Married Woman the doctrine is very clearly expounded by Lord Cottenham, in the late case of Owens v. Dickinson (c). In that case a married woman having a separate estate under a settlement, with a power of appointment by will or deed or other instrument in writing attested by one witness, having by her mark put her signature to a document which recognised the 210*l.* claimed by the plaintiff as a debt which in certain circumstances she was to be liable to pay to the plaintiff, she made her will, and by her will charged all her debts on property she had power to dispose of. The document alone, as Lord Cottenham observed, within the authority of decided cases (d), would have been operative upon her separate estate, not however by way of the execution of a Power, although that expression has been sometimes used, and very incorrectly used, in cases where the court has enforced the contracts of married women against their separate estate. It cannot be an execution of a power, because it neither refers to the power nor to the subject-matter of the power; nor indeed in many cases has there been any power existing at all. Besides, added his lordship, as it was argued in the case of Murray v. Barlee, if a married woman enters into several engagements of this sort, and all the parties come to have satisfaction out of her separate estate, they are paid pari passu (e); whereas, if the instruments took effect as appointments under a power, they would rank according to the priorities of their dates. It is quite clear therefore that there is nothing in such a transaction which has any resemblance to the execution of a power: what it is, it is not easy to define. The view taken of the matter, added Lord Cottenham, by Lord Thurlow in Hulme v. Tenant (f) is more correct. According to that view the separate property of a married woman being a creature of equity, it follows that if she has the power to deal with it, she has the other

(a) Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 430; Powis v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 556; Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. W. 367; Davies v. Torp, 2 Bro. 259, n.; Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. J. 545; Phillips v. Eastwood, Lloyd & G. temp. Sugd. 295.

(b) Ibid.; Harmood v. Oglander, 8 Ves. 124-5; Donne v. Lewis, 2 Bro. 257.

(c) Cr. & Phill. 52.

(d) Murray v. Barlee, 3 My. & K. 209; Heatley v. Thomas, 15 Ves. 596; and Bullpin v. Clarke, 17 Ves. 365; et v. sup. p. 319.

(e) But see the quære of the Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce, in Callow v. Howle, xi. Jur. 985 b.

(f) 1 Bro. p. 21, supra, vol. i. p. 507, n. (e).

power incident to property in general, namely, the power of contracting debts to be paid out of it; and inasmuch as her creditors have not the means at law of compelling payment of those debts, a Court of Equity takes upon itself to give effect to them, not as personal liabilities but by laying hold of the separate property as the only means by which they can be satisfied. "In this case," said Lord Cottenham, "the debt is proved: by her will she has charged her separate property with the payment of this, at least amongst other debts; and therefore I think that under the will the liability of the separate estate to pay this debt is established. But by her will she appoints her separate property to pay her debts generally, and therefore there must be an inquiry as to the other debts, and the result of that inquiry may give rise to some further questions which it is not necessary at present to anticipate, because the authorities are very vague as to what are to be considered debts in this sense." "I observe that, in Clinton v. Willes" (a), continued his lordship, "Sir Thomas Plumer suggested a doubt whether it was necessary they should be secured by writing; it certainly seems strange that there should be any difference between a contract in writing when no statute requires it to be in writing, and a verbal promise to pay; it is an artificial distinction not recognised in any other case:" on that point, however, his lordship would not then give a decided opinion. It was referred to the Master to inquire what debts there were to be paid under the provisions of the will, with liberty to state special circumstances.

Interest may be given to creditors, where they are entitled to interest, on further directions, though the question of interest was not reserved by the original decree (b).

(a) Sugd. on Powers, 208, n.

(b) Creuze v. Hunter, 2 Ves. J. 164. On the subject of interest see Lloyd v. Williams, 2 Atk. 110; Barwell v. Parker, ubi infra; Creuze v. Hunter, 2 Ves. J. 157, 4 Bro. C. C. 316; and Shirt v. Westby, 16 Ves. 393, where as in Lloyd v. Williams the charge was treated as a legacy, and therefore to carry interest at 4 per cent. from the death of the testator only; Car v. Countess of Burlington, 1 P. W. 228, appears to have been overruled.

Simple-contract debts may be turned into specialty debts by the terms of the deed, Barwell v. Parker, 2 Ves. 363. Whether interest is due or not, is, generally speaking, a legal question, but interest may be given in suits in equity when it is not due at law. As to interest, v. infra, sect. iv. p. 355, 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 28; and some other matters relating to trusts and charges for payment of debts, will be noticed hereafter.

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—Supra, p. 313, Note (d).

A judgment creditor can only take such interest as his debtor has in the land which he seeks to affect by his judgment; if the debtor has entered into a binding engagement to charge his land, the judgment is subject to such charge. Gilbert's Forum Rom. 228-9. Whitworth v. Gaugain, 3 Hare, 429, ibid. 1 Phillips, 732-3. The recent statute 1 & 2 Vict., 110, has not given the creditor any additional rights in this respect, ibid.

SECTION II.—Charges of Legacies.

Legatees being Volunteers and taking from the Bounty of their Testator, cannot claim in Competition with Creditors, though the Testator himself may not have made any Distinction between them.

Creditors have Rights by Operation of Law. Legatee can only claim his Legacy in Manner and Form given by the Will.

If one part of the Estates is charged, that circumstance is generally considered as a Discharge of the Rest.

If the Legacy be given generally, the Legatee must resort to the Personal Estate only.

Lord Alvanley's Opinion as to a General Charge of Debts and of Legacies.

Kightley v. Kightley, 2 Ves. J.

Lord Rosslyn's Opinion—Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. J.

Spong v. Spong, 3 Bli.

Whether Legacies are charged on Real Estates or not is a Question of Intention, to be ascertained upon the whole Context.

Instances.

Annuity charged on Rents and Profits.

Clear Intention necessary to give one Legatee a Preference over the others.

Abatement of Annuities.

Effect of the Statutes against Fraudulent Devises, and of the Statute making Real Estate liable to Simple-contract Debts, on the Condition of Legatees.

